And in the fifth century, Faustus Rhegiensis wrote in a similar vein, "I would not even doubt that the angels are in places, who are certainly now compassed by the heavens, now borne by the empty space of the ether, now descending to earth; who the divine sermon describes in the vision of the patriarch ascending and descending, at any rate as if they were not in one place; but they are not able to be present everywhere and by ascent and descent depart. The most blessed Gabriel himself, who is known to stand before God himself, when he announced to Mary that the Lord was to be mingled with flesh, and when he assisted the mother under divine vigilance, without a doubt he was not in heaven, he was not flying somewhere over Mary, and he was not filling that great diffuse emptiness of the endless ether, but he was occupying that place, in which he was. Since it is like that, anything that occupies space is a body, how could someone not be confined to a place who is sent from recognize the angels and their circumscription as a positive support for Christ's circumscription. The link with these qualities of circumscription and the making of images had not yet been developed to the same degree as it would be by ninth-century theologians, but the essential link had been made by John of Damascus a century or so previously.

The iconophiles arrived at a conclusion concerning the relation of angels' images to their bodiless models by examining art authorized and produced under the Old Covenant. They established an iconophile argument of the divinely ordained worship of images, and the relation of image and prototype that God himself stated, by referring to God's commands to Moses in Exodus. Iconoclasts had cited God's injunction not to make graven images (Ex. 20:4) as an argument against Christian images at the first stage of Iconoclasm in the second quarter of the eighth century. This charge, and the iconophile response, is not particular to the Iconoclast controversy but was an extension of the pagan-Jewish "debates," as argued in such seventh-century anti-Jewish texts of Stephen of Bostra and Leontius of Neapolis.⁵² Indeed, John of Damascus cited both these theologians in his treatise directed against the attackers of images.⁵³ place to place, and as if the body is transported by movement and ascent, descends with effort, moves with mobility, goes, returns, is remote, and descends again" (Epistolae, III, in Fausti Reiensis Praeter sermones pseudo-eusebianos opera, Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum, vol. 21, ed. A. Engelbrecht [Prague, Vienna and Leipzig, 1891] 178).

The issue of circumscription continued to be discussed throughout the Byzantine period in examinations of angels' nature and their role in the cosmic hierarchy. For instance, see Nicetas Stethatos (1005?–ca. 1090), in Opusculi et litterae, SC vol. 81, ed. J. Darrouzès (Paris, 1961) 252, and Symeon of Thessalonike (d. 1429), Responsa ad Gabrielem Pentapolitanum, III, PG 155:841A.

52. See Corrigan, Visual Polemics, 33ff.

53. Stephen of Bostra in De imag. or., III.71–73, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos, III, 174. See also G. Mercati, Opere minori, Studi e testi, vol. 76 (Vatican City, 1937) 202–206, and A. Alexakis, "Stephen of Bostra: Fragmenta Contra Judaeos (CPG 7790). A New Edition," JöB 43(1993):45–60, text at 51ff.

Leontius of Neapolis in De imag. or., III.84–89, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos, III, 178–81, Déroche, "L'Apologie contre les Juifs," 79ff. Leontius was also cited at Nicaea II; see Mansi XIII.44B ff., and Déroche, "L'Apologie contre les Juifs," 66ff.

See also the seventh-century Armenian defense of John Mayragometsi, in Der Nersessian, "Une apologie des images du septième siècle," 59.

The cherubim, as paradigms of angelic beings, occupy a central place in iconophile rationalizations of images, and angels generally become implicated in these rationalizations because of the cherubim's prominent role in the iconophile version of the Christian history of art. The responses of both the Christian combatants in these anti-Jewish texts and the iconophile theologians directly implicate images of angels and so brought the example of the cherubim to the fore in iconophile responses. The iconophile rebuttal, as in the anti-Jewish texts, was to cite scripture in return, principally God's command to Moses to construct the Ark of the Covenant (Ex. 25:22): "And there will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat from between the two cherubims which are upon the Ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel." God's specific command for the Ark, with lengthy, explicit instructions on its manufacture, was presented as a typology of Christian art. John of Damascus cited the tabernacle as an injunction for the creation of material images for Christians, and he introduced Bezaleel as the archetypal artist inspired by the spirit of God. John of Damascus referred to Exodus (31:1–5) for support:

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah: and I have filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver and in brass, and in cutting of stones for setting, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship.

And John of Damascus continued by citing the gathering of the material for Moses's construction of the Ark (Ex. 35:4–10), and then rhetorically asked if this manufacture of images was not done according to God's will: "Behold the handiwork of humanity becoming the likeness of the cherubim! How can you make the law a reason for refusing to do what the law itself commands?" He concluded that because Christ had become human the ancient commandment against idols had been annulled.⁵⁴

The cherubim were directly mentioned by God in his specifications for the Ark (Ex. 25:18–20), and the cherubim were the most important example for iconophiles generally of an explicit command by God to produce figured images.⁵⁵ Nicephorus used the artistic typology of the Ark as a sign of the divine origins of image making. The cherubim that were placed upon the Ark, in this way, became for Nicephorus a primary focus in the argument for images deriving from scriptural precedent. Moreover, Nicephorus in his discussion of the cherubim used them as the paradigms of the nature of angelic beings. The cherubim were placed high in his heavenly hierarchy by the necessity of his argument, in a position which is closest to God in station and image. At certain points in his discussion of cherubim, Nicephorus skated dangerously close to heretical angelology since Christ was seriously underestimated as the principal agent of mediation between God and humanity.⁵⁶

Yet the consequent immateriality of the cherubim's nature was another way for Nicephorus to bridge the gap between the difficulty of

54. De imag. or., I.16, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 92; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 25. And see also, in the same vein, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 96–101. And on the question of the Tabernacle and the iconophile defense of images, see S. Duffrenne, "Une illustration 'historique,' inconnue, du Psautier du Mont-Athos, Pantocrator No. 61," CA 15(1965):83–95, H. L. Kessler, "Through the Temple Veil: The Holy Image in Judaism and Christianity," Kairos 32/33(1990/1):60ff., and Corrigan, Visual Polemics, 33ff.

55. For a use of the cherubim to underpin iconophile arguments, beyond those discussed infra, see The Letter of the Three Patriarchs to Emperor Theophilus and Related Texts, ed. J. A. Munitiz, J. Chrysostomides, E. Harvalia-Crook and Ch. Dendrinos (Camberley, 1997) 33.5–16 (7.e).

The cherubim were also a concern of western programmers and theologians. See L. Nees, "Image and Text: Excerpts from Jerome's 'De Trinitate' and the Maiestas Domini Miniature of the Gundohinus Gospels," Viator 18(1987):11–17, A. Grabar, "Les mosaïques de Germigny-des-Prés," in his L'art de la fin de l'Antiquité et du Moyen Âge, 3 vols. (Paris, 1968) II:995–1006, and A. Freeman, "Theodulf of Orleans and the Libri Carolini," Speculum 32(1957):663–705.

56. See V. N. Giannopoulos, "Ἡ περὶ ἁγγέλων διδασκαλία τοῦ Πατριάρχου καὶ Ὁμολογητοῦ Νικηφόρου Α' (+829)," Θεολογία 44(1973):328. On Nicephorus's angelology, see also J. Travis, In Defense of the Faith. The Theology of Patriarch Nikephoros of Constantinople (Brookline, Mass., 1984) 30–43.

apprehension, which might seem to be incompatible with circumscription, and the fact of representation as commanded by God himself. The quality of the cherubim, and the rest of the angelic hierarchy, is such that humanity is incapable of perceiving them directly; their true nature is unviewable.⁵⁷ And yet God has allowed them, by means of a divine condescension, to be depicted in a “terrestrial impression.”⁵⁸ These “impressions” are clearly distinct from Christ’s own appearance on earth in which he was really made flesh and suffered as a human being.⁵⁹ In this view, images of angels are transcriptions of angelic appearances in a dissimulating way; they denote only the symbolic condescension and alteration of form for inferior human perception.

Aware of the distinctions between images of angels and Christ, John of Damascus and Nicephorus and other iconophile theologians were compelled to rationalize the obvious disjuncture between angels’ formlessness and their form on images. John of Damascus described the mutability of the angels in this way, “Therefore [the angelic nature] is a logical nature, both intellectual and autonomous, changeable at will or inclination.”⁶⁰ And also, “They are transformed for such things as the Lord God wills, and in this way they appear to humanity and reveal holy mysteries to it.”⁶¹ Despite the fact that the angels are changeable, unpredictable and ultimately un-

57. Apologeticus pro sacris imaginibus, 70, PG 100:769A, “For you might say somehow like this, as we know well, that the godly cherubim since they are invisible by nature, are scarcely perceptible by humanity.”

58. Humanity is incapable of seeing intelligible beings like the angels directly, and out of his beneficence God has commanded, “that the most blessed aspects of the heavenly powers are made manifest in symbolic impressions” (Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:777C). Furthermore the command given to Moses in Ex. 25:40 is an example of God’s providence. The cherubim mediate “the beneficent progressions of divine providence to others positioned below them and take on likenesses because of the function they perform, and in these, which are likenesses made on earth, are allowed due to divine condescension” (Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:776A).

59. On the opacity of images of Christ for Theodore of Stoudios, see G. Peers, “Breathless, Speechless Images: On the Chalke Gate Epigram,” in Hommages Margaret Head Thomson, Cahiers des études anciennes, vol. 32, ed. L. Finnette and A.P. Booth (Trois Rivières, Québec, 1998) 111–12.

60. Exp. fid., II.3, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. II, 45.

61. Exp. fid., II.3, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. II, 47.

knowable, John of Damascus justified their images as allusive and symbolic signs.

God wills that we should not be totally ignorant of bodiless creatures, and so he clothed them with forms and shapes, and used images comprehensible to our nature, material forms which could be seen by the spiritual nature of the mind. From these we make images and representations, for how else could the cherubim be shown as having form?⁶²

According to John of Damascus, images of angels are made with wings because these images are comprehensible to inferior human perception. Human perception is able to approach the image at a spiritual and not a literal level, in order to unlock the meaning behind its enigmatic demonstration of angelic nature. In this passage, John of Damascus gave a definition of relation of image and prototype wherein images have no ability to describe their model visually, only to provide intellectual means for the viewer to apprehend spiritually an otherwise unknowable creature.

Defining the precise quality of the relation between images and their prototypes, and consequently what this quality meant for understanding images, was an especially knotty problem in defending the representations of angels. John of Damascus's definition of relation determined, to a certain extent, the course of the theological discussion. For iconoclasts, of course, any relation of prototype to image was considered impossible because iconoclasts defined a true image as consubstantial with the prototype. John of Damascus, in contrast, denied that the image was able to have any essential relation with its prototype.

An image is of like character with its prototype, but with a certain difference. It is not like the archetype in every way. The Son is the living, essential, and precisely similar image of the invisible God, 62. De imag. or., III.24, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos, 132; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 79.

bearing the entire father within himself, equal to him in all things, except that he is begotten by him, the begetter.⁶³

The first kind of image for John of Damascus is the natural image.⁶⁴ The other images, and John of Damascus enumerated six more, are non-essential, artificial images.⁶⁵ The fourth kind includes the angels who do not relate to their images essentially, but rather symbolically and intangibly:

These [images] give us a faint apprehension of God and the angels where otherwise we would have none, because it is impossible for us to think immaterial things unless we can envision analogous shapes, as the great and holy Dionysius the Areopagite has said.⁶⁶

John of Damascus stated that the image and prototype are related in the case of the angels and God only in an indistinct and referential way, that affords human intellect some glimpse of incomprehensible matters. Images are therefore an important means by which knowledge of God, and of his manifestations and creations, is initiated and increased. According to John of Damascus, images are an incomplete but necessary reference and aid to better knowledge of the unknowable things of God:

Again, visible things are corporeal models which provide a vague understanding of intangible things. Holy scripture describes God and the angels as having descriptive form, and the same blessed Dionysius teaches us why. Anyone would say that our inability im-

63. De imag. or., I.11, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 83–84; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 19.

64. De imag. or., III.15ff., Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 126ff.; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 74ff.

65. On these types, see the remarks of M. Barasch, Icon. Studies in the History of an Idea (New York and London, 1992) 220–36. One should add that his discussion of angels, ibid., 236–43, along with J. Pelikan, Imago Dei. The Byzantine Apologia for Icons (Princeton, 1990) 153–82, has much usefulness.

66. De imag. or., III.21, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 128; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 76.

mediately to direct our thoughts to contemplation of higher things makes it necessary that familiar everyday media be utilized to give suitable form to what is formless, and make visible what cannot be depicted, so that we are able to construct understandable analogies.⁶⁷

Like Pseudo-Dionysius, John of Damascus argued for material signs as a necessary step to intellectual contemplation of immaterial reality. Paradoxically, “descriptive form” which does not have an essential relation to angels or God is provided for humanity’s weak understanding so that analogies proper to human intellect can be made.

Nicephorus asserted a highly intellectualized association of image and angelic prototype that was stricter and more articulated than that offered by John of Damascus.⁶⁸ He defined the angelic nature as “simple and incomposite”;⁶⁹ furthermore, the angels are “unseeable by corporeal eyes,” and bodiless and invisible and without form.⁷⁰ The angels are invisible exactly because they are “beyond and unparticipating in their shapes and forms.”⁷¹ However, the angels’ special quality of unviewability compelled Nicephorus to reconcile the many instances of appearances in scripture and angelic nature.⁷² Nicephorus thus claimed that the angels did not reveal their real nature, but rather effected a symbolic transformation that was analogous to the particular need of the moment.⁷³ God himself has ordained and created the angels because he knows well humanity’s

67. De imag. or., I.11, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 84–85; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 20.

68. See C. von Schönborn, L’icône du Christ. Fondements théologiques élaborées entre le Ier et le IIer Concile de Nicée (325–787) (Fribourg, 1976) 206ff.

69. Antirrheticus II adversus Constantinum Copronymum, ix, PG 100:349B. See M.-J. Mondzain[-Baudinet], Nicéphore le Patriarche: Discours contre les iconoclastes (Paris, 1990) and Image, icône, économie. Les sources byzantines de l’imaginaire contemporain (Paris, 1996) 281–92, for translations of this text.

70. Ant. II adv. Const. Cop., xi, PG 100:353A; and see Giannopoulos, “Ἡ περὶ ἀγγέλων διδασκαλία,” 314ff.

71. See Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:769C.

72. Giannopoulos, “Ἡ περὶ ἀγγέλων διδασκαλία,” 329ff.

73. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:781AB, “Yet the holy cherubim, being simple and immaterial, imageless and formless, and therefore bodiless, and circumscribed in a sense perceptible place.... For if someone should hear somewhere that at some time the holy angels are weakness; ruling and guiding our affairs he knows fully our capacities for knowledge.⁷⁴ The forms of angels are disguised and vary according to circumstance and occasion. Likewise, the images are equally obscure, since they are unable to correspond visually and essentially.

For it must not be thought that in the forms of wild beasts or oxen or winged birds the nature of the other worldly powers is characterised. Nevertheless, it is by divine commands, because God wished it, that all these things are seen easily and readily, and the angels are depicted and painted.⁷⁵

The forms of angels are symbolic manifestations apprehended intellectually; and in a similar way the images of angels must be perceived symbolically, by intellectual and not only visual processes. Nicephorus described the representations of the angels as an approach to knowledge of God through a contemplation of their invisible formlessness. Furthermore, this approach, he stated, is imperative, in that “the forms of the formless ones and the figures of those without figures are to be laid before us justly.”⁷⁶ Images are non-descriptive but necessary aids to worship and comprehension of God’s formless ministers.

[B]ecause for us the comparison is impossible directly, with respect to an intellectual perception to be offered, ... [the images of the angels] offer to us attainable forms of the formless and supernatural sights. For this is the work of divine goodness and of fatherly care seen embodied, one should not understand anything but that they manifest themselves symbolically, having transformed themselves, in such forms according to the matter in hand in which they perform their charges on earth; therefore their nature is unknown to us.”

74. Antir. II adv. Const. Cop., ix, PG 100:349C, “Many angelophanies have occurred in the services of God. The angels have not appeared according to their nature, but in the degree of sanctity and purity is it measured for him who is granted so great a vision, or for the matter in hand, necessity, and time required. In this way, the shapes and the forms of the shapeless and formless ones are formed and they make themselves manifest differently to those worthy of the vision with pure eyes of intellect.”

75. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:781B.

76. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:777B.

on our behalf, that the most blessed things are made manifest in the figured symbols of heavenly powers, and made comprehensible for us, matter worked by hand which leads us to an accessible imitation and contemplation of their proper nature.⁷⁷

The “figured symbols” are the means by which comprehension of the angelic powers are then conceded to weaker, mortal intellects by God. The symbols are entirely referential since they cannot capture any truth about the real nature or appearance of the angels. Following Pseudo-Dionysius and John of Damascus, Nicephorus concluded that the representations are an approachable and essential means to a spiritual contemplation of an invisible reality.

Nicephorus went on to state that no essential relationship exists between the prototype and the image, that “pictorial representation is an external factor and has nothing in common with the definition of essence.”⁷⁸ However, a direct relationship between image and prototype can be posited. The image and prototype possess resemblance 77. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:777BC. See, too, John of Damascus in a similar vein: “We know that it is impossible to look upon God, or a spirit, or a demon, as they are by nature. We would be able to see them, however, if they appeared in forms alien to their nature. Therefore God in His providence has clothed in forms and shapes things which are bodiless and without form, in order to lead us to more particular knowledge, lest we should be totally ignorant of God and of bodiless creatures. Only God by nature is utterly without a body, but an angel, or a soul, or a demon, when compared to God (who alone cannot be compared to anything) does have a body, but when these are compared to material bodies, they are bodiless” (De imag. or., III.26, Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III, 130–31; On the Divine Images, trans. Anderson, 79).

78. Antir. I adv. Const. Cop., 29–30, PG 100:277C–80C; trans. Alexander, The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople, 200–201, “Therefore necessarily it belongs to, and is called, a relative [notion]... If somehow the pattern should disappear, the relation does not end together with it: the law of mutual cancellation does not pertain to all such [notions], for sometimes the relations remain and survive although deprived of their object ... for by the similarity and remembrance and form, it [the image] shows even the deceased as if he were present and it preserves the relation as time goes along. Now likeness is an intermediate relation and mediates between the extremes, I mean, the person represented and the representation. It unites and connects [them] through the form even though they differ in nature... In addition likeness bestows also equivocality, for the appellation is the same for both ... it does not have identity of essence, nor can we in all respects predicate what is predicated of the pattern as pattern also of the image derived from it.”

not through essential relation, materially or visually, but through equivocation. "Although the matter from which an image is made is soulless and senseless and motionless, the image is addressed by the same name as the prototype and so worthy of glory and grace."⁷⁹ The images, therefore, have an unlikeness to the archetype but have, nonetheless, relational qualities and are not then irrelevant.⁸⁰ It follows from this reasoning that the name determines resemblance for images of angels, and any question of similarity in nature and appearance is beside the point.

It is seen that nothing there is enigma, nothing obscure, nothing presented obliquely or wrapped in allegory, that these things which are soulless, unfeeling, entirely motionless, made out of soulless and illogical matter, merely carved and brilliant in appearance, and in the purest of material, are wisely different from those most holy cherubim, who are living, energised, eternally moving powers, named as the God of all deemed proper. For the images of the cherubim are neither similitudes nor are they direct impressions but God used the name in equivocity by his own command when he called them cherubim by voice purely and directly.⁸¹

As Nicephorus stated, the images of the cherubim are not of the same nature nor do they have any real resemblance, but the images are clearly they, because they are called so by God himself, as Exodus testifies. The images partake of the name of cherubim and also of the glory which is the share of the archetype.⁸² Therefore, "these things made of gold are images of images, quite obscure, quite dissimilar, and very much distinct from the paradigmatic cause." The images do

79. Antir. II adv. Const. Cop., 8, PG 100:348C.

80. Giannopoulos, "Η περί ἀγγέλων διδασκαλία," 334ff.

81. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:776CD. And also: "But may it be conceded that the cherubim on the Ark were given their name by God, whence the possession of glory presaged by them? Indeed this was the first command of God, which God announced and made venerable. For nothing is in vain or empty that proceeded from him" (Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:777C).

82. Apol. pro sac. imag., 71, PG 100:780AB.

not participate substantially with their prototypes, yet God himself formed the relation.⁸³

The ninth-century mosaics of the angelic powers in the bema arch of the destroyed church of the Dormition at Nicaea (Iznik) demonstrate the relationship of image and inscription discussed in iconophile theory. The mosaics were restored—in all probability—to their original state, a direct consequence of the restoration of images in 843, and this reinstatement attests to active iconophile involvement on both practical and theoretical levels in the mosaic program.⁸⁴ The four angelic powers, identical in appearance, were clearly differentiated by the (imperfect) inscriptions which refer to distinct angelic ranks based on Colossians 1:16: on the south side, the Principality (APXE) and Power (ΔΥΝΑΜΙΣ) (fig. 9), and on the north side, the Domination (ΚΥΡΙΑΤΗΤΗΣ) and Virtue (ΕΞΟΥΣΙΑ) (fig. 10). As this chapter contends, iconophile theory holds that images of angels cannot claim likeness, only a relation made through equivocation; in fact, the lack of likeness, the symbolic nature of the depiction, is the characteristic that exhorts the viewer to spiritual engagement. The mosaics at Nicaea were demonstrations of this characteristic, developed before Iconoclasm and fully articulated by iconophiles. The redundant and generalized nature of the depictions of these beings might lead the viewer to believe that only one category of angel is represented; yet, the inscriptions deny this interpretation by stating instead that the beings are distinct in office, aspect and character. In other words, with beings who possess no likeness, the inscription does not determine likeness. On the contrary, in representations of different angelic beings with identical forms, the possibility of individual resemblance is constantly thwarted.

83. Apol. pro sac. imag., 70, PG 100:773C.

84. The inscription in the bema stated that Naukratius restored the figural portions of the mosaics. Naukratius has been identified as a disciple of Theodore of Stoudios who died in 848. See E. Wiegand, "Zur Monogrammschrift der Theotokos-(Koimesis)Kirche von Nicaea," B 6 (1931):411–20, E. E. Lipsić, "Naukratij i Nikeiskie Mozaikij," Zbornik Radova Vizantoloskog Instituta 8 / 2 (1964):241–46, and R. Cormack, "Painting After Iconoclasm," in Iconoclasm. Papers Given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975, ed. A. Bryer and J. Herrin (Birmingham, 1977) 147.

The meaning of the restoration of the figural portions of this mosaic has been undervalued as an important statement on the significance of the visual in ninth-century Byzantium. Iconophile theory has partly contributed to this misunderstanding; it laid stress on the ability of inscription not only to establish the identity of images but also to maintain an essential distinction between prototype and image. This stress on the policing nature of words has led to a miscomprehension of the value and role of the visual; moreover, it has led to a neglect of the visual quality of the word in actual Byzantine images.

Not only did the mosaics of the angelic powers at Nicaea preserve the marks of restoration, the sutures revealing earlier editing, they also showed material words: on the one hand, the earlier inscriptions (psalms and nominations) and, on the other, a new cluster of letters between the powers on the south side (fig. 9). The latter reveal that a certain Naucratius (d. 848), probably a follower of Theodore of Stoudios, has returned a proper balance of figuration and inscription to the mosaics. This balance is the other important issue the mosaics raise: that the symbiosis of figuration and inscription worked as a negation, mutually denying these visual components any resemblance to the prototype. Unlike the literal—one might even say natural—quality of the images of the Virgin and Child in the apse (fig. 16), the powers were absolutely conventional signs since all aspects of description on the bema arch denied resemblance to their models; instead, they were prospective, transparent to a transcendental reality.

The Byzantine images of angels, such as those at Nicaea, relate to the angels themselves as negations and contradictions: the angels were represented in the mosaics only in a symbolic, allusive sense, and they did not correspond essentially or visually with that mosaic. The nominating inscriptions on these mosaics stated that the image “is” in a relative way an angelic being. At the same time, the inscriptions stated that the image “is not,” indeed cannot be, a likeness of this being. The inscriptions then pronounced a provisional state of correspondence, a series of possible relations between material images and the angels’ immaterial formlessness.

This quality of relation might be construed as an uneven association of text and image since the representation has no independent ability to state a visual resemblance.⁸⁵ Interpreting the iconophile definition of equivocation as logocentric would be mistaken, however, as the iconophile texts adduced at the beginning of this section demonstrate the fundamental importance of vision, of viewing images, for proper teaching and contemplation of God by Christians. Indeed, images of Christ depend primarily on the power of vision, that is, the ability of Christians to see God in his human form; viewing Christ's form literally is essential for understanding its meaning, as Theodore of Stoudios stated.

In contrast, both the epigrams and iconophile theory concerning angels showed that the compelling power of vision leads the viewer of images of angels into higher meditation because of the very lack of any possibility of resemblance in these images. In these cases, the inscriptions were also "images" since iconophiles did not hold to the exclusive notion of images that iconoclasts defended. Inscriptions and representations were brought equally to the fore in this mosaic of the angelic powers since the flat gold ground simulated no depth or, at least, equal depth, on the surface. No division was constructed for real or represented space, for word and image, that might prioritize one or the other.⁸⁶ Both nominating inscription and figures of powers are inclusive, complementary "images."

85. Gilbert Dagron has claimed that the image becomes redundant in iconophile image theory since the word, the name applied to the image, determines the likeness of the image. See G. Dagron, "Mots, images, icônes," Nouvelle revue de psychanalyse 44(1991):160ff. However, Dagron equated this iconophile notion of equivocalness with the earlier handbooks describing "εἰκονισμός." "Εἰκονισμός" involved a process of verbal delineation of visual appearance which relied upon direct equivalences of word and image; in this way, Dagron says one could convert a proper name into a visualizable formula. Yet this parallel only explains one aspect of the iconophile theologians' position since these theologians also viewed images with more complexity and allegorical insight and did not admit a simple equivalency of name and image in every case. The angels, of course, belie any simple equivalence of name and image by which Dagron might characterize the iconophile position and the methods of "εἰκονισμός": verbal delineation of angels, as well as the visual description, is allusive and imprecise.

In short, the image resembles only itself through the inscribed name on the image, "L'image de culte est un nomen sacrum. Elle possède une sacralité intrinsèque." See ibid., 162. Yet this formulation leaves the image as a merely reflexive sign, wholly determined by the inscription's verbal affirmation of likeness.

86. See L. Marin, "The Order of Words and the Order of Things in Painting," Visible Language 23(1989):197ff.

Figure 17. René Magritte, The Treachery of Images (Ceci n'est pas une pipe), c. 1928–29. Photo: Los Angeles County Museum of Art, purchased with funds provided by the Mr. and Mrs. William Preston Harrison Collection.

Looking at similar issues in different periods is sometimes helpful for casting new light on problems, and I propose here to use certain elements of Michel Foucault's analysis of René Magritte's The Treachery of Images from 1929 (fig. 17).⁸⁷ Foucault scrutinized a relationship of word and image that has striking parallels with Byzantine theory and practice of representing angels. In Magritte's painting, the likeness of a pipe is convincing in its realistic depiction of a pipe set against a stark background, but the inscription, "Ceci n'est pas une pipe," obstructs the mimetic quality that the depiction can claim. Foucault maintained that the relation of text and image becomes a 87. M. Foucault, This Is Not a Pipe, trans. J. Harkness (Berkeley, 1982). M.-J. Baudinet, "L'incarnation, l'image, la voix," Esprit (Feb. 1982):194–95, also discerned an affinity between Magritte's painting and the iconophile theory of equivocation.

“subtle and instable dependency” since the image is detached from the possibility of mimesis by the inscription.⁸⁸

On the inscription and representation in Magritte’s painting, Foucault wrote that they “annul the intrinsic resemblance they seem to bear within themselves, and gradually sketch an open network of similitudes.”⁸⁹ The inscribed image of the angelic powers also worked on the level of symbiosis of text and representation, whose mutual denial of real resemblance constituted a meaningful, material referent, at once opposed and complementary to the prototype. Moreover, each element of the inscription and the representation “denies along with resemblance the assertion of reality resemblance conveys,” to use Foucault’s terms,⁹⁰ and so the image provided a material sign which the viewer cannot interpret literally. The representation and inscription do not affirm one another.

Negation in the case of these mosaics was not only a function of language, here inscribed words; figuration was also negative. Distinct from these powers’ representations, resemblance is unavoidable in Magritte’s banal pipe. As Carlo Ginzburg has recently asserted, “In order to say, ‘Ceci n’est pas une pipe,’ we need words. Images are what they are.”⁹¹ Not so for images of angels: both figures and inscriptions are equal, non-resembling referents. All iconophile theory rested on the belief that angels as winged men were simply symbols that relied on their prospective nature to excite the viewer’s desire to explore the enigmatic transparency of the images.⁹²

88. Foucault, This Is Not a Pipe, 29: “No longer can anything pass between them save the decree of divorce, the statement at once contesting the name of the drawing and the reference of the text. Nowhere is there a pipe.”

89. Foucault, This Is Not a Pipe, 47. On this passage, see G. Shapiro, “Pipe Dreams: Eternal Recurrence and Simulacrum in Foucault’s Ekphrasis of Magritte,” Word & Image 13(1997):74, and D. Chateau, “De la ressemblance: un dialogue Foucault-Magritte,” in Image Deleuze, Foucault, Lyotard, ed. T. Lenain (Paris, 1998), 95–108.

90. Foucault, This Is Not a Pipe, 47.

91. C. Ginzburg, “Idols and Likenesses: Origen, Homilies on Exodus VIII.3, and Its Reception,” in Sight and Insight. Essays in Honour of E. H. Gombrich at 85, ed. J. Onians (London, 1994) 67.

92. See, for instance, L. Marin, To Destroy Painting, trans. M. Hjort (Chicago and London, 1995) 7: “I am thinking of the desire to know the enigma that opens up the space of desire only to withhold all gratification; the desire to decipher the secret, to identify the let-

This definition of a simultaneous act of denying resemblance and engaging symbols is a primary mode of comprehension according to Pseudo-Dionysius, as discussed at the beginning of this chapter.⁹³ For Pseudo-Dionysius, proper symbols are not distracting in their resemblances or material quality, but allow the intelligence to interpret them as it is able. And, moreover, this play of the intelligence on a material image is described in practice outside abstract theological discourse in the epigrams of Agathias and Nilus Scholasticus. In these texts, the dissimilarity of image and model provided the image with a tension by which a “higher contemplation” is encouraged in the viewer. Furthermore, this striving to create a breach between image and model while still maintaining a meaningful relationship between the two has been shown to be of fundamental importance to iconophile theology. Proper worship—in this symbolic theology—is predicated upon the viewer not being seduced into believing that there is a real resemblance between image and model; equivocation provides in this sense a prudent, intellectual relation.

And yet the viewer has to be engaged by the image and believe it has meaning; as the epigrams state, colors and form of the incorporeal being compel the viewer through his or her eyes to direct the “mind to a higher contemplation.” The representation and inscription, rather than affirming one another,⁹⁴ perform just the opposite operation. A viewer of an image of an angel must engage the material object by means of its color and form, and through this engagement realize, in every sense, that “this is not an angel.”

ters (or letter) that constitute(s) the formula providing access to the painting; the desire finally to make explicit the discourse whose origin this formula conceals, the longing to transform the pleasure of painting or its jouissance into a pleasure or jouissance of language.”

93. And the text in praise of Michael and Gabriel by Michael of Stoudios attests to the currency of the thought of Pseudo-Dionysius in the second half of the ninth century. Furthermore, he adduces Pseudo-Dionysius in support of his pro-image orthodoxy. See “Éloge des archanges Michel et Gabriel par Michel le Moine (BHG 1294a),” ed. T. Matantseva, JbB 46(1996):136 (V.4), 145 (XII.1), and 119–20.

94. Dagron, “Mots, images, icônes,” 161.

Four

THE VENERATION OF ANGELS AND THEIR IMAGES

THEOLOGICAL VIEWS

Proper Christian worship was a central issue in the centuries preceding Iconoclasm, and iconophiles and iconoclasts continued this debate during the eighth and ninth centuries. Images dominated discussion during Iconoclasm but the debate naturally implicated long-standing questions of Christian ethics and appropriate devotion. As this chapter will demonstrate, angels figured large in this discussion of images, their worship and function. Iconophiles defended the symbolic representations of angels as a special case, with important historical precedents, both written, as in Hebrew scripture, and unwritten, as ancient Christian practice showed. In keeping with one strand of Christian theology, iconoclasts defended “images” that Christians made by modeling themselves after paragons from the past. The topos of the “angelic life” in monastic practice, as the following section will show, had special meaning in this regard, since an angelic “image” in this context meant a suitably pious life. Iconoclasts abjured worship offered to angels or to their material images, as undesired by these beings and inappropriate for a devout Christian. Miracle stories and theology intersect very intimately, then, in this chapter; both reveal self-conscious concern with the dangers of angelolatry and idolatry that had always been inherent in the cult of angels.

Because iconophile argumentation is extensive, it is possible to follow iconophile reaction to iconoclastic accusations of idolatry as these accusations implicated angels and their images. Iconophiles' understanding of the relation between image and model was a safeguard, in their view, against any risk of idolatry; and iconophiles established this notion on the firm ground of Christian history and custom.

Particular attention to iconophile sources that aim to combat iconoclastic arguments about the proper place of images in devotion, particularly images of angels, illuminates the history of the veneration of angels in Byzantium. The concept of the equivocal relation of image and model was central to iconoclastic objections to iconophile worship and ethics. Because angels, and particularly the cherubim, figured so prominently in iconophile defense, they emerged in a debate over worship and ethics as cornerstones to iconophile image theory. For this reason, discussion of the notional difficulties of this equivocal relation of spiritual angelic beings to their material representations was central to an iconophile defense of image worship. Moreover, further examination of iconophile texts on worship reveals attitudes of iconoclasts and their predecessors concerning images and angels themselves; these attitudes must be reconstructed from fragments and inference but a clear picture of iconoclastic ideas does indeed emerge from these limited sources.

Image worship invited misinterpretation, and iconoclastic charges forced iconophiles to react to accusations of idolatry. In their contentions over what constituted seemly and worthwhile worship, iconophiles used traditional defenses that derived largely from the anti-Jewish texts of the seventh century.¹ These texts comprise a body of polemical material from the sixth and seventh centuries aimed at combating perceived threats to Christian faith; they are often in the form of a dialogue, probably invented in most cases, but corresponding to points of faith which Christian theologians considered misconstrued or misunderstood by outsiders. A principal charge made in this genre was that Christians worship material objects; the authors denied that Christians worship matter, and they answered with the symbolic defense, that honor passed through the object to God.²

1. See K. A. Corrigan, Visual Polemics in the Ninth-Century Byzantine Psalters (Cambridge, 1992) 33ff.

Iconoclasts had consistently advanced charges of idolatry against iconophiles and cited Epiphanius of Salamis (ca. 315–403) as their champion in order to malign iconophiles' base and pointless worship of matter. In the course of his counterattack, the Adversus Epiphaniidem, one of the Antirrhetics written between 818 and 820, Nicephorus, the patriarch of Constantinople at the beginning of Iconoclasm in 815, quoted a number of passages written by Epiphanius that showed the thrust of the iconoclastic argument. The "thoughtless one"—called Epiphaniides, a fourth-century Docetist, by Nicephorus, but in reality Epiphanius—posed this question: "How do you worship the angels, who are spirits and living without end, described in dead matter, since the prophet says, '[God] who maketh his angels spirits; his ministers a flaming fire' (Ps. 104:4)?"³ Against this attack Nicephorus first answered with the standard retort: "From these things who would not realise or discover that these are not the words of the holy Epiphanius, unless he were an exceeding disputatious and contentious person?"⁴

2. See Pseudo-Athanasius, Quaestiones ad Antiochum Ducem, XXXIX, PG 28:621B–D; Leontius of Neapolis, in Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III Contra imaginum calumniatores orationes tres, PTS vol. 17, ed. P.B. Kotter (Berlin, 1975) 156–58, V. Déroche, "L'Apologie contre les Juifs de Léontios de Néapolis," TM 12(1994):79ff.; the Trophies of Damascus, Les Trophées de Damas, PO vol. 15/2, ed. G. Bardy (Paris, 1920; rp. Louvain, 1973) 78.11ff.; the Dialogue between the Jews, Papiscus and Philo, and a Monk, Dialogue between a Christian and a Jew entitled ΑΝΤΙΒΟΛΗ ΠΑΠΙΣΚΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΦΙΛΩΝΟΥ ΙΟΥΔΑΙΩΝ ΠΡΟΣ ΜΟΝΑΧΟΝ ΤΙΝΑ, ed. A.C. McGiffert (Marburg, 1889) 51–52; Hieronymus of Jerusalem, De effectu baptismi et notis Christiani, PG 40:865AB; Anastasius Sinaïtes, Disputatio adversus Judaeos, II, PG 89:1233C–6A; and, finally, the Armenian John Mayragometsi, in S. Der Nersessian, "Une apologie des images du septième siècle," B 17(1944/5):60. The Διδασκαλία Ἰακωβοῦ stated that the wood of the cross was not venerated but that it was a sign, a type for Christ and that honor passes to him through the object; see La Didascalie de Jacob, PO vol. 8/5, ed. F. Nau (Paris, 1912; rp. Turnhout, 1971) 61.12–62.3.

3. In Adversus Epiphaniidem, IX.35, Pitra IV:318.2–7; Holl 358, #7.

4. Adv. Epi., IX.35, Pitra IV:318.8–10.

Iconophiles saw God's command for the manufacture of the Ark of the Covenant as a circumvention of any charge of idolatry. Moving from charges of falsification, Nicephorus cited the authority of Exodus 25:22 and the necessary obedience to its strictures:

For Epiphanius did not ignore the things commanded by God to Moses concerning the cherubim, nor did he thrust away and reject the so-called holy of holies; although fashioned out of soulless matter, it was yet honorable. But indeed he believed and always adhered to these things with diligence and honor, especially what derived from the Jewish people, and he esteemed them as commands of God, passing them on as Christian teachings; unless indeed one supposes that the things written about his life were done mendaciously. This noble man appears to reveal the prophet in his words concerning the angels. Yet he speaks against God, and he speaks against Moses, who makes law in vain, since [Epiphanius] does not consider this legislating to constitute law, and [Moses] complies with it, and so [Moses] in vain toils against the making of the cherubim and of other things, such as God has commanded. Certainly [Epiphanius] would have been worthy if he had adhered at least to the letter and the laws of old. But this one is more disobedient than the Jews and more ignorant, not desiring to know that he who made his angels spirits and his ministers a burning fire, commanded by law that the cherubim be made from the purest gold. What then? Has he discarded it and esteemed it little? Yet he does introduce Paul who called these things the holy of holies and the cherubim of glory, truly extolling these things.⁵

For Nicephorus, the fact that Epiphanius could cite the injunction against the making of "graven images" (Ex. 20:4), while ignoring God's more specific charge to make images of angels, showed willful disregard for distinctions God himself had made. The citation of the Second Commandment was, therefore, a false position which was partially blind and wholly irreverent. Dismissing the express desire of God was heretical, and Nicephorus claimed furthermore that it led to an alignment with the pagans or the heretical Manichaeans.⁶ Iconoclasts questioned the validity of this injunction to construct the Ark for the New Covenant, as well as its applicability for the figurative arts. Iconoclasts—here represented by Epiphanius—regarded art literally and saw that the material outline of an image of the cherubim could in no way conform to, or in any meaningful way convey, the real nature of the angelic host. Conversely, iconophiles read the injunction at Exodus 25:22 literally but were able to view the worked image as a symbol whose value was activated in an intellectual, spiritual approach to worship.

5. Adv. Epi., IX.35, Pitra IV:318.13–319.12.

Iconophiles interpreted the Second Commandment as an injunction against untoward adoration, but at the same time they interpreted it as a law conditional on the initiation of the New Covenant.⁷ In this sense, they again adapted arguments put forward in the anti-Jewish literature of the seventh century. In these texts, the Second Commandment had only been dictated by God because the Jews themselves had been disposed to idolatry, and this Commandment was subsequently made obsolete by the incarnation of Christ.⁸ Iconophiles saw the Second Commandment as a directive from God with a specific historical context. As Ignatius the Deacon (ca. 770/80–d. after 845) wrote in his biography of the patriarch Nicephorus, the patriarch believed that the Second Commandment was addressed to the particular inclinations of the pagan Egyptians by whom the Israelites had been influenced while in captivity.⁹

6. Antirrheticus II, Adversus Constantinum Copronymum, 8, PG 100:348C.

7. On this question, see H. L. Kessler, “‘Pictures Fertile with Truth’: How Christians Managed to Make Images of God without Violating the Second Commandment,” The Journal of the Walters Art Gallery 49 / 50 (1991 / 2):53–65.

8. See the Dialogue between a Christian and a Jew, 73–77; Disputation of Sergius the Stylite against a Jew, ed. A. P. Hayman, 2 vols. (Louvain, 1973) II:48, 51–52, 54; and Anastasius Sinaïtes, Dis. adv. Jud., II, PG 89:1236A.

9. Vita Nicephori, VII, PG 100:93A–C: “Since therefore that law giver led the people entrusted to him by God out of Egypt, wishing to purify from their souls and erase the defilements acquired there, in order that human images not conceive of the divine in humanlike images or in other forms of living things. He exhorted them in this way giving this law: Do not according to the custom of the Egyptians, o humanity, nor learning from them absurdly let an image of god be made by us, nor of these things flying through the air, or moving on earth, or swimming the seas. For these things are not God even if the Egyptians say they are, and he must not be depicted by an image, he who cannot be contemplated. For Nicephorus then adduced the examples of the temple of Solomon and the Ark that God commanded, also mentioned in the Epistle to Hebrews (9:2ff.). God's commandment, therefore, did not apply to Christian images, which were sanctified by God's own injunction for their manufacture, but only applied to false idols.

The iconoclastic charge that iconophiles worshipped lifeless matter made it essential for iconophiles to render a counter-argument on a meaningful, though clearly demarcated, relation between image and prototype. Again, Exodus and its description of the cherubim provided the defense. As Nicephorus reasoned, Christians did not worship even the holy representations made out of the purest and brightest material, fabricated by human hands at the command of God himself. And yet the angels, intellectual and invisible beings, were "fashioned out of gold and sitting above the Ark, and these are neither intellects nor intellectual nor do they possess visible appearance. . . ." These material images on the Ark were altogether destitute of life and power and energy, as their bodies are put in matter, even if the plate happens to be the purest and most splendid material. And having been made images and having bodies out of matter, they are alterations and schematisations, and they are not free from corruption and change.¹⁰

Material objects neither distract nor demean Christian worship since the images of angels were simply matter and fundamentally distinct. Nicephorus maintained that good Christians have the ability to discriminate between idols and true images through pious devotion and faith.¹¹ True images were representations of actual beings, ordained

God is unviewable and without form and invisible and is not at all among things seen by human eyes. But he is only perceptible to the mind, if someone somewhere should be capable of this. . . . Therefore, the law giver forbade that images of God alone be made."

10. Both quotations from Apologeticus pro sacris imaginibus, 70, PG 100:769D–72A.

11. Antirr. I, Adv. Const. Copr., 29, PG 100:277B, "An idol is a fictive thing and the representation of a non-existent being, such things as the Hellenes by want of good sense and godlessness make representations of, such as the tritons and the centaurs and other phantasms which do not exist. And in this respect icons and idols are to be distinguished from one another; those not accepting the distinction of these would rightly be called idolaters. And as by God, and securely related by the epigraphy contained on the images. The inscription on the images stabilized the relationship between image and prototype, and safeguarded against any misapprehension concerning the similarities between the two that might lead to inappropriate worship of the image itself. Therefore, in Nicephorus's view, good Christians had the ability to distinguish between worship directed at matter and veneration that ascends to the prototype through the image.

Iconophiles evoked a long-standing Christian tradition of images in worship as further proof of mature and correct discrimination by Christians. Moreover, Nicephorus claimed that this Christian legacy of images in worship was untainted by falsification of texts or misrepresentation of the past. The materialist worship that iconophiles defended was not an invention, as iconoclasts claimed, but an unbroken tradition of seemingly devotion that began in the apostolic era.

Iconophiles fell back on the unwritten tradition that the worship of icons had been practiced and condoned from the church's inception. Against Epiphanius, Nicephorus stated that it was not merely a question of one or two or three or four people who disagreed with Epiphanius's position, but the entire catholic church.¹² Finally, he pointed out that images of angels were found in many churches, and always had been. "Everywhere on earth in the holy churches the stories are full of the powers of the bodiless ones in holy representations, and of the catholic church, through whose strength the tradition was anciently settled."¹³ On the most literal level of defense, Nicephorus offered the indisputable fact of practice: images of the angels exist and have done for the entire history of the Church, "For if someone were not to represent the angels, by reason of their incorporeality, it would have been stated many times previously."¹⁴ Iconoclasts could muster theologians to substantiate their position against for icons, there are icons of good and trifling sorts, and it is important to distinguish. One should honor the good, reject the worthless, and equally shun idolatry."

12. Adv. Epi., IX.35, Pitra IV:318.8–23.

13. Antir. II, Adv. Const. Copr., 7, PG 100:348A.

14. Adv. Epi., VI.17, Pitra IV:307.1–4.

angels' images, notably Epiphanius, but iconophiles considered their own record unblemished by heresy and falsification: both written and unwritten tradition corroborated their interpretation of images as indispensable to proper worship and understanding of God.

Iconophile and iconoclastic conceptions of proper worship were, therefore, fundamentally distinct: one side was able to posit a relation between image and prototype which was ineluctably binding but not essential, while the other saw any image not of the same substance as fraudulent and unnecessary. The divergence in approach was nowhere clearer than in a dialogue between Stephen the Younger (ca. 713–764?) and the emperor Constantine V (r. 740–775), in the Vita of Stephen the Younger written by Stephen the Deacon, perhaps in 806. Although clearly a set piece, as it was preserved in an iconophile saint's vita, this dialogue also gives an indication of the quality and depth of iconoclastic argumentation. The antagonist, Constantine V, offered real intellectual challenges to Stephen; he was not simply a "straw man." In the course of their encounter, Constantine V questioned Stephen about the significance and value of images of unknowable beings:

How is it possible to represent sensually the things announced by humanity to be beyond experience and difficult to see, and not lacking in intellectual quality, and to worship them through matter, when nothing is to be gained by these things in understanding of the being, except the infinity, as Gregory the Theologian said.¹⁵

This question was an example of an iconoclastic equation of prototype and image,¹⁶ and indeed Constantine V had pointed to the really problematic aspect of the iconophile argument, especially as it applied to angels: if material images of immaterial and invisible angels could only indicate their indescribable nature, then what practical use were these images in worship? Searching for the answer to 15. La vie d'Étienne le Jeune, Birmingham Byzantine and Ottoman Monographs, vol. 3, ed. M.-F. Auzépy (Aldershot, 1997) 156 (ch.55).

16. See A. Kazhdan and H. Maguire, "Byzantine Hagiographical Texts as Sources on Art," DOP 45(1991):9.

Constantine V's intellectually challenging question in the reply of Stephen the Younger is not entirely satisfying:

Indeed who would say, being in control of their own mind, that worshipping the things in the church, whether they be stone or gold or silver, is a worshipping of material things? Wherefore they are altered by name to holy things. You cannot distinguish between holy and profane, nor are you afraid to state in demented folly that the icon of Christ is an idol, as if it were an image of Apollo, or that an image of the Virgin is the same thing as an image of Artemis, and to trample upon these things and to burn them.

This reply was an interesting, if not entirely persuasive, evasion. Stephen the Younger fastened onto one phrase in Constantine V's question, on the worship of divine things through matter, and made the common claim that proper worship exploited material images to pious ends. And he then proceeded to accuse the emperor of confusing pagan and Christian images.¹⁷ This response was not entirely typical of the quality of iconophile debating skills, and yet it highlighted the difficulties involved in answering all of the implications of iconoclastic attacks. Iconophiles commonly accused iconoclasts of not being able to discern which images were worthy of worship, and in this way they sidestepped some of the conceptual difficulties involved in comprehending Christian images of imperceptible beings.

The argument of equivocation posited an intimate relation between image and prototype that was difficult to sustain fully, and the near identity implied in the proposed relation provoked profound puzzlement among iconoclasts. In the vita of Stephen the Younger, after

17. This reply was a standard refutation of the iconoclastic comparison of idols and images. See, for instance, the ninth-century Vita of the Patriarch Tarasius (d. 806) by Ignatius the Deacon: "For, if you compare Zeus to our Saviour in that they are both reverently represented and you affirm that without making any distinction, consider whether you attach to Christ's holy form the insult you bestow upon the false-named Zeus." See The Life of the Patriarch Tarasius by Ignatius the Deacon (BHG 1698), Birmingham Byzantine and Ottoman Monographs, vol. 4, ed. S. Efthymiadis (Aldershot, 1998) 144.9–12, 197. And see Nicephorus, Antirr. I, Adv. Const. Copr., 28, PG 100:277B, who accused idols of representing what does not exist.

Stephen's claim that trampling upon the image of Christ visits violence upon Christ himself, the emperor exclaimed, "Are you then blinded in your mind, and forget yourself, to say that in treading upon the images of Christ, we are treading upon Christ himself? It would not be so!"¹⁸ Stephen answered him by taking out a coin with a representation of the emperor and his name inscribed, and asked if disrespect directed at the coin was not also directed at the emperor himself.

If Stephen's modest but dramatic act demonstrated that images were related to their prototypes, the iconophile theory of equivocation and relation answered the iconoclastic accusation of full identity of prototype and model with a great deal more philosophical clout. In the Adversus Epiphaniidem, after he has cited Epiphanius's charge that the angels' images were misleading and essentially irrelevant, Nicephorus returned with the charge that iconoclasts did not have the necessary capability for discrimination that would enable them to distinguish true and false images.¹⁹ He fell back on an argument similar to Stephen the Younger's, that iconoclasts were without the grace that proper faith provided and so they understood Christian images as pagans would. And for both Stephen and Nicephorus, the name applied altered the image through the forging of an intellectual link independent of the material aspects of the image.

The argument of relation of model and image through equivocation sanctioned by usage answered Constantine V's objection to images of angels as pointless and unenlightening material objects. Essential or visual similarity was not necessary for an evaluation of the worth of images in worship. Likeness was established mainly through veneration offered the prototype by means of the image. In common with other Christian images, the images of the angels did not, therefore, rely on witness and skill of the artist but on the value that society put on such images.²⁰ Despite the dissimilarity and ob-

18. La vie d'Étienne le Jeune, 156 (ch.55).

19. Adv. Epi., VI.17, Pitra IV:306.24–35, "And he then calls the holy icons pseudonymous, attempting by this to destroy the relation (λόγον)." This passage is part of Nicephorus's answer to Epiphanius: see Holl 357, #4.

20. According to iconophiles, relation does not depend on artistic skill in its ability to render likeness. For Theodore of Stoudios, no need existed for similarity between the two, curity of the images of the angels in comparison to their models, Christians accepted these objects in worship as worthy of devotion and of spiritual contemplation because of convention.²¹ Tradition and Christian custom sanctioned the devotion offered to images of angels as signs of “infinity,” as Constantine phrased it. As iconophile descriptions of symbolic images asserted, the value of images of angels resided in their necessarily incomplete testimony to the incomprehensible nature of the angels.

Against this iconophile idea of Christian custom and practice, iconoclasts cited precedents for their views on idolatry and the misleading worship advocated by iconophiles. Iconoclasts advanced both Epiphanius and the fourth-century theologian Macarius Magnes because of their positions on scrupulous behavior before angels and their images. Both had defended restraint in honor given to angels; and because of the attendant difficulties in witnessing angels, Christians must abstain from the adoration of images since these could only be reductions and caricatures of the experience. For these reasons, iconoclasts recommended the two theologians and, in turn, iconophiles such as Nicephorus refuted and reinterpreted them. These precedents represent the traditional opposition to images preceding Iconoclasm, as well as the position of iconoclasts themselves, since the oppositional texts are only preserved in iconophile rebuttals.

neither regarding substance, size, dimension, nor genuine resemblance. Indeed, resemblance, in any precise visual sense, is entirely unnecessary. Only the equivocation of name need be applied for relation. See Antirrheticus adversus iconomachos, II.iii.5, PG 99:421CD.

Photius argued in the 860s that the recognition of relation was a matter of convention deriving from devotion. He stated that images ought not to be maligned because of dissimilarity in nature or in truth. For resemblance rests not only on the depiction's outline of form and colors of shapes, but also on such things as arrangements and practice and expression of understanding and placement in holy areas, inscription and choice of symbols. See Ad Amphilochium, CCV, PG 101:952AB; Epistulae et Amphilochia, ed. B. Laourdas and L. G. Westerink, 6 vols. in 7 pts. (Leipzig, 1983–1988) I:110. He also considered the definition of similarity in the case of the cross; he concluded that the cross to which worship is offered and from which copies are made is most similar to its prototype. See ibid., PG 101:949BC; Laourdas/Westerink, Epistulae et Amphilochia, I:110. For Photius, and iconophiles generally, a definition of likeness rested on consensus and not on a visual or essential similarity between image and prototype.

21. On this text, see G. Dagron, “Holy Images and Likeness,” DOP 45(1991):24–25.

Judging from the iconophile reaction, iconoclasts had objected that the angels, for one, did not desire worship and raised the ethics of worship of angels—and consequently their images—as important issues. They attempted in this way to undermine the iconophiles' defense of a cultural consensus of worship built around the equivocal images of the angels. Again in the Adversus Epiphanidem, Nicephorus quoted Epiphanius's objection, "I say that [the angels] do not desire to be worshipped,"²² and exclaimed in response:

Therefore, do they desire to be insulted likewise? And for this reason does the impious one pour down so much scorn on them, at once ordaining these must not be worshipped, on account of his wicked and unthinking view of the glory reserved for them?²³

According to Nicephorus, Epiphanius had associated image and prototype with too little distinction. Indeed, Epiphanius's text revealed iconoclastic prejudices. As iconoclasts believed true images and models to be consubstantial, they had evidently produced Epiphanius's claim that angels did not desire worship as a corollary to their belief that images of angels were likewise not to be worshipped.²⁴ At this point, the intersection of theological discourse with models of worship found in saints' lives becomes clear: iconoclasts had confused angelolatry with idolatry; the two were inseparable in their view because of the belief in the necessary consubstantiality of the model and prototype. This confounding of angel and image into one ethical issue is an interesting strategy by iconoclasts: if angels had always been dangerously venerated, so were their images; if angels do not desire worship, neither do they want images. The answer to this ethical issue—as found in miracle stories of angels—is explored in the following section.

22. Adv. Epi., IX.36, Pitra IV:319.15–16.

23. Adv. Epi., IX.36, Pitra IV:319.17–21.

24. This claim is likely connected with the iconoclast belief in the necessary consubstantiality of image and prototype. Iconoclasts argued that the only true image was of the same matter as its model; therefore, the eucharist was a real image and any image that had only relation to its model was false. On this issue, see K. Parry, Depicting the Word. Byzantine Iconophile Thought of the Eighth and Ninth Centuries (Leiden, 1996) 178–90.

In Nicephorus's view, the angels did not seek veneration for themselves, nor did their images receive it. Epiphanius and his iconoclastic followers simply offered a wrong-headed definition of relation in seeing the angels and their images as equivalent. They sullied the proper non-essential relation of image and model through equivocation that iconophiles defended. Honor given to images did not stop there but proceeded to the prototypes themselves; consequently, "just as the icons are not worshipped, neither are the archetypes honoured."²⁵

A confusion of honor of prototype and image would suggest pagan worship, Nicephorus said. For pagans worship gods that did not exist, so that they were simply worshipping vain objects. In his De Magnete, Nicephorus had also defended Macarius Magnes from the charge pressed by his pagan opponent that Christians worshipped angels. The pagan stated that Christian angels were comparable to gods and that honor bestowed on images of angels and gods were similarly appropriate. Nicephorus supported Macarius by insisting on the fundamental distinction between empty pagan idols and authentic Christian images:

Protecting our own worship from these ignoble mysteries that deserve darkness, he does not consider them worthy of Christians, nor does he desire to make images or honour them, such as [the Hellenes] make images and worship.²⁶

Thus, in theory, honor passed through the image, without material obstacle, directly to the prototype and in a way fundamentally different from pagan misapprehension of idols that were destitute of archetypes.

Despite Nicephorus's defense, an ethical definition of the "true" Christian image guided Epiphanius's and Macarius Magnes's arguments, and this fourth-century advocacy for the ethical image must 25. Adv. Epi., IX.41, Pitra IV:323.39–40; and also 324.4–7, "So that since the image of Christ is not honoured, it follows that he would wish that Christ himself not be honoured." In general, see Adv. Epi., IX.36ff., Pitra IV:319.23ff.

26. De Magnete, I.14, Pitra I:311.19–23.

certainly have been a compelling precedent for iconoclasts. Nicephorus tried consistently to bring Macarius's arguments into line with iconophile concerns, but in fact Macarius had contended that a virtuous Christian did not make material images. In true worship, Macarius wrote, Christians modeled themselves after paragons of Christianity from the Church's teaching, thereby fashioning a true "image." Against the use of Macarius's writings by iconoclasts, Nicephorus responded with the normal accusation of falsification and stated that, in fact, Macarius Magnes was discussing the pagan position on images and not the Christian view.²⁷

Nicephorus attacked further the perverse use of the text by iconoclasts when discussing a passage by Macarius Magnes concerning the appearance of the angels to Abraham: "As the angels appeared often in the form of men, they were not that which appeared, but that which they were, that is, invisible."²⁸ Nicephorus persisted in his belief in the willful tamperings of iconoclasts when he commented on this passage, "as if compensating for the things not adduced, he introduces in the middle of the passage as an example the person of the patriarch Abraham."²⁹ For iconophiles, Abraham was one of the most venerable instances of witness to angelic epiphany.³⁰ But he did

27. De Magnete, I.41, Pitra I:326.35–327.13: "For one must note that after the author has said, 'Certainly [he does not make] their images formed in outline ...' [Blondel 214.15] the Christomachos again willfully takes away the phrase, 'as you yourself say,' [Blondel 214.15–16] in order that he seem credible to the readers. He thereby says that the author believes in the destruction of the holy icons, which the author does not believe. Rather he stands opposed to the faith of the Hellenes, as he said to the Hellene that he did not agree with him, providing the 'as you say' concerning the idols, statues and images of the gods. Moreover, those seeking to imitate the angelic way of life, in this fashion, which forbids and spurns, that is to say, the abominations of the idols, they make an end of the images. For opposing this, they are manifestly taking away the idols, and they have a horror of them, as loathsome and hateful."

28. Blondel 214.21–22, and De Magnete, I.42, Pitra I:327.16–19.

29. See De Magnete, I.43, Pitra I:327.20–37.

30. One might also expect, given the significance of Abraham's hospitality to the three "men" at Mamre for iconophile defense in the eighth and ninth centuries, a commensurate number of representations of the Philoxenia after Iconoclasm. Yet the Philoxenia is represented in the Chludov Psalter once (fol. 49v), in the context of its eucharistic symbolism and not as an epiphany. See Corrigan, Visual Polemics, 52ff. In the Sacra Parallela (Paris. gr. 923, fol. 245r), the middle of the three angels is depicted without a crossed-nimbus and relates the Christological symbolism of the event like the Chludov illustration. See K.

not create a commemorative image, and this oversight needed explaining since iconoclasts could forcefully point to the lack of mention of material testimonial in scripture. Nicephorus explained the lapse between witness in the Old Covenant and their apparent failure to commemorate the event by first citing a passage by Macarius Magnes: "And as these things occurred wisely and in truth, Abraham did not outline the appearance of these visions, nor did he carve an idol in resemblance nor did he paint a panel, thinking to see the strangers in these things."³¹ Nicephorus's subsequent explanation fell back on the belief in a historical lapse into idolatry by the Jews that necessitated the Second Commandment, but ultimately rested on the charge of falsification and misrepresentation of the original text of Macarius's dialogue.³²

Yet the real reason for the discussion of Macarius Magnes must have been iconoclastic emphasis on the ethical, "true" image. According to Milton Anastos, this emphasis dates to the Hieria of 754 and was, therefore, a central argument against material images in worship from the early stages of Iconoclasm.³³ In the iconoclastic formulation of "images," "one should put reliance, not upon pictorial representations, but upon the scriptures and the biographies of the saints."³⁴ As Anastos noted, the Fathers quoted at the Council of 754 dealt primarily with spiritual worship. The Council cited Basil the Great (ca. 330–379):

The study of the holy writings constitutes the best path to the ascertainment of what is proper, because they provide a guide for Weitzmann, The Miniatures of the Sacra Parallela. Parisinus graecus 923 (Princeton, 1979) 40, fig. 27.

31. Blondel 215.30–32.

32. De Magnete, I.43, Pitra I:328.3–17: "For it is not likely that the patriarch being a friend of God would be induced into error of the superstitious persons of that time, only just having risen above the manufacture of idols. And it is necessary to note that one must supply the things there left out, that is to say, 'as you say.' The Hellene, who had been inserted above, after it has, 'Certainly [he does not make] their images formed in outline . . .'" (Blondel 214.15–16).

33. See M. V. Anastos, "The Ethical Theory of Images Formulated by the Iconoclasts in 754 and 815," DOP 8(1954):151–60.

34. Anastos, "The Ethical Theory of Images," 153.

conduct, together with the biographies of the blessed ones, that serve as living images of a godly life and the inspiration for the emulation of god-like behaviour.³⁵

Iconophiles did not oppose this emphasis on spiritual worship, and they even interpreted such worship as a commendable mode of adoration of God. However, iconophiles saw the consequent dismissal of images by iconoclasts as obdurate and willful behavior; by dismissing images, iconoclasts were denying an equally venerable means of adoring and comprehending God. Both sides could, in fact, support the importance of the ethical image, but from entirely divergent perspectives. Moreover, these divergent perspectives on ethics and worship of images of angels parallel practice as seen in miracle stories, as the following section will demonstrate. This long-standing concern over angels and their images influenced image theory and practice both, and it led to serious divergences in opinion during Iconoclasm: suspended between humanity and God, angels demanded particular treatment, and iconophile texts clearly reveal the complexities of this peculiar case.

HAGIOGRAPHICAL VIEWS

Miracle stories of the angels produced before, during and after Iconoclasm were directly influenced by this debate over worship proper to angels and their images. By examining the traces of this debate in miracle stories, this section demonstrates that the concerns of image theory extended beyond limited theological circles into the public realm. Miracle stories of angels, in the hands of either iconoclasts or iconophiles, were intended to provide persuasive examples of correct worship of angels and images through forceful and compelling narratives of divine interventions. In this way, these didactic texts parallel the concerns of the more rarefied image theory.

In the period preceding Iconoclasm, proper worship of angels did include images; in practice, images of angels could express both doctrinal concerns and exegesis of nature and identity. This incorporation of images into worship likewise appeared in miracle stories. The Miracles of St. Artemius, written in the 660s about Artemius's shrine in the church of John the Baptist in Oxeia at Constantinople, contained the earliest description of images of angels in a miracle story. It described, moreover, the complete integration by the seventh century of images of the saints into popular piety.³⁶ In one of the episodes, a young girl, Euphemia, saw two angels in a night vision; in the morning, she identified them by reference to icons hanging in the church.³⁷

35. Mansi XIII:300AB; trans. Anastos, "The Ethical Theory of Images," 154–55.

The saints' lives of the sixth and seventh centuries testified to an increased importance of images in miracles of healing and other interventions by saints. The miracle story of Artemius is replete with miracles that occurred at his shrine, often effected through his images.³⁸ And other pre-iconoclastic miracle stories attested further the central role images were assuming in devotion; these texts showed that the faithful increasingly perceived images as signs of the presence of the saint and as a means by which Christians could encourage the saints' activity and protection.³⁹ A seventh-century text, once ascribed to Athanasius of Alexandria (ca. 296–373), for one, defended images on the grounds that the miracles performed by images irrefutably demonstrated images' divine qualities. Furthermore, the author ranked images as a match to relics in sanctity and dignity, and as equally able to perform miracles of healing and exorcism.⁴⁰ This

36. On this question, see V. Déroche, "L'authenticité de l'Apologie contre les Juifs de Léontios de Neapolis," Bulletin de correspondance hellénique 110(1986):658ff., and also his, "L'Apologie contre les Juifs de Léontios de Néapolis," TM 12(1994):85ff.; and E. Kitzinger, "The Cult of Images in the Age Before Iconoclasm," DOP 8(1954):96ff., and, in particular, 107 on Artemius.

37. V.S. Crisafulli and J.W. Nesbitt, The Miracles of St. Artemios. A Collection of Miracle Stories by an Anonymous Author of Seventh-Century Byzantium (Leiden, New York and Köln, 1997) 176–84. And see C. Mango, "On the History of the Templon and the Martyrion of St. Artemios at Constantinople," Zograf 10(1979):40–43.

38. For instance, Crisafulli/Nesbitt, The Miracles of St. Artemios, 88.7 and 108.4.

39. For example, Cosmas and Damian, L. Deubner, Kosmas und Damian. Texte und Einleitung (Leipzig, 1907) 133.23–24, and Theodore of Sykeon, Vie de Théodore de Sykéon, ed. A.-J. Festugière, 2 vols. (Brussels, 1970) I:32.9–13, I:39.5–6.

40. Quaest. ad Ant. Duc., XXXIX, PG 28:621CD.

early devotion included images of angels, as the miracle at the shrine of Artemius showed, but the lives of saints of the eighth and ninth centuries offered alternate models of access to angels, and to the saints more generally.

The miracle story of the Archangel Michael at Chonae, the Narration of the Miracle Accomplished at Chonae by the Archangel Michael, re-worked in the eighth century, related a pattern of worship that conformed to the ethical models stressed in the Iconoclastic debates.⁴¹ In so doing, it avoided patterns found in the Miracles of St Artemius which relied upon images for access to, and provisional identification of, spiritual beings. The Chonae text offered a paradigm of behavior for approaching an angel and receiving the benefits of that proper approach. The miracle story, and its message, were neither overtly iconoclastic nor iconophile. Yet it has common elements with “non-iconophile” miracle stories analyzed by Marie-France Auzépy, and these common elements provided a discrete iconoclastic context for the Chonae miracle story.⁴²

41. The first recension of the Chonae hagiography, and clearly the model for later texts, was edited with commentary by Bonnet [= AB 8(1889):289–307]. Bonnet placed the hagiography between the fifth and seventh century. Examining Bonnet’s evidence, William Ramsay thought the anonymous text was not earlier than the ninth century, citing the local names employed in the text as proof of this date. See W. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire Before 170 A.D. (New York and London, 1893) 468, 478. However, the name change sometime in the course of the eighth century is the terminus post quem because the miracle is said to have occurred at Chonae itself, and the hagiography is most likely from an eighth-century milieu. Other versions survive: Symeon Metaphrastes (d. ca. 1000) produced a version (Bonnet, 20–28 = AB 8(1889):308–16), and Sissinius wrote a hagiography of Michael at Chonae in the late tenth century, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, in AASS, Sept. 8:41–49). And Pantaleon (late ninth/early tenth century) mentioned the miracle in his Sermo festo S. Michaelis Archangelis (PG 98:1264A). See, for complete references for the hagiographies of Michael, Bibliotheca hagiographica graeca, ed. F. Halkin, 3 vols. (Brussels, 1957) II:118–21, nos. #1282ff.

42. M.-F. Auzépy, “L’analyse littéraire et l’historien: l’exemple des vies de saints iconoclastes,” BS 53(1992):57–67. She analyzed four hagiographies: the lives of Philaretus (702–792), George of Amastris (d. 802–807), Eudocimus (807–840) and Leo of Catania (fl. second half of the eighth century). The first three were discussed by I. Ševčenko, “Hagiography of the Iconoclast Period,” in Iconoclasm. Papers given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975, ed. A. Bryer and J. Herrin (Birmingham, 1977) 113–31. The last life has been edited by A. Acconcia Longo, “La vita de S. Leone di Catania e gli incantesimi del mago Eliodoro,” RBSN 26(1989):3–98; subsequently, she refuted Auzépy’s interpretations in “A proposito di un articolo recente sul-

The miracle story of the Archangel Michael at Chonae was an apologetic text intended to communicate models of proper and successful devotion to an audience. In the tale, a group of pagans threatened the hermit Archippus and the shrine of the Archangel Michael with a series of destructive plots; eventually, they dammed two local rivers in order to flood the area and overwhelm shrine and inhabitant. With the waters approaching, the Archangel Michael appeared, addressed the hermit and, by striking the rock before the shrine, created a source for the famous healing spring (fig. 15). The miracle story had the basic goal of glorification, edification and conversion of the worshipper to an orthodox position. It lauded the work of the leader of the heavenly host in this world and established a framework of approach for the common worshipper.

The text also worked to convince an audience of access to Michael, and, through Michael, to God. A key term in the text was “parrêsia” (παρρησία), which can be rendered as “familiarity” or “patronage” or even “boldness.”⁴³ The classical meaning was “freedom of speech,” but by the Byzantine period the word had taken on a broader meaning that in the devotional context implied mediation between divinity and humanity made successful by proper preparation. At Chonae, the miracle was accomplished “through the grace and familiarity (παρρησία)” (1.6) of Michael with God; at a later stage in the miracle story, the same familiarity was passed on to the distraught hermit, when Michael commanded Archippus, “Be bold, and come towards me so that the approaching rivers will not devour you” (15.11–12).⁴⁴ Thus, the miracle story signaled the completion of the hierarchy, ascending from the holy man to the Archangel to God. To a lesser degree, this familiarity or access was offered to the reader/listener according to his or her worthiness and ability to comprehend.

l’agiografia iconoclasta,” RBSN 29(1992):3–17. Auzépy and Acconcia Longo offered final defenses in RBSN 30(1993):3–15.

See also V. Déroche, “L’autorité des moines à Byzance du VIII^e siècle au Xe siècle,” Revue Bénédictine 103(1993):241–54, on related issues.

43. On parrêsia, see C. Mango, Byzantium. The Empire of New Rome (London, 1980) 159.

44. All citations in the text refer to Bonnet.

Although this “familiarity” or “boldness” (παρρησία) was not peculiar to the cult of the Archangel Michael,⁴⁵ the incomprehensible nature of the Archangel made “access” more difficult than to the mortal saints. The unique nature of the angels and the archangels, hovering between heaven and earth, was the basis for this difficulty. The incomprehensible nature of the appearances and the miracles of the Archangel must be understood in ways outside of the purely rational.⁴⁶ As Philoxenus of Mabbug (ca. 440–523) wrote concerning angels, faith was paradoxically the first step to comprehension.⁴⁷ The angels clearly were a special problem in terms of devotion and approach. The angels’ particular nature and qualities demanded individual treatment in theological texts, and miracle stories also acknowledged these distinctions.

In the miracle story, jealous rumblings began among the locals on account of the great success of the spring, and open insurrection against the shrine was not long in appearing. In the meantime, the miracle story introduced a “dishonourable and idolatrous” pagan, from the nearby city of Laodicea (3.14ff.). This pagan had a daughter who was deaf and dumb. Michael appeared in a dream and told him to go to the shrine, and “by my name, if you believe, you will not leave disappointed” (4.5). The pagan then traveled to the spring and questioned those at the spring about the healing process. He was told that one must call on the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, 45. For instance, see Kazhdan / Maguire, “Byzantine Hagiographical Texts,” 14.

46. See Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Smyrna ca. 857–880, who says that the Archangel Michael and Gabriel are great, but small are the means to describe them, “Your [Michael and Gabriel’s] image is broad and elevated in being and manifold in its bodiless and immaterial and entirely splendid shape, but the word, coming from our hearts through corporeal organs, is narrow and humble and artless.” A little below he adds that it is necessary for the archangels “to illuminate the intellectual eyes of our hearts.” The text is found in Εκκλησιαστική Ἀληθεία 7(1887):390.

47. See his sermon “On Faith,” trans. E.A.W. Budge, The Discourses of Philoxenus Bishop of Mabbôgh, A.D. 485–519. Vol. II. Introduction, Translation, etc. (London, 1894) 29–31. For Pantaleon, the process of apprehension is also indirect, “You illuminate our intellectual eyes of the heart, so that we should know, and apprehend in the mind and pronounce ... the miracles of your majesty.” See his Nar. mir. max. Arch. Mich., II, PG 140: 575A. Much later, Damaskenos Stoudite (sixteenth century) wrote, “On account of this, open your spiritual and corporeal eyes, so that you can understand precisely what I am about to say.” (See his Θησαυρός [Venice, 1838] 185.)

and to Michael, and then raising one's hands and eyes to heaven say, "O Father, O Son, O Holy Ghost, through the ministry of Michael, help me, a sinful person" (4.11–13). He then poured water into the mouth of his child saying, rather alarmingly, "The God of the Christians, your power is truly great, Michael Archistrategos" (4.15–16).⁴⁸ The daughter of the pagan was forthwith healed, and the pagan with his entire household was baptized on the spot. Finally, he built there a small chapel in the name of Michael in order to shelter the holy source.

The statement of the subservience of Michael to God in the prayers of the pagan was part of the appeal of the miracle story in the eighth- and ninth-century "non-iconophile" context of debate over proper worship. Michael himself at a later point stated the source of his own power as he commanded the water to flow harmlessly into the chasm that he had opened in the name of the Trinity. Michael had made the water halt moments before by making the sign of the cross in the face of the rushing waters. These were statements then of a scale of access or "parrêsia" that communicated to the audience of the miracle story where Michael stood in the divine hierarchy, that is, under the command of God.

The holy man, Archippus, was at the ethical center of the miracle story in the sense that he described, in his faultless way of life and correct appeal to God, the proper model of behavior for the audience. This ethical model was fundamental to the structure of the miracle story in that the large part of the miracle story described the hermit's way of life and qualifications. Moreover, this character study provided the miracle story's "image" for Christians to try to imitate. The epiphany of the Archangel Michael in comparison was not described to the same degree as the character of the hermit, and Archippus also figured significantly in the encounter between angel and man after the epiphany. Nonetheless, nothing about Archippus would appear to be individualized. Even his name would seem to be borrowed from the Epistle to the Colossians (4:17).⁴⁹ Archippus came to the shrine of the Archangel, the narrator of the miracle story stated (5.6ff.), when he was only a precocious ten-year-old, having left his parents in Laodicea to take up the ascetic way of life.⁵⁰ In this way, ninety years after its foundation, the shrine got its first caretaker, Archippus.⁵¹ The description of his life after his commitment to Michael's shrine was largely undistinguished. It was apparently cobbled together from various ascetic sources and was mainly a remembrance of other familiar texts.⁵² Archippus's anonymity made him an "everyman" that all Christians could aspire to imitate.⁵³

48. See the Introduction on the overweening position Michael was put in by certain heterodox adherents at Chonae.

The Chonae miracle story described a way of life familiar to miracle stories for its guileless devotion and comfortless longevity. The narrator clearly wanted to convince the audience of Archippus's worthiness. Archippus spent the next sixty years perfecting himself in his vocation, his angelic way of life ("ἄσκησις ἀγγελική," 7.11 and 8.7).⁵⁴ He never ate bread or meat, nor did he bathe; he ate boiled wild plants without salt; he sprinkled his honorable body with three

49. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire Before 170 A.D., 469. According to P. Batti-fol, Studiorum patristicorum. Études d'ancienne littérature chrétienne, 2 vols. (Paris, 1889–1890) I:33, this hermit in the hagiography is perhaps a true survival of the real Archippus mentioned at Col. 4:17.

50. A. G. Elliott, Roads to Paradise. Reading the Lives of the Early Saints (Hanover and London, 1987) 77ff., has described certain characteristics of the childhood of hagiographic heroes.

51. See C. Mango, "Germia: A Postscript," in JbB 41(1991):298–99, on προσμονάριος.

52. Some examples taken from the Lausiaca History of Palladius (ca. 363–ca. 431): The Lausiaca History of Palladius, ed. C. Butler, 2 vols. (Cambridge, 1898–1904) II:15–16, 16–17, 29, 48, 60–61, and Bonnet xxii n1, for others.

53. I follow this idea in hagiography, liturgy and art in my "Holy Man, Supplicant and Donor: On Representations of the Miracle of the Archangel Michael at Chonae," Mediaeval Studies 59(1997):173–82.

54. Elliott, Roads to Paradise, 132ff., has noted the opposition of nature and culture with regard to the position of the hermit. On the topos of monks as angels, see P. S. Frank, ΑΓΓΕΛΙΚΟΣ ΒΙΟΣ. Begriffsanalytische und begriffsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zum "Engelgleichen Leben" im frühen Mönchtum (Münster, 1964). And Peter Brown's remarks on the de-gendering of monks through the simile of angelic qualities has interesting possibilities. See "The Rise and Function of the Holy Man in Late Antiquity, 1971–1997," J ECS 6(1998): 371–72. The confrontation of monk and angel at Chonae, in literature and art, also has a potential for elevation of the everyman Archippus. Raised to exalted company, he joins these celestial ranks through his extra-terrestrial vocation.

measures of water one day out of three, and in this way refreshed his soul; for clothing he wore two sacks and he slept on stones with a pillow filled with thorns; never did he relax, or reveal his body, all the while guarding his stainless soul from belonging to the other one (that is, the devil). The value of such an anonymous portrait at the center of this text lay in Archippus's quality as a model for imitation. Not everyone would be capable of this demanding way of life. At an elevated level, Archippus figured as an exemplar who might be out of reach to many in his worthiness but who at least presented an ideal of approach to the Archangel and, most important, of answered prayer.⁵⁵

Archippus's reaction to the threat of the pagans is instructive. The group of several thousand, seething with hatred and envy of Archippus, the shrine, and their patron, were impressively bestial, and were thus fundamentally distinct from the holy man. They roared like lions (8.15) and gnashed their teeth in working out their wicked designs.⁵⁶ As Archippus saw the designs of the devil and the unclean things of the idolaters, he attempted to counter the base workings of the pagans by going into the church where he fell as if dead. He beseeched God and the Archangel Michael to guard the shrine from the approaching water, and spent ten days neither eating nor drinking nor raising himself from the floor. He said,

I do not depart from this church nor do I leave off from prayer but I will die by this water. For I believe that my God will save me from faintness and tempestuousness through the agency of the Archangel Michael so that it will make no mark either on this holy shrine or on this land ... (13.10–14).⁵⁷

55. The idea of the holy man as exemplar, of course, has deep roots in Late Antique and Byzantine society, and it also informed the iconoclastic image of the ideal Christian discussed in chapter 2. On the holy man in Late Antiquity, see M. Vessey, "The Demise of the Christian Writer and the Remaking of 'Late Antiquity': From H.-I. Marrou's Saint Augustine (1938) to Peter Brown's Holy Man (1983)," J ECS 6(1998):403–11.

56. In the Menologium Basilianum (late tenth/early eleventh century), PG 117:33C. Also, Bonnet 3.9 and 5.3.

57. Chrysippus (ca. 405–479) described Daniel and his preparations for the epiphany (Dan. 10:2–3): "In those days I Daniel was in mourning three whole weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all, till

For ten days, the pagans stored up the water behind their dams and on the tenth day they unleashed the rivers. Archippus, hearing the advancing waters crush the rocks, intensified his prayers, and wet with tears called on God once more, reciting Psalm 93, particularly lines 3–5:

The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves. The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea. Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O Lord for ever.⁵⁸

When Archippus had finished the Psalm, there came from outside a great clap of thunder and the Archistrategos came “to that place, standing on the head of the impenetrable rock” (14.17–18). Archippus’s access to the Archangel, his recommendation to “parrêsia,” was founded on his unimpeachable way of life, and proved by the Archangel’s intervention on his behalf. Archippus “pursues the angelic life while in the flesh” and, therefore, was worthy of visions (24.7).⁵⁹

The goal in devotion to Michael was an access from which benefit derives, and this access was made possible through the paradigm of approach present in the miracle story. This conclusion was latent in the anonymous version and explicit in later versions of the miracle. “Therefore truly we shall imitate this wondrous Archippus, this worthy one himself, [who] on account of his excellence was made most familiar to the great Archangel Michael and was revealed a vision....”⁶⁰ Only the just and righteous were allowed into the presence of the angels, for protection and revelation, as Paul warned in three whole weeks were fulfilled.” He then went on to describe what Daniel saw at Dan. 10:5, 12:5, and Michael’s identification at 10:12–13. See A. Sigalas, “Χρυσίππου πρεσβυτέρου Ἐγκώμιον εἰς Ἀρχάγγελον Μιχαήλ,” EEBS 3(1926):90.17ff.

58. In the Theodore Psalter (1066), British Museum Add. 19.352, fol. 125r, the scene of the miracle at Chonae illustrates just this passage from Psalm 93. See S. Der Nersessian, L’illustration des psautiers grecs du Moyen Âge. II. Londres, Add. 19.352 (Paris, 1970) 46, fig. 203.

59. Here Sissinius, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 9, AASS Sept. 8:44F, “βίον ἱσάγγελον ἐν σαρκὶ μετερχόμενος.”

60. Sissinius, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 18, AASS Sept. 8:47B.

1 Corinthians 11:10.⁶¹ The miracle was proof of the promise made on proper approach for all worshippers, exemplified by the generalized but scrupulous Archippus. The only miracle performed by Archippus was the successful answering of his extensive prayer, and for that one power he was worthy of emulation.⁶²

Auzépy has noted the lack of miracles performed by subjects of saints' lives of the eighth and ninth centuries.⁶³ Although Archippus was not himself active in good works in a community, the legend dated from before Iconoclasm, and must have retained some of its original elements. Its rewriting and elaboration in the eighth century must have been connected to the contemporary appeal of the legend. In the Chonae miracle story, it is significant that the central character lacks any miraculous power. Archippus's abilities were restricted to, and made laudable by, a holy life and energetic prayer.

Some modern commentators, typically historians of the nineteenth century, have criticized the miracle story of Chonae for its lack of inventiveness, focusing on the generalized portrait of Archippus, a holy man with no real personality. This generalization works to a purpose, however, presenting a behavior meant to persuade its audience of the best route to fulfilled entreaty. Commentators have accused the narrator of the anonymous version of being artless, rude in style, and incomplete in knowledge of the event and region.⁶⁴ However, repetition of details in miracle stories and saints' lives, often cited derogatorily by modern commentators, comply with audience expectations of recognizable patterns.⁶⁵ In the mind of the writ-

61. See J.A. Fitzmeyer, "A New Feature of Qumrân Angelology and the Angels of I Cor. XI:10," New Testament Studies n.s. 4(1957/8):55–56. The idea of the unblemished being allowed into the presence of the angels is one found in Jewish apocrypha and the Qumran texts, although with a visionary quality not often found in the Christian texts; see G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English (Harmondsworth, Middlesex, 1962) 76.

62. Contrast the lack of Archippus's own power with examples of the might some saints do exhibit given by R. Browning, "The 'Low Level' Saint's Life in the Early Byzantine World," in The Byzantine Saint, ed. S. Hackel (London, 1981) 122.

63. Auzépy, "L'analyse littéraire et l'historien," 60, and Ševčenko, "The Hagiography of the Iconoclast Period," 120ff.

64. For example, see Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire Before 170 A.D., 468, and Bonnet vi.

65. See Elliott, Roads to Paradise, and also Holy Women of the Syrian Orient, ed. S.A. Harvey and S. Brock (Berkeley, 1987) 13ff.

ers of miracle stories and saints' lives, edification—as well as “access”—was the key to these texts, and ethical truth was far more important than historical accuracy. The aim of the miracle story of Chonae was not to provide a topographical survey or an historically accurate document: rather it was to provide a model for imitation in veneration and a confirmation of the proximity of the Archangel at a given site. For this reason, the later writers of the miracle at Chonae of the ninth and tenth centuries did not alter the basic structure of the anonymous version but merely added their own flourishes to a successful text.⁶⁶ And it must also be stressed that the miracle story could have posed no threat to the church after 843; images and idolatry do not figure, but the text provided a portrait of a holy way of life and seemingly angel worship which became very popular indeed after Iconoclasm.⁶⁷

A further similarity of the Chonae miracle story with “non-iconophile” saints' lives was the importance placed on references to Hebrew scripture. The prophets, patriarchs, and kings of Hebrew scripture figured in the texts Auzépy discussed, rather than models derived from the saints of Church tradition.⁶⁸ The encounter of holy man and angel at Chonae, as described in the miracle story, was very

66. See Bonnet xii, on the working methods of Metaphrastes and Sissinius.

67. Archippus's prayer is a fruitful act for angelic intervention and the active element in his piety is recognized in depictions by his gesture of imprecation, as well as the accompanying inscription. In the representation of the scene in the Church of the Asomatoi at Archanes on Crete from 1315/6, the inscription accompanying the image states that the miracle occurred “because of Archippus's prayers.” See S. Koukiales, Τὰ θαύματα—Ἐμφάνσεις τῶν Ἀγγέλων καὶ Ἀρχαγγέλων στὴν Βυζαντινὴ Τέχνη τῶν Βαλκανίων (Athens, 1989) 70, “ΘΑΤΜΑ ΤΟ ΤΩΝ ΕΝ Τ(ΑΙΣ) ΧΩΝΑΙΣ <ΝΑΟΝ ΤΟΤ> ΜΙΧΑΗΛ/ΤΟΤ ΑΡΧΙΣΤΡΑΤΗ·ΤΟΤ> ΔΙ ΕΤΧΩΝ ΑΡΧΙΠΠΙΟΤ.”

Ironically, the sixteenth-century hagiographer, Damaskenos Stoudite, states that Archippus prayed to an icon for the intervention of the Archangel in the face of the pagan floods. See his Θησαυρός, 198.

A further irony is evident in the frescoes, ca. 1500, in the Church of Cosmas and Damian, Palaiochorio in the Troodos, Cyprus. In these frescoes, the donor has supplanted Archippus and is represented before the Archangel in the miracle at Chonae. See S. Gabelić, “The Iconography of the Miracle at Chonae. An Unusual Example from Cyprus,” Zograf 20(1989):95–103, and Peers, “Holy Man, Supplicant and Donor.”

68. Auzépy, “L'analyse littéraire et l'historien,” 58ff. See, however, the remarks of D. Krueger, “Typological Figuration in Theodoret of Cyrrhus's Historia Religiosa and the Art of Postbiblical Narrative,” JECS 5(1997):393–417.

much within the scriptural structure of divine epiphany as found in the accounts of Moses, Joshua, Daniel and Isaiah in Hebrew scripture.⁶⁹ Furthermore, the encounter indicated the difficulties—often described in Hebrew scripture—attendant in confronting and perceiving an angelic being. Archippus weathered this confrontation and emerged as not unworthy of comparison to ancient examples of witnesses to epiphany; he did not worship the Archangel but humbly followed orders, and afterwards expressed gratitude for the safeguarding of the shrine and his own escape.

The Vita of Leo of Catania, dating to the first half of the ninth century, presented behavior which contrasts starkly with Archippus's propriety. In this miracle story, a magus by the name of Heliodorus introduced idolatry into the city in the form of an idol (ξόανον) of an aerial deity; the idol was also designated as a "sign" (στοιχεῖον), recalling a talisman through which a demon works and, more generally, the magic arts Heliodorus practiced.⁷⁰ Auzépy interpreted this episode as an inversion whereby the iconoclastic sympathies of the saint's life were revealed.⁷¹ The antagonist of the saint's life, Heliodorus, was a magician, that is, one who worked wonders or even miracles; significantly, he also worshipped idols. Auzépy sees idols in this context to mean any image, and so denoting all image worshippers, since Heliodorus was intended as an iconophile anti-hero in the saint's life; the aerial deity was also strikingly suggestive of all images of winged beings, notably angels. Although not delineated to the same degree as Heliodorus, Leo of Catania, the real hero of the text, derived his sanctity from his social standing as priest and his good deeds which did not include miracles or image worship. Moreover, Leo replaced the statue which Heliodorus worshipped with a cross, the favored iconoclastic sign.⁷²

69. On this structural similarity, see also chapter 5.

70. Acconcia Longo, "La vita de S. Leone di Catania," 89.21–26 (#8). And see also C. Blum, "The Meaning of στοιχεῖον and its Derivatives in the Byzantine Age. A Study in Byzantine Magic," Eranos 44(1946):315–25.

71. Auzépy, "L'analyse littéraire et l'historien," 62ff.

72. Acconcia Longo, "La vita de S. Leone di Catania," 97.1–7 (#18).

In this sense, too, Archippus could be considered to be a hero of the iconoclastic cause: his way of life was the focus of the miracle story rather than any miraculous deeds or interventions. The standard of behavior and the rigor of his prayer were clearly the persuasive means by which the audience was meant to be won over to a proper and efficacious worship. Moreover, like Abraham, Archippus did not make an image in commemoration.⁷³ He guarded the memory of a difficult but enlightening experience in his soul. Finally, he did not lapse into worship of the Archangel himself, and fall into pagan ways, as iconoclastic sources forewarned.

The patriarch Nicephorus (ca. 750–828) fully agreed with the position on idols and worship expressed by the fourth-century anti-image theologians Macarius Magnes and Epiphanius: one should not make idols of angels after the pagan fashion, neither should one worship them. Yet Nicephorus was unwilling to dismiss images commemorating interventions from worship on this account. On the one hand, for Nicephorus and other iconophiles, material objects were appropriate intermediaries for directing honor toward such spiritual beings as angels. Iconoclasts, on the other hand, denied the value of such distracting intermediaries, particularly in the case of such unrepresentable entities. For them, angels and their images had too many inherent dangers for Christians to negotiate. Rather, listening to the text—scripture or, as here, miracle stories—and hearkening to its message was proper and intellectual worship that allowed the reader/listener to ascend to spiritual truths without hindrance. Iconoclastic theology simply could not countenance any mediating steps, especially material ones, between worshipper and spiritual reality. Ethical instruction through persuasive texts such as miracle stories and saints' lives created a “true image” for the behavior and beliefs of conscientious Christians.

73. According to Sissinius, after Michael's disappearance Archippus retired to the shrine and returned to prayer. "The venerable one saw him as if a flame of fire streamed up into the heavens, [and] filled with puzzlement and fear, he went back to sing psalms in the holy shrine, 'God has sent his angel and liberated and saved me from the snares of the beasts, and he guarded his sacred shrine from the inundation of the waters.'" See Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 18, AASS Sept. 8:47AB.

Although the Chonae miracle story must have been written or reworked as a consequence of the debates over worship in the eighth century, it was not dismissed after Iconoclasm. The text provided valid models of worship within the iconophile position as well. Indeed, the miracle was retold by Pantaleon in the late ninth/early tenth century and Sissinius and Symeon Metaphrastes in the tenth century; all of these redactions depended upon the anonymous text of the eighth century. Furthermore, the iconography of the miracle is first found in the tenth century, and it became popular thereafter, as the gorgeous twelfth-century icon from Sinai can attest (fig. 15).⁷⁴ The text did not dismiss images, but did describe a successful and orthodox form of worship; in this sense, Archippus was the miracle story’s “true image.” The Chonae story’s models of worship had relevance for both sides of this controversy, and, like the Vita of Leo of Catania, they must be seen within the context of debates over images of aerial deities and angels both. And the issue of angelolatry and idolatry are also present in this text as at Chonae since for iconoclasts the two forms of unsuitable worship were inseparable.

One final example of a miracle story including angels serves to show that in the period following Iconoclasm proper worship was again integrated with images, thereby coming full circle with the means of healing described in the seventh-century collection of miracles by Artemius. A miracle that occurred at the church of Michael at Eusebios in Constantinople, described by Pantaleon in his Narration of the Miracles of the Mighty Archangel Michael, illustrated this transition from the behavioral model of the Chonae miracle story to orthodox worship that includes icons.⁷⁵ The miracle occurred immediately following the reintroduction of images in the reign of Michael III (842–867) under the regency of his mother, Theodora.

74. The first extant representation of the miracle is found in the Church of St. John, north chapel #4, at Güllü Dere (ca. 900). See N. Thierry, Haut moyen-âge en Cappadoce. Les églises de la région de Cavusin (Paris, 1983) 155–56, pl. 71; C. Jolivet-Lévy, Les églises byzantines de Cappadoce. Le programme iconographique de l’abside et ses abords (Paris, 1991) 37ff. The earliest example of an illustration of the miracle at Chonae, in the canonical scheme, is found in the late tenth-/early eleventh-century Menologium of Basil II (Vat. gr. 1613, page 17). The iconography of the miracle is treated thoroughly by Gabelić, “The Iconography of the Miracle at Chonae,” 96–98.

The story described Marcianus, a candle maker, and a godly servant of the shrine of Michael. Marcianus was never ill, according to the miracle story, but if he felt the slightest pain he needed only go into the church in order to recover. Once, however, Marcianus became ill and went to the shrine, but not before he was convinced by one of the doctors who congregated around the church to wear a poultice with some medicine. That night Marcianus slept in the church, as was the custom at this shrine, and, as in an ecstasy, he saw a terrifying vision. All the doors of the church were suddenly flung open and towards him came “a fearful man as out of the heaven, with a rush descending on a white and terrible steed.” This man got down from the horse and entered the church with an escort, dressed in the costume of court officials. The church also became suffused with an unworldly odor. After a moment, the man came to Marcianus’s cot and inspecting the recumbent man found the doctor’s medicine. He asked Marcianus what it was and identified himself by demanding who had dared bring such medicine into his house. Marcianus told him, and Michael sent his minions off to find the unfortunate doctor. Michael then took Marcianus to a candle hanging before an icon of the Archangel, dipped his finger in the oil, and made the sign of the cross on the patient’s forehead. Michael got back on his horse and rode off into the heavens. Straightaway all the doors of the church closed by themselves and Marcianus was left to marvel.

In the morning, Marcianus told his vision to the deacon who, seeing the cross on the man’s forehead, believed all he had been told. The deacon then sent to discover what had happened to the doctor

75. Pantaleon, Narr. mir. max. Arch. Mich., XXVI–XXVIII, PG 140:586A–8A, and F. Halkin, Inédits byzantins d’Ochrida, Candie et Moscou (Brussels, 1963) 147ff.

The text in praise of the Archangels Michael and Gabriel by Michael of Stoudios (late ninth century) also described the connection between icons and healing. See “Éloge des archanges Michel et Gabriel par Michel le Moine (BHG 1294a),” ed. T. Matantseva, JbB 46(1996):145 (XI.8).

and learned that the doctor had taken gravely ill during the night. Marcianus went to the doctor, saw his suffering, and ordered that the doctor be brought on his bed to the shrine of Michael to beg forgiveness and mercy. Marcianus re-enacted the method of healing with the oil and icon shown to him by Michael, and so offered the shrine's model for successful healing; forthwith, the doctor was miraculously relieved of his suffering.

Clearly, this text fully integrated images and worship, a remarkable development when compared to the image-less miracle story of Michael at Chonae, and to the unflattering portrait of iconophile worship of angels' images in the Vita of Leo of Catania. Behavior was not in the first place the means of gaining an epiphany in the episode described by Pantaleon, but the Archangel himself demonstrated the methods of efficacious healing; this method of approach was convincing by its results and was henceforth reproduced (we are led to believe) at the shrine of Michael at Eusebios. In fact, the shrine with its icon and oil provided the only proper method, as the unfortunate doctor learned.

The assimilation of proper behavior and images was the outcome of this long-standing debate on worship. Icons did not exclude other approaches, like Christian virtue as a "true image," but they were now an inextricable component in a complete Christian ethic. Indeed, the ancient Christian custom of accepting images in worship that iconophiles defended in the ninth century has been seen in practice through these miracle stories and saints' lives: despite inherent difficulties in gaining likeness in art, images were granted relation to their models through practice, through the consensus of worship and, most dramatically, through the miraculous example of Michael himself in the shrine at Eusebios.

Five

APPREHENDING THE ARCHANGEL MICHAEL

MANUFACTURING SIGNS OF PRESENCE

This chapter examines the means by which hagiographical writings, that is, miracle stories, attempt to describe the presence and appearances of the Archangel Michael. Dealing with several miracle stories at some length demonstrates the ways in which each text persuades its audience of the Archangel's benign proximity. The tales of the miracle at Chonae contribute particularly in this examination since the "pre-history" of this cult is relatively clear and the shrine's activities during the Byzantine period were famous. Discussing other miracle stories, namely of the sanctuary at Monte Gargano in southern Italy and of the shrine in Asia Minor described by Michael Psellus (1018–1081?), allows certain structural similarities to emerge: the miracle stories reveal the Archangel Michael's elusive, elemental force active in a landscape and consequently bind him to places to strengthen expectation of worshippers' devotional return.

Several tales of the miracle at Chonae are extant, and, as accounts of the most popular miracle of Michael in the Byzantine world, they deserve special attention. All narrate the same series of events: a group of pagans attempt to destroy the shrine of Michael at Chonae along with the guardian, Archippus, by flooding the vicinity. At the last moment, Michael appears and creates a chasm into which the water is forced to flow. The shrine and its newly fashioned spring henceforth work wonders.

The dating of the earliest miracle story cannot be decided with any finality, but more weight should be given to a late date, preferably in the eighth century, since the “lapses” in topographic detail in the miracle story point to a place of composition distant from the shrine itself and a time after the cult has been firmly established. This anonymous text, Narration of the Miracle Accomplished at Chonae by the Archangel Michael, was surely a reworking, however, of an early legend, since the cult of angels, and especially Michael, had an ancient history around Chonae. That the miracle story was re-worked in the eighth century attests to the popularity of the cult in the Byzantine world, but also to a contemporary relevance of its subject.¹

One can be certain, just the same, that the “inconsistencies” and “lapses” in the miracle story work to a purpose and communicate important information about the cult of the Archangel. Indeed, the stories of the miracle of the Archangel Michael at Chonae were persuasive texts, intended to communicate models of proper and successful devotion to an audience. The texts also worked to convince an audience of access to Michael, and through him God, guaranteed by the miracle and appearance of the Archangel at a holy place.

The quality of familiarity with the Archangel, however, is of a different order than that derived from “lives” of the mortal ranks of saints. As Symeon Metaphrastes (d. ca. 1000) wrote in the prologue to his version of the miracle at Chonae (20.8–12),

It is a great deal more beneficial to describe the details of the bodiless powers, to proclaim their heavenly portents and marvels. For by this how much more is familiarity and consort with God and these [powers] increased, by this how much greater the beneficence we harvest in these narratives concerning these [powers].²

1. See chapter 4.

2. All citations in the text refer to Bonnet.

The key term in this passage is “parrêsia” (παρρησία), which I have translated here as “consort” but which could also be rendered as “access” or “patronage” or even “boldness.”³ Although this “access” is not unique to the cult of the Archangel Michael, the incomprehensible nature of the Archangel made “access” more difficult than to the mortal saints. The cult of the Archangel Michael posed special problems for all aspects of devotion, based upon the unique, difficult nature of the angels and the archangels. The elemental qualities of Michael, which removed him from the more easily understood traits and operations of the once human saints, compounded this difficulty.

A topos of texts about the angels is the incomprehensibility of angelic beings and the insuperable distance that separates the angels from humanity. Despite its commonplace aspect, the topos has real meaning as a defining characteristic of the angels and archangels. Michael Psellus in his narrative in praise of the Archangel Michael stated that it is difficult to describe the deeds of humanity, but having surpassed any of these deeds the Archangel lies above in measure.⁴ Moreover, the Archangel remains beyond the praise deriving from speech, and is beyond the power of both the artful and artless.

3. On parrêsia, see E. Peterson, “Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte von παρρησία,” in Reinhold Seeberg Festschrift, ed. W. Koepf, 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1929) I:283–97; G. Scarpat, Parresia. Storia del termine e delle sue traduzioni in latino (Brescia, 1963); P.S. Frank, ΑΙΤΕΛΙΚΟΣ ΒΙΟΣ. Begriffsanalytische und begriffsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zum “Engelgleichen Leben” im frühen Mönchtum (Münster, 1964) 67–68; G.J.M. Bartelink, “Quelques observations sur ΠΑΡΡΗΣΙΑ dans la littérature paléo-chrétienne,” in Graecitas et latinitas christianorum primaeva, suppl. 3 (Nijmegen, 1970) 5–57, 155–57; C. Mango, Byzantium. The Empire of New Rome (London, 1980) 159.

4. On this encomium, see Michael Psellus, Oratio in Archangelum Michaelem, in Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, ed. E.A. Fisher (Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1994) 230–56, as well as E.A. Fisher, “Nicomedia or Galatia? Where Was Psellos’ Church of the Archangel Michael?” in Gonimos. Neoplatonic and Byzantine Studies Presented to Leendert G. Westerlink at 75, ed. J. Duffy and J. Peradotto (Buffalo, 1988) 175–87, and C. Mango, “La croix dite de Michel le Cérulaire et la croix de Saint-Michel de Sykéôn,” CA 36(1988): 41–49.

This topos of the author avowing inability to describe is also “an aesthetic choice bearing moral value.” See D. Krueger, “Hagiography as an Ascetic Practice in the Early Christian East.” The Journal of Religion 79(1999):216. But “authorial self-denigration” goes one step further for angels.

In other words, Michael surpasses the abilities of language to describe and honor. The difficulties of understanding are crucial since, as Psellus stated, the seeing and the hearing of a paradoxical, incomprehensible event establishes true faith.⁵ The incomprehensible nature of the appearances and the miracles of the Archangel must be understood in ways outside of the purely logical. Faith, in the face of the inexplicable event communicated by the miracle story, is the first step to comprehension. For Pantaleon, the process of apprehension is also indirect, “You illuminate our intellectual eyes of the heart, so that we should know, and apprehend in the mind and pronounce . . . the miracles of your majesty.”⁶ The difficulties inherent in the nature of the Archangel made for special problems of apprehension. For this reason, a textual and devotional footing distinct from the mortal saints determined access (παρρησία) to the Archangel.

Focusing on the generalized portrait of Archippus, a holy man with no real personality, some modern commentators have criticized the anonymous text describing the miracle at Chonae for its lack of inventiveness. Archippus came to the shrine as a boy and, as the miracle story describes it, he led an austere and, with one exception, an uneventful life. This generalization works to a purpose, however, in that it presents a behavior meant to persuade its audience of the best route to fulfilled entreaty. The narrator of the anonymous version has also been charged with being artless, rude in style, and incomplete in knowledge of the event and region.⁷ The burden of nineteenth-century rationalism doubtless blinkered these scholars to some of the positive aspects of the literary tradition of the Chonae miracle. Hopefully, some of these aspects will emerge from the discussion to follow.

5. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 231.3ff. and 240.224–26.

6. Narratio miraculorum maximi archangeli Michaelis, II, PG 140:575AB.

7. W. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire Before 170 a.d. (New York and London, 1893) 468. See also Bonnet, who comments on the lack of coherence and the implausible additions: “nec arte nec ingenio excellentis nec omnino tamen utroque carentis” (vi), and “Genus dicendi tale est fere quale ab eiusmodi narratore expectes, rude et impolitum, modo tritum et volgare modo arcessitum, modo humile et abiectum modo poeticis verbis infucatum, nonnullis locis etiam soloecum aut barbarum” (vii). The hagiography is not, however, without “viribus et nervis” (vii).

The manner in which the anonymous miracle story described the topography of the area of Chonae is undeniably imprecise. For example, the apostles Philip and John appear at Chairitopa, a town otherwise without importance,⁸ and predict the Archangel's appearance in the future; the story places Chairitopa some miles to the southeast of the shrine and is too far distant to be the site where Michael appeared and the famous church was built. The anonymous redactor of the miracle story evidently assumed that Chairitopa was in the vicinity of Chonae.⁹ Yet the etymology of the toponym may be worth remarking because the place name may then refer generally to the place of the encounter, a station then proleptic to the meeting of Michael and his client. Egregious, too, is the way in which the redactor describes the rivers in the area of Chonae.¹⁰ For example, the Lykokapros is a nonsensical combination of two rivers, and the Lykos itself is said to flow in a direction which is clearly errant. Because of these errors, William Ramsay and others have been willing to accept this miracle story as a kind of naive aetiology of a half-forgotten event concerning earthquake and water supplies.¹¹

8. K. Belke and N. Mersich, Phrygien und Pisidien, Tabula Imperii Byzantini, vol. 7 (Vienna, 1990) 221.

9. And this must have been the case, despite the inexactitude of the redactor's description. Chairitopa may have been to the south or west of Colossae. See L. Robert, Villes d'Asie Mineure. Études de géographie antique (Paris, 1935) 105ff., and further 105–106 n4: "Il n'y a rien à tirer de précis, pour la topographie, de cet absurd babillage; le rédacteur ne connaissait évidemment pas les lieux de façon précise. Sur la valeur topographique nulle de ce récit [cf. Bonnet and Ramsay]. Une fois que j'ai fixé le site de Keretapa, la question ne se pose plus tout à fait de la même manière; l'hypothèse qu'avait d'abord envisagée M. Bonnet ... s'adapte de façon curieuse à la localisation qu'il ne soupçonnait pas; mais je ne crois pas que ce petit problème vaille la peine d'être repris. De ce Miracle on conclura seulement que Chonae et Keretapa devaient être voisines."

10. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire, 470–71, and see Bonnet xxviii ff.

11. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire, 471–72, offers three possibilities for the writing of this legend. First, "Some are mere inventions to explain a name. In this way a tale might be made to explain the name Khonai, 'funnels,' as derived from a channel or funnel through which a neighbouring river flows." Second, "In many cases old legends, told originally of some pagan deity, were transferred to a Christian saint." Third, "Some legends were founded on historical facts, which occurred in Christian times." Ramsay favors the last and cites ancient authors on his behalf. Herodotus described Colossae as a place "wherein the river Lycus plunges into a cleft in the earth out of sight, till it appears again about five furlongs away and issues like the other river into the Maeander" (7.30; trans. A. D. Godley, 7 vols. [London, 1922] III:345). Pliny wrote in the Natural History, "At Colossae is a river, and bricks when cast into it are of stone when taken out" (31.20; trans. W. H. S. Jones, 10 vols. [London, 1963] VIII:395).

Regardless of the possible historicity of events giving rise to the cult, the anonymous account of the miracle is clearly dependent upon an amount of artifice for its persuasive power.¹² Its purpose is to provide the Archangel with a comprehensive history, an apostolic initiation, and an open ending; in this view, the text is notably successful. The tale takes place in a plausible geography—despite the apparent inconsistencies—which in the course of the story is miraculously altered to a form more or less familiar to contemporaries. At the end of the miracle story, the rivers ran their proper course, the places had the right names, the crevices spewed their healing water—in other words, the actions of the Archangel completely transformed and purified the area (in the text's terms). The text, then, is not a failed document of unlikely aetiology but rather a reinforcement of the object of Michael's cult, which was to make the angel apprehensible and grounded in a specific place from which his bodiless might emanates. Michael assumes, therefore, a "power base" for his cult.¹³

And Bonnet xxvi, says that this hagiography is not only a fable (of which this is an example "luculentissimum") but also an "αἰτιολογικόν." It is not just for admiration and exhortation, "sed ab uno aliquo homine excogitari, qui, cum ad miraculum aliquod mens conversa sit et causae cognoscendae studio capta, non rem ipsam qualem oculis adspexit et animo exornavit verbis splendidis exprimit, sed quod quaerendo et ratiocinando de rei cause effecisse sibi videtur quasi memoriae proditum et certum exploratumque credulis auditoribus proponit."

12. Evelyne Patlagean warned against those who use a literal approach, seen to some extent in Ramsay's approach to the hagiography, and who see hagiographies "as a mere stringing together, with some variations in their order, of a limited number of legendary themes, among which the authors, who were both stupid and truthful, had inserted certain facts which were the only elements worthy of attention." Using this method exclusively, she adds, "substitutes for the dynamic coherence of a living work a fictive chimera in which cock-and-bull stories and reliable observations are inexplicably interwoven." See E. Patlagean, "Ancient Byzantine Hagiography and Social History," in Saints and Their Cults. Studies in Religion, Sociology, Folklore, and History, ed. S. Wilson, trans. J. Hodgkin (Cambridge, 1983) 101 [= "Ancien hagiographie byzantine et histoire sociale," Annales 23(1968):106–26, and Structure sociale, famille, chrétienté à Byzance, IXe-XIe siècle (London, 1981) item V].

13. See Mango, Byzantium, 157.

Localizing the immaterial Archangel was a goal of cult practice, a strategy reflected in the texts of the miracle in several ways. For instance, the miracle takes place at Colossae or Chairetopa, but miracle stories inevitably describe the change of the name of the site. In the so-called Menologium of Basil II (late tenth / early eleventh century), a compilation of brief saints' lives according to the liturgical calendar, the tale begins in a deceptively colorless manner. The narrator says, "in a town called Chonae, once Colossae ..." and he then proceeds to explain how this name change took place.¹⁴ Michael appears to his hermit and creates a cleft in the rock into which the water flows, more miraculously than before. The final sentence is, "Thereafter the place was called Chonae." This text is a condensed version of the transformational capabilities of the Archangel, in this case for landscape. The two topographical markers, the setting stated at the outset which signals a change and the final sentence which signals the reason for the change, are parentheses within which Michael's safeguarding of shrine and hermit take place. These markers, furthermore, give the narrative a sense of coherence and, importantly for a healing shrine, continuity.

In the texts, furthermore, the sense of place is also determined at a more fundamental level than narrative. The semantic play on "chone" (funnel) and its verbal form "choneuo" plant Michael's action firmly in the landscape from the moment of his intervention and into the future.¹⁵ The anonymous redactor has Michael commanding the water into its course at the height of the drama, "Fling yourself into this funnel, and be funnelled into this chasm, and the splendour of this holy place will be throughout ..." (19.5–7). In the version of the miracle written by Symeon Metaphrastes, Michael, before striking the rock, says to the water, "Funnel yourself into the funnel" (27.24). In the Menologium text, Michael in the penultimate sentence "funnels the water," and in the last the narrator tells us that the place was henceforth called "funnels" or Chonae.

14. Menologium Basilianum, PG 117:33CD: "In a town called Chonae, once Colossae, there was a man by the name of Archippos, prudent and God fearing. He settled at the spring, which gushed forth on account of the guardianship of the Archistrategos, and because of the many miracles, and conversions and baptisms which occurred at the spring, Archippos provoked the jealousy of the Hellenes, who could not bear to see the wonderful miracles. Gnashing their teeth over the venerable agiasma and over Archippos they gathered a great many sympathisers, and damned two rivers, and mixing them together, unleashed them directly to overturn the church, agiasma and Archippos. As Archippos heard the roaring of the waters, he called on the Archistrategos to help. And straightaway he appeared and struck the rock with his staff which he held and he funneled the water into the opening. Thereafter the place was called Chonae."

15. See H.G. Liddell and R. Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon (Oxford, 1968) s.v. χοναεύω, iv [= χονεύω].

This play is common, in some form, to all versions of the miracle. The pun binds Michael's act precisely to exact properties of the site, in a region known for its uncertain geology, with fissures and hidden sources, now controlled and marked by Michael, as well as signifying an exact quality of the site as a place made salutary and benign by the extraordinary act of the Archangel.¹⁶ The nature of the act appears to create the name of the site, that is, Michael creates funnels and the place is henceforth known as "funnels." However, the miracle story's pseudo-etymology of "funnels," in linguistic terms, is "retro-motivated."¹⁷ The process of "retro-motivation" implies a paradoxical inversion since the name, here Chonae, determines the character of the event. The place, given new significance in the text, in fact limits Michael's own movements. The paradoxical operation

16. For E. Gothein, "L'arcangelo Michele, santo popolare dei Longobardi," Rassegna Pugliese di scienze, lettere ed arte 13(1896):108–109, the chasm created in the hagiography is the reason for the entire cult. It was the work of a demigod, and the impression "che qui si tratti di un culto naturale, è prodotta anche da tutto il resto: dalla sacra fonte e dalla figura fiammeggiante dell'angelo. È un fatto caratteristico, che solo la trasformazione ecclesiastica posteriore delle leggende, la quale va sotto il nome di Metafrasto, gli faccia sedare e respinger l'onde furiose col segno della croce.... Appunto la potenza personale dell'angelo e la trasformazione arbitraria della natura, per la qual cosa egli, più che qualunque santo umano, avvicinavasi alla natura divina, costituiva l'attrattiva per la fantasia popolare."

Similarly, F. W. Hasluck, Letters on Religion and Folklore (London, 1926) 85ff., stated that Michael's connection with Chonae was with the chasm and not the spring. He saw Michael's role as primarily a "devil-dompter" at the mouth of hell; as the opponent of the devil, Michael took care of healings and madness.

17. P. Guiraud, "Étymologie et ethymologia (Motivation et rétro-motivation)," Poétique 11(1972):408: "Mais dans tous les exemples ici en cause le nom reprend ses droits et c'est lui qui motive le statut sémiologique du signifié: la forme crée le fond, le mot engendre la chose, par un procédé que l'on pourrait appeler 'rétro-motivation.'" And also, N. Struever, "Fables of Power," Representations 4(1983):112: "In retro-motivation, names create situations, narratives generate structures, words engender things ... the newly endowed word is then used as a proof of phenomenal character or event...."

both situates him and deprives him of initiative at the heart of his own act. Moreover, the predetermined quality of Michael's act is typologically reinforced by a parallel overtly made to Moses's miracle at Horeb (Ex. 17:6). This retro-motivation and typology indicate the inherent difficulties of describing an indescribable being and the processes by which he made his presence known.

Michael's imprint on the material world, here the physical realignment of his shrine and renewal of the miraculous qualities of the inexhaustible spring, is the only possible relic for a bodiless angel. The relic of an angel can only be negative, as the common epithets of the angels, bodiless (ἄσώματος) or immaterial (ἄύλος), are only negative attributes. At Chonae, the relic is not additive since nothing is left behind; Michael alters the landscape and in that way leaves traces of his immaterial presence. In the face of the natural uncertainties surrounding the Archangel, this alteration is the only positive proof possible. Moreover, the text promotes a place where regular exchange with the incomprehensible Archangel is possible and where a balance of prayer and reward is effected.¹⁸ Cult binds Michael to the site as the retro-motivated act embeds him within the very topography.

This structure of transformation and imprint is common to miracle stories concerning the Archangel Michael and is often an attribute of Michael's successful sanctuaries. For this reason, an examination of other miracle shrines and their texts situates this structure further in the cult of the Archangel Michael. The shrine of the Archangel Michael on Monte Gargano in Apulia in southern Italy has long been recognized as a descendant of the cult of Michael at Chonae.¹⁹ The miracle story of Michael at Gargano dates in its pres-

18. J. Walter, "St Demetrius: The Myroblytos of Thessalonika," Eastern Churches Review 5(1973):158 [= C. Walter, Studies in Byzantine Iconography (London, 1977) item V], notes the difficulties in dislodging Demetrius from his shrine at Thessalonike, and ventures that, paradoxically, this may have arisen from the fact that Demetrius was not there. The cult relied on proofs deriving from the ex voto images set up in his church. In contrast, Michael's cult relied on different kinds of material proofs commensurate with his formless nature.

19. See Gothein, "L'arcangelo Michele, santo popolare dei Longobardi," 111ff.; W.v. Rintelen, Kultgeographische Studien in der Italia Byzantina. Untersuchungen über die Kulte des Erzengels Michael und der Madonna di Constantinopoli in Süditalien (Meisenheim am Glan, 1968) 3ff.; idem, "Kult- und Legendenwanderung von Ost nach West in frühen Mittelalter," Saeculum 22(1971):98; G. Otranto, "Il 'Liber de apparitione,' il santuario di San Michele sul ent form to the eighth or ninth century,²⁰ and a Greek version was written in the late ninth or early tenth century, a time of the Byzantine re-conquest of the region.²¹

The Monte Gargano miracle story comprises three distinct, and rather disjointed, sections. At the beginning of the tale, a bull strayed from the herd of a wealthy local landowner, Garganus, on the slopes of the mountain. Garganus set out in search of the animal himself and eventually found the bull in a cave. The hot-headed squire, Garganus, became incensed at the animal and fired an arrow at it, but this arrow inexplicably returned “as if breathed upon by wind,” and struck the sender instead.²² Garganus returned to town and told his story to the locals, who were astounded by the incident. When canvassed, the bishop undertook a fast of three days and nights to discover the hidden cause. On the third night, a vision of the Archangel Michael visited the bishop, and it told the bishop that Michael had returned the arrow. At this Michael identified himself,²³ and said that the reason for his intervention was that he wished “to dwell in this place on earth and guard all.” Going to the mountainside the next day the bishop and townsfolk found that two doors were cut into the face of the mountain.

In the next episode, Michael appeared in another dream of the bishop and predicted the victory of the Sipontini, and their allies the Beneventi, over their enemies, the “heathen” Neapolitans. The next Gargano e i Longobardi del Ducato di Benevento,” in Santuari e politica nel mondo antico, ed. M. Sordi (Milan, 1983) 241ff.

20. G. Otranto, “Il ‘Liber de apparitione’ e il culto di San Michele sul Gargano nella documentazione liturgica altomedievale,” VetChr 18(1981):440ff.

21. This text was first reported by A. Petrucci, Una versione greco-bizantina dell'Apparitione Sancti Michaelis in Monte Gargano (Rome, 1955) and has been subsequently edited by Sandro Leanza. See also G. Otranto, “Per una metodologia della ricerca storico-agiografica: Il Santuario micaelico del Gargano tra Bizantini e Longobardi,” VetChr 25(1988):400ff.

22. Leanza 301.38–39, AASS Sept. 8:61C, and MGH 54I.28–31. Otranto, “Il ‘Liber de apparitione,’” 217ff., sees a trace of the defeat of paganism in this episode, a kind of battle between Garganus, a local god perhaps, and the new occupant, Michael. Although it is true that Garganus is not called vir in the texts, neither is paganism mentioned; in the text's terms, Michael's redirection of the arrow is a sign of presence and also nomination.

23. Leanza 315, on ll.48–49, where terms very close to Matt. 2:13 are used, and the Greek text simply substitutes “ἀρχάγγελος” for “ἄγγελος,” and “ἀγιωτάτης ἐπισκόπης” for “Ἰωσηφ.”

day strange things happened on the mountain, amongst them rumblings like thunder, lightning and darkness.²⁴ The “pagan” enemies were frightened off by these inexplicable signs and the Sipontini enjoyed an “angelic victory.”²⁵ Ascending to the site of the doors, the locals entered the cave and found traces there of the Archangel’s presence—“a small trace, as if the footstep of a man, struck there in the marble.”²⁶ By means of the signs of his tracings, this church was called the “place of the footprints.”²⁷

After the third visitation of the Archangel, the shrine was completed. The bishop, wondering about the proper way to consecrate this unparalleled chapel, had another vision, and the Archangel himself told the bishop not to consecrate the church because, “I myself have put it in order and consecrated it. You need only come and approach with your entreaties since I am attending as master in that place.”²⁸ Michael told him to come the next day and he would at that time show them how that place would guide them. The bishop visited the next day and found at the same spot a chapel ready made, carved out of the living rock “as if by the hands of the Archangel” (fig. 18). The chapel was clearly not produced by human hands, the narrator remarks, because the chapel was so irregular and rough, so full of corners and angles, that only an Archangel could have manufactured it.²⁹ They also found there a red cloak covering the altar—recollecting Elijah’s abandoned mantle (2 Kings 2:13)—and a spring erupted nearby which became a famous healing source.³⁰

The structural similarities, in the means by which the immaterial Archangel is grounded and made more really present, are striking in

24. Leanza 303.83ff. and 315–16; AASS Sept. 8:61D.

25. Leanza 302.81–303.2.

26. AASS Sept. 8:61E, MGH 542.23–24, and Leanza 303.98ff.

27. Leanza 303.105–304.107. In Greek, the allusion to the imprint of the feet is more obvious since Apodonia is clearly a loan word within the Latin text. See Leanza 313.

28. Leanza 305.139–42. Compare MGH 542.39–543.3.

29. Leanza 306.156ff.; AASS Sept. 8:62AB; MGH 543.4–14.

30. Leanza 307.182–83, which recalls Matthew 4:24 (“And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them”); AASS Sept. 8:62BC; MGH 543.19ff.

Figure 18. Sanctuary of the Archangel Michael at Mt. Gargano, Apulia, Italy.
Photo: Biblioteca Comunale, Città di Monte Sant'Angelo.

the cases of Chonae and Gargano.³¹ In the Gargano miracle story, the first appearance of the Archangel brings about a renaming of the mountain, for now, “ex eventu,”³² the mountain is named after the wealthy Garganus. As at Chonae, Michael works at this nominative level and also transforms the holy site in a manner that specifically signals archangelic agency. The gradual construction of the chapel and his own heavenly consecration confirm Michael’s voluntary presence. The impression of Michael’s “body” is, furthermore, a dynamic relic, reductive and yet stamped at the focus of cult, the altar, a sign of immanence contained.³³ Footprints are an ancient sign of pres-

31. Rintelen, Kultgeographische Studien, 15.

32. AASS Sept. 8:60B. The identity of the figure of Garganus has been the source of much speculation. Most authors see Garganus as a remnant of some uncertain pagan deity Michael supplants. See, for an overview, Otranto, “Il ‘Liber de apparitione,’” 213ff., and especially 220ff., on the interesting parallels of the episode with Barlaam and the ass (Numbers 22:22ff.).

33. Footprints are common signs of presence in Greco-Roman sanctuaries throughout the Mediterranean, either of the divinity or of the worshipper (ambivalence is built into ence, and at Gargano the assurance is essential for an incorporeal being who has chosen a place on earth for his “fleeting abode.”³⁴ Furthermore, the inscription over the door of the church at Gargano reinforces the notion of the spot hallowed by contact with Michael by recalling Exodus 3:5, where Moses is ordered to take off his shoes on account of the holy ground.³⁵

As at Chonae, a moral directive functions in the miracle story that describes the behavior proper to receiving revelation and epiphany of angels. God has sent Michael, the Greek miracle story of Gargano states, as guardian for those who were worthy.³⁶ Inevitably the text presents a moral program for devotees to follow in order to be considered deserving. When Garganus descended with his mysteriously inflicted wound, he naturally appealed to the bishop.³⁷ The bishop then fasted in order to learn the cause, since, as in the case of Archipus, the rules for this kind of appeal were well established in scripture and in other texts. After the bishop had completed the fast, the Archangel visited the bishop in a dream, and he said, “let it be known to you that it occurred because I willed it. For I am the Arch-these signs). On this, see K.M.D. Dunbabin, “‘Ipsa deae vestigiae ...’ Footprints Divine and Human on Graeco-Roman Monuments,” Journal of Roman Archaeology 3(1990): 85–109. Christianity absorbed this feature of pagan religions by the fourth century, at least, as the shrine on the Mount of Olives built for the footprints of Christ shows. See B. Kötting, “Fußspuren als Zeichen göttlicher Anwesenheit,” Boreas 6(1983):200–201.

For angels the sign of footsteps has a different meaning. The footsteps describe a fleeting presence made imminent and concrete. For instance, at Santa Maria in Aracoeli, Rome, the marble footsteps of the angel who appeared to Gregory the Great are kept. See M.M. Guarducci, “Le impronte del ‘Quo vadis’ e monumenti affini, figurati ed epigrafici,” Rendiconti. Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia 19(1942/4):315; and B. Pesci, “Il problema cronologico della Madonna di Aracoeli alla luce delle fonti,” RivAC 18(1941):53ff. In the case of the angels, footprints serve to give form to formless beings; they are simple, visible signs of past manifestation and constant presence.

34. Gothein, “L'arcangelo Michele,” 142; and see C. Angelillis, Il santuario del Gargano e il culto di S. Michele nel mondo, 2 vols. (Foggia, 1956) I:231.

35. Angelillis, Il santuario del Gargano, I:47.

36. Leanza 300.9–10. At 311, he also remarks on the same effacement of ancient heresy found in the Chonae hagiographies. In the Latin text Michael is moved in favor of the Sipontini because of his compassion for human frailty, while in the Greek text it is God who has compassion for human fragility and this in turn moves Michael on the behalf of the Sipontini. Leanza plausibly suggests the modification is due to theological preoccupations with making Michael's intervention subservient to God's will.

37. Leanza 301.39ff.

angel Michael, he who always stands in the presence of God.”³⁸ The bishop fasted a second time, “so as to be worthy of Michael’s aid and presence,”³⁹ and had a second vision. Michael’s appearances and construction henceforth miraculously transformed the site, and the access given to the bishop was opened, in lesser degrees, to all those far and wide who were worthy.⁴⁰

Important for devotional ends, however, was the emphasis on presence. The prologue to the Greek text specifies the “digging” and manufacture of the cave-church as an incontrovertible sign of the Archangel’s visitation and presence. The miracle story remarks on the very roughness and oddity of the construction as a mark of the benevolence and heartfelt solicitation of devotion. Michael’s presence infuses every corner and crevice of the chapel because of the superhuman technique of construction, as Michael’s extraordinary act of intervention at Chonae impressed his presence on the spring and chasm. Since Gargano was the radiating point for the cult of Michael for the West, other shrines in Italy and the rest of Europe consistently imitated the idiosyncratic invention and shape of the church.⁴¹ The foundation of the monastery at Mt. Tumba in Normandy self-consciously modeled itself after the Gargano sanctuary, down to the importation of monks and a piece of the altar stone as a relic from Gargano.⁴² In western Europe roughly designed churches

38. Leanza 301.47ff.

39. Leanza 302.66ff.

40. Leanza 307.188.

41. Gothein, “L’arcangelo Michele,” 141: “questa sua miracolosa abitazione terrena lo fece apparir sempre come una specie di divinità naturale”; and in time, Gothein says, the irregularity and the roughness of the shrine became “un simbolo prediletto dall’arcangelo.” He adds that the candles which burn during the day in the grotto are allowed to snuff out at dusk because it is then that the archangel is believed to enter his sanctuary. And see G. Otranto and C. Carletti, Il santuario di S. Michele arcangelo sul Gargano dalle origine al X secolo (Bari, 1990) 57–71, and O. Campagna, “La grotta di S. Michele alla Serra di Grisolia,” Bollettino della Badia Greca di Grottaferrata n.s. 40(1986):57–65, on the typology of Michael’s cave sanctuaries.

42. The similarities between Tumba and Gargano are striking and indeed entirely purposeful. Michael makes his will known through signs and visions and more importantly in his reshaping of the holy sanctuary. See AASS Sept. 8:75E, 77C, and Millénaire monastique du Mont-St.-Michel, 3 vols. (Paris, 1971).

placed on mountain tops became a symbol of the Archangel's presence.⁴³

These palpable signs are momentous within the cult of Michael since, as the narrator of the Greek miracle story states, "order is made through signs and heavenly power."⁴⁴ These signs are more apprehensible when made materially and dramatically. The first incident on Gargano was really a signal of Michael's intent; the returned arrow is noteworthy in the miracle story because of its ambiguity and fleeting quality. Further, the dreams of the bishop are transitory visions in the murky realms of the unconscious, and they are restricted to one person. The irrefutable physical impressions made by the Archangel inspired the collective imagination and other sanctuaries reproduced them. The miracle story presents these marks of voluntary presence as ways in which they bridle Michael so that material signs mediate his immaterial being and make him comprehensible.⁴⁵

Psellus's eleventh-century narrative praising the Archangel Michael provides an important contrast to the stories of the miracles at Chonae and Gargano and their cult certainties. The precise location of the shrine described by Psellus is not known, since he presented little topographical detail, but it may well have been in Galatia in Asia Minor, perhaps in the city of Sykeon.⁴⁶ In the prologue, Psellus extolled the Archangel's splendid qualities. Michael surpasses in mea-

43. See T. Baumeister, "Religionsgeschichtliche und kultgeographische Aspekte der westlichen Michaelsverehrung," in Memoriam sanctorum venerantes: miscellanea in onore di Monsignor Victor Saxer, Studi di antichità cristiana, vol. 48 (Vatican City, 1992) 11–19.

44. Leanza 300.5–7.

45. Michael's immanent protection was held to be magically ensured by means of images and names in some popular legends. See, for example, E. Amélineau, Contes et romans de l'Égypte chrétienne (Paris, 1888) 41, on the Coptic legend of Euphemia. In the legend, Satan says to Michael, "O Monseigneur l'archange, aie pitié de moi; j'ai eu l'audace de commettre la faute d'entrer dans une chambre où se trouvaient ton nom et ton image: je t'en supplie, ne me fais pas périr avant que le terme de mon existence soit arrivé.... Je vais te promettre devant Dieu de ne plus entrer dans un endroit où sera ton nom."

46. On the topography, see Fisher, "Nicomedia or Galatia?" 170ff.; Mango, "La croix dite le Cerulaire," 48; V. Ruggieri, Byzantine Religious Architecture (582–867): Its History and Structural Elements, Orientalia christiana analecta, vol. 237 (Rome, 1991) 242ff., on the village of Sykeon in Galatia, but especially 249; R. Volk, Der medizinische Inhalt der Schriften des Michael Psellos (Munich, 1990) 196ff.

sure and magnitude the nature and deeds of humanity. One must “announce the great things of the nature over us” and proclaim the miracles of the Archangel even more than those of the human saints.

Psellus then proceeded to narrate the events that led up to the foundation of the church of Michael. Heraclius (ca. 575–641) was in the course of returning to Constantinople after a triumphant campaign against the Persians in the Holy Land.⁴⁷ His victories were aided in no small part by a miraculous cross, which had powers against unseen hateful ones and all other battling powers. The emperor had decided to rest on this return journey in the vicinity of a church dedicated to the Theotokos, and he deposited the cross on the altar of that church for the duration of the stay. When it was time to recommence the journey, Heraclius sent some soldiers to collect the cross at the church. However, the cross refused to be moved and could not be dislodged from the altar no matter what effort was applied to it, “just as some rocky outcrop is unshaken by waves falling upon it.”⁴⁸ Almost immediately the soldiers were distracted by a second and more wondrous miracle when the cross kindled into strange flame.

The sparks of an unseen fire shone forth at first. Thereupon, the cross caught fire entirely. And the kindling increased a little, and with a little help it, having been brought altogether to a head, also spread through the whole building and around the church. And now [the fire] was thrown from the building and it seemed that the whole thing was about to be burned. . . . But the fire was consumed in the same way as the ancient bush. Whence it burned, it did not consume the church, but rather the church burning to ashes was beaming with light. And in the same way that it had been attacked invisibly, in this same way it was again extinguished with the flames quenched, and the church showed forth as before, only more pure than it had been. But at least I do not suppose that this was a somatic fire, though it had been seen and considered by many in this way, but the divine Archangel decided to appear out of immaterial-

47. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 233.50ff.

48. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 238.158ff.

ity possessing a being of fire, in the church of the Mother of God, since the intelligible lightning of burning heat was being made manifest to the onlookers as sensual burning heat.⁴⁹

When the emperor heard of this miracle, he was greatly moved and he commissioned churches for the Archangel and the Mother of God as well as providing monks for the foundation, thereby “making an angelic order on earth for the Archangel.”⁵⁰ And Psellus concluded by saying that the former flame still burns in the hearts of those practicing there and the Archangel oversees them still.

This is a remarkable miracle not least because of the inscrutability of the cause. Psellus did not declare Michael’s agency except by the nature of the miracle, which itself has congruity with Michael’s own nature. Michael’s fiery and spiritual constitution seems to have been the only possible means by which such a paradoxical miracle could have been accomplished. Psellus, moreover, could not state the reason for Michael’s intervention in a church of the Theotokos through an object which he himself said is inextricably linked to Christ. Psellus offered two possibilities: “Either he wanted to take up residence in this sacred church and to perform miracles there, or honouring the image of the Virgin, he desired to serve under the personal command of the queen there.”⁵¹ Psellus confessed he did not know for certain. He continued his miracle story with descriptions of some of the miracles that followed on this miraculous enunciation of intent by the Archangel. Michael brings about cures and miracles in a number of ways, either through the agency of the cross, or by a person’s simply being in the church or taking sacraments. By these means, Michael shows his “great power” and his “overshadowing presence.”⁵² The inscrutability of Michael’s presence is noteworthy when

49. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 238.179–239.192. The icon that is not consumed by fire also has a history. See O. Meinardus, “A Typological Analysis of the Traditions Pertaining to Miraculous Icons,” in Wegzeichen. Festgabe zum 60. Geburtstag von Prof. Dr. Hermangild M. Lieberman OSA, ed. E. C. Suttner and C. Patock (Würzburg, 1971) 220–21.

50. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 239.203ff.

51. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 239.198–201.

52. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 247.404–406.

compared to the direct, unmistakable traces left at Chonae and Gargano. And yet the cross contained and channeled Michael's presence through the cross there. This object is in some sense a conduit for Michael's activity "by which and in which the great Archistrategos works miracles."⁵³ Michael's immanence has thereby found some kind of cast.

These miracle stories all display the extraordinary means necessary for the foundation of cult shrines of the bodiless Archangel. These special strategies are even more evident when contrasted to miracle stories of the mortal saints. For example, in the ninth century, Nicephorus, a priest at the church of the Virgin in Blachernai at Constantinople, wrote an encomium in honor of Theodore of Sykeon (d.613) in which he described the procession of the body of Theodore from his home province of Galatia to Constantinople. A miracle which has striking similarities to Michael's initial miracle described by Psellus occurred in the course of that procession.⁵⁴ Theodore of Sykeon's bier halted of its own accord outside the walls of the capital and could not be moved. A second miracle followed this first as one of the team of animals drawing the cart spoke in order to make the saint's will known. Reminiscent of Balaam's ass (Numbers 22:22ff.), the animal said that the saint wished to reside in this place and work wonders there.⁵⁵ The immovable object followed by a more fantastic miracle constitutes a striking similarity between the miracles of Theodore of Sykeon and Michael.⁵⁶

53. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 244.319ff.

54. K. Kirch, "Nicephori Sceuphyllacis encomium in S. Theodorum Siceotam," AB 20(1901):269.22–32.

55. Similar foundation legends are noted by G. Dagron, "Constantinople. Les sanctuaires et l'organisation de la ville religieuse," Actes du XIe congrès international d'archéologie chrétienne. Lyons, Vienne, Grenoble, Genève et Aoste (21–28 Septembre 1986), 3 vols. (Vatican City, 1989) II:1072–73.

56. Fisher, "Nicomedia or Galatia?" 182. She sees several elements in common between the two hagiographies: first, a sudden and persistent immovability and, second, a greater miracle which serves to confirm the first. Moreover, Fisher posits the dependence of the hagiography of Psellus on that of Theodore of Sykeon on account of local competitiveness between the two local cults. She also sees significance, in both instances, of an offering of an explanation for the incidents, even though Psellus's interpretation is notably vague. Michael is connected to the phenomenon at the church because of its elemental force, the natural association of Michael with fire. Fisher also sees "imagery of flashing light associated with the Important, however, are the differences which do show the particular character of Michael's cult. In the narrative of Psellus, Michael works through the cross. By contrast, Theodore of Sykeon continued to operate after his death through his corporeal relics, thus making his presence known on earth thereafter. In fact, relics are key in the cult of most mortal saints and serve to distinguish them from the cult activity of the Archangel.⁵⁷ Moreover, as the sermon of Severus of Antioch (ca. 465–538) shows, the church often introduced relics of mortal saints into shrines of angels in order to make the cult of angels palatable to authorities.⁵⁸

With or without a relic, Michael's presence at the church Psellus described is simply inexplicable and unpredictable, but undeniably there. The ambiguity of Michael's appearance is also noteworthy in comparison to the unmistakable communication of Theodore of Sykeon's will concerning his earthly remains. Michael's will, on the other hand, asserts itself through a kind of immanence and an effect on the shrine that purifies through invisible contact with the Archangel. Michael has left traces on the site in that he has perceptibly altered the church, and the subsequent thaumaturgic character of the shrine proves this alteration.

holy one," although I do not see this figuring in the Theodore text in the same way. What seems more important, then, are the factors not shared, notably relics, an unambiguous revelation of will and the incomprehensible angelic manifestation. On the textual level, moreover, one can make an equally strong case for scriptural precedents as providing clearer paradigms for the Psellus hagiography.

57. M. Rouche, "Le combat des saintes anges et des démons: La victoire de Saint Michel," Santi e demoni nell'alto medioevo occidentale (secoli v–xi), Settimane vol. 36, 2 vols. (Spoleto, 1989) I:534.

58. See chapter 2 for the sermon, but see also the Council of Carthage (ca. 400?) which ruled that churches and shrines of the saints themselves must not be founded without relics. The Fathers of this Council decided against the custom of establishing shrines by the faithful who invoke some apparition of saints or of the martyrs in dreams or revelations. See G. A. Ralles and M. Potles, Σύνταγμα τῶν θείων καὶ ἱερῶν κανόνων, 6 vols. (Athens, 1852–1859) III:508ff. On relics and angels, see P. Canivet, "Le Michaelion de Huarte (Ve s.) et le culte syrien des anges," B 50(1980):110ff.; P. and M. T. Canivet, Huarte. Sanctuaire chrétien d'Apamène (IVe–VIe s.), 2 vols. (Paris, 1987) I:279ff.; Severus of Antioch (ca. 465–538), Les homiliae cathedrales, PO vol. 8/2, ed. M. Brière (Paris, 1919; rp. Turnhout, 1971) 84ff.; and P. Maraval, Lieux saints et pèlerinages d'Orient. Histoire et géographie des origines à la conquête arabe (Paris, 1985) 56. And see Vie de Théodore de Sykéon, ed. A.-J. Festugière, 2 vols. (Brussels, 1970) I:36 (40.10ff.), 57 (70.1ff.), 80 (100.1ff.), 82–83 (103.1ff.), 140 (161.51ff.), on the association of St. George and Michael in Galatia.

Another telling comparison can be made to the “life” and cult of Thecla.⁵⁹ The saint, according to her miracle story, appears in dreams and in other ways beyond her shrine at Seleucia in southeastern Asia Minor. The “life” states that the shrine is located on the site of her descent into the living rock. According to the “life,” God opened the rock in order to engulf her, saying,

“Do not fear . . . behold how it has opened up before you, for there shall be your eternal dwelling place, and there you shall receive shelter.” And . . . Thecla beheld the rock opening up, as much as made room for a person to enter . . . and she entered the rock. And the rock closed straightaway. . . .⁶⁰

The legend is clearly charged with explaining the lack of actual relics or known grave site. The rock simply split at the altar and all suffering and illness were dispelled at that spot. Gilbert Dagron saw this as an alternate tradition that arose locally in Seleucia, orally perhaps, in order to compensate for the absence of relics.⁶¹ For the locals, he proposed, Thecla continued to inhabit the place, eternally resting and alive, like Enoch. Indeed, Severus of Antioch wrote in his homily on Thecla that the saint’s body was entrusted to the earth whence her miracles and healings continue.⁶²

The relics of Cyrus and John, on the other hand, are witness to the authenticity of the cult, at Menuthis near Alexandria.⁶³ The relics had been found by Cyril of Alexandria (378–444),⁶⁴ though they were previously unknown, and brought to the sanctuary at Menuthis. The author of the “life,” Sophronius (ca. 560–638), would brook no doubt on the subject of the relics’ worth and veracity. In one of the miracles, a woman called Athanasia from Alexandria re-

59. L. Deubner, De incubatione capita quattuor (Leipzig, 1900) 98ff.

60. Deubner, De incubatione, 102.

61. Vie et miracles de sainte Thècle. Texte grec, traduction et commentaire, ed. G. Dagron (Brussels, 1978) 50ff.

62. Les homiliae cathedrales, 136–37.

63. Maraval, Lieux saints et pèlerinages d’Orient, 384ff.

64. Homilia xviii. Fragmenta de translatione reliquiarum martyrum Cyri et Joannis, PG 77:1100C ff.

fused the title of martyr to Cyrus and John because no documents existed to satisfy her concerning the saints' deeds and the provenance of their relics.⁶⁵ Sophronius observed that many martyrs do not have documentation for their relics and that devotees piously venerated them for their qualities as intercessors. He further claimed that Cyril of Alexandria's texts are documentation enough for the relics' authenticity. Even without this indisputable fact, he continued, the martyrs' bona fides is the number of miracles, which exceeds those of certain other martyrs. Athanasia was willfully deaf to any argument and was struck by paralysis as punishment; only with her repentance was the affliction lifted. With mortal saints, the traces of activity constituted a partial proof of their existence; and yet the infallible proof was their relics.

In contrast to the mortal saints, the bodiless Archangel, who has no earthly existence, is made known by imprints and transformations of the perceptible world; remnants of a physical, mundane past are not possible. The relative stability of the effects, and the wonders deriving from them, is a necessary counterbalance to the essentially incomprehensible nature of the cause, the Archangel Michael. The invisible movements and inscrutable purposes of the angels are sometimes manifest, however, and in a way recognizable and approachable even to humanity. Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite described the invisible, intellectual life of the angels using the metaphor of the lion who walks towards the sun without leaving any trace.⁶⁶ In this manner, the angels themselves imitate divine discretion in dissimulating the traces of their intelligence. The angels are permitted a divine illumination in enveloping mysteriously and without arrogance this ascension towards the Thearchy. The intellectual nature of the angels' activities necessitates that unmistakable tracks be left behind to signal the protective presence of Michael, or any other angel, for cult. The abstract and recondite nature of the theology of Pseudo-Dionysius could not have satisfied any desire for devotional certainties. Just the same, these passages on the intellectual life of the angels describe the remoteness and incomprehensibility of the angelic host. This theological conception, then, is the counterpoint to the miracle stories' descriptions of Michael's effect on place. The continuing guardianship manifest in Michael's traces, and underlined in the miracle stories, maintain his immanence in the wake of his difficult epiphany.

65. Homilia xviii, XXIX, PG 87.3:3508A–13C.

66. Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, La Hiérarchie Céleste, SC vol. 58, ed. G. Heil and M. de Gandillac (Paris, 1958) 185 n1.

The Archangel's own promise of intent in the accounts of the Chonae miracle underlines the importance of place in his cult. At the climax of the miracle story, with the water standing before them to the height of ten persons, Michael struck the impenetrable rock, which resounded throughout the land like thunder. Michael then made his vow (18.8–12): "In this very place will be crushed all suffering and every evil and illness and enchantment and poison and all workings of wickedness. Here all fetters will be loosened and the troubled and the feeble will be healed."

At Gargano also Michael made explicit the motive behind his appearances. He appeared to Garganus and to the bishop, and constructed the chapel, in order that he might make known his will to remain present with benevolent purpose at that site. The material traces of this difficult presence at a blessed place are the signs the cult depended upon and are the common structure of these texts and the cult the texts relate.

Pilgrimage is an extension of this basic impulse to find ongoing testimony of Michael's benevolent activity. The hope of finding deliverance is greater at places where presence is promised and proven.⁶⁷ Victor and Mary Turner have written, "All sites of pilgrimage have this in common: they are believed to be places where miracles once happened, still happen and may happen again."⁶⁸ The shrine at Chonae was the site of pilgrimage and famous festivals in honor of the saint, at least until the late twelfth century and possibly 67. V. Turner and M. Turner, Image and Pilgrimage in Christian Culture. Anthropological Perspectives (New York, 1978) 6.

68. Turner / Turner, Image and Pilgrimage, 6.

beyond.⁶⁹ Testimony establishes that pilgrims came to Chonae for the efficacious quality of a site where the presence of the bodiless Archangel was tangible, visible and constant.⁷⁰

The difficulties of perception and comprehension of the angels, particularly of the active and popular Michael, made certain strategies desirable in cult and its textual manifestations. The enigmatic nature of the Archangel found counterbalances in the positive proofs of cult, that is, material traces of the bodiless Archangel. On a textual level, the miracle stories underscore the importance of material traces by such devices as retro-motivation and re-nomination. Pilgrims sought the Archangel's favor, and healing and other assistances were expressions of his material interventions of a benevolent character: these were the cult certainties that the devotion to an immaterial being demanded. According to the stories of the miracle at Chonae, the landscape witnessed in a crucial sense Michael's presence and still contains the effects of that intervention. In a more radical, more thoroughgoing way, the landscape is a witness, since—as will be seen in the following section—autopsy is elusive and illusory.

69. Michael Choniates (ca. 1138–ca. 1222) described the gatherings for the shrine of Michael in this way: “The miracles in the church gave rise to a festival, a multitudinous festival, about it. It is multitudinous, indeed very multitudinous, for it draws, not to exaggerate, all the neighbouring towns, but also in addition the Lydians, Carians, Paphlagonians, and Lycians from beyond, and in addition barbarian Iconiotes, in order to buy and sell.” See Μιχαὴλ Ἀκομινάτου τοῦ Χωνιατοῦ τὰ Σωζόμενα, ed. S.P. Lampros, 2 vols. (Athens, 1879–1880) I:56; trans. S. Vryonis, Jr., “The Panegyris of the Byzantine Saint: A Study in the Nature of a Medieval Institution, Its Origins and Fate,” in The Byzantine Saint, ed. S. Hackel (London, 1981) 216.

70. On the pilgrimage to Chonae, see S. Vryonis, Jr., The Decline of Medieval Hellenism in Asia Minor and the Process of Islamization from the Eleventh through the Fifteenth Century, Berkeley, 1971, 20, 33 n165, and B. Kötting, Peregrinatio religiosa. Wallfahrten in der Antike und das Pilgerwesen in der alten Kirche (Münster, 1950; rp. Münster, 1980) 166ff., Belke/Mersich, Phrygien und Pisidien, 223, and Maraval, Lieux saints et pèlerinages d'Orient, 385.

Pilgrims also made their way to the shrine of Michael described by Psellus. He mentions a panegyros held for Michael there (Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 246.388), and a pilgrims' hostel (Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 246.368–72). And for Gargano, the long and well-documented history of pilgrimage is outlined by Angelillis, Il santuario del Gargano, II:163–250.

By their use of metaphor and scriptural model, miracle stories reveal the distance that separates human comprehension from full knowledge of the Archangel. The disparity between this desire for a greater apprehension and the ultimate failure to describe marks the verbal impasse in reports of the Archangel and his activities. Material images also share in this impasse. They normally show a winged youth, as in the Sinai icon of the Chonae miracle (fig. 15), but such a representation is simply an allusion to a transcendent nature rather than a literal rendering of an angel's appearance. Descriptions from miracle stories examined here do not provide stable models for representing the Archangel as they can for human saints. Like images, miracle stories provide a means for apprehension that not only compels contemplation but also denies resemblance and complete discernment of the archangelic subject.

Pre-existing structures derived from scripture and other texts determine to a large extent verbal descriptions in miracle stories of angels, including the Archangel Michael. These descriptions are recognizably "borrowed" and thus venerable because of their origins. They create familiarity and persuade the audience as to the miracle story's verity. At the same time, the unoriginal quality of the descriptions work to another purpose: descriptions of the Archangel obtained from scriptural passages reporting epiphanies indicate the impossibility of language truly rendering an Archangel or angel.

The encounter of holy man and angel at Chonae, as described in the miracle stories, is very much within the scriptural structure of divine epiphany. Furthermore, the encounter indicates the difficulties attendant upon confronting and perceiving an angelic being. Archippus had no sooner finished his Psalm than there arose a great peal of thunder outside the chapel and the Archistrategos appeared (14.16ff.). In the dialogue that ensues, Michael tries to calm the shaken monk. This structure of awful epiphany and conciliation—not to mention the preparations—has an obvious antecedent in the appearance of the "one like the similitude of the sons of men" to Daniel (Dan. 10:1ff.). Michael called out to the monk in a "great voice” to leave the shrine before he is plunged in the water. Archippus came out very cautiously and saw a vision “glancing like lightning,” and he fell to the ground “as if dead.”⁷¹

At this moment Archippus is given a full vision of the power of his protector, and of his faith: the Archangel is a pillar of fire from earth to heaven.⁷² Exodus described the Angel of the Lord who led the Israelites out of the desert identically, “through the pillar of fire and of the cloud” (Ex. 14:24).⁷³ Moreover, Michael’s fiery nature, established by scripture, Psalm 104:4 most notably, often manifests itself in texts on epiphanies. Fire is a textual veil referring to the difficult nature and aspect established by scripture.

The Archangel thereupon told Archippus to stand firm and witness the power of God. Michael commanded the still approaching rivers to stop, and the waters stood to the height of ten persons. And then, Sissinius says, Michael acted just as Moses at the Red Sea: “For as Moses once formed walls of the waters when he struck them with his staff, and led the people to the promised land out of Egypt, why not even (greater) by the word of the Taxiarch Michael, leader of the entire host of heaven?”⁷⁴ Michael is able to stop the waters with a 71. Sissinius, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 15, AASS Sept. 8:46EF, describes Michael further as a “flashing forth of angelic glory,” an implicit comparison to Moses at Exodus 34:29ff. For instance, Gregory of Nyssa (ca. 330–ca. 395), In Canticum Cantorum homiliae xii, XII, PG 44:1025C, says that Moses was like the sun, with “the light flashing forth from his face.”

Archippus’s reaction is not untypical of such a dreadful epiphany: see C. Rowland, The Open Heaven. A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity (New York, 1982) 367.

72. The same description is found in the Metaphrastic version (Bonnet 27.8–9). Sissinius, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 15, AASS Sept. 8:46E, signals the indescribable nature of the vision with ὥσει στύλος πρὸς ἄπὸ γῆς εἰς οὐρανὸν standing on the hard rock near the shrine. The “just as” (ὥσει) is a significant marker of an approximate description.

A fiery nature is one of the aspects of the angels’ being naturally. See, for instance, Pseudo-Dionysius, De coelestii hierarchia, XV.2, La Hiérarchie Céleste, 166–71.

The importance of the fiery nature in theology is translated into hagiographical description as seen in the Chonae hagiographies. See also T. Preger, Scriptores originum Constantinopolitanarum, 2 vols. (Leipzig, 1901–1907; rp. New York, 1975) I:87.

73. See Theodore of Stoudios (759–826), In sanctos angelos, 3, PG 99:733CD, on this passage: the “divine angel transformed himself into a pillar of fire,” and “the beauty of the countenance took on the image of a cloud.”

74. Sissinius, Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 16, AASS Sept. 8:46F–7A.

word, Sissinius also says, while Moses had to use his staff. The first miracle of stopping the water, then, is comparable to Moses's, but the second is even greater. Michael struck the impenetrable rock which resounded like thunder and shook the entire land, leaving the inhabitants in the surrounding area panic-stricken. At the creation of the chasm Michael made his important promise, that his benign presence would overshadow that place (18.8–17).⁷⁵

The encounter clearly owes some of its structure of awful epiphany, incomprehensible vision, and comforting and revelations to the Book of Daniel, as well as to the Gospel according to Matthew (28:2ff., for example). The identification of the vision is equally fraught. Michael asks, “Do you know who I am, that you shudder at my sight?” To this Archippus can only deny knowledge. Michael thereupon states his identity in terms that evoke the meeting of Joshua and the angel before the battle of Jericho (Joshua 5:14).⁷⁶ Like Joshua, Archippus misapprehends the nature of the epiphany but he saves the situation by not falling on his face and worshipping the “captain of the host of the Lord” as Joshua did. The appearance of the angel to Joshua occurs on holy ground for he tells Joshua, “Loose thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy” (5:15). This comparison is not explicit in the miracle story but the appearance of Michael at Chonae is also the marking of a permanently hallowed spot, as his promises indicate. In other words, the sanctification of the site, and the identification of the agent of that sanctification, is predetermined.

Michael's appearances at Chonae in the miracle story are multi-form. His first appearance is in a dream to the Laodicean pagan. The story described Michael as merely a “night vision” (4.2ff.) in the 75. Μηναία τῷ ὁλοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ, 6 vols. (Rome, 1888–1901) I:71 on Moses and Michael at Horeb (Ex. 17:6), and, 73, at the Red Sea. Michael is at the Burning Bush (Ex. 3:2), as described in the Analecta hymnica graeca, ed. A. Kominis (Rome, 1972) 232; the text also suggests a comparison between Moses who parted the sea with his staff (Ex. 14:16.21) and Michael's own similar deed (237). See Pantaleon, Narratio miraculorum maximi archangeli Michaelis, XIII, PG 140:580C–1A, on Michael's role in the engulfing of Pharaoh's army in the Red Sea (Ex. 14:1ff.).

76. Elliott, Roads to Paradise, 116ff., notes that in the Book of Tobias Raphael identifies himself in this way: Ego enim sum Raphael angelus (12:15).

anonymous version; in the Metaphrastian version, the pagan saw “a more Godly vision announcing better goodnesses” (22.13ff.). The Laodicean pagan is granted an incomplete glimpse of the Archangel, although his vision, according to Metaphrastes again, was a vision of some intellectual being standing beside him (22.22–23). “For he was not worthy of being a spectator of such things, how then can he see with the eyes of his soul, embracing as he did, an unbeliever, that gloom of the faithless” (22.18–20)? And the apparition told the pagan to go to the spring, and the result was the new chapel for Michael’s shrine (22.23ff.).

Later, in the destructive schemes of the local pagans, Michael makes his presence known in several different ways. The first plan of the pagans was direct assault, but this went wrong when they encountered at the source an inexplicable phenomenon: “Those who came saw flames of fire reflecting from the water in their own faces. And in this way the disbelievers were turned back, having been overpowered” (9.2–5). After this the pagans determined an indirect approach would accomplish their ends better and they diverted the Chryses; but Michael’s invisible intervention subverted that plot as well: the river divided in two and missed the shrine altogether. The pagans then decided to go one better; they dammed the Lykokaphros and the Kouphos until the rivers should have enough power to overwhelm the shrine, the hermit and the holy spring. At this point the most dramatic epiphany occurs:

In order therefore that the just be safeguarded, and the site of his holy spring, and church . . . and that God be extolled, he who makes great and inscrutable miracles, the Archangel Michael acting as servant was seen just as a pillar of fire reaching from the earth to the heavens and standing on the immovable rock by the shrine. . . .⁷⁷

77. Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 15, AASS Sept. 8:46E. According to Sissinius, Michael disappeared as incomprehensibly as he arrived, “The venerable one saw him as if a flame of fire streamed up into the heavens, filled with puzzlement and fear, he went back to sing psalms in the holy shrine, ‘God has sent his angel and liberated and saved me from the snares of the beasts, and he guarded his sacred shrine from the inundation of the waters’” (Acta apparitionis in Chonis, 18, AASS Sept. 8:47AB).

The miracle story describes, then, a progression of revelation, all of a difficult and incomprehensible nature. Michael's mutability is an inescapable aspect of his appearances, as well as the manner in which human comprehension and description come up short in the face of such epiphanies. The security of angelic epiphanies from Hebrew scripture offers a kind of textual anchor in these miracle stories for otherwise impossible descriptions.

The epiphany on the mountainside at Gargano, for instance, uses direct borrowings from scripture to describe Michael's terrible appearance. The day after he had appeared in a dream to the bishop predicting "angelic victory" of the Sipontini, Michael made his presence on the mountain known through rumblings, darkness and lightning, which borrow directly from Exodus 19:16: "And it came to pass on the third day, when it was morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of a trumpet exceeding loud; and all the people that were in the camp trembled." The Greek text is more overt than the Latin version about its scriptural models and also calls up images from Isaiah 60:2 ("For behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but upon thee the Lord will arise, and His glory shall be seen upon thee").⁷⁸ The fire that mysteriously announces the presence of Michael at the shrine of Psellus has appropriated the particulars of the textual description from the scene of Moses and the Burning Bush in Exodus (3:2ff.). Michael as the fire which does not consume the bush, as the pillar of fire that led the Israelites, as the lightning and darkness on Sinai, are all sanctioned allusions to incomprehensible epiphanies of divine power.⁷⁹

78. Leanza 303.83ff. and 315; AASS Sept. 8:61D.

79. One further example is the appearance of Michael to Gregory the Great (ca. 540–604) on top of Hadrian's Mausoleum, subsequently Castel San Angelo, in 590 (AASS Sept. 8:72BC). Michael appears and silently returns his sword to its sheath, thereby signaling the reconciliation between God and the people of Rome. This reconciliation is effected through the disclosure of the source of the affliction and of the cessation of its attack. Michael is the bearer of reconciliation, not particularly benign, and of the abeyance of heavenly wrath, which is very much in the tradition of an Old Testament appearance. Rome is likened implicitly to Jerusalem, and Gregory to David, as the appearance has an antecedent at 1 Chronicles 21:15–27: "And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the Lord beheld, and he repented him of the evil, and said to the angel

The miracle stories did not efface Michael's character as an angel of nature or as an elemental force. The choice of texts from scripture emphasizes this aspect of the Archangel's nature while also pointing to the Archangel's essential indescribability. The miracle stories describe Michael's appearance at Chonae as fire, thunder and lightning. Miracle stories often express Michael's character by such naturalistic metaphors, and, as Olga Rojdestvensky wrote, Michael is typically described in such elemental terms as "flashes of lightning, explosions of thunder, babbling of springs, sound of water falls, mystery of abyss and of grottoes, eternal silence of summits."⁸⁰ The descriptions of Michael are in an essential way profoundly dissembling, and the revelation at Chonae and his personal intervention in the local geography were strategies by which Michael's expansive and elusive character gained delineation and real presence.⁸¹

The topos concerning the distance between humanity and the angels common to theological speculation is equally present in the descriptions in miracle stories of the acts of the angels in this world. Pantaleon, in his miracle story of the Archangel Michael, is explicit about the inability of words to convey, and human comprehension to embrace, the nature of the angels.

How therefore shall we undertake to praise you according to your excellence, by what means shall we aspire to your praises, O Leader of the Host of the almighty God? What incorporeal voice, accord-that destroyed, It is enough, stay now thine hand. . . . And David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven, having a sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. . . . And the Lord commanded the angel; and he put his sword again into the sheath thereof." Again, scripture provides the structure for these difficult epiphanies.

This connection of the appearance of Michael to Gregory and 1 Chronicles was noted by Hasluck, Letters on Religions and Folklore, 84–85.

80. O. Rojdestvensky, Le culte de saint Michel et le moyen âge latin (Paris, 1922) 54, and also 53: "La dramatique légende de saint Michel, pleine de jeux de lumière et d'ombre, devait ressusciter avec une puissance toute particulière là où les forces volcaniques et neptuniennes creusaient les précipices, faisaient jaillir les cascades, là où les vapeurs, fumées et flammes sulfuriques faisaient irruption." See also W. Lucken, Michael. Eine Darstellung und Vergleichung der jüdischen und der morganländisch-christlichen Tradition vom Erzengel Michael (Göttingen, 1898) 73–74.

81. Gothein, "L'arcangelo Michele," 108–109.

ing with the level of your incorporeal intelligence, shall we offer by means of our material and corporeal lips? What sounds shall we use to signify the ineffability and inexplicability of your glory? It is doubtful in truth that the collective nature of all earth born creation could laud and praise you, you who are the Leader of the Heavenly Host. For the matter of your divine beauty and splendor cannot be narrated and told by words. For in this way marvelous knowledge of God was made by us. . . . It is not possible by human comprehension for him to be apprehended and discovered.⁸²

If real description is therefore impossible, then recognition and identification of angelic epiphany is equally laden with risk of failure. As noted above, Archippus was completely at a loss until Michael revealed his identity in terms comprehensible to a man—and to the listener—thanks to the scriptural meaning behind this particular identification. At Gargano, Michael was identified subsequently by dream revelation and more securely by the material effects. Pantaleon also relates a miracle at the church of Michael at Eusebios, Constantinople, concerning a certain candle-maker Marcianus. All the doors of the church were suddenly flung open and towards him came “a fearful man as out of the heaven, with a rush descending on horseback on a white and terrible steed.”⁸³ Michael is dressed in the robe of a praepositus, or court official.⁸⁴ Marcianus knew only the terrifying aspect of his ecstatic vision until Michael declared his proprietorship of the shrine. Although Michael led Marcianus to the candle before his own icon, the icon plays no role in determining the identity of the vision but only the place and means of real healing.

82. Narr. mir. max. arch. Mich., I, PG 140:573B–4B.

83. The parallel with the appearance of the angels to drive Apollonius out of the temple in the Third Book of Maccabees is striking: “there appeared from heaven angels, with flashing armour, who filled them with dread and terror. Then did Apollonius fall half dead in the court of the Gentiles and he stretched his hands to heaven. . . .” See The Third and Fourth Book of Maccabees, trans. M. Hadas (New York, 1953; rp. New York, 1976) 164 (4:9–14).

84. F. Halkin, Inédits byzantins d’Ochrida, Candie et Moscou (Brussels, 1963) 149–50; the other comes from the Life of Andrew the Fool (seventh century?), 233–36, PG 111:877A–80C. Other examples are found in Ch. Angelidi, “La version longue de la Vision du moine Cosmas,” AB 101(1983):86.188–187.196; Preger, Scriptores originum Constantinopolitanarum, I:86.8ff.; and Achmet ibn Sirin (late eighth/early ninth century), Oneirocriticon, ed. F. Drexler (Leipzig, 1925) 5–6 (#10).

Visual identification of an Archangel is not possible since miracle stories and theology both agree that he has no form fully comprehensible to humans. Consequently, any stable resemblance in images of such a being remains out of reach. Cyril Mango has written that the angels are represented as they are, that is, as beardless, winged young men, because that is how they generally appear. "Whenever angels and archangels make themselves manifest in the Lives of saints and other edifying texts they do so in the guise of eunuchs or imperial cubicularii, not that of emperors."⁸⁵ Instances of the angels appearing as eunuchs are not uncommon.⁸⁶ Yet the texts are not homogeneous in this regard, as the miracle stories of the Archangel Michael discussed above show.⁸⁷ Moreover, the relation between description in miracle stories and the images of angels is not straightforward. Making images of angels is not a matter of transcription of visual information (or even textual description), since visions of these beings are clearly difficult to process, comprehend and render.

85. C. Mango, "St. Michael and Attis," DChAE 12(1984):44.

86. The post-Iconoclastic assimilation of court officials, particularly eunuchs, and angels, and the incongruities of that assimilation, have been examined recently by E. V. Maltese, "Gli angeli in terra: sull'immaginario dell'angelo bizantino," Materiali e discussioni per l'analisi dei testi classici 24(1990):111–32 [= Dimensione bizantina. Donne, angeli e demoni nel medioevo greco (Turin, 1995) 69–92].

87. Finally, one need only browse through the many texts concerning Michael and the other angels collected by Amélineau, Contes et romans de l'Égypte chrétienne, to realize the endless variations possible. For instance, Michael appears to Donatius, in "Comment se convertit la ville d'Athènes," as "un homme lumineux sous l'apparence d'un général d'armée, tenant un sceptre d'or à la main" (ibid., 2). And in the "Vision de Saint Jean l'Évangile racontée par le patriarche Timothée," Michael "descendit du ciel monté sur sa barque de chérubims, escorté de tous les anges, des saints, des plus grands parmi les prophètes et les martyrs: ils étaient tous enveloppés d'une gloire indescriptible" (ibid., 13–14). And the Archangel Gabriel in the "Histoire d'Aour" appeared to the young Aour in another fashion: "Depuis le jour de ma naissance, le vingt-deuxième jour de chaque mois, il vient à moi vers le matin un oiseau dont le face brille comme le soleil; il est ceint d'une ceinture dorée, coiffée d'une couronne d'émerande et tient à sa maison une baguette d'or rouge. Son corps semble du feu, ses pieds du cuivre brillant, sa figure est celle d'un homme, ses traits étincellent et le son de sa voix est comme le bruit des flots de la mer quand elle est agitée. Toutes les fois que je l'ai vu ... je suis tombé à ses pieds rempli d'effroi et il m'a relevé en disant: Ne crains pas! je suis l'archange Gabriel que me tiens devant le trône de Dieu ..." (ibid., 112–13).

Identification of an angel by means of the description on an image is theoretically possible, however, if not in any way definitive. In the text praising Michael written by Psellus, a monk named Ephraim was able to recognize Michael because the Archangel had chosen the form manifested on his image for this epiphany in the monastery's church.⁸⁸ And the miracle story of Artemius, written in the 660s about his shrine in the church of John the Baptist in Oxeia at Constantinople, describes an identification of an angel.⁸⁹ One of the stories in the miracle story describes the night vision of a young girl, Euphemia.⁹⁰ In her vision angels led her to the lead coffin of the eponymous saint of the shrine, Artemius, and made her lie down in it. The coffin was then locked by the saint, trapping her inside. When she awoke, recovered from her illness, she gave an account of her vision. Her mother asked her if she had seen the angels, and Euphemia replied that she had. Her mother then asked her in what form had they appeared.⁹¹ The girl answered by indicating the images of the angels found in that church.⁹²

The mother's question is telling. In asking what form the angels appeared, she was acknowledging the possibility of other guises. And in voluntarily making themselves commensurate with their appearance on images in the church, the angels revealed their ability to condescend in form for human comprehension. In other words, angels manifest their terrible elemental force in famous instances of awesome intervention but for this girl the angels took a benign aspect in keeping with her youth and fitness.

The topos of recognition of a holy person by means of his or her image, therefore, has relevance for discussion of miracle story de-

88. Fisher, Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, 253, 565–69. On this episode, see A. Cutler and R. Browning, "In the Margins of Byzantium? Some Icons in Michael Psellos," BMGS 16(1992):24–25.

89. C. Mango, "On the History of the Templon and the Martyrion of St. Artemios at Constantinople," Zograf 10(1979):40ff.

90. V.S. Crisafulli and J.W. Nesbitt, The Miracles of St. Artemios. A Collection of Miracle Stories by an Anonymous Author of Seventh-Century Byzantium (Leiden, New York and Köln, 1997) 176–84, and Mango, "On the History of the Templon," 43.

91. Crisafulli/Nesbitt, The Miracles of St. Artemios, 180.23.

92. Crisafulli/Nesbitt, The Miracles of St. Artemios, 180.23–24.

scriptions of angels. For Gilbert Dagron, images play a central role in the identification of saints in miracle stories, to the point of fundamentally determining the manner in which Byzantines visually perceived their saints.⁹³ For example, Cosmas and Damian approach the bed of a supplicant “in the form in which they are outlined.”⁹⁴ A letter of Nilus of Ankara (d. ca. 430) describes an episode of St. Platon’s life in which he freed a monk’s son from prison. Platon was recognized by the son through the saint’s image.⁹⁵ A similar episode exists in the tenth-century Vita of Irene of Chrysobalanton: “... while the holy woman stood interceding with her hands lifted up, she saw Basil the Great standing before her, looking such as the icons represent him.”⁹⁶

The second way miracle stories can state resemblance are instances where the saint appears to provide a perfect model for a painter, effectively taking the brush out of the painter’s hand. For instance, the “life” of Cornelius the Centurion emphasized the fidelity of the saint’s image, which was venerated at Skepis in the Hellespont. The exactitude of the copy, after the archetype, was particularly commended. The painter Egratius was hired by the bishop to make a copy of this image in order to send it from Skepis to Caesarea in

93. G. Dagron, “Holy Images and Likeness,” DOP 45(1991):30ff.; and idem, “Rêver de Dieu et parler de soi. Le rêve et son interprétation d’après les sources byzantines,” in I sogni nel medioevo, ed. T. Gregory (Rome, 1985) 42ff.

94. L. Deubner, Kosmas und Damian. Texte und Einleitung (Leipzig, 1907) 133.23–24.

95. See Mansi XIII:32C–3C.

96. The Life of St Irene Abbess of Chrysobalanton. A Critical Edition with Introduction, Translation, Notes and Indices, ed. J. O. Rosenqvist (Uppsala, 1986) 56.9–13: “... τοιοῦτον οἶον αἱ εἰκόνες γράφουσιν.”

Other examples are found in the seventh-century Vita of Theodore of Sykeon, written by his disciple George; see Vie de Théodore de Sykéon, I:34 (39.5–6): “The two saints were seen by him according to the likeness therefore of that which is seen in divine worship.” Festugière translates this as “sous l’aspect qu’ils avaient en cette image de culte.” The monk is said to be praying beneath the icon of Cosmas and Damian. And also at I:29 (32.9–13), Theodore’s mother has a vision of George according to the depicted story of the martyr George. George is described as a golden youth with curly hair and shining aspect.

And from the tenth-century “Vision of Cosmas the Monk”: “And suddenly, as if sent by someone, two men appeared with white robes and very venerable, and I recognised them to be the apostles Andrew and John, as I was put in mind (ἀναλογιζόμενος) of their appearances on the holy icons.” See Angelidi, “La version longue de la Vision du moine Cosmas,” 4.125–28.

Palestine. Egratius was then afflicted and healed by the saint, and with thanks he made an image “just he had seen him.” The portrait was then sent to Palestine and valued, the narrator says, because of the exactitude of its copying.⁹⁷ From examples such as these, Dagron concludes that the relationship between images and their models is reversed and “that [images] are no longer attached to the past but to the future.”⁹⁸ And further, “It is no longer the image that resembles the saint, but the saint who resembles his image.”⁹⁹

The number of examples in which the image determines the nature of the vision is, however, quite limited. The majority of examples of appearances of saints, by far, is in forms of disguise, if the miracle story provides a description at all. Artemius appears as a butcher, sailor, patrician, and in other guises.¹⁰⁰ Cosmas and Damian appear in many different guises (in the form of clerics, for example), alone or with a third person; they do their work either by “invisible hands” or “their own hands.”¹⁰¹ This last denotes the really important aspect: their activity and traces of their activity radiate from the center of their cult, that is, their bodies and relics. Nevertheless, the most significant admission concerning the nature of the saints’ appearances is that they appear “in a form not their own,”¹⁰² as the miracle story states. The miracle story of Cyrus and John furnishes another important example. It describes the two saints as appearing fulgent, in white robes, in a monk’s habit, as doctors, as the deacon Julian and in various other guises, but also, significantly, in

97. F. Halkin, “Un abrégé inédit de la vie ancienne et disparue de Corneille le Centurion,” RSBN n.s. 1(1964):37 (#6). And other examples are found in the Vita S. Mariae Iunoris (before 866?–ca. 902/3), AASS Nov. 4:699BC, and the life of Athanasius the Athonite (925/30–ca. 1001), Vitae duae antiquae Sancti Athanasii Athonitae, Corpus Christianorum, Series Graeca, vol. 9, ed. J. Noret (Turnhout, 1982) 122 (#254).

98. Dagron, “Holy Images and Likeness,” 31.

99. Dagron, “Holy Images and Likeness,” 31, and also: “more than ever it is [the saints’] cult image that serves as a reference.”

100. Crisafulli/Nesbitt. The Miracles of St. Artemios, 88.15–16, 96.22, 104.12–13, 144.21, 194.15–16.

101. See Deubner, De incubatione, 68ff.

102. Deubner, Kosmas und Damian, 99.21 (my emphasis). And other examples of guises: 135.25, “appearing in the form of a περιχύτος,” and 145.43–44, “the two appeared to him in the forms of clerics.”

their own form.¹⁰³ Again, the saints must acknowledge an earthly existence, even after death, that determines the essential nature of their being, even if this does not altogether regulate their subsequent manifestations. Angels have no such mooring. They are changeable by nature and essentially unknowable—all their outward forms are not their own.

This chapter has sought to indicate the means by which miracle stories, and cult as well, made the Archangel Michael more apprehensible and proximate. For a being that is bodiless, immaterial and elemental, the signs of appearance and presence made apparent in the texts are tangible and incontrovertible. Moreover, because of Michael's uncontainable nature, they are impressions; Michael does not relinquish anything of his "body," only indications of attendance. These signs that are both tangible and provisional give the texts and cult their special tension in that they simultaneously assert that he is really present but also powerfully immanent. By means of retro-motivation, indeed, Michael's acts, and even his will, are superseded by the texts' logic. The place name engenders its own sequence of activities and the text works backwards from "the place was thereafter known as Chonae" to create Michael's seminal act preset by language itself.

This desire for more apprehensibility is the complement of the other textual device examined in this chapter, that is, how miracle stories "got round" the difficulties of expressing the inexpressible nature of Michael. The seamless application of scriptural description to this task of expression is the clearest sign of descriptive impasse. On an overt level, the scriptural passages indicate enigmatic theophanies and venerable acts that parallel and prefigure Michael's own appearances and acts. Michael is like Moses in the miraculous manipulation of water for the protection of God's chosen people. Michael's manifestations recall the phenomena revealed to the prophets during sacred disclosures in the past. And the scriptural structures of receiving epiphany found in Daniel, Joshua and Matthew provide a mold within which witness under the New Covenant can be cast. In this sense, the narrators of these miracle stories of Michael provided scriptural models of revelation that were recognizable and accessible descriptions of the Archangel's famous moments on earth.

103. Deubner, De incubatione, 80ff.

On the level of latent meaning, the arrogation of description signals at important points the lack of ability, or even intent, of speech and text to render in an original or descriptive fashion a being like the Archangel Michael. On this level, recognition of the original site of the text, in Exodus or Matthew for instance, is not essential for the audience. The descriptions of Michael as fire and earthquake and lightning do not rely for their full meaning on the audience's identifying the original context of the description. They signal the difficulty of comprehension, just the same, in their evocation of grand, irrational phenomena: the formless Archangel assumes all of these elements as his cloak but none are his own, none make him fully known.

Material images are likewise allusive to difficult nature, and this allusive quality makes angels' images incapable of possessing real likeness. Beings as transcendental as angels possess no definitive likeness inherently, and images partake equally of this indefinable resemblance. Recalling the theology of Pseudo-Dionysius, images are dissembling signs which the viewer engages in intellectually and without adherence. Describing an approach to images of angels, Agathias's epigram reveals an ability to interpret material images as the symbolic means to knowledge of an incomprehensible creature.¹⁰⁴ In this description of the image of the Archangel, the difficulty of comprehension derives from the incorporeal nature which would seem to be incompatible with material representation; but in Agathias's conception, the image also provides the viewer with the means to approach knowledge of the distant and immaterial Archangel by way of contemplation of the colors and outlines on the surface of the image. The material image is, therefore, the bridge between mundane reality and spiritual truths otherwise unattainable.

Michael's bodiless, relic-less existence provides such signs for human comprehension; less ambiguous material effects such as

104. Discussed in chapters 2 and 3.

Michael's transformations of landscape, imprints of invisibility, are essential proofs for a degree of knowledge of his activity and nature. Miracle stories and images work subtly. Texts exploit recognizable patterns from scripture to give the descriptions of events and appearances structure but at the same time deny any essential descriptiveness in their evocation of elemental and multiform wonders. In a comparable way, images depend on their non-resembling qualities to attract and lead the viewer to recognition of a higher, invisible reality. Michael transcends the ability of words and images to describe such a reality but it is this inability that attracts and compels contemplation.

CONCLUSION

This study has been concerned with representation in the widest sense. Examinations of material images notwithstanding, it has primarily explored conceptual problems involved in representing angels that arise from the unquantifiable nature of the bodiless host. “Subtle bodies” was a favored theological formulation for the nature of angels. The formulation was ascribed to Macarius the Great,¹ but it was the primary definition used by John of Thessalonike (d. 649?) in his defense of the worship of angels’ images ostensibly before a pagan opponent.² Moreover, the fathers of the Second Council of Nicaea in 787 included the “dialogue” between John of Thessalonike and the pagan in the conciliar acts, and so the definition—slippery, imprecise, but apt—became the basic definition of the nature of God’s messengers. Complementary to its examination of the representational problems of angels, this study has also examined the “image” of the holy man who sought the intercession of the Archangel

1. See the Introduction.

2. Mansi, XIII:164–65; H. Thümmel, Die Frühgeschichte der ostkirchlichen Bilderlehre. Texte und Untersuchungen zur Zeit vor dem Bilderstreit, Texte und Untersuchungen, vol. 139 (Berlin, 1992) 327–28. And see G. Peers, “Imagination and Angelic Epiphany,” BMGS 21(1997):113–31, on this text.

Michael and witnessed the awful result of that prayer. Clearly, worship of angels, their “persons” and their images both, was a divisive issue in the Byzantine world, and the story of the miracle at Chonae was an attempt to establish a basis for a more seemly and more orthodox worship.

Evidently, then, angels raised issues that writers of theology and miracle stories tried to resolve. Many of the difficulties arose from the pagan antecedents to angel worship and, indeed, their iconography in Christian art. The “dialogue” of John of Thessalonike reveals just this difficulty as late as the seventh century, and its resolution by this earlier theologian still had relevance for the Council at Nicaea in the following century. The pagan, with whom John was in theory debating, had no difficulty in seeing the parallels between pagan worship of gods and Christian worship of angels. In a most polite manner, he observed that Christians paint the angels as human and worship them through these paintings, despite the belief that these beings were not human but incorporeal and spiritual. Surely, he reasoned, like Porphyry long before, this practice is no different than the pagan worship of their gods. John, of course, sidestepped the parallel drawn and offered a complete rebuttal to this possible rapprochement. He based his position primarily on the truth of the Christian pantheon versus the falseness of the pagan gods, but the fact that such a rebuttal was necessary as late as the seventh century shows that perceived parallels between angels and pagan beings were still possible.

The miracle story of Michael’s appearances at Chonae is further proof of an ongoing problem that the church thought necessary to combat. The story itself reveals that in the eighth century the issue of proper approach to angels was still alive. The caretaker Archippus is a prescriptive “image” of the appropriate manner of praying to the Archangel, and his answered prayer is the clearest indication of its appropriateness. The Archangel nonetheless revealed his origins as an angel of uncontrollable natural forces—earthquake, lightning, thunder and water—and, although the story sublimates these forces in scriptural allusions, Michael still had some of the overweening characteristics that made an orthodox presentation of angelology necessary in the miracle story. The miracle story could not altogether efface Michael the Nile god of the Coptic text examined in the Introduction.

This study has also sought to demonstrate that representing angels—in miracle stories and material images—was part of a desire to make these bodiless beings more comprehensible and proximate. As theological discussion of angels had antecedents in pagan vocabulary and concepts, and contended with these antecedents, so self-conscious continuity from the Classical past was a characteristic of descriptions of angels in the visual arts. Sculptors, painters and mosaicists clearly were aware of models available in pagan art that could aid them in their search for an iconography capable of describing, albeit partially, the special immaterial, formless nature of angels. As seen on the Sarigüzel sarcophagus (fig. 3), they borrowed iconographic elements from pagan art, most notably wings, to this end, but maintained at the same time the angels' peculiarity as Christian beings.

Most Christian viewers evidently found this iconography sufficiently expressive of angelic nature and activity. On the evidence of sixth-century epigrams, painted panels with single figures of angels or Archangels became more common in devotion in this period. As a way of communicating the nature and activities of this invisible host, many Christians perceived these icons as “guarantors of knowledge,”³ even if images of angels ultimately frustrated full comprehension of the models.

In the period preceding Iconoclasm, sources dealing with images of angels reveal an increasing desire to regulate and define the place of images in Christian worship.⁴ For some Christians, the break with the Classical past in the visual arts was not clear enough, and the iconography of angels, though consciously distanced from its antecedents, was sullied by any association with pagan art. From the fourth to the seventh century, the writings of Macarius Magnes, Severus of Antioch and John of Thessalonike reveal a defensiveness on the part of Christians concerning the iconography of these bodi-

3. Cameron, “The Language of Images,” 2.

4. See Cameron, “The Language of Images,” 30.

less beings. The writings of opponents to angels' images also show dissent over the route to knowledge that images provide. For these opponents, material signs were clearly inadequate to describe the transcendental nature of angels.

Yet the increasing importance that images came to have in the period preceding Iconoclasm attests to a wide acceptance of material images as a means to understand divine things. The divergence shown in these two positions stands for a fundamental divide in Byzantine society over appropriate commemoration and worship. This study has attempted to describe the long-standing debate over the conceptual problems of representing angels, both visually and verbally. In the course of the sixth and seventh centuries, as Christian images became more common in devotion, these debates became more acute. This study has traced the "realignment" in Byzantine society that Averil Cameron describes but with specific regard to angels in texts of this period, taking passages from theological writings on images, question and answer guides and anti-Jewish tracts.⁵ All of these writings showed an increased concern over the meaning and nature of angelic signs, appropriate commemoration and material worship. This struggle over worship and images only became more acute in the eighth and ninth centuries, when this crisis came to a head with the declaration of Iconoclasm in the 720s, and the sources from the period of Iconoclasm attest to the role angels and their images played in this conflict.

The end of Iconoclasm in 843 effectively resolved the debate over the role of images of angels that had been decided in favor of a careful and abundant synthesis of material signs in spiritual worship. Just the same, images of angels always partake of a measure of ambiguity despite their full acceptance into Byzantine worship. Cameron writes, "Religious images ... fell naturally into place as one of the signs by which the impossibility of understanding God through language could be circumvented."⁶ This statement implies, however, that the debates over images that lasted from the sixth to the ninth century were resolved in favor of images that were explicit and literal in their description of spiritual reality.⁷ Rather, the tension between manifest form and incomprehensible nature, evident in the texts—epigrams, theology and miracle stories—is a defining characteristic of images of angels throughout the Byzantine period. This tension continued to determine the production and perception of images of angels long after the end of Iconoclasm. This Conclusion also aims, then, to examine briefly the tension between presence and transcendence, description and incomprehensibility, in images and texts of the middle and late Byzantine periods.

5. See Cameron, "The Language of Images," 3–4.

6. Cameron, "The Language of Images," 30; and see L. Brubaker, "Byzantine Art in the Ninth Century: Theory, Practice, and Culture," BMGS 13(1989):75ff.

A Palaiologan icon of the Archangel Michael in the Byzantine Museum, Athens, is a particularly fine example of the pull between materiality and incorporeality that images of angels can communicate (fig. 19).⁸ This icon, in fact, manifests an especially subtle manipulation of style and iconography. Michael's spiritual qualities were made immediately clear to the Byzantine viewer since the Archangel is winged. Michael gracefully holds a staff and an orb in his hands, and a delicate fillet, tied at the back, is visible in his shoulder-length hair. The face of the Archangel is handled with great refinement. Indeed, the qualities of his face and expression, the full mouth, finely modeled cheeks and chin and detailed shaping of luxuriant hair, show a desire on the part of the painter to manifest a degree of sensuality in this image. Yet the painter at the same time denies the apparently terrestrial presence of the Archangel, in particular through his treatment of the eyes which are large and focused directly on the beholder. The Archangel's piercing eyes create a distance from the realm of the viewer that the sensual handling of the Archangel para-

7. This position is taken also by H. L. Kessler, "Real Absence: Early Medieval Art and the Metamorphosis of Vision," in Morfologie sociali e culturali in Europa fra tarda antichità e alto medioevo, Settimane vol. 45 (Spoleto, 1998) II:1157–70. But as C. von Schönborn, L'icône du Christ. Fondements théologiques élaborées entre le Ier et le IIer Concile de Nicée (325–787) (Fribourg, 1976) 217ff., has demonstrated, the characteristic of an image of Christ is opacity and particularity.

8. See M. Soteriou, "Παλαιολογεῖος εἰκὼν τοῦ Ἀρχαγγελοῦ Μιχαήλ," DChAE 1(1959): 80ff., M. Alpatov, "Sur l'iconographie des anges dans l'art de Byzance et de l'ancienne Russie," Zograf 11(1980):6, and Conversation with God. Icons from the Byzantine Museum of Athens (9th–15th Centuries). The Hellenistic Centre, London, 22 May–20 June 1998 (Athens, 1998) 65–69.

Figure 19. Icon of the Archangel Michael, Byzantine Museum, Athens, Palaiologan. Photo: Byzantine Museum, Athens.

doxically encourages. But the eyes also impart a sense of presence since the archangel is not gazing frontally out of the icon. In order to accommodate the equipment he presents, he has his right shoulder pushed closer to the picture plane than the left, and consequently his head turns slightly back to the left. This turning, found in some early icons also (fig. 1), gives the impression of animation, of the body and eyes swiveling in order to take the viewer into account. So the eyes have the ability to create distance and presence at the same time, both through the penetrating scrutiny and the illusion of alertness which the sidelong stare implies. On this icon, style and iconography form a conjunction of corporeality and transcendence that encourages approach but thwarts familiarity: ultimately, the icon describes a nature contingent upon our material world, a nature that is only partially described and describable.⁹

While a formal analysis of this particularly fine example shows that painters could communicate the conditional quality of human comprehension of angelic nature, epigrams and ekphraseis from the Middle and Late Byzantine periods demonstrate that this quality was fully appreciated by the Byzantine viewer. The contingency of angelic nature, which images can state so subtly and compellingly, evoked articulate responses in writers on images and these responses show a striking continuity in writings about images of angels from the sixth century on. The persistence of these responses could be interpreted as normative, that is, as literary topoi that reappear periodically in Byzantine culture without demonstrable connection to real images.¹⁰ Yet formal analyses of images of angels show that painters did sometimes employ elements of style and iconography to attempt description of the problems of angelic nature. Texts about images of angels demonstrate that Byzantine viewers were fully engaged with these artistic attempts. The allusive, contingent quality of such images was a significant intellectual and devotional assumption that had real and ongoing meaning for the Byzantine viewer. Noteworthy, too, is the continuity from iconophile descriptions of angelic appearance and images to these later texts; evidently, iconophile image theory did have a degree of influence over the perpetuation of certain

9. Charles Barber has described the non-representational quality of Byzantine art as its primary attractive component; that is, the tension between reality and abstraction draws the viewer to contemplate the image in a more active manner. See C. Barber, "From Transformation to Desire: Art and Worship after Byzantine Iconoclasm," ArtB 75(1993):12: "one could argue that the formal practices employed in Byzantine art draw attention to the pictorial field itself as an autonomous significant space rather than as a representational space."

10. A problem addressed in D. Freedberg, The Power of Images. Studies in the History and Theory of Response (Chicago and London, 1989) 291–94.

perceptions of images after the issues had been decided in the mid-ninth century.

Several epigrams on images of angels by John Mavropus (ca. 1000–ca. 1075/81), Metropolitan of Euchaita, reveal continuity with earlier epigrams and image theory, and also a meaningful engagement with conceptual problems raised by material images of immaterial beings. Like the epigram of Agathias on the icon given in thanksgiving to the Archangel Michael, Mavropus also described an icon vowed because of particular devotion to the Archangel:

“On the bodiless one”: Who can give shape to the shapeless nature? The faithful Theodora [has provided] a crown. And how does one depict the unknowable sight? Faith easily reconciles all these things. And what reward does this most pious woman desire? She yearns after the spiritual saviour of all things. Archistrategos, hasten, fulfill the yearning. This faithful woman will hold to this desire especially.¹¹

In relating Theodora's longing for the protection of the Archangel, Mavropus played on the idea of Michael's immanence. The epigram noted the transcendence of Michael's nature, the “shapeless” and “bodiless” quality of the Archangel, that is essentially “unknowable.” The gap between this unknowable nature and human comprehension is bridged by two complementary means: the tension between the material shaping of “the shapeless nature” and “the unknowable sight,” and the faith of the viewer that leads him or her to contemplation and conviction. This process is a remarkable condensation of the elaborate image theory of the Iconoclastic period. The need to prove the circumscribability of a formless, immaterial host and the subsequent defense of the symbolic, non-resembling iconography of angels had lost any urgency that the eighth- / ninth-century context demanded; yet this same theoretical construct that justified the making of images of angels and the value they have for Christians was still valid in the eleventh century.

11. Versus iambici, PG 120:1177AB; Iohannis Euchaitorum metropolitae quae in codice vaticano graeco 676 supersunt, ed. P. de Lagarde (Göttingen, 1882; rp. Amsterdam, 1979) 38 (#73).

Another epigram by Mavropus also described the tension between matter and immateriality that is the defining characteristic of images of angels; while this tension was common in some form to other religious images, capturing ethereal formlessness on a material image is an act peculiar to representing angels. In this epigram, Mavropus recounted the unresolved coincidence of color and formlessness on an image of the Archangel Michael:

“On the Archangel Michael”: Light, spirit and fire, we know the angels to be altogether above baseness and feeling: but the leader of immaterial host is set here formed out of colours. O faith, such wonders have you the power to bring about, so easily [you give] shapeless nature in shapes. Yet the representation reveals what is represented, not as he is by nature, but as he was made manifest many times.¹²

The irresolution that such an image manifests is, in fact, its compelling feature. As the subject is transcendent “light, spirit and fire,” delineating the Archangel does not capture his nature in any essential way; rather, this act shows him in one of his forms made manifest in the past. Moreover, the sense that such an image is contingent on this partial disclosure of the Archangel’s true nature lends the image its attractive quality to the viewer. As Mavropus said, the fact that the bodiless Archangel has condescended to assume a form comprehensible to humanity in material colors and lines makes Michael paradoxically present: in these shapes, Michael’s presence is somehow brought nearer, made more proximate. Like the neo-Platonic descriptions of Agathias and the iconophiles on the apprehension of such images, the material image is conceived as a non-resembling symbol that paradoxically makes the object of desire proximate.

12. Anthologia graeca, ed. E. Cougny, 3 vols. (Paris, 1871–1890) III:413; very like the epigram at Versus iambici, PG 120:1139A, Iohannis Euchaitorum metropolitae, 11–12 (#24). See also Anthologia graeca, III:361–63; III:415, “On the Archistrategos: In gold, like fire, from silver, as light, I shape you, light to me, flames to enemies”; and III:401: “On the Archistrategos: How does a material hand render the immaterial? The spirit the spirit renders, the hand the sign.” On some of these epigrams, see H.G. Thümmel, Bilderlehre und Bilderstreit. Arbeiten zur Auseinandersetzung über die Ikone und ihre Begründung vornehmlich im 8. und 9. Jahrhundert (Würzburg, 1991) 161ff.

If Mavropus described the compelling paradox of angels' images, Michael Psellus—who, incidentally, knew Mavropus—attempted an interpretation of the appearance and attributes used to render angelic nature and activity. In an analysis of the iconography of angels, Psellus separated the appearance of angels in images into its component parts. The most notable aspect is their anthropomorphic form: “this shows them to be rational beings; for man alone among all living creatures has been enriched with intellect and reason.”¹³ The puzzling quality of the angels' appearances in images had profoundly discomfited such theologians as Epiphanius of Salamis and Severus of Antioch; that is, the depiction of angels as men with pagan-style dress and attributes was manifestly incommensurate with the angels' spiritual quality. Like the iconophiles, Psellus accepted the distance between angelic nature and material representation as a positive provision of incomplete knowledge of angels for humanity. Psellus's description is strikingly close in detail to the Palaiologan icon discussed above. While this icon is an especially fine example, and so worthy of examination, it is not exceptional iconographically, and clearly Psellus was examining an image very similar to that Palaiologan icon of the Archangel Michael. An ekphrasis closer in time to this Palaiologan icon is not lacking, however. For example, Symeon of Thessalonike, who died in 1429, responded in a similarly symbolic vein before just such an image.¹⁴ Both Psellus and Symeon, it should be

13. The individual attributes also hold clues for understanding the angels' being. The wings indicate “their exalting and heavenly upward motion”; the sphere often placed in one hand “suggests their quickness of movement: for the sphere is such that, touching a tiny portion of the ground, it is able to arrive independently of time and in less than an instant wherever it wishes”; the fillet denotes “the purity and chastity of their undefiled nature.” See K. Snipes, “An Unedited Treatise of Michael Psellos on the Iconography of Angels and on the Religious Festivals Celebrated on Each Day of the Week,” in Gonimos. Neoplatonic and Byzantine Studies Presented to Leendert G. Westerlink at 75, ed. J. Duffy and J. Peradotto (Buffalo, 1988) 200ff.

14. Responsa ad Gabrielem Pentapolitanum, PG 155:869B–D. He was asked the reason why the angels wear the fillet in images, why the angels and saints have nimbi, and why in the hands of the angels there are circular, cloudy forms. With regard to the fillet, he an-noted, took seriously the iconography of the angels as imparting, or showing covertly, the divine truths which are otherwise difficult of access.¹⁵

As these two ekphraseis show a continuity in engagement with the iconography of angels, so Palaiologan epigrams consistently reveal an appreciation of the tension between materiality and immateriality that images of angels play on. Nicephorus Kallistus Xanthopoulos (before 1256?–ca. 1335?) wrote specifically on the presence evoked through representation, and, while the paradoxical quality of the description of immateriality in colors is raised, this quality is left at the level of an irreconcilable contradiction. Michael's presence is someswered, "In examining the images of the holy angels, one surmises that the fillet worn round their heads shows covertly (ὑπεμφαίνει) the purity of their intellect, since it is worn round the place of the intellect, so that they are even bonded intellectually to God, and by these things are offered [such] for our contemplation and care in a fine appearing manner (ἀγαθοειδώς). And moreover, as they are pure and immaterial beings, they wear [the fillet] just as a crown of their endless and heavenly virtue. And they have worn this (δεδεμένως) about their hair, so that they do not move confusedly or superfluously, but only concerning divine compulsion, and their intellect is speeded from above." Furthermore, the nimbi of the angels and of the saints "show covertly" the grace and radiance and action descended from God. Lastly, he addressed the reason for the orb carried by the angels, "And the cloudy and circular thing that the angels hold in their hands symbolises the consecration by the Spirit, and that they have been fixed immobile in the dispensation of the Saviour. In the midst of the circle is seen written this figure, X, so that by this Christ is revealed. But the form of the circle is also a theological sign. For if Christ teaches that he was made flesh, he also teaches that as God he has neither beginning nor end, and that Christ rules the universe, and has the whole cosmos in his hand, as David says." The orb is not the symbol of fleetness that it was for Psellus but a sign of Christ's duophysite nature, and of the delegation of offices to the angels in the new dispensation brought about through the incarnation. In contrast to the incorruptibility that the fillet denoted for Psellus, the fillet was a sign of the angels' intellectual unity with God for Symeon of Thessalonike.

15. See, however, the negative remarks of C. Mango, "St. Michael and Attis," DChAE 12(1984):39, on these texts. But see, too, H. Saradi-Mendelovici, "Christian Attitudes toward Pagan Monuments in Late Antiquity and Their Legacy in Later Byzantine Centuries," DOP 44(1990):58, who describes how far Byzantine viewers were from understanding pagan statues. She cites the interpretation of the iconography of a statue of Athena from the eighth-century Parastaseis as an example: Athena is represented without helmet because her wisdom is invisible, the gorgon on her chest is to show the speed of her mind, and so on. See Constantinople in the Eighth Century. The "Parastaseis Syntomoi Chronikai", ed. Averil Cameron, J. Herrin et al. (Leiden, 1984) #3; and see 215–16. The text does not demonstrate detachment or ignorance since indeed it is following a literary tradition from antiquity, as in the writings of Porphyry on statues (see chapters 2 and 3). Likewise, Psellus's and Symeon's interpretations are not banal or without real explanatory power but take their form from ancient topoi and newly apply them to symbolic, Christian images of angels.

how alluded to by the representation, for he is by some inexplicable means made present in this ambiguous image:

“On the Archangel Michael, a work of art by the famous painter, master Eulalios”: It seems either that the painter has dipped his brush in immateriality to delineate a spirit, or else the spirit remains unobserved in his picture, hiding in colours his incorporeal nature. How is it that matter can drag the spirit down and encompass the immaterial by means of colours? This is [a work] of ardent love (as shown by the facts), and it kindles the heart.¹⁶

The “kindling of the heart” implicitly refers to the intellectual or spiritual process which, paradoxically, the material image initiates. The closing sentence, then, indicates an important function of images of the Archangel as it was described in the sixth-century epigrams of Agathias and Nilus, and in the elaborate image theory of the iconophile theologians. Indeed, as stated in chapter 3, the conceptual framework established by Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite determined subsequent approaches to symbolic images of divine things, namely angels. In this framework, the symbols best suited for contemplation of divinity are non-resembling, since the intellect cannot adhere to these symbols and become simply mired in its material reality. Xanthopoulos’s epigram describes this very process: either matter has overcome its limitations and ascended to spirit or spirit has condescended to be captured in matter; the issue is not resolved, in fact is unresolvable, and leaves the image as allusive to the model in some indeterminate but compelling way. By this lack of essential likeness, the viewer is forced beyond the material surface to contemplation of a transcendent reality. In other words, images of angels remained fine examples of areopagite symbols.

The numerous epigrams of Manuel Philes (ca. 1275–ca. 1345) on images of angels exhibit the same basic dependence upon this neo-Platonic framework. Like other epigram writers, Philes engaged the incongruity of matter attempting to capture a spiritual creature. Writing on an image of an Archangel, Philes noted that paradoxically the matter of the image contains intellect, spirit, light and fire; the image is “intellect visible, spirit caught fast.”¹⁷ More strangely, he wrote, the flame submitted to be captured in human form, clothed, with hair and feathers, but marvelously the icon does not burn. The face ought to be red to indicate that fiery nature but, instead, the painter has used clever artifice and manipulated material color, that is yellow, to show the fire of the model. Like Xanthopoulus’s epigram, this epigram reveals an awareness of the distance between craft that deceitfully manifests an angelic form and the reality that is unknowable and uncontainable; in fact, this tension makes these images remarkable and compelling for the writers. At the same time as the images appear to make the Archangel apprehensible, they declare his transcendence:

16. “Νικηφόρος Κάλλιστος Ξανθόπουλος,” ed. A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, BZ 11(1902):46–47 (#16); trans. C. Mango, The Art of the Byzantine Empire. 312–1453. Sources and Documents (Toronto, 1986) 231.

Just now we see a strange blending in life. The painter mingles the flame with water. For having described the immaterial nature by means of flesh, he provides water to the faithful [to quench] the flames of desire.¹⁸

As the texts adduced in this Conclusion show, the irresolvable problem of depicting angels became a determining and compelling feature that always made their images a distinctive kind of representation. Representing angels brought angels nearer to their desiring worshippers, as Xanthopoulus averred, but not so near as to satisfy

17. Manuelis Philae carmina ex codicibus Escorialensis, Florentinis, Parisinis et Vaticanis, ed. E. Miller, 2 vols. (Paris, 1855–1857) II:202 (CLXXXVII).

18. Manuelis Philae carmina, II:415 (XLVIII). Philes also wrote the following two epigrams: “‘On an icon of the Archangel Michael’: If you desire to depict animation, Why do you depict, painter, a winged man, But not the intellect and spirit and light and flames? If not for the fact that no one can depict the immaterial in matter?” (ibid., I:357–58 [CXCI]) and, “‘On the guardian in stone’: You (are) spirit and flame, but behold, before me you do not burn. And you are found as a guard armed for us. Michael, loosening all darkening of sufferings into stony fire, you return to the light” (ibid., II:158–59 [CXVIII]). See also Manuelis Philae carmina graeca, ed. G. Wernsdorf (Leipzig, 1768) 28ff. (I.109ff.). Philes also wrote an epigram on the miracle at Chonae; see Manuelis Philae carmina, II:236 (CCXXVI).

that desire; as all writers on images of angels maintained, the angels are always absent from their images. But, by representing these creatures materially as well as verbally, Byzantines felt this spiritual world was made tantalizingly near and an immanence was provisionally contained.

This page intentionally left blank

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PRIMARY SOURCES

- Achmet ibn Sirin. Oneirocriticon. Ed. F. Drexl. Leipzig, 1925.
Acta apostolorum apocrypha. Ed. C. Tischendorf. Leipzig, 1861.
Acta Sanctorum. 71 vols. Paris, 1863–1940.
Adversus Constantinum Caballinum. PG 95:309–44.
Analecta hymnica graeca. Ed. A. Kominis. Rome, 1972.
Anastasius Sinaïtes. Disputatio adversus Judaeos. PG 89:1203–81.
Anthologia graeca. Ed. E. Cougny. 3 vols. Paris, 1871–1890.
Athanasius. Orationes contra Arianos. PG 26:12–468.
Basil of Caesarea. Traité du Saint-Esprit. SC vol. 17 bis. Ed. B. Pruche. Paris, 1968.
The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch. A New English Edition. Ed. M. Black. Leiden, 1985.
The Book of Jubilees or The Little Genesis. Trans. R. H. Charles. London, 1902.
Chrysippus. Des Chrysippos von Jerusalem Enkomion auf den hl. Johannes den Täufer. Texte und Forschungen zur byzantinisch-neugriechischen Philologie, vol. 20. Ed. A. Sigalas. Athens, 1937.
——— “Χρυσίππου πρεσβυτέρου Ἐγκώμιον εἰς Ἀρχάγγελον Μιχαήλ.” Ed. A. Sigalas. EEBS 3(1926):85–93.
Clement of Alexandria. Excerpta ex scriptis Theodoto. Stromata Buch VII und VIII. Excerpta ex Theodoto. Eclogae propheticae. Quis dives saluetur. Fragmente. GCS vol. 17. 2d ed. Ed. O. Stählin, L. Früchtel and U. Treu. Berlin, 1970.
Constantinople in the Eighth Century. The “Parastaseis Syntomoi Chronikai.” Ed. Averil Cameron, J. Herrin et al. Leiden, 1984.
Constitutiones Apostolicae. In Didascalia et Constitutiones apostolorum. Ed. F.X. Funk. Paderborn, 1905; rp. Turin, 1962.

- "Cosmas Indicopleustes." Topographie chrétienne. SC vols. 141, 159, 197. Ed. W. Wolska-Conus. Paris, 1968–1973.
- Cyril of Alexandria. Homilia xviii. Fragmenta de translatione reliquiarum martyrum Cyri et Joannis. PG 77:1100–1105.
- Cyril of Jerusalem. Catéchèses mystagogiques. SC vol. 126. Ed. A. Piédagnel. Paris, 1966.
- Damaskenos Stoudite. Θησαυρός. Venice, 1838.
- Dialogue between a Christian and a Jew entitled ANTIBOLH PAPIΣKOT KAI ΦIΛΩNOT IOYΔAIΩN ΠPOΣ MONAXON TINA*. Ed. A. C. McGiffert. Marburg, 1889.
- La Didascalie de Jacob*. PO vol. 8/5. Ed. F. Nau. Paris, 1912; rp. Turnhout, 1971.
- Disputation of Sergius the Stylite against a Jew*. Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium, vol. 339, 2 vols. Ed. A. P. Hayman. Louvain, 1973.
- Epiphanius of Salamis. "Die Schriften des Epiphanius gegen die Bilderverehrung." Ed. K. Holl. Sitzungsberichte der Königlich Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften 35.2(1916):828–68. [= K. Holl. Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Kirchengeschichte, II:351–87. Tübingen, 1928; rp. Darmstadt, 1964.]
- Eusebius of Caesarea. Praeparatio Evangelica. GCS vol. 43. 2d ed. Ed. K. Mras. Berlin, 1975.
- Evagrius Ponticus. De oratione. PG 79:1165–1200.
- . Euagrius Ponticus. Ed. W. Frankenberg. Berlin, 1912.
- . Traité Pratique ou Le Moine. SC vols. 170, 171. Ed. A. Guillaumont and C. Guillaumont. Paris, 1971.
- Faustus Rhegiensis. Epistolae. In Fausti Reiensis Praeter sermones pseudo-eusebianos opera. Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum, vol. 21, ed. A. Engelbrecht, 159–220. Prague, Vienna and Leipzig, 1891.
- Gennadius of Marseilles. De ecclesiasticis dogmatibus. PL 58:979–1054.
- The Greek Anthology*. Ed. W. R. Paton. 5 vols. London, 1927.
- Gregory of Nazianzus. Orationes xlv. PG 36:12–664.
- Gregory of Nyssa. The Catechetical Orations of Gregory of Nyssa. Cambridge Patristic Texts, vol. 2. Ed. J. H. Srawley. Cambridge, 1903; rp. Cambridge, 1956.
- . In Canticum Canticorum homiliae xv. PG 44:756–1120.
- . Gregorii Nysseni opera. II. Contra Eunomium Libri. Ed. W. Jaeger. 2d ed. Leiden, 1960.
- . Oratio catechetica magna. PG 45:11–105.
- Hieronymus of Jerusalem. De effectu baptismi et notis Christiani. PG 40:860–66.
- Ignatius the Deacon. The Life of the Patriarch Tarasius by Ignatius the Deacon (BHG 1698). Birmingham Byzantine and Ottoman Monographs, vol. 4. Ed. S. Efthymiadis. Aldershot, 1998.
- . Vita Nicephori. PG 100:41–160.
- John Chrysostom. Ad eos qui scandalizati. PG 52:479–528.
- . Homiliae 1–67 in Genesim. PG 53:21–54, 580.
- . In Isaiaham dominum (Is. 6:1), homiliae 1–6. PG 56:97–142.

- John Mavropus. Iohannis Euchaistorum metropolitae quae in codice vaticano graeco 676 supersunt. Ed. P. de Lagarde. Göttingen, 1882; rp. Amsterdam, 1979.
- . Versus iambici. PG 120:1149–1200.
- John of Damascus. Expositio fidei. Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. II Expositio fidei. PTS vol. 12. Ed. P.B. Kotter. Berlin, 1973.
- . Orationes de imaginibus tres. Die Schriften des Johannes von Damaskos. III Contra imaginum calumniatores orationes tres. PTS vol. 17. Ed. P.B. Kotter. Berlin, 1975.
- Justin Martyr. Dialogus cum Tryphone Iudaeo. Ed. J. Goodspeed, Die ältesten Apologeten, 90–265. Göttingen, 1915; rp. New York, 1950.
- . Justin. Dialogue avec Tryphon. Ed. J. Archimbault. 2 vols. Paris, 1909.
- The Letter of the Three Patriarchs to Emperor Theophilus and Related Texts*. Ed. J.A. Munitiz, J. Chrysostomides, E. Harvalia-Crook and Ch. Dendrinis. Camberley, 1997.
- The Life of St Irene Abbess of Chrysobalanton. A Critical Edition with Introduction, Translation, Notes and Indices*. Ed. J. O. Rosenqvist. Uppsala, 1986.
- The Life of Saint Nikon*. Ed. D. F. Sullivan. Brookline, Mass., 1987.
- Macarius Magnes. Macarii Magnetis quae supersunt ex inedito codice. Ed. C. Blondel. Paris, 1876.
- Manuel Philes. Manuelis Philae carmina ex codicibus Escorialensis, Florentinis, Parisinis et Vaticanis. Ed. E. Miller. 2 vols. Paris, 1855–1857.
- . Manuelis Philae carmina graeca. Ed. G. Wernsdorf. Leipzig, 1768.
- Μηναία τοῦ ὁλοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ. 6 vols. Rome, 1888–1901.
- Menologium Basilianum*. PG 117:20–613.
- Metrophanes, Metropolitan of Smyrna. “Προσφωνητικὸς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους Ἀρχαγγέλους Μιχαὴλ καὶ Γαβριήλ.” In Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Ἀληθεία 7(1887): 386–93.
- Michael Akominatus. Μιχαὴλ Ἀκομινατοῦ τοῦ Χωνιατοῦ τὰ Σωζόμενα. Ed. S. P. Lampros. 2 vols. Athens, 1879–1880.
- Michael Psellus. Oratio in Archangelum Michaellem. In Michaelis Pselli Orationes Hagiographicae, ed. E. A. Fisher, 230–56. Stuttgart and Leipzig, 1994.
- Michael of Stoudios. “Éloge des archanges Michel et Gabriel par Michel le Moine (BHG 1294a).” Ed. T. Matantseva. JöB 46(1996):97–155.
- Monumenta Germaniae Historica: Scriptores rerum Langobardicarum et Italicarum saec. VI–IX*. Hannover, 1878.
- Narratio de miraculo a Michaelae Archangelo Chonis patrato*. Ed. M. Bonnet. Paris, 1890.
- Nicephorus, Patriarch of Constantinople. Adversus Epiphaniidem. In Pitra IV: 292–380.
- . Antirrheticus adversus Constantinum Copronymum. PG 100:205–533.
- . Apologeticus pro sacris imaginibus. PG 100:533–850.
- . Contra Eusebium. In Pitra I:371–503.
- . De Magnete. In Pitra I:302–35.

- . Nicephori patriarchae constantinopolitani Refutatio et eversio definitionis synodalis anni 815. Corpus Christianorum. Series Graeca, vol. 33. Ed. J. Featherstone. Louvain, 1997.
- Nicephorus, Priest of Hagia Sophia. Vita S. Andreae Sali. PG 111:628–888.
- Nicephorus Skeuophylactus. “Nicephori Sceuophylacis encomium in S. Theodorum Siceotam.” Ed. K. Kirch. AB 20(1901):248–72.
- Nicetas Stethatos. Opusculs et lettres. SC vol. 81. Ed. J. Darrouzès. Paris, 1961.
- Palladius. The Lausiaca History of Palladius. Ed. C. Butler. 2 vols. Cambridge, 1898–1904.
- Pantaleon. Encomium in maximum et gloriosissimum Michaellem coelestis militiae principem. PG 98:1259–66.
- . Narratio miraculorum maximi archangeli Michaelis. PG 140:573–92.
- Philoxenus of Mabbug. The Discourses of Philoxenus Bishop of Mabbôgh, A.D. 485–519. Vol. II. Introduction, Translation, etc. Ed. E. A. W. Budge. London, 1894.
- Photius. Bibliothèque, Tome V (“Codices” 230–241). Ed. R. Henry. Paris, 1967.
- . Epistulae et Amphiloquia. Ed. B. Laourdas and L. G. Westerink. 6 vols. in 7 pts. Leipzig, 1983–1988.
- Procopius of Gaza. Commentarii in Genesim. PG 87.1:21–512.
- Pseudo-Athanasius. Quaestiones ad Antiochum Ducem. PG 28:597–700.
- Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite. De divinis nominibus. PG 3:585–984.
- . De ecclesiastica hierarchia. PG 3:369–569.
- . De mystica theologia. PG 3:997–1048.
- . La Hiérarchie Céleste. SC vol. 58. Ed. G. Heil and M. de Gandillac. Paris, 1958.
- Pseudo-Macarius. Die fünfzig geistlichen Homilien des Makarios. PTS vol. 4. Ed. H. Dörries, E. Klosterman and M. Kroeger. Berlin, 1964.
- Severus of Antioch. Les homiliae cathedrales. PO vol. 8/2. Ed. M. Brière. Paris, 1919; rp. Turnhout, 1971.
- Sissinius. Acta apparitionis in Chonis. AASS Sept. 8:41–49.
- Sophronius. Narratio miraculorum Ss. Cyri et Joannis. PG 87.3:3424–3676.
- Stephen the Deacon. La vie d’Étienne le Jeune. Birmingham Byzantine and Ottoman Monographs, vol. 3. Ed. M.-F. Auzépy. Aldershot, 1997.
- Symeon of Thessalonike. Responsa ad Gabrielem Pentapolitanum. PG 155:829–952.
- Tertullian. Apologeticum adversus gentes pro Christianis. In Tertulliani Opera. Pars I. Opera Catholica, Adversus Marcionem. Corpus Christianorum. Series Latina, vol. 1, ed. E. Dekkers, 85–171. Turnhout, 1954.
- Theodore of Stoudios. Antirrheticus adversus iconomachos. PG 99:328–436.
- . In sanctos angelos. PG 99:729–48.
- . Refutatio et subversio impiorum poematum. PG 99:436–77.
- Theodoret of Cyrhus. De providentia orationes x. PG 82:556–773.
- Theophanes. Chronographia. Ed. C. de Boor. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1883–1885.
- The Third and Fourth Book of Maccabees*. Trans. M. Hadas. New York, 1953; rp. New York, 1976.

- Les Trophées de Damas*. PO vol. 15 / 2. Ed. G. Bardy. Paris, 1920; rp. Turnhout, 1973.
- Vie de Théodore de Sykéôn*. Ed. A.-J. Festugière. 2 vols. Brussels, 1970.
- Vita S. Mariae Iunoris*. AASS Nov. 4:692–705.
- Vitae duae antiquae Sancti Athanasii Athonitae*. Corpus Christianorum, Series Graeca, vol. 9. Ed. J. Noret. Turnhout, 1982.
- Xanthopoulos, Nicephorus Kallistus. “Νικηφόρος Κάλλιστος Ξανθόπουλος.” Ed. A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus. BZ 11(1902):38–46.

SECONDARY SOURCES

- Alexakis, A. “Stephen of Bostra: Fragmenta Contra Judaeos (CPG 7790). A New Edition.” JöB 43(1993):45–60.
- Alexander, P.J. “Church Councils and Patristic Authority. The Iconoclastic Council of Hiereia (754) and St. Sophia (815).” Harvard Studies in Classical Philology 63(1958):493–505.
- . “Hypatius of Ephesus: A Note on Worship in the Sixth Century.” HTR 45(1952):177–84.
- . “The Iconoclastic Council of St. Sophia (815) and Its Definition (Horos).” DOP 7(1953):35–66.
- . The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople. Ecclesiastical Policy and Image Worship in the Byzantine Empire. Oxford, 1958.
- Le ali di Dio. Messagerie e guerrieri alati tra oriente e occidente*. Ed. M. Bussagli and M. D’Onofrio. Milan, 2000.
- Alpago-Novello, A., et al. Art and Architecture in Medieval Georgia. Trans. N. Holloway. Louvain-la-Neuve, 1980.
- Alpatov, M. “Sur l’iconographie des anges dans l’art de Byzance et de l’ancienne Russie.” Zograf 11(1980):5–15.
- Amélineau, E. “Le christianisme chez les anciens Coptes.” Revue de l’histoire des religions 14(1886):308–45, 15(1887):52–87.
- . Contes et romans de l’Égypte chrétienne. Paris, 1888.
- Anastos, M.V. “The Argument for Iconoclasm as Presented by the Iconoclastic Council of 754.” In Late Classical and Mediaeval Studies in Honor of Albert Mathias Friend, Jr., ed. K. Weitzmann et al., 177–88. Princeton, 1955.
- . “The Ethical Theory of Images Formulated by the Iconoclasts in 754 and 815.” DOP 8(1954):151–60.
- Angelidi, Ch. “La version longue de la Vision du moine Cosmas.” AB 101(1983):73–99.
- Angelillis, C. Il santuario del Gargano e il culto di S. Michele nel mondo. 2 vols. Foggia, 1956.
- Auzépy, M.-F. “L’Adversus Constantinum Caballinum et Jean de Jérusalem.” BS 56 (1995):323–38.
- . “L’analyse littéraire et l’historien: l’exemple des vies de saints iconoclastes.” BS 53(1992):57–67.

- . "Le destruction de l'icône du Christ de la Chalcé par Léon III: Propagande ou réalité." B 60(1990):445–92.
- . "À propos des vies de saints iconoclastes." RSBN 30(1993):3–5.
- Barasch, M. Icon. Studies in the History of an Idea. New York and London, 1992.
- Barbel, J. Christos Angelos. Die Anschauung von Christos als Bote und Engel in der gelehrten und volkstümlichen Literatur des christlichen Altertums. Theophaneia, vol. 3. Bonn, 1941.
- Barber, C. "From Transformation to Desire: Art and Worship after Byzantine Iconoclasm." ArtB 75(1993):7–16.
- . "The Koimesis Church, Nicaea. The Limits of Representation on the Eve of Iconoclasm." JöB 41(1991):43–60.
- Barker, M. The Great Angel. A Study of Israel's Second God. London, 1992.
- Barsanti, C. "Una nota sulle sculture del Tempio di Giacinto nella Chiesa della Dormizione (Koimesis) di Iznik-Nicea." Storia dell'arte 46(1982):210–18.
- Bartelink, G.J.M. "Quelques observations sur ΠΑΡΡΗΣΙΑ dans la littérature paléo-chrétienne." In Graecitas et latinitas christianorum primaeva, suppl. 3, 5–57, 155–57. Nijmegen, 1970.
- Battifol, P. Studiorum patristicorum. Études d'ancienne littérature chrétienne. 2 vols. Paris, 1889–1890.
- Baumeister, T. "Religionsgeschichtliche und kultgeographische Aspekte der westlichen Michaelsverehrung." In Memoriam sanctorum venerantes: miscellanea in onore di Monsignor Victor Saxer, Studi di antichità cristiana, vol. 48, 11–19. Vatican City, 1992.
- Baynes, N.H. "Idolatry and the Early Church." In N.H. Baynes, Byzantine and Other Studies, 116–43. London, 1955.
- Beck, A.C.M. Genien und Niken als Engel in der altchristlichen Kunst. Giessen, 1936.
- Belke, K., and N. Mersich. Phrygien und Pisidien. Tabula Imperii Byzantini, vol. 7. Vienna, 1990.
- Belting, H. Bild und Kult. Eine Geschichte des Bildes vor dem Zeitalter der Kunst. Munich, 1990.
- Berefelt, G. A Study on the Winged Angel. The Origin of a Motif. Stockholm, 1968.
- Bertelè, T. L'imperatore alato nella numismatica bizantina. Rome, 1951.
- Bibliotheca hagiographica graeca*. Ed. F. Halkin. 3 vols. Brussels, 1957.
- Bidez, J. Vie de Porphyre. Le philosophe néoplatonicien. Gand and Leipzig, 1913; rp. Hildesheim and New York, 1980.
- Blum, C. "The Meaning of στοιχείον and its Derivatives in the Byzantine Age. A Study in Byzantine Magic." EranoS 44(1946):315–25.
- Börtzler, F. Porphyrius' Schrift von den Götterbildern. Erlangen, 1908.
- Bovini, G. Mosaici di S. Apollinare di Ravenna: Il ciclo cristologico. Florence, 1958.
- Brendel, O.J. Prolegomena to the Study of Roman Art. New Haven and London, 1979.
- Brenk, B. Die frühchristliche Mosaiken in S. Maria Maggiore zu Rom. Wiesbaden, 1975.

- Brightman, F.E. "The Historia Mystagoga and Other Greek Commentaries on the Byzantine Liturgy." JTS 9(1908):248–67, 387–97.
- . Liturgies Eastern and Western, Vol. 1. Oxford, 1896.
- Brock, S. "Iconoclasm and Monophysitism." In Iconoclasm. Papers Given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975, ed. A. Bryer and J. Herrin, 53–57. Birmingham, 1977.
- Brown, P. "The Rise and Function of the Holy Man in Late Antiquity, 1971–1997." J ECS 6(1998):353–76.
- Browning, R. "The 'Low Level' Saint's Life in the Early Byzantine World." In The Byzantine Saint, ed. S. Hackel, 117–27. London, 1981.
- Brubaker, L. "Byzantine Art in the Ninth Century: Theory, Practice, and Culture." BMGS 13(1989):23–93.
- . "Icons Before Iconoclasm?" In Morfologie sociali e culturali in Europa fra tarda antichità e alto medioevo. Settimane vol. 45, II:1215–54. Spoleto, 1998.
- . "To Legitimize an Emperor: Constantine and Visual Authority in the Eighth and Ninth Centuries." In New Constantines. The Rhythm of Imperial Renewal in Byzantium, 4th–13th Centuries, Papers from the Twenty-sixth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, St. Andrews, March 1992, ed. P. Magdalino, 139–58. Aldershot, 1994.
- . Vision and Meaning in Ninth-Century Byzantium. Image as Exegesis in the Homilies of Gregory of Nazianzus. Cambridge, 1999.
- Büchsel, M. "Die Schöpfungsmosaiken von San Marco. Die Ikonographie der Erschaffung des Menschens in der frühchristlichen Kunst." Städel-Jahrbuch n.s. 13(1991):29–80.
- Budge, E.A.W. Miscellaneous Coptic Texts in the Dialect of Upper Egypt. London, 1915.
- Bussagli, M. "Angeli." Enciclopedia dell'arte medievale, I:629–38. Rome, 1991–.
- . "Gli angeli e i venti: considerazioni sul simbolismo aereo delle ali angeliche." Arte medievale 5/2(1991):107–26.
- . "Il Precursore. Giovanni l'angelo, martire della luce." Abstracta 27(1988):23–29.
- . Storia degli angeli. Racconto di immagini e di idee. Milan, 1991.
- . Byzance. L'art byzantin dans les collections publiques françaises. Paris, 1992.
- Cameron, Alan. The Greek Anthology from Meleager to Planudes. Oxford, 1993.
- Cameron, Averil. Agathias. Oxford, 1970.
- . "Byzantium and the Past in the Seventh Century: The Search for Redefinition." In The Seventh Century. Change and Continuity. Proceedings of a joint French and British Colloquium held at the Warburg Institute 8–9 July 1988, ed. J. Fontaine and J.N. Hillgarth, 250–76. London, 1992.
- . "The Language of Images: The Rise of Icons and Christian Representation." In The Church and the Arts, Studies in Church History, vol. 25, ed. D. Wood, 1–42. London, 1992.

- Campagna, O. "La grotta di S. Michele alla Serra di Grisolia." Bolletino della Badia Greca di Grottaferrata n.s. 40(1986):57–65.
- Canivet, P. "Le Michaelion de Huarte (Ve s.) et le culte syrien des anges." B 50(1980):85–117.
- Canivet, P., and M. T. Canivet. Huarte. Sanctuaire chrétien d'Apamène (IVe–VIe s.). 2 vols. Paris, 1987.
- Cecchelli, C. I mosaici della Basilica S. Maria Maggiore. Turin, 1956.
- Chandler, R. Travels in Asia Minor: Or, an account of a tour made at the expense of the Society of Dilettanti. Dublin, 1775.
- Chateau, D. "De la ressemblance: un dialogue Foucault-Magritte." In L'image Deleuze, Foucault, Lyotard, ed. T. Lenain, 95–108. Paris, 1998.
- Chesnut, R. C. Three Monophysite Christologies: Severus of Antioch, Philoxenus of Mabbug, and Jacob of Sarug. Oxford, 1976.
- Clark, E. A. The Origenist Controversy. The Cultural Construction of an Early Christian Debate. Princeton, 1992.
- Clausberg, K. Die Wiener Genesis. Eine Kunstwissenschaftliche Bilderbuchgeschichte. Frankfurt am Main, 1984.
- Conversation with God. Icons from the Byzantine Museum of Athens (9th–15th Centuries)*. The Hellenistic Centre, London, 22 May–20 June, 1998. Athens, 1998.
- Cormack, R. "Painting After Iconoclasm." In Iconoclasm. Papers Given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975, ed. A. Bryer and J. Herrin, 147–63. Birmingham, 1977.
- . "The Wall Painting of St. Michael in the Theatre." In Aphrodisias Papers 2. The Theatre, a Sculptor's Workshop, Philosophers, and Coin Types, ed. R. R. R. Smith and K. T. Erim, 109–22. Ann Arbor, 1991.
- . Writing in Gold. Byzantine Society and Its Icons. London, 1985.
- Cornea, A. "On 'Fiction' and 'Authenticity' in Byzantine Pre-Iconoclastic Painting." Revue roumaine d'histoire de l'art 17(1980):3–11.
- Corrigan, K. A. Visual Polemics in the Ninth-Century Byzantine Psalters. Cambridge, 1992.
- Crafer, T. W. "Macarius Magnes, A Neglected Apologist." JTS 8(1907):401–23, 546–71.
- Cramer, J. A. Anecdota graeca e codd. manuscriptis Bibliothecae regiae parisiensis. 4 vols. Oxford, 1839–1841; rp. Hildesheim, 1967.
- Crisafulli, V. S., and J. W. Nesbitt. The Miracles of St. Artemios. A Collection of Miracle Stories by an Anonymous Author of Seventh-Century Byzantium. Leiden, New York and Köln, 1997.
- Cumont, F. "Les anges du paganisme." Revue de l'histoire des religions 72(1915): 159–82.
- Cutler, A., and R. Browning. "In the Margins of Byzantium? Some Icons in Michael Psellos." BMGS 16(1992):21–32.
- Dagron, G. "Constantinople. Les sanctuaires et l'organisation de la ville religieuse." Actes du XIe congrès international d'archéologie chrétienne. Lyons, Vienne,

- Grenoble, Genève et Aoste (21–28 Septembre 1986), II:1069–85. Vatican City, 1989.
- . “Holy Images and Likeness.” DOP 45(1991):23–33.
- . “Mots, images, icônes.” Nouvelle revue de psychanalyse 44(1991):151–68.
- . “Rêver de Dieu et parler de soi. Le rêve et son interprétation d’après les sources byzantines.” In I sogni nel medioevo, ed. T. Gregory, 37–55. Rome, 1985.
- . Vie et miracles de sainte Thècle. Texte grec, traduction et commentaire. Brussels, 1978.
- D’Alverny, M.-Th. “Les anges et les jours.” CA 9(1957):271–300.
- Daniélou, J. Histoire des doctrines chrétiennes avant Nicée. Vol. I. Théologie du judéo-christianisme. Tournai, 1958.
- Delbrueck, R. Die Consulardiptychen und verwandte Denkmäler. 2 vols. Berlin and Leipzig, 1929.
- Der Nersessian, S. “Une apologie des images du septième siècle.” B 17(1944/5):58–87.
- . L’illustration des psautiers grecs du Moyen Age. II. Londres, Add. 19.352. Paris, 1970.
- . “Note sur quelques images se rattachant au thème du Christ-ange.” CA 13(1962):209–16.
- Déroche, V. “L’Apologie contre les Juifs de Léontios de Néapolis.” TM 12(1994):45–104.
- . “L’authenticité de l’Apologie contre les Juifs de Léontios de Néapolis.” Bulletin de correspondance hellénique 110(1986):655–69.
- . “L’autorité des moines à Byzance du VIII^e siècle au Xe siècle.” Revue Bénédictine 103(1993):241–54.
- Derrida, J. “How to Avoid Speaking: Denials.” In Languages of the Unsayable. The Play of Negativity in Literature and Literary Theory, ed. S. Budick and W. Iser, trans. K. Friedan, 3–70. New York, 1989.
- Deubner, L. De incubatione capita quattuor. Leipzig, 1900.
- . Kosmas und Damian. Texte und Einleitung. Leipzig, 1907.
- Dictionnaire d’archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie*. Ed. F. Cabrol and H. Leclercq. Paris, 1924–.
- Dictionnaire de théologie catholique*. Ed. A. Vacant and E. Magenot. Paris, 1899–1950.
- Diekamp, F. Analecta patristica. Texte und Abhandlungen zur griechischen Patristik. Orientalia christiana analecta, vol. 117. Rome, 1938.
- Draguet, R. “L’Histoire Lausaque: Une oeuvre écrite dans l’esprit d’Evagre.” Revue d’histoire ecclésiastique 41(1946):321–64, 42(1947):5–49.
- Drandakes, N. V. “Παλαιολόγειος είκων Βρεφοκρατούσης τοῦ εἰς Βενετίου Ἐληνικοῦ ναοῦ.” Θεολογία 28(1957):238–51.
- Duchesne, L. Macario Magnete et scriptis eius. Paris, 1877.
- Dufrenne, S. “Une illustration ‘historique,’ inconnue, du Psautier du Mont-Athos, Pantocrator No. 61.” CA 15(1965):83–95.

- Dunbabin, K. M. D. "Ipsa deae vestigiae ... Footprints Divine and Human on Graeco-Roman Monuments." Journal of Roman Archaeology 3(1990):85–109.
- Elliott, A. G. Roads to Paradise. Reading the Lives of the Early Saints. Hanover and London, 1987.
- Engemann, J. "Zu den Dreifaltigkeit darstellungen der frühchristlichen Kunst: Gab es in 4. Jahrhundert anthropomorphe Trinitätsbilder?" JAC 19(1976):157–72.
- Erim, K. T. Aphrodisias. City of Venus—Aphrodite. New York and London, 1986.
- . Aphrodisias. Ein Führer durch die antike Stadt und das Museum. Trans. E. Alföldi-Rosenbaum. Istanbul, 1990.
- Felis, K. "Die Niken und die Engel in altchristlicher Kunst." RQ 26(1912):3–25.
- Ferrua, A. La pittura della nuova Catacomba di via Latina. Vatican City, 1960.
- Finney, P. C. The Invisible God. Early Christians on Art. Oxford, 1994.
- Firatli, N. La sculpture byzantine figurée au Musée Archéologique d'Istanbul. Paris, 1990.
- Fisher, E. A. "Nicomedia or Galatia? Where Was Psellos' Church of the Archangel Michael?" In Gonimos. Neoplatonic and Byzantine Studies Presented to Leendert G. Westerlink at 75, ed. J. Duffy and J. Peradotto, 175–87. Buffalo, 1988.
- Fitzmeyer, J. A. "A New Feature of Qumrân Angelology and the Angels of I Cor. XI:10." New Testament Studies n.s. 4(1957/8):48–58.
- Florovsky, G. "Origen, Eusebius, and the Iconoclastic Controversy." Church History 19(1950):77–96.
- Foucault, M. This Is Not a Pipe. Trans. J. Harkness. Berkeley, 1982.
- Fox, R. L. Pagans and Christians. Harmondsworth, Middlesex, 1986.
- Francis, F. O. "Humility and Angelic Worship in Col. 2:18." Studia Theologica 16(1963):109–34. [= Conflict at Colossae. A Problem in the Interpretation of Early Christianity Illustrated by Selected Modern Studies, ed. F. O. Francis and W. A. Meeks, 163–95. Missoula, Mont., 1973.]
- Francovich, G. de. "I mosaici del bema della chiesa della Dormizione di Nicea." In Scritti di storia dell'arte in onore di Lionello Venturi, 1:3–27. Rome, 1956.
- Frank, P. S. ΑΓΓΕΛΙΚΟΣ ΒΙΟΣ. Begriffsanalytische und begriffsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zum "Engelgleichen Leben" im frühen Mönchtum. Münster, 1964.
- Freedberg, D. The Power of Images. Studies in the History and Theory of Response. Chicago and London, 1989.
- Freeman, A. "Theodulf of Orleans and the Libri Carolini." Speculum 32(1957):663–705.
- Friedländer, P. Johannes von Gaza und Paulus Silentarius. Kunstbeschreibungen justinianischer Zeit. Leipzig and Berlin, 1912; rp. Hildesheim and New York, 1969.
- Gabelić, S. "The Iconography of the Miracle at Chonae. An Unusual Example from Cyprus." Zograf 20(1989):95–103.
- Galavaris, G. The Illustrations of the Prefaces in Byzantine Gospels. Vienna, 1979.
- Gero, S. Byzantine Iconoclasm During the Reign of Constantine V with Particular Attention to the Oriental Sources. Louvain, 1977.

- . Byzantine Iconoclasm during the Reign of Leo III with Particular Attention to the Oriental Sources. Louvain, 1973.
- . "Hypatius of Ephesus on the Cult of Images." In Christianity, Judaism and Other Greco-Roman Cults. Studies for Morton Smith at Sixty, II:208–16. Leiden, 1975.
- Giakalis, A. Images of the Divine. The Theology of Icons at the Seventh Ecumenical Council. Leiden, New York and Köln, 1994.
- Giannopoulos, V.N. "Ἡ περὶ ἁγγέλων διδασκαλία τοῦ Πατριαρχοῦ καὶ Ὁμολογητοῦ Νικηφόρου Α' (+829)." Θεολογία 44(1973):312–38.
- Ginzburg, C. "Idols and Likenesses: Origen, Homilies on Exodus VIII.3, and Its Reception." In Sight and Insight. Essays in Honour of E. H. Gombrich at 85, ed. J. Onians, 55–72. London, 1994.
- Goar, J. Euchologion sive rituale graecorum. Venice, 1730; rp. Graz, 1960.
- Godwin, J. Mystery Religions in the Ancient World. San Francisco, 1981.
- Gothein, E. "L'arcangelo Michele, santo popolare dei Longobardi." Rassegna Pugliese di scienze, lettere ed arte 13(1896):81–89, 107–12, 137–46, 162–68.
- Gough, Mary, ed. Alahan. An Early Christian Monastery in Southeastern Turkey. Toronto, 1985.
- Gouillard, J. "Fragments inédits d'un antirrhétique de Jean le Grammairien." REB 24(1966):171–81.
- . "Hypatius d'Éphèse ou du Pseudo-Denys à Théodore Studite." REB 19(1961):63–75.
- Grabar, A. The Golden Age of Justinian. From the Death of Theodosius to the Rise of Islam. Trans. S. Gilbert and J. Emmons. New York, 1967.
- . L'iconoclisme byzantin. Dossier archéologique. Paris, 1957.
- . Martyrium. Recherches sur le culte des reliques et l'art chrétien antique. 2 vols. Paris, 1943–1946; rp. London, 1972.
- . "Les mosaïques de Germigny-des-Prés." In A. Grabar, L'art de la fin de l'Antiquité et du Moyen Âge, II:995–1006. Paris, 1968.
- Grooth, M., and P. van Moorsel. "The Lion, the Calf, the Man and the Eagle in Early Christian and Coptic Art." Bulletin Antiecke Beschaving 52/3(1977/8): 233–45.
- Guarducci, M.M. "Le impronte del 'Quo vadis' e monumenti affini, figurati ed epigrafici." Rendiconti. Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia 19(1942/4): 305–44.
- Guillaumont, A. Les "Képhalaia Gnostica" d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'Origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens. Patristica Sorbonensis, vol. 5. Paris, 1962.
- Guiraud, P. "Étymologie et ethymologia (Motivation et rétro-motivation)." Poétique 11(1972):405–13.
- Guy, J.-C. "Un Entretien monastique sur la contemplation." Recherches des sciences religieuses 50(1962):230–41.
- Halkin, F. "Un abrégé inédit de la vie ancienne et disparue de Corneille le Centurion." RSBN n.s. 1(1964):31–39.

- . Inédits byzantins d'Ochrida, Candie et Moscou. Brussels, 1963.
- Halleux, A. de. Philoxène de Mabbog. Sa vie, ses écrits, sa théologie. Louvain, 1963.
- Hanfmann, G.M.A. The Season Sarcophagus in Dumbarton Oaks. 2 vols. Cambridge, Mass., 1951.
- Harnack, A. Kritik des Neues Testaments von einem griechischen Philosophen des 3. Jahrhunderts. Die in Apocriticus des Macarius Magnes enthaltene Streitschrift. TU vol. 37/3. Leipzig, 1911.
- Hasluck, F.W. Letters on Religion and Folklore. London, 1926.
- Heiser, L. Die Engel im Glauben der Orthodoxie. Trier, 1976.
- Hinks, R.P. Catalogue of the Greek, Etruscan and Roman Paintings and Mosaics in the British Museum. London, 1933.
- The Holy Face and the Paradox of Representation*. Villa Spelman Colloquia, vol. 6, ed. H.L. Kessler and G. Wolf. Bologna, 1998.
- Holy Women of the Syrian Orient*. Ed. S.A. Harvey and S. Brock. Berkeley, 1987.
- Honigsmann, E. "Pierre l'Ibérien et les écrits du Pseudo-Denys l'Aréopagite." Mémoires de l'Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe des Lettres et des Sciences morales et politiques 47/3(1952):3–57.
- Ihm, C. Die Programme der christlichen Apsismalerei vom vierten Jahrhundert bis zur Mitte des achten Jahrhunderts. Wiesbaden, 1960.
- Jeck, U. "Ps. Dionysios Areopagites und der Bilderstreit in Byzanz: Überlegungen zur Dionysiosrezeption des Johannes von Damaskos." Hermeneia. Zeitschrift für ostkirchliche Kunst 8/2(1992):71–80.
- Jerphanion, G. de. "Les noms des quatre animaux et le commentaire liturgique de Pseudo-Germain." In G. de Jerphanion, Les voix des monuments. Notes et études d'archéologie chrétienne, 250–59. Paris, 1930.
- Joannou, P.-P. Discipline generale antique (IVe-IXe siècles). Tome I.2. Les canons des synodes particuliers. Grottaferrata, 1962.
- Jolivet-Lévy, C. "Culte et iconographie de l'archange Michel dans l'orient byzantin: le témoignage de quelques monuments de Cappadoce." Cahiers de Saint-Michel de Cuixà 28(1997):187–98.
- . Les églises byzantines de Cappadoce. Le programme iconographique de l'abside et ses abords. Paris, 1991.
- . "Note sur la représentation des archanges en costume impérial dans l'iconographie byzantine." CA 46(1998):121–28.
- Kartsonis, A.D. Anastasis. The Making of an Image. Princeton, 1986.
- Kazhdan, A., and H. Maguire. "Byzantine Hagiographical Texts as Sources on Art." DOP 45(1991):1–22.
- Kearney, R. The Wake of Imagination. Ideas of Creativity in Western Culture. London, 1988.
- Kessler, H.L. "'Pictures Fertile with Truth': How Christians Managed to Make Images of God without Violating the Second Commandment." The Journal of the Walters Art Gallery 49/50(1991/2):53–65.

- . "Real Absence: Early Medieval Art and the Metamorphosis of Vision." In Morfologie sociali e culturali in Europa fra tarda antichità e alto medioevo. Settimane vol. 45, II:1157–1213. Spoleto, 1998.
- . Studies in Pictorial Narrative. London, 1994.
- . "Through the Temple Veil: The Holy Image in Judaism and Christianity." Kairos 32/33(1990/1):53–77.
- Kinney, D. "The Apocalypse in Early Christian Monumental Decoration." In The Apocalypse in the Middle Ages, ed. R. K. Emerson and B. McGinn, 200–16. Ithaca and London, 1992.
- Kirschbaum, E. "L'angelo rosso e l'angelo turchino." RivAC 17(1940):209–48.
- Kitzinger, E. Byzantine Art in the Making. London, 1977.
- . "Byzantine Art in the Period between Justinian and Iconoclasm." In Berichte zum XI. Internationalen Byzantinischen-Kongress, München, 1958, 1–50. Munich, 1958.
- . "The Cult of Images in the Age Before Iconoclasm." DOP 8(1954):83–150.
- . "On Some Icons of the Seventh Century." In Late Classical and Mediaeval Studies in Honor of Albert Mathias Friend, Jr., ed. K. Weitzmann et al., 132–50. Princeton, 1955.
- Kleiner, D. Roman Sculpture. New Haven and London, 1992.
- Koester, H. History and Literature of Early Christianity. Philadelphia, 1982.
- Kötting, B. "Fußspuren als Zeichen göttlicher Anwesenheit." Boreas 6(1983):197–201.
- . Peregrinatio religiosa. Wallfahrten in der Antike und das Pilgerwesen in der alten Kirche. Münster, 1950; rp. Münster, 1980.
- Koukiales, S. Tà θαύματα—Ἐμφάνισεις τῶν Ἀγγέλων καὶ Ἀρχαγγέλων στὴν Βυζαντινὴ Τέχνη τῶν Βαλκανίων. Athens, 1989.
- Krausmüller, D. "God or Angels as Impersonators of Saints. A Belief and its Contexts in the "Refutation" of Eustratius of Constantinople and in the Writings of Anastasius of Sinai." Gouden Hoorn 6/2(1998/9):5–16.
- Krueger, D. "Hagiography as an Ascetic Practice in the Early Christian East." The Journal of Religion 79(1999):216–32.
- . "Typological Figuration in Theodoret of Cyrillus's Historia Religiosa and the Art of Postbiblical Narrative." J ECS 5(1997):393–417.
- Ladner, G. "The Concept of the Image in the Greek Fathers and the Byzantine Iconoclastic Controversy." DOP 7(1953):1–34.
- Lafontaine-Dosogne, J. "Une icône d'Angélos au Musée de Malines et l'iconographie du saint Jean-Baptiste ailé." Bulletin de Musées Royaux d'Art et d'Histoire 48(1976):121–44.
- . "Théophanie—visions auxquelles participent les prophètes dans l'art byzantin après la restauration des images." In Synthronon. Art et archéologie de la fin de l'Antiquité et du Moyen Âge, 135–43. Paris, 1968.

- Lange, G. Bild und Wort. Die katechetischen Funktionen des Bildes in der griechischen Theologie des sechsten bis neunten Jahrhunderts. Würzburg, 1969.
- Lardreau, G. Discours philosophique et discours spirituel. Autour de la philosophie spirituelle de Philoxène de Mabboug. Paris, 1985.
- Leanza, S. "Una versione greca inedita dell'Apparitio S. Michaelis in monte Gargano." VetChr 22(1985):291–316.
- Legrand, E. Bibliothèque grecque vulgaire. 9 vols. Paris, 1881; rp. Athens, 1974.
- Lethaby, W. R. "The Painted Book of Genesis in the British Museum." Archaeological Journal 69(1912):88–111.
- Lexicon iconographicum mythologiae classicae*. Zurich and Munich, 1981–.
- Liddell, H. G., and R. Scott. A Greek-English Lexicon. Oxford, 1968.
- Lightfoot, J. B. St. Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon. London, 1879.
- Lipsić, E. E. "Naukratij i Nikeiskie Mozaikij." Zbornik Radova Vizantoloskog Instituta 8/2(1964):241–46.
- Loerke, W. "Observations on the Representation of Doxa in the Mosaics of S. Maria Maggiore, Rome, and St. Catherine's, Sinai." Gesta 20(1981):15–22.
- Longo, A. A. "A proposito di un articolo recente sull'agiografia iconoclasta." RSBN 29(1992):3–17.
- . "Di nuovo sull'agiografia iconoclasta." RSBN 30(1993):7–15.
- . "La vita de S. Leone di Catania e gli incantesimi del mago Eliodoro." RSBN 26(1989):3–98.
- Louth, A. Denys the Areopagite. Wilton, Conn., 1989.
- Lueken, W. Michael. Eine Darstellung und Vergleichung der jüdischen und der morgenländisch-christlichen Tradition vom Erzengel Michael. Göttingen, 1898.
- McCaill, R. C. "The Cycle of Agathias: New Identifications Scrutinised." Journal of Hellenic Studies 89(1969):87–96.
- . "The Erotic and Ascetic Poetry of Agathias Scholasticus." B 41(1971):205–67.
- . "On the Early Career of Agathias Scholasticus." REB 28(1970):141–51.
- Maffei, F. de'. Icona, pittore e arte al Concilio Niceno II. Rome, 1974.
- . "Tradizione ed innovazione nei dittici eburnei: Giuliano, Pulcheria, Giustiniano." Rivista degli Studi Orientali 40(1986):89–139.
- . "L'Unigenito consostanziale al Padre nel programma trinitario dei perduti mosaici del bema della Dormizione di Nicea e il Cristo trasfigurato del Sinai." Storia dell'arte 45(1982):91–116, 46(1982):185–200.
- Maguire, H. Earth and Ocean. The Terrestrial World in Early Byzantine Art. University Park and London, 1987.
- . The Icons of Their Bodies. Saints and Their Images in Byzantium. Princeton, 1996.
- . "Magic and the Christian Image." In Byzantine Magic, ed. H. Maguire, 51–71. Washington, D.C., 1995.
- . "Style and Ideology in Byzantine Imperial Art." Gesta 28(1989):217–31.

- Maltese, E.V. Dimensione bizantine. Donne, angeli e demoni nel medioevo greco. Turin, 1995.
- . "Gli angeli in terra: sull'immaginario dell'angelo bizantino." Materiali e discussioni per l'analisi dei testi classici 24(1990):111–32.
- Mango, C. The Art of the Byzantine Empire. 312–1453. Sources and Documents. Toronto, 1986.
- . Byzantine Architecture. London, 1986.
- . Byzantium. The Empire of New Rome. London, 1980.
- . "La croix dite de Michel le Cérulaire et la croix de Saint-Michel de Sykéôn." CA 36(1988):41–49.
- . "Germia: A Postscript." JöB 41(1991):297–300.
- . Materials for the Study of the Mosaics of St. Sophia at Istanbul. Washington, D.C., 1962.
- . "Notes d'épigraphie et d'archéologie: Constantinople, Nicée." TM 12(1994):343–57.
- . "On the History of the Templon and the Martyrion of St. Artemios at Constantinople." Zograf 10(1979):40–43.
- . "St. Michael and Attis." DChAE 12(1984):39–62.
- Mansi, G.D. Sacrorum conciliorum nova et amplissima collectio. 53 vols. in 58 pts. Paris and Leipzig, 1901–1927.
- Maraval, P. "Épiphané, 'Docteur des Iconoclastes.'" In Nicée II, 787–1987. Douze siècles d'images religieuses. Actes du colloque international Nicée II tenu au Collège de France, Paris les 2, 3, 4 Octobre 1986, ed. F. Boespflug and N. Lossky, 51–62. Paris, 1987.
- . Lieux saints et pèlerinages d'Orient. Histoire et géographie des origines à la conquête arabe. Paris, 1985.
- Marin, L. "The Order of Words and the Order of Things in Painting." Visible Language 23(1989):189–203.
- . To Destroy Painting. Trans. M. Hjort. Chicago and London, 1995.
- Marini Clarelli, M.V. "I giorni della creazione nel 'Genesi Cotton.'" OCP 50(1984):65–93.
- Mathews, T.F. The Clash of Gods. A Reinterpretation of Early Christian Art. Rev. ed. Princeton, 1999.
- . "Psychological Dimensions in the Art of Eastern Christendom." In Art and Religion: Faith, Form and Reform, 1984 Paine Lectures in Religion, ed. O. Overby, 1–21. Columbia, Mo., 1986.
- Meinardus, O.F.A. "St. Michael's Miracle of Khonae and Its Geographical Setting." Εκκλησία καὶ Θεολογία 1(1980):459–69.
- . "A Typological Analysis of the Traditions Pertaining to Miraculous Icons." In Wegzeichen. Festgabe zum 60. Geburtstag von Prof. Dr. Hermangild M. Lieberman OSA, ed. E. C. Suttner and C. Patock, 201–32. Würzburg, 1971.
- Mercati, G. Opere minori. Studi e testi, vol. 76. Vatican City, 1937.

- Meyendorff, J. "Iconographie de la Sagesse divine dans la tradition byzantine." CA 10(1959):259–77.
- . "Wisdom–Sophia: Contrasting Approaches to a Complex Theme." DOP 41(1987):391–401.
- Millénaire monastique du Mont-St.-Michel*. 3 vols. Paris, 1971.
- Miller, E. "Fragments inédits de Théodore Le Lecteur et de Jean d'Égée." Revue archéologique 26(1873):393–403.
- Millet, G. Monuments byzantins de Mistra. Paris, 1910.
- . La peinture du moyen âge en Yougoslavie (Serbie, Macédoine et Monténégro). 4 vols. Paris, 1954–1969.
- Mondzain-Baudinet, M.-J. Image, icône, économie. Les sources byzantines de l'imaginaire contemporain. Paris, 1996.
- . "L'incarnation, l'image, la voix." Esprit (Feb. 1982):188–99.
- . Nicéphore le Patriarche: Discours contre les iconoclastes. Paris, 1990.
- Moorhead, J. "Iconoclasm, the Cross, and the Imperial Image." B 55(1985):65–79.
- Mortley, R. From Word to Silence. Vol. II. The Way of Negation, Christian and Greek. Theophaneia, vol. 31. Bonn, 1986.
- Müller, C. D. G. Die Engellehre der koptischen Kirche. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der christlichen Frömmigkeit in Ägypten. Wiesbaden, 1959.
- Murray, Sister Charles. Rebirth and Afterlife. A Study of the Transmutation of Some Pagan Imagery in Early Christian Funerary Art. Oxford, 1981.
- Nees, L. "Image and Text: Excerpts from Jerome's 'De Trinitate' and the Maiestas Domini Miniature of the Gundohinus Gospels." Viator 18(1987):1–21.
- Nelson, R. S. The Iconography of the Prefaces in Byzantine Gospels. New York, 1980.
- Oikonomidès, N. "Some Remarks on the Apse Mosaics of St. Sophia." DOP 39(1985):111–15.
- Ostrogorsky, G. Studien zur Geschichte des byzantinischen Bilderstreites. Breslau, 1929.
- Otranto, G. "Il 'Liber de apparitione' e il culto di San Michele sul Gargano nella documentazione liturgica altomedievale." VetChr 18(1981):423–42.
- . "Il 'Liber de apparitione,' il santuario di San Michele sul Gargano e i Longobardi del Ducato di Benevento." In Santuari e politica nel mondo antico, ed. M. Sordi, 210–45. Milan, 1983.
- . "Per una metodologia della ricerca storico-agiografica: il Santuario mi-caelico del Gargano tra Bizantini e Longobardi." VetChr 25(1988):381–405.
- Otranto, G., and C. Carletti. Il santuario di S. Michele arcangelo sul Gargano dalle origine al X secolo. Bari, 1990.
- Ouspensky, L., and W. Lossky. The Meaning of the Icons. Boston, 1952.
- Pallas, D. I. "Eine Differenzierung unter den himmlischen Ordnungen (Ikono-graphische Analyse)." BZ 44(1971):55–60.
- . "Ο Χριστός ὡς ἡ θεία Σοφία. Ἡ Εἰκονογραφικὴ Περιπέτεια μιᾶς θεολογικῆς Ἐννοίας." DChAE 15(1989/90):119–42.

- Parry, K. Depicting the Word. Byzantine Iconophile Thought of the Eighth and Ninth Centuries. Leiden, 1996.
- Patlagean, E. "Ancient Byzantine Hagiography and Social History." In Saints and Their Cults. Studies in Religion, Sociology, Folklore, and History, ed. S. Wilson, trans. J. Hodgkin, 101–21. Cambridge, 1983. [= "Ancien hagiographie byzantine et histoire sociale." Annales 23(1968):106–26, and Structure sociale, famille, chrétienté à Byzance, IXe-XIe siècle. London, 1981. Item V.]
- Patrologia cursus completus, Series graeca*. Ed. J.-P. Migne. 161 vols. in 166 pts. Paris, 1857–1866.
- Patrologia cursus completus, Series latina*. Ed. J.-P. Migne. 221 vols. in 222 pts. Paris, 1844–1880.
- Peers, G. "Breathless, Speechless Images: On the Chalke Gate Epigram." In Homages Margaret Head Thomson. Cahiers des études anciennes, vol. 32, ed. L. Finette and A. P. Booth, 109–12. Trois Rivières, Québec, 1998.
- . "Holy Man, Supplicant and Donor: On Representations of the Miracle of the Archangel Michael at Chonae." Mediaeval Studies 59(1997):173–82.
- . "Imagination and Angelic Epiphany." BMGS 21(1997):113–31.
- . "Patriarchal Politics in the Paris Gregory (B.N. gr. 510)." JöB 47(1997): 51–71.
- . "The Sosthenion near Constantinople: John Malalas and Ancient Art." B 68(1998):110–20.
- Pelikan, J. Imago Dei. The Byzantine Apologia for Icons. Princeton, 1990.
- . Introduction to Maximus Confessor. Selected Writings, 1–13. New York, 1985.
- Perler, O. "Les théophanies dans les mosaïques de Sainte-Marie-Majeure à Rome." RivAC 50(1974):275–93.
- Peschlow, U. "Neue Beobachtungen zur Architektur und Ausstattung der Koimesiskirche in Iznik." Istanbuler Mitteilungen 22(1972):145–87.
- Pesci, B. "Il problema cronologico della Madonna di Aracoeli alla luce delle fonti." RivAC 18(1941):51–64.
- Peterson, E. "Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte von παρρησία." In Reinhold Seeberg Festschrift, ed. W. Koepf, 1:283–97. Leipzig, 1929.
- Petrucchi, A. Una versione greco-bizantina dell'Apparitio Sancti Michaelis in Monte Gargano. Rome, 1955.
- Petzold, A. "'His Face Like Lightning': Colour as Signifier in Representations of the Holy Women at the Tomb." Arte medievale 6 / 2(1992):149–55.
- Pitra, J. B. Spicilegio Solesmense complectens sanctorum patrum scriptorumque ecclesiasticorum anecdota hactenus opera. 4 vols. Paris, 1852–1858.
- Preger, T. Scriptores originum Constantinopolitanarum. 2 vols. Leipzig, 1901–1907; rp. New York, 1975.
- Ralles, G.A., and M. Potles. Σύνταγμα τῶν θείων καὶ ἱερῶν κανόνων. 6 vols. Athens, 1852–1859.

- Ramsay, W. The Church in the Roman Empire Before 170 A.D. New York and London, 1893.
- Rauch, J., F. Schenk zu Schweinsberg, and J.M. Wilm. "Die Limburger Stau-rothek." Das Münster 8(1955):201–40.
- Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum.* Stuttgart, 1950–.
- Reallexikon zur byzantinischen Kunst.* Stuttgart, 1963–.
- Reitzenstein, R. Poimandres. Studien zur griechisch- ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur. Leipzig, 1904.
- Rintelen, W. v. Kultgeographische Studien in der Italia Byzantina. Untersuchungen über die Kulte des Erzengels Michael und der Madonna di Costantinopoli in Süd-italien. Meisenheim am Glan, 1968.
- . "Kult- und Legendenwanderung von Ost nach West im frühen Mittelalter." Saeculum 22(1971):71–100.
- Robert, L. Hellenica. Recueil d'épigraphie de numismatique et d'antiquités grecques, vol. XI–XII. Paris, 1960.
- . Villes d'Asie Mineure. Études de géographie antique. Paris, 1935.
- Rohland, J. P. Der Erzengel Michael. Arzt und Feldherr. Zwei Aspekte des vor- und frühbyzantinischen Michaelkults. Leiden, 1977.
- Rojdestvsky, O. Le culte de saint Michel et le moyen age latin. Paris, 1922.
- Romanelli, P., and P.J. Nordhagen. S. Maria Antiqua. Rome, 1964.
- Roques, R. Introduction to Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, La Hiérarchie Céleste. SC vol. 58, ed. G. Heil and M. de Gandillac, v–xcvi. Paris, 1958.
- . L'univers dionysien. Structure hiérarchique du monde selon le Pseudo-Denys. Paris, 1954; rp. Paris, 1983.
- Ross, M. C. Catalogue of the Byzantine and Early Mediaeval Antiquities in the Dumbarton Oaks Collection. Volume One. Metalwork, Ceramics, Glass, Glyptics, Painting. Washington, D.C., 1962.
- Rouche, M. "Le combat des saintes anges et des démons: La victoire de Saint Michel." In Santi e demoni nell'alto medioevo occidentale (secoli v–xi), Settimane vol. 26, I:533–71. Spoleto, 1989.
- Rowland, C. The Open Heaven. A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity. New York, 1982.
- Ruggieri, V. Byzantine Religious Architecture (582–867): Its History and Structural Elements. Orientalia christiana analecta, vol. 237. Rome, 1991.
- Sansterre, J.-M. "La parole, le texte et l'image selon les auteurs byzantins des époques iconoclastes et posticonoclastes." In Testo e immagine nell'alto medioevo, Settimane vol. 41, I:197–243. Spoleto, 1994.
- Saradi-Mendelovici, H. "Christian Attitudes toward Pagan Monuments in Late Antiquity and Their Legacy in Later Byzantine Centuries." DOP 44(1990): 47–61.
- Saxer, V. "Jalons pour servir à l'histoire du culte de l'archange Saint Michel en orient jusqu'à l'iconoclasme." In Noscere sancta. Miscellanea in memoria di Agostino Amore, 357–426. Rome, 1985.

- Scarpat, G. Parrësia. Storia del termine e delle sue traduzioni in latino. Brescia, 1963.
- Schmit, F.I. Die Koimesis-Kirche von Nikaia, das Bauwerk und die Mosaiken. Berlin and Leipzig, 1927.
- Schönborn, C. von. L'icône du Christ. Fondements théologiques élaborées entre le Ier et le IIer Concile de Nicée (325–787). Fribourg, 1976.
- Ševčenko, I. "Hagiography of the Iconoclast Period." In Iconoclasm. Papers given at the Ninth Spring Symposium of Byzantine Studies, University of Birmingham, March 1975, ed. A. Bryer and J. Herrin, 113–31. Birmingham, 1977.
- Shapiro, G. "Pipe Dreams: Eternal Recurrence and Simulacrum in Foucault's Ekphrasis of Magritte." Word & Image 13(1997):69–76.
- Shepherd, A.R.R. "Pagan Cults of Angels in Roman Asia Minor." Talanta 12/13 (1980/1):77–101.
- Simon, M. Verus Israel. Étude sur la relation entre chrétiens et juifs dans l'empire romain (135–425). Paris, 1948.
- Simson, O. von. Sacred Fortress. Byzantine Art and Statecraft in Ravenna. 2d ed. Chicago, 1976.
- Smith, R.R.R. "Myth and Allegory in the Sebasteion." Aphrodisias Papers. Recent Work on Architecture and Sculpture. Ed. C. Rouché and K.T. Erim, 89–100. Ann Arbor, 1990.
- Snipes, K. "An Unedited Treatise of Michael Psellos on the Iconography of Angels and on the Religious Festivals Celebrated on Each Day of the Week." In Gonimos. Neoplatonic and Byzantine Studies Presented to Leendert G. Westerlink at 75, ed. J. Duffy and J. Peradotto, 189–205. Buffalo, 1988.
- Sokolowski, F. "Sur le culte d'angelos dans le paganisme grec et romain." HTR 53(1960):225–29.
- Sörries, R. Die Bilder der Orthodoxen im Kampf gegen den Arianismus. Eine Apologie der orthodoxen Christologie und Trinitätslehre gegenüber der arianischen Häresie dargestellt an den ravenattischen Mosaiken und Bildern des 6. Jahrhunderts. Bern, 1983.
- Soteriou, M. "Ἀμύπρσωπος εἰκὼν τοῦ Βυζαντινοῦ Μουσείου Ἀθηνῶν ἐκ τοῦ Ἡπειροῦ." DChAE 4(1959):135–43.
- . "Παλαιολογείος εἰκὼν τοῦ Ἀρχαγγελοῦ Μιχαήλ." DChAE 1(1959):80–86.
- Spain, S. "'The Promised Blessing': The Iconography of the Mosaics of S. Maria Maggiore." ArtB 61(1979):518–40.
- Sparks, B.D. The Sanctus in the Eucharistic Prayer. Cambridge, 1991.
- Speck, P. "Ein Bild des Erzengels Michael in Ephesos (Anthologia Palatina I,36)." In Varia II, ΠΟΙΚΙΛΑ ΒΥΖΑΝΤΙΝΑ, vol. 6, 355–62. Bonn, 1987.
- . Ich bin's nicht, Kaiser Konstantin ist es gewesen. Die Legenden vom Einfluß des Teufels, des Juden und des Moslem auf den Ikonoklasmus. ΠΟΙΚΙΛΑ ΒΥΖΑΝΤΙΝΑ, vol. 10. Bonn, 1990.
- Stein, D. Der Beginn des byzantinischen Bilderstreits und seine Entwicklung bis in der 40er Jahre des 8. Jahrhunderts. Munich, 1980.

- Struever, N. "Fables of Power." Representations 4(1983):108–27.
- Stuhlfauth, G. Die Engel in der altchristlichen Kunst. Freiburg, 1897.
- Talbot Rice, D., et al. The Church of Haghia Sophia at Trebizond. Edinburgh, 1968.
- Testini, P. Archeologia cristiana. Nozioni generali dalle origini alla fine del sec. VI. Rome, 1958.
- Thierry, N. Haut moyen-âge en Cappadoce. Les églises de la région de Çavuşin. Paris, 1983.
- Thümmel, H. Bilderlehre und Bilderstreit. Arbeiten zur Auseinandersetzung über die Ikone und ihre Begründung vornehmlich im 8. und 9. Jahrhundert. Würzburg, 1991.
- . Die Frühgeschichte der ostkirchlichen Bilderlehre. Texte und Untersuchungen zur Zeit vor dem Bilderstreit. TU vol. 139. Berlin, 1992.
- Thunberg, L. "Early Christian Interpretations of the Three Angels in Gen. 18." Studia Patristica 8(1966):560–70.
- Travis, J. In Defense of the Faith. The Theology of Patriarch Nikephoros of Constantinople. Brookline, Mass., 1984.
- Trombley, F.R. Hellenic Religion and Christianization c. 370–529. 2d ed. 2 vols. Leiden, New York and Köln, 1995.
- Tronzo, W. The Via Latina Catacomb. Imitation and Discontinuity in Fourth-Century Roman Painting. University Park and London, 1986.
- Tsirpanlis, C.N. "Some Reflections on Philoxenos' Christology." Greek Orthodox Theological Review 25(1980):152–62.
- Turmel, J. "L'angélogologie depuis le faux Denys l'Aréopagite." Révue d'histoire et de littérature religieuse 4(1899):289–309, 414–34, 536–62.
- . "Histoire de l'angélogologie des temps apostoliques à la fin du Ve siècle." Révue d'histoire et de littérature religieuse 3(1898):289–308, 407–34, 533–52.
- Turner, V., and M. Turner. Image and Pilgrimage in Christian Culture. Anthropological Perspectives. New York, 1978.
- Underwood, P.A. "The Evidence of Restorations in the Sanctuary Mosaics of the Church of the Dormition at Nicaea." DOP 13(1959):235–44.
- Vessey, M. "The Demise of the Christian Writer and the Remaking of 'Late Antiquity': From H.-I. Marrou's Saint Augustine (1938) to Peter Brown's Holy Man (1983)." J ECS 6(1998):377–411.
- Viller, M. "Aux sources de la spiritualité de S. Maxime: les oeuvres d'Evagre le Pontique." Revue d'ascétique et de mystique 11(1930):156–84, 239–68, 331–36.
- Volbach, W.F. Early Christian Art. Trans. C. Ligota. New York, 1961.
- . Elfenbeinarbeiten der Spätantike und des frühen Mittelalters. 3d ed. Mainz am Rhein, 1976.
- Volk, R. Der medizinische Inhalt der Schriften des Michael Psellos. Munich, 1990.
- Vryonis, S., Jr. The Decline of Medieval Hellenism in Asia Minor and the Process of Islamization from the Eleventh through the Fifteenth Century. Berkeley, 1971.

- . "The Panegyris of the Byzantine Saint: A Study in the Nature of a Medieval Institution, Its Origins and Fate." In The Byzantine Saint, ed. S. Hackel, 196–226. London, 1981.
- Walter, J. "St. Demetrius: The Myroblytos of Thessalonika." Eastern Churches Review 5(1973):157–78. [= C. Walter. Studies in Byzantine Iconography. London, 1977. Item V.]
- Weitzmann, K. "The Classical in Byzantine Art as a Mode of Individual Expression." In Byzantine Art. An European Art. Lectures, 149–77. Athens, 1966. [= K. Weitzmann, Studies in Classical and Byzantine Manuscript Illumination, ed. H. L. Kessler, 151–75. Chicago, 1971.]
- . "The Genesis Mosaics of San Marco and the Cotton Genesis Miniatures." In O. Demus, The Mosaics of San Marco. Part 2: The Thirteenth Century. Volume One: Text, 105–42. Chicago and London, 1984.
- . The Miniatures of the Sacra Parallela. Parisinus graecus 923. Princeton, 1979.
- . The Monastery of Saint Catherine at Mount Sinai. The Icons. Volume One: From the Sixth to the Tenth Century. Princeton, 1976.
- . "Observations on the Cotton Genesis Fragments." In Late Classical and Mediaeval Studies in Honor of Albert Mathias Friend, Jr., ed. K. Weitzmann et al., 112–31. Princeton, 1955.
- Weitzmann, K., and G. Galavaris. The Monastery of Saint Catherine at Mount Sinai. The Illuminated Greek Manuscripts. Volume One: From the Ninth to the Eleventh Century. Princeton, 1990.
- Weitzmann, K., and H. L. Kessler. The Cotton Genesis. British Museum Codex Cotton Otho B.VI. Princeton, 1986.
- . The Frescoes of the Dura Europos Synagogue and Christian Art. Washington, D.C., 1990.
- Werner, M. "On the Origin of Zoanthropomorphic Evangelist Symbols: The Early Christian Background." Studies in Iconography 10(1984–1986):1–35.
- . "On the Origin of Zoanthropomorphic Evangelist Symbols: The Early Medieval and Later Coptic, Nubian, Ethiopian and Latin Evidence." Studies in Iconography 13(1989–1990):1–47.
- Wharton Epstein, A. "The Problem of Provincialism: Byzantine Monasteries in Cappadocia and Monks in South Italy." Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes 42(1979):28–46.
- . Tokali Kilise. Tenth-century Metropolitan Art in Byzantine Cappadocia. Washington, D.C., 1986.
- Wiegand, E. Review of T. Schmit, Die Koimesis-Kirche von Nikaia, das Bauwerk und die Mosaiken, Berlin and Leipzig, 1927. Deutsche Literaturzeitung 53(1927): 2601–11.
- . "Zur Monogramminschrift der Theotokos-(Koimesis)Kirche von Nicaea." B 6(1931):411–20.

- Williams, A. L. "The Cult of the Angels at Colossae." JTS 10(1909):413–38.
- Wilsdorf, H. "Zur Staurothek vom Limburg." BF 18(1992):197–208.
- Wolska-Conus, W. "Stéphanos d'Athènes et Stéphanos d'Alexandrie. Essai d'identification et de biographie." REB 47(1989):5–89.
- Wulff, O. Altchristliche und byzantinische Kunst. Munich, 1914.
- . Cherubim, Throne und Seraphim. Ikonographie der ersten Engelshierarchie in der christlichen Kunst. Altenburg, 1894.

INDEX

- Abraham, 30, 88, 139–40, 153; and Philoxenia, 36–41, 58
Adversus Constantinum Caballinum, 104n42, 105n43
 Agathias, 62, 95–98, 99, 100, 102, 125, 192, 201, 202, 205
 Alahan (Seleucia), 45
 Alexandria, 30, 32
 Anastasius Sinaïtes, 100
 Anastos, Milton, 140
 “angelic life,” 68, 126, 147, 149 angelolatry, 8–11, 60, 75, 80, 127, 137–40, 153, 154 angelology, heretical, 112
 angels: anthropomorphism of, 93, 187–93; changeability of, 16, 17, 19, 21, 28, 107–8, 113–14, 116–8, 184–5; devotion to, Christian, 4, 6–11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 126; —, Coptic, 7; —, Jewish, 6, 8; —, pagan, 6, 8, 9–10; elemental, 6–8, 9, 11, 90, 102, 106, 107, 108, 109, 113, 116, 117, 128, 129, 144, 146, 149, 157, 158, 159, 163, 164, 167, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 192, 193, 195–96; epigrams on, 60, 61–62, 95–103, 122, 196, 201–202, 204–06; epiphany of, 1, 5, 16, 56, 58, 73, 77, 78, 79, 88, 149–52, 155–56, 157–93; as gods, 15, 59, 68, 70, 79, 138, 168n32, 195; hagiographies of, 141–56, 157–93; and healing, 142, 145–46, 154, 155–56, 178, 179; hierarchy of, 4–5, 11, 41, 112–13, 120; iconography of (see iconography of angels); and liturgy, 47–49; materiality of, 9698, 102–3, 107–8; nature of, 1–6, 11, 16, 17, 19, 20, 58, 107–9, 112–13, 116, 159–60; and relics, 17, 77, 119, 120, 123, 142, 165, 167, 168–69, 175–78, 192–93; in scripture, 1–2, 3–4, 5, 6, 16, 17, 19, 20, 23, 35, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 56, 139, 140, 180, 181, 182, 184, 191, 193; symbolic images of, 90–125; symbolic interpretation of, 91–99, 100, 103, 104, 105, 113–19, 121, 124, 125, 130, 131, 136–39, 141, 180, 192
 Antinoë, 32
 Apatheia, 69, 94
 Aphrodisias, Imperial Sebasteion, 32; Theatre, 96n24
 Archanes (Crete), Church of the Archangels, 151n67 Archippus, 144, 146–52, 153, 154, 158, 160, 180–82, 186, 195

- Ark of the Covenant, 43, 99, 111–12, 129–31
- Athanasius of Alexandria, 36n44, 142
- Augustine, 30, 31
- Auzépy, Marie-France, 143, 150, 151, 152
- Basil of Caesarea, 58n74, 97n26, 140–41, 189
- Bawit, Chapel XXVI, 46n59
- Belting, Hans, 16
- Bezaleel, 111
- Brock, Sebastian, 78
- Cameron, Averil, 13, 14, 197
- Carthage, Council of (ca. 400?), 175n58
- Chairetopa, 161, 163
- cherubim, 4, 19, 35, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 91, 99, 111–13, 114, 119–20, 127, 129–31; confusion with seraphim, 48
- Chonae, 8, 9–10, 11, 15, 53, 143–51, 154, 156, 157–93, 195, 206n1; icon of miracle of, 53–55, 154, 180; pilgrimage to, 178–79
- Christian Topography*. See ‘Cosmas Indicopleustes’
- Christology, 66–67n12, 106–7, 112
- Chrysippus, 3–4, 16, 148n57
- Chrysostom, John, 4n20, 23–24, 35–36, 48
- circumscription, 106–110, 113
- Clark, Elizabeth, 70
- Clement of Alexandria, 2n5, 31n32
- Colossae, 8–10, 163. See also Chonae
- Colossians, Epistle to, 8, 9, 43, 75, 147
- Constantine V, 14, 80, 133–36
- Constantine VI, 14
- Constantine Cephalas, 96
- Constantinople (Istanbul): Chalke Gate, 13, 87n57; Council of Hagia Sophia (815), 64n5; Eusebios, Church of the Archangel Michael, 154–56, 186–87; Hagia Sophia, 49n65, 52; Oxeia, Church of St. John the Baptist, 142, 188; Sosthenium, 96
- Constitutiones Apostolicae*, 4n20
- Contra Iudaeos literature, 49, 83–84n47, 100–101, 110–11, 127–28, 130, 197
- I Corinthians, 149–50
- Cornelius the Centurion, 189
- Cosmas and Damian, Sts., 189, 190
- ‘Cosmas Indicopleustes,’ 20–21, 45–46n57, 52–53
- Cotton Genesis, 30–33, 38, 76
- Council of Trullo (692), 102n39
- cross, and Iconoclasm, 85, 86–87, 152
- Cyril of Alexandria, 176
- Cyril of Jerusalem, 4n20
- Cyrus and John, Sts., 176–77, 190–91
- Dagron, Gilbert, 176, 189, 190
- D’Alverny, Marie-Thérèse, 30, 31
- Damaskenos Stoudite, 145n47, 151n67
- Daniel, Book of, 35, 148–49n57, 152, 180, 182, 191
- David-Garedja, Georgia, Monastery of Dodo, 46n59
- Deuteronomy, 3–4
- Diakrinomenus, John, 72n27
- dominations, 5, 19, 42, 43, 82
- Egratius, 189–90
- Eikonismos, 122n85
- Elijah, 167
- Enoch, Book of, 6
- Epiphaniides, 128
- Epiphanius of Salamis, 61–62, 64–67, 69, 74, 78–81, 90, 128–33, 135, 136, 137–39, 153, 203
- equivocation, 119–25, 127
- Eusebius of Caesarea, 2n6, 101n35
- Evagrius Ponticus, 69–70, 74, 89, 94–95
- Exodus, 20, 35, 110, 111, 119, 129–31, 169, 181, 184
- Ezekiel, 1, 35, 43, 46, 91
- Faustus Rhegiensis, 109–10n51
- Foucault, Michel, 123–24
- Gabriel, Archangel, 76, 145n46
- Gargano, Monte, 157, 165; miracle of Michael at, 165–71, 178, 184, 186
- Gennadius of Marseilles, 109n51
- Ginzburg, Carlo, 124
- Gregory I (Pope), 184n79
- Gregory of Nazianzus, 3, 48n63

Gregory of Nyssa, 3, 181n71

Güllü Dere, 48n63, 154n74

Hebrews, Epistle to, 1, 131

Heraclius, 172

Hiereia, Iconoclastic council of (754),

64n5, 81, 85, 105, 140

Hierotheus, 5

Holy Spirit, symbolic representation of, 71, 103n41

Hyacinthus, 43n55

Hypatius of Ephesus, 98–100, 102

Iconoclasm, 13–14, 17, 61, 62–65, 74–75, 80–88, 89, 90, 96, 102, 103, 104, 106, 110, 120, 126–28, 130–41, 143, 150, 151, 153, 154, 96, 197, 201

iconoclasts, 15, 59, 60, 67, 68, 80–88, 89, 100, 102, 103, 105, 106, 110, 114, 120, 122, 126–28, 130–41, 151, 153, 154

iconography of angels, 16–59, 63, 76–77, 96, 198–205; as anthropomorphic (without wings), 21–23, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40n51, 41, 46, 58; as bearded, 23; and birds, 28n25; Christian invention, 33–36; as cloud, 58; as color, 58; as days, 30, 31, 32, 33; literal interpretation of, 61–88; as nikes, 25, 26, 28–29n27; pagan models, 25–33, 34, 36, 40, 59, 60, 126; as pagan princes, 76–77; pagan style, 49, 50, 53; as personifications, 26, 28, 29n27, 30, 33n38, 59; Philoxenia, 30, 36–41, 58; as psyches, 30n28, 31; as seasons, 28, 29; style as, 49–55; symbolic interpretation of, 19, 21, 36, 37, 40, 41, 58, 61–62, 77, 88; as winged men, 16, 18, 19–20, 23–25, 26–27, 30, 33, 35, 36, 37–38, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 56, 58, 60, 96, 97, 124, 180, 187

iconophiles, 14, 62, 64, 65, 74, 90, 91, 95, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103–41, 143, 152, 153, 154, 156 idolatry, 10, 11, 15, 60, 63, 68, 79, 80, 86, 89, 100, 112, 127, 128, 130, 131, 132, 134, 137–40, 151, 152, 153, 154

Ignatius the Deacon, 130, 134n17

Ihm, Christa, 46

images: in Christian history, 132–33, 136; consubstantial, 137; of emperor, 135; ethical, 69, 73n30, 78, 86, 138–41, 153–54, 156; eucharist as, 87–88, 137n24; and healing, 142–56; likeness in, 16, 19, 66, 113–25, 135–36; and prototype, 66–67, 114–25, 127, 131–35; and relics, 142; and text, 84–86, 121–25, 131–32; in worship, 11, 14–16, 64, 67, 99–100, 104, 125, 126–42, 154–55, 196–97

Irene (empress), 14

Irenaeus, 33–35n40

Irene of Chrysobalanton, 189

Isaiah, 1, 5, 35, 44, 46, 53, 86, 152, 184

James of Edessa, 75–76n34

John of Damascus, 3, 41n53, 105–15, 113–16, 118

John of Gabala, 74–75, 76

John of Gaza, 102–3

John of Thessalonike, 15, 194, 195, 196

John the Grammarian, 70n20

Joshua, 152, 182, 191

Jubilees, Book of, 6

Justin Martyr, 36n44

Kitzinger, Ernst, 50

Laodicea, 147; Council of, 10, 15, 70, 75

Leo I (pope), 32n33

Leo III (emperor), 13, 14

Leontius of Neapolis, 110

Leo of Catania, 152, 154, 156

Leuken, Wilhelm, 10

Limburg, Reliquary of the True Cross, 46n57

Macarius Magnes, 15, 59, 67–70, 74, 78, 79, 80, 88, 101–2, 136–40, 153, 196

Macarius the Great, 3, 194

Maccabees, Book of, 186n83

Magritte, René, 123–24

Maguire, Henry, 52

Malachi, 86

Mango, Cyril, 187

Manichaeans, 130

Marini Clarelli, Maria, 31, 32

- Matthew, Gospel of, 191, 192
Mavropus, John, 201–3
Mayragometsi, John, 100n34, 110n53
Meleager, 96
Menologium of Basil II, 154n74, 163, 164
Methodius of Olympus, 2–3, 41, 90
Metrophanes of Smyrna, 145n46
Michael III, 14, 155
Michael, Archangel, 3–4, 6, 7–11, 15, 17, 18, 53, 54, 62, 76, 77, 95, 96–98, 143–56,
157–93, 201–3; and fire, 8, 172–74, 181,
183; icons of, 18, 53–55, 198–200, 203, 204, 205
Michael Choniates, 179n69
Michael of Stoudios, 125n93, 155n75
Miracles of St. Artemius, 142, 143, 154, 188, 190
Monophysitism, 63, 71, 74 Moscow, Chludov Psalter (Historical Museum cod. 139), 82–83n47, 139n30
Moses, 110–11, 152, 165, 169, 181, 182, 184
Narration of the Miracle Accomplished at Chonae by the Archangel Michael, 143–52, 158, 161–65, 178
Naukratius, 82n46, 121
Nicaea (Iznik), Church of the Dormition, 42–43, 64, 82–88, 104, 120–24; Second Council of, 14, 71, 72, 74, 75n33, 105n43, 194, 195
Nicephorus, patriarch, 64n5, 67, 69, 80,
81, 105, 105n43, 112–13, 116–20, 128–33,
135, 136, 137–40, 153, 174
Nicetas Stethatos, 110n51
Nilus of Ankyra, 189
Nilus Scholasticus, 98, 100, 125, 205
Origen, 67
Pachymeres, George, 3n13
Palaiochorio (Cyprus), Church of Sts. Cos-mas and Damian, 151n67
Pantaleon, 7, 143n41, 145n47, 154–56, 160, 185–86
parrësia, 144, 145, 146, 149, 159
Philes, Manuel, 205–6
Philo, 31n32
Philoxenus of Mabbug, 71–74, 78, 79,
103n41, 145
Photius, 105, 136n20
Porphyry, 100–102, 195
powers, 5, 19, 41, 42, 43, 82, 120, 121 principalities, 5, 19, 41, 42, 43, 82 Procopius of Gaza, 36–37n44
psalms, 1, 3, 85, 86, 149
Psellus, Michael, 7–8, 157, 159–60,
171–75, 179n70, 184, 188, 203–4
Pseudo-Athanasius, 2n6, 100, 142
Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, 3, 4–6, 16, 49, 87, 90–95, 99, 102, 105, 115, 116,
118, 125, 177, 192, 205
Qumran, 150n61
Ramsey, William, 161
Raphael, Archangel, 17
Ravenna, S. Apollinare in Classe, 76; S.
Apollinare Nuovo, 58n73; S. Vitale, 28–30, 33, 38–40, 76
retro-motivation, 164–65, 179, 191
Revelation, Book of, 35, 46, 86
Rojdestvensky, Olga, 185
Rome, Catacomb of Priscilla, 21–23; Sta.
Maria Antiqua, 47n59; Sta. Maria Maggiore, 37; Sta. Pudenziana, 33; Via Latina Catacomb, 20, 37
Sacra Parallela (B.N. Gr. 923), 139–40n30
Second Commandment, 110, 129–30
seraphim, 4, 5, 19, 35, 43, 44, 46–49, 53, 86; confusion with cherubim, 48
Severus of Antioch, 60, 71, 74–77, 78, 81, 90, 103n41, 176, 196, 203
sight, importance for iconophiles, 104–5, 125
Sissinius, 143n41, 153n73, 154, 181, 182, 183n77
Sophronius, 176–77
Stephen of Bostra, 110
Stephen the Deacon, 133
Stephen the Younger, 133–35
Stuhlfauth, Georg, 33

Sykeon (Galatia), 171
 Symeon Metaphrastes, 143n41, 154, 158, 164, 183
 Symeon of Thessalonike, 110n51, 203–4n14

 Tarasius, 75n33, 134n17
 Temple of Solomon, 43, 131
 Tertullian, 35
 tetramorph, 35, 43, 46
 Thecla, 176
 Theodora, Mother of Michael III, 14, 155
 Theodore Lector/Anagnostes, 71
 Theodore of Stoudios, 87, 105, 113n59, 121,
 122, 135–36n20
 Theodore of Sykeon, 174–75, 189n96
 Theodore Psalter (B. L. Add. 19.352),
 149n58
 Theodoret of Cyrrhus, 10, 15, 59, 70, 75
 Theodotus, 2
 Theophanes the Confessor, 71
 Theophilus (patriarch) 70
 Thessalonike, H. David, 46; H.
 Demetrius, 58n73

Tobias, 17 thrones, 4, 19
 Tokali Kilise, 47n59
 Trebizond, H. Sophia, 44n56
 Trisagion, 47–48, 85, 86
 Tumba, Mt. (Normandy), 170
 Turner, Victor and Mary, 178

 Venice, S. Marco, 31n33
 Vienna Genesis, 40n51, 43 virtues, 4, 19, 42, 43, 82

 Weitzmann, Kurt, 53
 wings, meaning of, 23–25, 28, 35–36, 40, 58, 60, 63; on Christ, 24; on John the Baptist, 24; on the Virgin Mary, 24n19

 Xanthopoulos, Nicephorus Kallistus, 204–5, 206

 Zacharias, 1

discriminately combined. The book was translated into Greek and from Greek into Ethiopic. Only part of the Greek translation is extant. The Book of Enoch is quoted in the Epistle of Jude (14–15) in the New Testament and its influence has been discovered at many other points in the New Testament and in the Church Fathers (cf. Charles, Apocrypha, 2 (1913), 180–5). Of the Greek translation, chapters 1–32 were found in Egypt in 1886–7 and were published by Bouriant in 1892. In 1930 the University of Michigan purchased this manuscript, as well as the manuscript of chapters 97:6–104, 106–107, which were published by Bonner (The Last Chapters of Enoch in Greek, 1937). The most complete Ethiopic version was published by R.H. Charles as The Ethiopic Version of the Book of Enoch edited from 23 Mss. (1906). There are the following translations of the Ethiopic text into modern languages: English, Charles, Apocrypha, 2 (1913), 163–28; German, G. Beer, in: E. Kautsch (ed.), Apocryphen und Pseudepigraphen, 2 (1900), 236–310; French, F. Martin, Le livre d'Hénoch (1906); Hebrew, A. Kahana, Ha-Sefarim ha-Hizonim, 1 (1936), 19–101.

BIBLIOGRAPHY: J. Flemming and L. Radermacher, Das Buch Henoch (1901); H.B. Swete, Old Testament in Greek (1912⁴), 789–809; P. Volz, Eschatologie der juedischen Gemeinde im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter (1934), 16–25; H.H. Rowley, Relevance of Apocalyptic (1947), 54–60, incl. bibl.; idem, Jewish Apocalyptic and the Dead Sea Scrolls (1957); J.T. Milik, in: Biblica, 32 (1951), 393–400; idem, in: RB, 65 (1958), 70–77; N. Avigad and Y. Yadin, Megillah Hizonit li-Vereshit (1957), 13–15, 31, 34 (Heb. section); Y.M. Grintz, Perakim be-Toledot Bayit Sheni (1969), 105–42.

[Yehoshua M. Grintz]

ENOCH, SLAVONIC BOOK OF (known as 11 Enoch; abbr. 11 En.; also entitled the Book of the Secrets of Enoch, or several variations on this), apocryphal work translated in the tenth or 11th century from Greek into Slavonic. The dating is deduced from the evidence of certain linguistic peculiarities. The first complete edition of the work was published by A. Popov in 1880. It was edited and studied by M. Sokolov (1899 and 1910) who made a special examination of the quotations from Old Russian literature it contains. An edition and translation of the work into French was made by A. Vaillant (1952). There are considerable differences between the two recensions (one long and one short) found in the manuscripts. Vaillant and other scholars maintain that the short recension is closer to the original text than the long one, which in their view contains many interpolations made by two revisers. Nonetheless the long recension seems to contain some material belonging to the original text omitted from the short recension.

The Slavonic Book of Enoch begins with *Enoch's account of his journey on the wings of angels through the seven heavens. This account, which contains astronomical information and descriptions of various classes of obedient and rebellious angels, recalls, despite considerable differences in detail, similar passages in the Ethiopic Book of *Enoch. In the seventh heaven Enoch sees from afar the Lord, who speaks to him and orders the angel Vreveil to describe to him the workings of heaven and earth, as well as disquisitions on various other topics, and commands Enoch to record these in 360 books. This is followed by an account of the creation given to Enoch which is succeeded in turn by Enoch's exhortations to his sons. These exhortations include moral admonitions, injunctions concerning sacrifices, a description of what Enoch has seen in the heavens, and an eschatology. The tale continues with Enoch being carried away by angels. His son Methuselah is ordained as a priest, offers animal sacrifices, and at the end of his life sees in a vision the Lord, who announces the deluge and commands him to choose Nir, the second son of Lamech (i.e., Noah's brother), as his successor in the priestly office. After the death of Methuselah, Nir offers animal sacrifices. After more than 200 years, when people have changed for the worse, Sophonim, Nir's wife, becomes pregnant in her old age. Rebuked by her husband who believes her unfaithful, she dies. A child comes forth from her corpse. He has the distinctive signs of priesthood and is named Melchizedek. When the time of the deluge approaches, the Lord informs Nir that Melchizedek will be taken to Eden by the archangel Michael and will be forever the priest of priests, or, as Nir puts it, the head of the priests of the "other" people (those who will live after the deluge).

In the long recension the Lord refers to the 13 priests headed by Melchizedek's son Nir who precede the Melchizedek known from the Bible and to 12 priests who follow the second Melchizedek; after them will come the great high priest, the Word of God, who created all things visible and invisible. This allusion to the Christian concept of the Christ has no counterpart in the short recension. The latter, which ends with the removal of the first Melchizedek, is possibly cut short, and in this case the long recension may have preserved some original materials.

Various hypotheses have been put forward on the origin of the Slavonic Book of Enoch and the influences discernible in it. There are unmistakable echoes of Christian doctrine in the long recension, but only doubtful ones, or none at all, in the short. If, as seems probable, the latter text is comparatively free from interpolation, there does not appear to be any firm ground for maintaining, as Vaillant does, that the work originated in a Christian milieu. It is possible that it reflects tendencies of one or even several Jewish groups; there are many quotations from biblical texts and allusions to them and to Ben Sira. It is reasonably likely that the original work, which is more or less represented by the short recension, was an amalgam of two or more texts of differing provenance. A significant clue may be provided by the fact that in two passages – in Enoch's exhortations to his sons (Vaillant, p. 58–59) and in the account of the sacrifice offered by Methuselah (p. 66–67) – the text makes it clear that the four legs of the sacrificial animals should be tied together. A passage in the Babylonian Talmud (Tam. 31b) characterizes this way of tying sacrificial animals as a custom of the sectarians (minim). It is therefore a possibility that some portions of the Slavonic Book of Enoch, or the whole of it, reflect the views of a Jewish sect which was heterodox in rabbinic eyes. In this connection, it may be asked if the story of Melchizedek recounted in this work also belongs to the lore of this sect.

Some portions of the Slavonic Book of Enoch show Iranian influences. A passage in the exhortations of Enoch (Vaillant, p. 56–57) referring to the souls of animals accusing man certainly derives, as W. Otto noted, from the Zoroastrian scriptures; its ultimate source may be found in the Avestic Gathas (Yasna 29). The reference in the same passage to the habitation assigned to the souls of the animals in the Great Aeon may also reflect Zoroastrian views. It may be significant that these passages immediately precede the sectarian passage of sacrificial animals (Vaillant, p. 58–59). A passage in the exhortations of Enoch (p. 60–63) in which he refers to God having established the division of time in the Aeon of Creation and to these divisions (the years, months, days, and hours) disappearing in the eschatological Great Aeon is also reminiscent of Iranian doctrines on the creation of the Time of Long Dominion (which has the ordinary divisions of time) and to its merging at the end with Infinite Time (which has none). It has been claimed, with good reason, that the account of the creation the Lord gives to Enoch (Vaillant, p. 28–31) also contains some Iranian elements. The book also shows an Egyptian influence. The Greek original of the Slavonic text appears to have been full of Hebraisms; it may be supposed that the author was familiar with the language of the Septuagint. However, in at least one case (Vaillant, p. 10) a post-biblical Hebrew expression, porkei 'ol, seems to have been translated.

Chronologically the Slavonic Book of Enoch comes after the Ethiopic Book of Enoch. A terminus a quo is suggested (though not established) by the hypothesis that the Mishnah may include a reference to the sacrificial usages of a sect within which at least some portions of this text may have originated. There are some not wholly conclusive indications that the Greek original of the work may have still existed in the 13th century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Charles, Apocrypha, 2 (1913), 425–69; G.N. Bonwetsch, Die Buecher der Geheimnisse Hennochs (1922); R. Otto, Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934), 160–4; G. Scholem, Ursprung und Anfaenge der Kabbala (1962), 62ff.; D. Winston, in: History of Religions, 5 (1965), 198f.; A. Rubinstein, in: JJS, 13 (1962), 1–21.

[Shlomo Pines]

ENOCH BEN ABRAHAM (d. after 1662), talmudist and preacher. In 1649, after having served as preacher in Cracow, he left for Gnesen where he was appointed rabbi. He afterward became dayyan at Posen. As a result of the suffering and poverty caused by the Chmielnicki rebellion (1648–49), Enoch left Poland and settled at Oettingen (Germany) where he was appointed rabbi, remaining there, probably until his death. His works, published posthumously, are Vikku'ah Yosef ve-ha-Shevatim (Amsterdam, 1680), an attempt to exonerate Joseph's brothers; Reshit Bikkurim (1708), three sermons on God's existence, revelation, and reward and punishment, published as part one of his grandson Enoch b. Judah's book of the same title. The introduction mentions his commentaries on Psalms, Proverbs, and Esther; Berit Olam, homilies on the Bible; and novellae on the Tur Oraḥ Hayyim. Some of his responsa, together with those of his son Judah and his grandson, appear in Hinnukh Beit Yehudah (1708).

BIBLIOGRAPHY: J. Perles, Geschichte der Juden in Posen (1865), 82, 83; J.E. Sokolow, Gan Peraḥim (1890), 120.

[Jacob Hirsch Haberman]

ENOSH (Heb. עֲנוֹשׁ; “man, mankind”), eldest son of *Seth and the father of Kenan (Gen. 4:26; 5:6, 9; 1 Chron. 1:1–2). He lived 905 years (Gen. 5:11). It was in his day that the name YHWH was first invoked (ibid. 4:26).

In the Aggadah

The generation of Enosh is the “counsel of the ungodly” of Ps. 1:1. Enosh and his contemporaries studied and practiced the arts of divination and control of heavenly forces, thereby making way for the generation of the flood (Zohar 1:56a), and were also the first to practice idolatry (Sif. Deut. 43; see also Shab. 118b). Four revolutions in nature occurred during the days of Enosh: the mountains became barren; corpses began to putrefy; the faces of men became apelike (rather than Godlike); and demons lost their fear of men (Gen. R. 23:6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Cassuto, in: EM, 1 (1965), 450; E.A. Speiser, Genesis (1964), 37–38. IN THE AGGADAH: I. Ḥasida, Ishei ha-Tanakh (1964), 73.

EN-RIMMON (Heb. עֵין רִמּוֹן), ancient town in the northern Negev. Originally part of the territory of Simeon (Josh. 19:7), it was absorbed by the tribe of Judah in the time of David (ibid. 15:32; 1 Chron. 4:32). It was resettled by Jews in the Persian period (Neh. 11:29). In the masoretic text of the Books of Joshua and Chronicles, En-Rimmon appears as two separate cities (Ain and Rimmon) but as one city in the Book of Nehemiah and the Septuagint. In the fourth century C.E. Eusebius refers to it as a large Jewish village (Onom. 88:17; 146:25). The name may be preserved in the Arabic Khirbat Umm al-Ramāmin, about 8 mi. (13 km.) north of Beersheba.

BIBLIOGRAPHY: Abel, Geog., 2 (1938), 318; Avi-Yonah, Geog., 114. ADD. BIBLIOGRAPHY: S. Ahituv, Joshua (1995), 303.

[Michael Avi-Yonah]

ENRIQUES, PAOLO (1878–1932), Italian zoologist. Born at Leghorn, he became director of the Institute of Zoology at Padua in 1921 and remained there until his death. His zoological studies dealt with comparative physiology and protozoology. Among works of wider scope were his La teoria cellulare (1911), in which he attempted a synthesis of modern biological problems; Riproduzione nei protozoi (1924); and a series of monographs on genetics and evolution in which Enriques attempted to reconcile Mendelian heredity with the Darwinian theory of evolution.

[Mordecai L. Gabriel]

A early Christian document translated from old church Slavonic [and edited]. From a series of documents about the lives of the ancient patriarchs. Presumably from Clement's age AD 64-99.

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

1.

Adam in Paradise before the Fall had all the power of his,
all under his rule lived.

2.

And when God banished him from the Garden, and he was sitting in the Garden before the doors of paradise,
I saw a dream that Cain and Abel will be born, and of when Cain killed Abel.

3.

And the angel rebuked him tell it to Eve.

4.

And so he lived 79 years old, and was with sickness of the gut, and did not know what kind of disease he had.

5.

And all from young and old alike and marveled, and said to Eve,
"O our mother, you know all his secrets, so declare to us with what our father is so ill?"

6.

And all the people Adam, it was around 6,000 men.

7.

Eve then said,
"From the start I will tell you, my children.

8.

When God created Paradise in the East and the whole world, and created your father and me,
and entrusting to us Paradise, and all the beasts and creeping things, and birds of all birds, 9.

Adam kept the eastern and northern part,
and I kept the western and southern.

10.

And then the Lord, He gave us the commandment, saying,
"You can eat all that is in Heaven, only the fruit of one tree you shall not eat," and showed us a tree.

11.

And up to heaven, went our Lord.

12.

And we both owned the whole of Paradise, and without commanded Adam and all my animals and beasts, and reptiles do not dare neither walk nor lap or eat anything, as long as they do not solve.

13.

And then we come to the Devil, bright, like an angel, and said to us,
"What you allow God is and what is not told is in Paradise?"

14.

Adam said,
"All we are allowed to have, only one tree fruit is forbidden us, and commanded us beware of him."

15.

The devil said,
"It is a pity to me for you, for you know that if he ate of the fruit, then you would be gods."

16.

So he said, and left us.

17.

And he found a snake and brush up on her, the Serpent, and I thinking that he was an angel that came to me and showed me the fruit of that tree.

18.
And I beheld that the snake loves God more than all animals, and took of the fruit and ate it.

19.
And my heart fainted within me suddenly,
and in my part of paradise trees shed their leaves.

20.
I hid it under the tree, the fruit that was eaten, and called to Adam and said,
"Come here, Adam, and you will see a great miracle."

21.
I only opened my mouth,
and my tongue it spoke automatically, unto Adam, to eat.

22.
Adam also picked fruit from the tree that I ate.

23.
And it opened our eyes, and we saw our nakedness, and our hearts fell out with lust.

24.
And it happened,
and all the trees shed their leaves, only the tree of figs its leaves it did not shed.

25.
Adam also burst into tears and told me,
"The wife, that you and I have done!"

26.
Yet my heart is not turned back to Adam,
and we hid under the tree, which was not defoliated, and we sewed fig leaves together and made us clothes.

27.
And then heard the voice, the cry from heaven, the angel called angels, "Come all - tells the Lord, and get off to Paradise, because Adam sinned."

28.
And then the Lord came down with all his angels, and the throne and was placed in the middle of Paradise, 29.

And the Lord called a loud voice,
"Adam, Adam, where are you?"

30.
Yet Adam had disappeared.

31.
And the Lord caught us angels,
and violently beat us, and drove us out of Paradise.

32.
Adam also wept and prayed, saying,
"Have mercy on us,
may the Lord have mercy on us!"

33.
Yet it is not the Lord that had mercy on us, for the archangel Michael incessantly prayed for us before the throne.

34.
And the Lord drove us out of Paradise and rejected us.

35.
We were deprived of Eden, and Adam fell to his knees and wept.

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

36.
And it was so 15 days,
and I fainted from hunger, and said to Adam,
"Sir, get up and look for refuge, my heart was already defeated by hunger and little is my strength." 37.
Adam is, exclaiming, said,
"On the Eve, arises in the heart my desire to turn away from thee, 38.
yet not with whom I stay and fear God, and my heart does not reject you. " 39.
And we got up and went around the earth, and did not find anything edible, except thistle and grass of the field.
40.
And again we came to Paradise and crying, grieving,
and Adam said,
"Lord, give me the incense that you burn incense." 41.
Then the Lord sent him incense, and Adam took it and offered his prayer to the Lord.
42.
And then the Lord was gracious, and the archangel Joel separated the 7th part of Paradise and gave it to us.
43.
And eat the fruit [ternovnyimi] first 17 days, and then took the wheat and honey, and oil,
and ate and were satisfied.
44.
And God took cattle and animals from Paradise, and gave them to Adam.
45.
Adam also separated them and made wild and domestic,
and gave them all names and everything feeds them.
46.
And the Lord said,
"The thorns and thistle shall grow out of your labors." 47.
And Adam, he took the oxen and plowed the land.
48.
And the devil came and stood in front of the oxen, to disallow Adam to plow.
49.
"Because," said the Devil, "this is my land,
and God's land is heaven and paradise.
50.
And if you want to be in my land, go to be the land of Pasha.
51.
If you want God to be, then go to Paradise.
52.
"And Adam said,
"God the heavens and the earth with all that it inhabits." 53.
The devil did not give it to Adam to plow and said,
"Write for me with your hand, you're mine, and you're going to work on the ground." 54.
Adam said,
"Whose land shall I plow,
that I and my children live?"

55.
Yet Adam knew that the Lord must come to earth and be born of a virgin.

56.
The devil was very happy and said,
"Work for me."

57.
And he took a stone and plaque Adam wrote the handwriting, and said,
"Whose land I plow, that I and my children live."

58.
The devil took the handwriting and hid at home.

59.
I, Eve, said to Adam,
"Sir, so far, maybe the Lord will deliver us from the Devil."

60.
Adam said, "he had fasted forty days."

61.
I said,
"You, my lord, he had fast for 40 days,
and so I will fast for 44 days.

62.
He said to me,
"Come thou unto the Tigris River, and put a stone on his head,
and the other under their feet,

63.
and stand up to your neck in water, yet do not listen to anybody that nobody deceives you again."

64.
And he showed me a secret sign, and said to me,
"Do not go out of the water, until I arrive."

65.
And Adam stood up and went to the Jordan, to repent, and gather together there all the beasts and birds, and a host of angels that mourned for Adam.

66.
Adam also fell all in the Jordan River and spent so 40 days.

67.
The devil came to Eve as an angel bright, tears dropping on the ground, and said to me,

"Eve, the Lord heard your prayer, and our, angels, praying for you.

68.
God has sent me to you to withdraw from the river of Adam."

I did not believe him.

69.
Again after 3 days he came,
taking the form of Adam, and long tempted me.

70.
I did not agree to go, until I saw a sign that showed me Adam.

LIFE OF ADAM AND EVE

71.

And when Adam finished 40 days of penance for repentance, he came from the Jordan river, and I found a trace that the Devil came to me, and very scared, I was [enticed] [returned] back into the water.

72.

And when he saw me in the water, he was very happy,
Yet when he came to me, I did not believe it was my lord.

73.

And he showed me a sign,
then I believed it and went out of the river.

74.

So the Lord delivered us from the Devil,

75.

And we settled in Midian, and there gave birth to Cain and Abel, and all the days they were both looking after the cattle.

75.

One day Adam got up from his bed and said to me about his dream,
"The wife was 14 years old,
to shed blood of Abel, killed by Cain.

76.

Give me the ass, I'll go and find him."

77.

When I heard, my heart stirred, and Adam sat on a donkey, and went and found Abel murdered and did not say anything, for so the angel told him.

78.

And Adam brought Abel to a place called Reon, and buried him there.

79.

And when I gave birth to Seth, then I said to Adam,
"Sir, do not rend your heart, because once again we had a son instead of Abel, and gave his name Seth."

80.

Then Adam Eve interrupted, exclaiming,
"O Eve, be silent, I'm already weak in spirit."

81.

And Seth said,
"My lord, my father,
I will go to heaven and bring something out of Paradise, and see, and be comforted."

82.

Adam said,
"Son, how to get you in heaven?"

83.

You come close to Paradise, weeping, the Lord may allow you to take a branch from the olive tree, and who knows, maybe I will release this disease."

84.

Seth asked,
"Father, how is your illness?"

85.

Adam said,
"O son, my serious illness.

86.

When have I sinned, and thy mother, as the Lord had said,
"I will multiply your pain", Cain will be in mourning.

87.

And I will give you three of the disease,
the first disease of the womb,
the second disease will make you disgusted, (nauseous) then I'll add one more disease."

88.

And your mother said,
"It's always your husband shall rule over you, and when you will give birth, death will threaten you."

89.

Seth heard this and went to Paradise with his mother, and Eve saw there that a ferocious beast named the crocodile chased her son Seth.

90.

And stopped, said to him,
"O beast, you do not remember it, as you,
I cherished my hands?"

91.

How dare [razevat] their mouth to the image of God, how dare his teeth snap at my son!"

92.

And then the beast, responding to Eve, said,
"On the Eve of when you went wrong, when you dared to encroach on the victuals, which the Lord God does not allow you,

93.

that's why I want to eat your child."

94.

Then Eve burst into tears, and it was heard crying from the east to the west, and said,
"Oh, woe is me, my God,
now and forever I will curse all the people."

95.

Then Seth said,
"I charge you, the beast in his lair thou shall continue until Judgment Day, again encroaching on the hope of humanity.

96.

So he abides forever." Seth said, and went with his mother and wept before the Paradise, and put dust upon his head.

97.

And the angel appeared before them and asked them,
"For what do you cry out?"

98.

And Seth said,
"Lord, my father fell ill and wants of paradise goodness,
he wants to see the olive branch from the tree, so that then can subside his illness."

99.

Then the angel said to Seth,
"There is no medicine for Adam, for the days of his death and the end of his life."

100.

And he broke off from the tree,
because of which Adam was expelled from Paradise, and gave Seth three branches, and Seth has brought them to where Adam was lying, his father.

101.

And then I saw Adam and recognized them, and took them, and sighed heavily, platted a crown and put it on his head, and he saw the hand of the Lord, to take his soul.

102.

And then Eve took the censer with incense, and perfumed body of Adam, and three angels were holding candles.

103.

And Seth looked up and saw the soul of Adam, his father, standing away from the Lord, and a host of angels, praying for Adam.

104.

When it came to the archangel Michael, when all the angels were silent, and then the Lord had mercy, and put out his hand, and took the soul of Adam.

105.

And the Lord sent an angel to bury his body, and taught Seth, and took the body and taken to a place called Gerus swamp.

106.

When with a fossil the grave the archangel sealed the coffin, there was a voice from heaven, that cried, "Adam, Adam," and he answered, "Here I am, Lord."

107.

And the Lord said,
"I have declared to you that you, [lord of] the land, and the land shall go."

And the land of the Lord said,
"Thine own children of thine bring you everything."

108.

And so Adam was buried with a wreath that was on its head, Eve with the same mournful voice praying, asked,
"Good Lord, take my soul."

109.

And so for 6 days of mourning for Adam,
he bowed his head,
and poured out his soul to God.

110.

And here is buried Eve and her son Abel, and in the place of the crown of the tree grew, which was led by Adam.

INVENTER LES ANGES
DE L'ANTIQUITÉ À BYZANCE :
CONCEPTION, REPRÉSENTATION, PERCEPTION

ORIENT ET MÉDITERRANÉE (UMR 8167) / MONDE BYZANTIN
COLLÈGE DE FRANCE / INSTITUT D'ÉTUDES BYZANTINES

TRAVAUX ET MÉMOIRES

– publication annuelle paraissant en un ou deux fascicules –

Fondés par Paul LEMERLE
Continués par Gilbert DAGRON
Dirigés par Constantin ZUCKERMAN

Comité de rédaction :

Jean-Claude CHEYNET, Vincent DÉROCHE, Denis FEISSEL, Bernard FLUSIN

Comité scientifique :

Wolfram BRANDES (Francfort)	Peter SCHREINER (Cologne – Munich)
Jean-Luc FOURNET (Paris)	Werner SEIBT (Vienne)
Marlia MANGO (Oxford)	Jean-Pierre SODINI (Paris)
Brigitte MONDRAIN (Paris)

COLLÈGE DE FRANCE – CNRS CENTRE DE RECHERCHE D'HISTOIRE
ET CIVILISATION DE BYZANCE

TRAVAUX ET MÉMOIRES
25/2

INVENTER LES ANGES
DE L'ANTIQUITÉ À BYZANCE : CONCEPTION, REPRÉSENTATION, PERCEPTION

édité par

Delphine LAURITZEN

© Association des Amis du Centre d'Histoire et Civilisation de Byzance – 2021

ISBN 978-2-916716-84-8
ISSN 0577-1471

Composition et infographie :
Artyom TER-MARKOSYAN VARDANYAN

MINISTERING SPIRITS, GUARDIANS, INTERCESSORS: THE DISCOURSE OF ANGELS IN BYZANTINE LITURGICAL TEXTS*

Eirini AFENTOULIDOU

In a dialogue written by the Christian philosopher Aineas of Gaza (5th c.), Theophrastos asks his interlocutor Euxitheos why God keeps creating human beings and did not create them all at once, as he had created the angels. Euxitheos answers that God knew that human beings could easily be deceived into worshipping angels as uncreated and eternal deities:

God has foreseen that men, marvelling at the rational powers, believing them to be without beginning and un-generated, and making many Principles and innumerable gods, would introduce a disorderly democracy instead of the well-ordered monarchy.¹

It is for this reason, Euxitheos continues, that God keeps creating human beings: so that people know that there is a creator, and therefore understand that the same creator created the angels. Both the question and the answer may be somewhat hard to follow for modern readers. Yet this passage among others testifies to anxieties in Late Antique Christianity that people would give the angels honours belonging to God alone.

Devotional practices involving angels could be deemed as idolatry, superstition, or magic—as some texts hint. Let us consider a homily titled “On the deposition of the holy bodies of the saints and martyrs Procopius and Phocas in the Church called after Michael” (delivered in 514-515 by Severus, the anti-Chalcedonian patriarch of Antioch). Severus epitomises what in his opinion constitutes the Christian attitude towards angels, as opposed to what he deems as Pagan practice:

* The present article was written in the framework of the Hertha-Firnberg-Project ‘Female Identities at a Liminal State: An Analysis of Childbed Prayers in Byzantine Prayerbooks’ (Eirini Afentoulidou, FWF T 884-G25). The project is part of the Vienna Euchologia Project of the Division for Byzantine Research, Austrian Academy of Sciences (Principal Investigator: Claudia Rapp). I wish to thank Jules Gleeson (Vienna) for polishing the English text.

1. Enea di Gaza. Teofrasto, ed. critica a cura di M. E. Colonna, Napoli 1958, pp. 37, 16–38, 18. English transl.: Aeneas of Gaza, Theophrastus, with Zacharias of Mytilene, Ammonius, transl. by J. Dillon, D. Russel, and S. Gertz, London – New York, NY 2012, p. 35.

Inventer les anges de l'Antiquité à Byzance: conception, représentation, perception.
éd. par D. LAURITZEN (Travaux et mémoires 25/2), Paris 2021.

For the angels are given as guardians even to peoples and to cities and to each human being. [...] But in mistaking their rank as soldiers and stewards, let us not, therefore, through pagan error, dishonour them by honours which are beyond the limit (of what is fitting). For everything which is offered to the glory of the one who alone is God is for them a dishonour. [...] Do not suppose, therefore, that even the angels are anything other than ministers and stewards.²

Severus was not the first to associate aspects of the cult of angels with idolatry. As early as the second half of the fourth century, the council that convened in Laodicea condemned invoking angels in a canon surviving in the following form:

It is forbidden for Christians to abandon the church of God and to depart, invoke (ὀνομάζειν) angels, and hold gatherings. Therefore, if someone should be discovered taking part in this secret idolatry, let him be anathema, because he has abandoned our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and entered into idolatry.³

The contextualisation of such texts and the angelologies they adhere to or refute have been the focus of important studies.⁴ These angelologies were exemplified in ritual texts of Late Antiquity and beyond. On the one hand, angels appeared as ministering spirits at the throne of God. They also had to guard human beings at God's command. It is in this function that we encounter angels in the priestly prayers included in the liturgical books of the Byzantine Church. On the other hand, angels are ubiquitous in Late Antique amulets, whether they can be identified as Christian or not. In this devotional form angels, named or unnamed, are invoked as protective powers, often directly addressed. As Christianity gradually obscured the previous religious traditions, the texts of the amulets adopted several elements from Jewish-Christian traditions, and the liturgical discourse of the Church.⁵ Among the most common liturgical formulas found in amulets is the Trisagion,

2. Sévère d'Antioche. Les homiliae cathedrales, version syriaque de Jacques d'Édesse, éd. critique et trad. par M. Brière (PO 12.1), Paris 1919, hom. 72, pp. 71–89. English transl.: Severus of Antioch, transl. by P. Allen and R. C. T. Hayward, London – New York, NY 2004, pp. 126–35, here pp. 131–3.

3. Discipline générale antique IX, 1/2, Les canons des synodes particuliers (IV^e-IX^e s.), éd. critique par P.-P. Joannou, Grottaferrata 1962, pp. 1444–5: 'Ὅτι οὐ δεῖ Χριστιανοὺς ἐγκαταλιπεῖν τὴν δόξαν τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀγγέλους ὀνομάζειν καὶ συνάξεις ποιεῖν, ἅπερ ἀπηγόρευται. Εἴ τις οὖν εὐρεθῇ ταύτῃ τῇ κεκρυμμένῃ εἰδωλολατρεῖα σχολάζων, ἔστω ἀνάθεμα, ὅτι ἐγκατέλιπεν τὸν κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ εἰδωλολατρεῖα προσῆλθεν. English transl.: R. CLINE, Ancient Angels. Conceptualising Angeloi in the Roman Empire (RGRW 172), Leiden – Boston, MA 2011, p. 143.

4. CLINE, Ancient Angels (quoted n. 3), esp. chapter 5, 'Angels of The Spring: Variations on Local Angelos Veneration and Christian Reaction', pp. 105–36, and chapter 6, 'Angels of a Christian God: Christian Angelos Veneration in Late Roman Anatolia', p. 137–66; E. MUEHLBERGER, Angels in Ancient Christianity, Oxford 2013; G. PEERS, Subtle Bodies. Representing Angels in Byzantium (TCH 32), Berkeley, CA – Los Angeles, CA – London 2001, pp. 1–11.

5. Th. DE BRUYN, Making Amulets Christian. Artefacts, Scribes and Contexts (Oxford Early Christian Studies), Oxford 2017.

which is regarded as the hymn of the angels. Whatever the religious affiliation of those who made and wore such amulets might have been, the way angels appear could easily arouse the suspicion that they were treated as divine beings with agency of their own—precisely what Severus alleges that Pagans did.

The discourse of angels in the priestly prayers of the Byzantine Church remained remarkably distinct throughout the centuries. Yet, the border between angels as ministers and guardians, and angels as protecting powers with independent agency is not always clear. There was far from consensus on where the distinction between these two roles for angels lied. Thus, prayers transmitted in the liturgical books of the Byzantine Church sometimes appropriate elements originating from the amuletic discourse, including the discourse on angels.⁶

With the consolidation of the cult of angels and the flourishing of hymnography in Byzantine Christianity, further liturgical discourses on angels developed. Hymns dedicated to angels proliferated. The way angels are depicted in these hymns differs significantly both from the discourses of priestly prayers and amulets: angels become increasingly similar to saints by assuming a role as intercessors to God on behalf of humanity. Angels became depicted as personalised, establishing relations with human beings.

In this article I will concentrate on Byzantine liturgical texts, notably priestly prayers and hymns. I will not discuss the angelology of amulets and devotional practices labelled as “magic,” since this is examined elsewhere in this volume.⁷ However, these practices were also part of Late Antique and Byzantine Christian devotion. The liturgical texts I will discuss represent the voices within the Church that sought to draw a line between magic and “appropriate” liturgy—and their angelological discourse was developed against this background. I will demonstrate how the angelology codified by Church authorities such as the authors of the Canons of Laodicea and Severus of Antioch corresponds to the discourse on angels in Byzantine liturgical prayers. Moreover, I will trace elements in liturgical books that point to the angelology of amulets. Finally, I will examine the hagiographic traits developed in Byzantine hymnography, most notably in liturgical kanones. I leave out of my scope non-liturgical Christian discourses on angels, such as the discourse of the apocalypses, the accounts of the hour of death and the posthumous judgement with the angels as psychopomps,⁸ and also monastic discourses of the angel-like polity.

6. Ei. AFENTOULIDOU, Between Incantation and Prayer: From Late Antique Amulets to the Eucharist, StP 108, forthcoming.

7. See in particular the articles by Korshi Dosoo, Alexandros Tsakos, and Magdalena Łaptaś.

8. J. BAUN, Tales from another Byzantium. Celestial Journey and Local Community in the Medieval Greek Apokrypha, Cambridge 2007, pp. 194–5; see also Ei. AFENTOULIDOU, Space and Power in Byzantine Accounts of the Aerial Tollhouses, in Cultures of Eschatology, II, Empire, Death and Other Worlds in Christianity, Islam, and Buddhism, ed. by V. Wieser, V. Eltschinger, and J. Heiss, Berlin – Boston, MA 2020, pp. 603–15; EAD., Gesellschaftliche Vorstellungen in den byzantinischen Berichten von posthumen Zollstationen, ZRGG 67/1, 2015, pp. 17–42.

I will be more detailed as regards the priestly prayers. It has often been correctly observed that in the process of Christianisation, amulets have adopted (Judeo-) Christian elements such as invocations of angels, and liturgical formulas. This claim is valid; however, it often ignores the nuances that the discourse of angels takes in Christian liturgical texts. With this article I hope to contribute to the understanding of the dialectics of the various angelological discourses in Late Antique and Byzantine text used in the liturgy.

I. EUCHOLOGION PRAYERS

The Euchologion is the liturgical book of the Byzantine Church containing prayers and services to be used by the priest.⁹ Its contents vary from manuscript to manuscript. The earliest Euchologion manuscript, codex Vaticanus Barberini gr. 336, dates from the late eighth century.¹⁰ However, many services contained in the Euchologion developed much earlier, notably the prayers of the Eucharistic liturgy, the daily services and baptism.¹¹

A typical Euchologion may contain one or more eucharistic liturgies (mainly those attributed to John Chrysostom and Basil the Great, and the liturgy of the Presanctified), other services (baptism, matrimonial services, clerical ordinations, monastic tonsuring, funerary services, unction of the sick, blessing of waters), daily services and occasional or “small” prayers addressing various concerns in the life of the community.¹² The distinction between occasional prayers and other services is somewhat arbitrary. This is rather a methodological distinction serving scholarly study of the prayers and may differ, according to the specific set of research questions applied. Here I follow the definition of occasional prayers established by the Vienna Euchologia Project.¹³ The occasional prayers are particularly relevant in the present study, because they often deal with concerns including health and healing, birth and childbed, protection of the household, of children,

9. Byzantine Euchologia are the focus of the Vienna Euchologia Project at the Austrian Academy of Sciences (<https://www.oeaw.ac.at/byzanz/gesellschaft-und-landschaft/euchologia-projekt>). See C. RAPP – E. AFENTOULIDOU – D. GALADZA – I. NESSERIS – G. ROSSETTO – E. SCHIFFER, Byzantine Prayer Books as Sources for Social History and Daily Life, JÖB 67, 2017, pp. 173–211.

10. Euchologij Barberini Gr. 336, ed. E. Velkovska – S. Parenti, Omsk 2011³.

11. See Á. T. MIHÁLYKÓ, The Christian Liturgical Papyri: An Introduction (STAC 114), Tübingen 2019.

12. On the occasional prayers see C. RAPP, Euchologia and “Occasional Prayers,” in RAPP et al., Byzantine Prayer Books (quoted n. 9), here pp. 174–82.

13. Occasional prayers are for example prayers for a woman after giving birth, for the sealing of a child on the 8th day, for churching a child on the 40th day, for churching a woman on the 40th day, for the hair-clipping of a child, for veiling women or girls, adelphopoiesis (ritual brotherhood), exorcisms outside baptismal context, prayers for illness, commemoration of dead people or saints (kolyba) outside a funerary context, etc. Excluded are baptism, betrothal, wedding, unction of the sick, funeral, monastic tonsure, water blessing, etc. For a fuller version of this definition see the introduction to the forthcoming Checklist of Occasional Prayers in Printed Editions (COPE) by the Vienna Euchologia Project.

of crop and livestock, protection from demonic attacks, etc. These were themes for which there existed a rich tradition of ritual texts involving angels. The prayers included in the Euchologion—whether prayers for the eucharistic liturgies, for daily services, or occasional prayers—have a standardised structure. They begin by addressing God. The address is followed by the anamnesis—a relative participle or clause with a biblical event or a divine feature. A short form of the anamnesis can be a divine epithet. The subsequent epiklesis or petition consists of the main concern of the prayer. The prayer concludes with a trinitarian doxology.

1. “Together with these blessed powers:” Eucharistic liturgies

The belief that praying human beings join the angelic hosts in praising God was developed in Second Temple Judaism. The heavenly liturgy, which human beings also participated in, became prevalent in the Qumran communities.¹⁴ Christian angelology applied the idea of the presence of angels and the common praise of angels and human beings, especially to the eucharistic liturgy. In this central event in Christian worship, the atemporal praise offered to God by angels and the eucharistic liturgy offered by the Church collapse into one co-celebration.¹⁵ It is therefore hardly surprising that mentions of angels in the Euchologia are mostly concentrated in the eucharistic liturgies.

The eucharistic liturgies that prevailed in the Byzantine rite are those attributed to John Chrysostom (CHR) and Basil the Great (BAS). The development of the Byzantine liturgy and its types is a complex phenomenon, which exceeds the scope of this article.¹⁶ However, the basic structure of the eucharistic liturgies is largely consistent, so that it is possible to trace the references to angels by examining the CHR and BAS liturgies in parallel. In this section I will use the edition by Miguel Arranz, which is based on early manuscripts of the Constantinopolitan tradition.¹⁷ Although Arranz’ editorial approach has received 14. Gottesdienst und Engel im Antiken Judentum und frühen Christentum, hrsg. von J. Frey und M. R. Jost (WUNT 2/446), Tübingen 2017; D. ΚΑΙΜΑΚΙΣ, «Τὰ Ἐλοχίμ δὲν θὰ ταραχθοῦν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα...». Ζητήματα Παλαιοδιαθηκικῆς καὶ Μεσοδιαθηκικῆς Γραμματείας, Thessaloniki 2006.

15. On angels as co-celebrants in liturgical and patristic texts see P. SKALTSIS, Η Αγγελολογία της θείας Λειτουργίας, in Εισήγηση στο 13ο Διεθνές Επιστημονικό Συνέδριο Ελληνικής Βιβλικῆς Εταιρείας Βιβλικῶν Θεολόγων, 7-9 Νοεμβρίου 2013, Σέρρες, <http://katallagi.web.auth.gr>. See also A. MARINESCU, Gemeinschaft, Heiligkeit, Realpräsenz. „Angeloī“ und „Isangeloi“ in der orthodoxen Göttlichen Liturgie. Eine Studie, in Gottesdienst und Engel (quoted n. 14), pp. 291–395. Angels as co-celebrants are also depicted in Byzantine iconography of the melismos, the breaking of the consecrated bread before Holy Communion. Here, the ministering angels take the role of the deacons in Byzantine liturgy: Ch. KONSTANTINIDI, Ο Μελισμός. Οι συλλειτουργούντες ιεράρχες και οι άγγελοι – διάκονοι μπροστά στην Αγία Τράπεζα με τα Τιμία Δώρα ή τον Ευχαριστιακό Χριστό, Thessaloniki 2008, esp. pp. 117–24.

16. For the history of and a rich bibliography on the eucharistic liturgy attributed to John Chrysostom, see R. TAFT – S. PARENTI, Il grande ingresso. Edizione italiana rivista, aggiornata e ampliata. Storia della liturgia di S. Giovanni Crisostomo II (Ανάλεκτα Κρυπτοφέρρης 10), Grottaferrata 2014.

17. L'eucologio Constantinopolitano agli inizi del secolo XI, a cura di M. Arranz, Roma 1996.

a lot of well-founded criticism—mainly concentrating on the futility of reconstructing a hypothetical Euchologion that probably never existed¹⁸—his edition offers a representative sample of early texts and constitutes a workable basis for the present study. I will also cite selected texts from the edition of the earliest extant Euchologion by Elena Velkovska and Stefano Parenti.¹⁹

The first prayer to mention angels in BAS is the “prayer of the entrance”—CHR does not mention angels in this prayer. In BAS, this prayer introduces the theme of the angels as co-celebrants:

Master and Lord our God, you have established in heaven the orders and hosts of angels and archangels to minister to your glory. Grant that the holy angels may enter with us that together we may serve and glorify your goodness. For to you belong all glory etc.²⁰

The next reference to angels is in the prayer introducing the Trisagion hymn, which is then sung by the faithful. The Trisagion is among the most common liturgical phrases, widely used both in liturgy and in Christian/christianised amulets. It is based on biblical phrases attributed to liminal beings: “Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory” (Is. 6, 3) and “Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God Almighty” (Rev. 4, 8). The Trisagion appears in many variations, depending on the local liturgical tradition.²¹ The prevailing Byzantine form is: “Holy God, holy mighty, holy immortal, have mercy on us.” It does not come as a surprise that both BAS and CHR elaborate on the theme of the angels glorifying God in the prayer introducing the Trisagion. This prayer differs significantly in the two liturgies. In BAS the text begins as follows:

Holy God, you dwell among your saints. You are praised by the Seraphim with the thrice holy hymn, and glorified by the Cherubim, and worshiped by all the heavenly powers.²²

18. See V. POLIDORI, L'edizione delle fonti liturgiche greche: una questione di metodo, Bollettino della Badia Greca di Grottaferrata 10, 2014, pp. 173–97.

19. Euchol. Barber., ed. Velkovska–Parenti (quoted n. 10).

20. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), Bs:05, p. 468: Εὐχή τῆς εἰσόδου. Δέσποτα Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν/ ὁ καταστήσας ἐν οὐρανοῖς/ τάγματα καὶ στρατιάς ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀρχαγγέλων/ εἰς λειτουργίαν τῆς σῆς δόξης/ ποιήσον σὺν τῇ εἰσόδῳ ἡμῶν/ εἴσοδον ἁγίων ἀγγέλων γενέσθαι/ συλλειτουργούντων ἡμῖν/ καὶ συνδοξολογούντων τὴν σὴν ἀγαθότητα. Ὅτι πρέπει σοι πᾶσα δόξα τιμὴ καὶ προσκύνησις. When no translator is indicated, the translation is mine. If the texts are included in current practice, I also consulted the English texts used by the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of America (<https://www.goarch.org/chapel/texts>), and The Great Book of Needs. Expanded and Supplemented, transl. from Church Slavonic by St. Tikhon's Monastery, I-IV, South Canaan, PA 2000, <https://app.logos.com>.

21. S. JANERAS, Le Trisagion: une formule brève en liturgie comparée, in Acts of the International congress Comparative liturgy fifty years after Anton Baumstark (OCA 265), Rome 2001, pp. 495–562.

22. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), Bs:06, p. 469: Εὐχή τοῦ τρισαγίου. Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἅγιος ὁ ἐν ἁγίοις ἀναπανόμενος/ ὁ τρισαγία φωνῇ ὑπὸ τῶν σεραφὶμ ἀνυμνούμενος/ καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν χερουβὶμ δοξολογούμενος/ καὶ ὑπὸ πάσης ἐπουρανίου δυνάμεως προσκυνούμενος.

In CHR the prayer is missing in many early Euchologia. The Codex Barberini gr. 336 has the following version:

[God,] whom the four-faced beings glorify with unceasing voice; holy is God, who is being revered and glorified invisibly by a multitude of trembling holy angels and archangels; holy is God, who watches over the multi-eyed Cherubim with the unceasing cry and bending your ear; holy is God, who is seated on the six-winged Seraphim and accepts their victory hymn, the “Holy, holy, holy Lord Sabaoth,” as they clap their wings and sing. For you are holy, our God, whom revere Principalities, Authorities and Dominions in heaven and human beings praise in song and worship on earth.²³

The next major reference to the co-celebrating angels, and the first explicit statement of the faithful as representing angels, is the Cherubikon hymn, sung by the faithful:

We who mystically represent the Cherubim and sing the thrice-holy hymn to the life-giving Trinity, let us lay aside all worldly care to receive the king of all escorted by the angelic corps unseen.²⁴

During this hymn, the priest recites a prayer in BAS, which praises God as sitting on the throne of the Cherubim without any explicit reference to the presence of angels at the divine liturgy:

For you alone rule over all things in heaven and on earth. You are seated on the throne of the Cherubim, the Lord of the Seraphim.²⁵

The central part of the eucharistic liturgy is the anaphora, during which bread and wine are consecrated. The anaphora is structured in the pre-Sanctus, which is a thanksgiving prayer, the Sanctus hymn, which is sung by the faithful, and the post-Sanctus prayer, in which bread and wine are consecrated. There exist many types of anaphora prayer, but they all include a description of the angelic hosts at the throne of God. Anaphora prayers in BAS and CHR (as edited by Arranz) begin as follows:

23. Evchol. Barber., ed. Velkovska-Parenti (quoted n. 10), no. 25: “Ὁν τὰ τετράμορφα ζῶα ἀκαταπαύστῳ φωνῇ δοξάζουσιν· ἅγιος ὁ θεός, ὁ ὑπὸ πλήθους ἁγίων ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀρχαγγέλων ἀορασίᾳ τρεμόντων προσκυνούμενος καὶ δοξολογούμενος· ἅγιος ὁ θεός, ὁ τοῖς πολυομμάτοις Χερουβείμ τῇ ἀσιγήτῳ φωνῇ, τῷ ἀκοιμήτῳ ὄμματι ἐπιβλέπων καὶ ἐπικλίνων τὸ οὖς σου· ἅγιος ὁ θεός, ὁ τοῖς ἑξαπτερύγοις Σεραφεῖμ ἐποχοούμενος, καὶ κροτούντων τὰς ἑαυτῶν πτέρυγας καὶ τὸν ἐπινίκιον ὕμνον ὑμνούντων, τὸ Ἅγιος, ἅγιος, ἅγιος Κύριος Σαβαὼθ προσδεχόμενος. Ἅγιος γὰρ εἶ, ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν, ὃν ἀρχαὶ καὶ ἐξουσίαι, κυριότητες ἐν οὐρανῷ προσκυνοῦσιν, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς ἄνθρωποι ἀνυμνοῦσιν καὶ σέβουσιν...”

24. Greek text and English transl. in R. TAFT, The Great Entrance. A history of the transfer of gifts and other pre-anaphoral rites of the liturgy of St. John Chrysostom (OCA 200), Rome 1975, p. 54. See also TAFT – PARENTI, Il grande Ingresso (quoted n. 16), p. 156.

25. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), Bs:4, p. 473: Εὐχὴ ἣν ποιεῖ ὁ ἱερεὺς ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ τῶν χερουβικῶν λεγομένων. [...] σὺ γὰρ δεσπόζεις τῶν ἐπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων/ ὁ ἐπὶ θρόνον χερουβικῶν ἐποχοούμενος/ ὁ τῶν σεραφίμ κύριος.

BAS: For You are praised by the angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, principalities, authorities, powers, and the many eyed Cherubim. Round about you stand the Seraphim, one with six wings and the other with six wings; with two they cover their faces; with two they cover their feet; with two they fly, crying out to one another with unceasing voices and ever resounding praises, singing the victory hymn, proclaiming, crying out, and saying: Holy etc.²⁶

CHR: We thank You also for this liturgy, which deign to receive from our hands, even though thousands of archangels and tens of thousands of angels stand around you, the Cherubim and Seraphim, six-winged, many-eyed, soaring aloft upon their wings, singing the triumphal hymn, exclaiming, proclaiming, and saying: Holy etc.²⁷

The hymn introduced as sung by angels is the Sanctus:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord Sabaoth, heaven and earth are filled with your glory. Hosanna in the highest. Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.²⁸

Thus, the participants of the liturgy and the angels unite in praise. This is stated explicitly in the priestly post-Sanctus utterance:

BAS: Together with these blessed powers, loving master, we sinners also cry out and say: Truly you are holy.

CHR: Together with these blessed powers, master, who loves mankind, we also exclaim and say: Holy are you.

With the anaphora and the Sanctus, the elaboration on the co-celebration of angels and humans reaches its peak and conclusion. Angels are not mentioned in the remaining part of the liturgy.

A special form of liturgy is that of the Presanctified, in which Holy Communion consecrated on the previous Sunday is distributed.²⁹ The liturgy of the Presanctified results

26. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), Bs:6, pp. 477–9: Σὲ γὰρ αἰνοῦσιν ἄγγελοι ἀρχάγγελοι/ θρόνοι κυριότητες ἀρχαὶ ἐξουσίαι δυνάμεις/ καὶ τὰ πολυόματα χερουβὶμ/ σοὶ παρίστανται κύκλῳ τὰ σεραφὶμ/ ἕξ πτέρυγες τῷ ἐνὶ καὶ ἕξ πτέρυγες τῷ ἐνὶ/ καὶ ταῖς μὲν δυσὶ καλύπτουσιν τὰ πρόσωπα ἑαυτῶν/ ταῖς δὲ δυσὶ τοὺς πόδας/ καὶ ταῖς δυσὶ πετόμενα/ κέκραγεν ἕτερον πρὸς τὸ ἕτερον/ ἀκαταπαύστοις στόμασιν ἀσιγήτοις θεολογίαις/ τὸν ἐπινίκιον ὕμνον αἰδοντα βοῶντα/ κεκραγόντα καὶ λέγοντα· Ἄγιος. Μετὰ τούτων τῶν μακαρίων δυνάμεων, δέσποτα φιλάνθρωπε, καὶ ἡμεῖς οἱ ἁμαρτωλοὶ βοῶμεν καὶ λέγομεν· ἄγιος εἰ ὡς ἀληθῶς ... ἀγγέλους ἐπέστησας φύλακας.

27. Ibid., Bs:6, p. 503: Εὐχαριστοῦμεν σοὶ καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς λειτουργίας ταύτης/ ἥν ἐκ τῶν χειρῶν ἡμῶν δέξασθαι καταξίωσον/ καίτοι σοὶ παρεστήκεισαν/ χιλιάδες ἀρχαγγέλων/ καὶ μυριάδες ἀγγέλων/ τὰ χερουβὶμ καὶ τὰ σεραφὶμ/ ἕξαπτέρυγα πολυόματα μετάρσια πτερωτά./ Τὸν ἐπινίκιον ὕμνον αἰδοντα βοῶντα. Μετὰ τούτων καὶ ἡμεῖς τῶν δυνάμεων/ Δέσποτα φιλάνθρωπε/ βοῶμεν καὶ λέγομεν/ ἄγιος εἰ...

28. G. WINKLER, Über die Bedeutung des Sanctus-Benedictus und seine Wurzel in der Qedussa, Studi sull'Oriente Cristiano 8/1, Roma 2004, pp. 91–100.

29. S. ALEXOPOULOS, The Presanctified Liturgy in the Byzantine Rite. A Comparative Analysis of its Origins, Evolution, and Structural Components (Liturgia Condenda 21), Leuven – Paris – Walpole, MA 2009.

from the fusion of parts from daily services, notably the Vespers. Since the parts of the liturgy examined above (Trisagion, Cherubikon, Anaphora with Sanctus) are missing, references to angels are much fewer. Angels are depicted as being present at the procession, at which the presanctified bread and wine are placed onto the altar. This moment is addressed in the priestly prayer said in preparation of the procession:

Behold, His spotless body and life-giving blood are about to make their entrance at this hour, to be laid on this mystical table, invisibly attended by a multitude of the heavenly hosts.³⁰

The hymn sung at this point is equally explicit:

Now the powers of heaven minister invisibly with us. For, behold, the king of glory enters.³¹

A little later, the altar is likened to God's throne of the Cherubim:

Look upon us your undeserving servants as we stand, as at your throne of the Cherubim at this your holy altar.³²

Angels functioning not as ministering spirits but as guardians are rare in the eucharistic liturgies.³³ The anaphora prayer in BAS includes among God's benefactions to humanity: "You appointed guardian angels."³⁴ Moreover, one of the diaconal petitions (i.e. a litany of petitions said by the deacon) requests: "For an angel of peace, a faithful guide, a guardian of our souls and bodies, let us ask the Lord."³⁵ This petition marks a departure from the angelology of the heavenly liturgy. The guardian angel, for whom the faithful ask in the eucharistic liturgy, may be viewed as a widening of the liturgy to encompass everyday life. As Mateos put it: "la litanie de l'ange de paix fait le passage de la célébration liturgique à la vie ordinaire."³⁶

30. Evchol. Barber., ed. Velkovska-Parenti (quoted n. 10), no. 45: Ἰδοὺ γὰρ τὸ ἄχραντον αὐτοῦ σῶμα καὶ ζωοποιὸν αἷμα κατὰ τὴν παροῦσαν ὥραν εἰσπορευόμενα, τῇ μυστικῇ ταύτῃ προτίθεσθαι μέλλει τραπέζῃ ὑπὸ πλήθους στρατιᾶς οὐρανίου ἀοράτων δορυφορούμενα.

31. Νῦν αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν οὐρανῶν σὺν ἡμῖν ἀοράτως λατρεύουσιν· ἰδοὺ γὰρ εἰσπορεύεται ὁ βασιλεὺς τῆς δόξης. See ALEXOPOULOS, The Presanctified Liturgy (quoted n. 29), p. 228.

32. Ἐφίδε ἐφ' ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἀναξίους δούλους σου τοὺς τῷ ἁγίῳ τούτῳ θυσιαστηρίῳ ὡς τῷ χερουβικῷ σου παρισταμένους θρόνῳ. Evchol. Barber., ed. Velkovska-Parenti (quoted n. 10), no. 46.1.

33. On guardian angels see MUEHLBERGER, Angels in Ancient Christianity (quoted n. 4), esp. pp. 89–147, and J. DANIELOU, Die Sendung der Engel, transl. by W. Dittrich (Reihe Wort und Antwort 30), Salzburg 1963, pp. 89–107 (chap. VII).

34. Eucl. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), Bs:6-b, p. 480, l. 29: Ἀγγέλους ἐπέστησας φύλακας.

35. H. ENGBERDING, Zum besseren Verständnis einiger diakonaler Aufforderungen des byzantinischen Ritus, Ostkirchliche Studien 13, 1964, pp. 3–14. See also TAFT – PARENTI, Il grande ingresso (quoted n. 16), pp. 525–9.

36. J. MATEOS S. J., La célébration de la parole dans la liturgie byzantine. Étude historique (OCA 191), Rome 1971, p. 158.

The angelology of the eucharistic liturgies is consistent throughout the prayers: Angels are liturgical spirits ministering at the throne of God, and co-celebrating the liturgy with human beings. References to angels in the liturgy serve to underline the cosmic character of the liturgy and the presence of both visible and invisible world. Angels are never addressed. The addressee is exclusively God. Apart from the two mentions of a guardian angel (always dispatched by God) in the BAS anaphora and in the diaconal petitions, angels are always in plural. They are the angels, the hosts, the powers, the orders in general, or specific orders, mostly the cherubim and the seraphim. But we find no names of individual angels.

2. Daily services

Much less elaborate are the mentions of angels in the prayers recited by the priest in the daily services. Most of them consist of addressing God as “Lord of the hosts” (or similar), at the beginning of the prayer. It is the same angelology of angels as ministering spirits expressed in the prayers of the eucharistic liturgies—in a concise form. It would exceed the scope of this article to address the complex history of the daily services.³⁷ In this section I will present the mentions of angels in the prayers of the daily services as found in Arranz’ edition, without details on the history of the services.

One prayer said in the first hour begins by addressing God as “Lord of the hosts.”³⁸ A further prayer, said at the tritoekte and at the first hour, begins by “God, who sits upon the cherubim and is glorified by the seraphim.”³⁹ A prayer for the third hour begins with: “God, who established the transcendent powers to your unceasing laudation,”⁴⁰ a prayer for lucernary with: “Praised by the heavenly powers with hymns that are never silent and doxologies that never cease,”⁴¹ a prayer for the vigil service with: “God, who receives the doxologies that never sleep and never cease by the bodiless and spiritual powers in heaven”⁴² and a prayer in matins with: “It is in your constitution, Lord, that the day perseveres, and it is you that the heavenly powers praise in hymns.”⁴³

37. See R. TAFT, The Liturgy of the Hours in East and West. The Origins of the Divine Office and its Meaning for Today, Collegeville, MN 1986.

38. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), pri:6, p. 103: Εὐχὴ πρωινῆ: Ὁ Θεὸς τῶν δυνάμεων.

39. Ibid., II b 02, tri:1: Εὐχὴ ὥρας α΄ ἀντίφωνον β΄: Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπὶ τῶν χερουβὶμ καθεζόμενος/ καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν σεραφὶμ δοξαζόμενος. Ibid., pri:1, p. 100: Εὐχὴ ἀντιφώνου α΄ τῆς τριτοέκτης.

40. Ibid., ter:3, p. 106: Εὐχὴ ὥρας γ΄ ἀντίφωνον γ΄: Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ τὰς ὑπερκοσμίους κτίσας δυνάμεις/ πρὸς ἀένναόν σου δοξολογίαν.

41. Ibid., III lyc:4, pp. 67–8: Εὐχὴ ἀντιφώνου δ΄: Ὁ τοῖς ἀσιγήτοις ὕμνοις καὶ ἀπαύστοις δοξολογίαις/ ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις/ ὑπὸ τῶν ἁγίων δυνάμεων ἀνυμνούμενος.

42. Ibid., V pan:3, p. 82: Εὐχὴ ἀντιφώνου γ΄: Ὁ τὴν ἄψυκτον καὶ ἀκατάπαυστον δοξολογίαν/ ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς ἄσσωμάτων καὶ νοερῶν/ ἁγίων δυνάμεων/ δεχόμενος Θεός.

43. Ibid., ort: XIV, p. 98: Εὐχὴ πιστῶν β΄: Τῇ διατάξει σου Κύριε Κύριε/ διαμένει ἡ ἡμέρα/ καὶ σὲ ὑμνεῖ πᾶσα ἡ δύναμις τῶν οὐρανῶν.

Angels as guardians rather than ministering spirits are rare. In one prayer God is asked to:

command your holy angels to guard us in all our ways and save us from the arrow that flies by day, from the thing that walks in darkness, from the mishap and demon of noonday.⁴⁴

This is also one of the rare mentions of demons in the Euchologion in prayers other than exorcisms. Incidentally, this is a quote from Psalm LXX 90, which was one of the most common biblical texts in Christian amulets;⁴⁵ in the text of the psalm, however, God acts without the mediation of angels. Also in a prayer of the lucernary, God is asked to “Compass us about with your holy angels.”⁴⁶

3. Other services

a. “The spiritual powers tremble before you.” Baptism and the Great Water Blessing

The first text recited by the priest that mentions angels in the baptismal service is the first baptismal exorcism.⁴⁷ Unlike the typical prayers, the exorcisms address the devil, and adjure him to leave the exorcised person. The angelology of this exorcism is mainly that of the ministering spirits at the throne of God. What distinguishes it from the prayers of the eucharistic liturgies, however, is the emphasis on fear. The angels inflict fear, but in their turn, they fear and tremble before God. The more afraid the angels, all the more should the demons fear and tremble:

I forbid you by God, who has revealed the tree of life, who also has established the cherubim and the flaming sword turning round about to guard it. [...] Fear God, who sits on the cherubim and looks upon the depths, before whom tremble angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, principalities, authorities, powers, the many-eyed cherubim, and the six-winged seraphim [...] Who makes his angels spirits, and his ministers a flaming fire.⁴⁸

44. Ibid., tri:4, p. 59: Εὐχή μετὰ τὴν εἴσοδον: “Ἐντεῖλαι τοῖς ἁγίοις σου ἁγγέλοις/ τοῦ διαφυλάττειν ἡμᾶς ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς ἡμῶν/ καὶ ῥύσασθαι ἀπὸ βέλους πετομένου ἡμέρας/ ἀπὸ πράγματος ἐν σκότει διαπορευομένου/ ἀπὸ συμπτώματος καὶ δαιμονίου μεσημβρινοῦ.

45. DE BRUYN, Making Amulets Christian (quoted n. 5), pp. 166–71.

46. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), III lvc:IX: Τείχισον ἡμᾶς ἁγίοις ἁγγέλοις.

47. On the exorcisms see C. RAPP, Reflexionen der Normativität in der Praxis? Exorzismus-Gebete, in C. RAPP – E. SCHIFFER – E. AFENTOULIDOU, Das Wiener Euchologien-Projekt: Anlassgebete als Quelle zur Sozial- und Alltagsgeschichte. Drei Fallbeispiele, Mittelalter 24/2, 2019, pp. 1–33, DOI: 10.1515/mial-2019-0038, here pp. 4–13.

48. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), B2:2, p. 174–5: Ἀφορκισμὸς α': ὀρκίζω σε/ κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ δείξαντος τὸ ξύλον τῆς ζωῆς/ καὶ τάξαντος τὰ χερουβὶμ/ καὶ τὴν φλογίνην ῥομφαίαν/ τὴν στρεφομένην φρουρεῖν αὐτό/ [...] φοβήθητι τὸν Θεὸν/ τὸν καθημένον ἐπὶ τῶν χερουβὶμ/ καὶ ἐπιβλέποντα ἀβύσσους/ ὃν τρέμουν σὶν ἁγγελοὶ ἀρχάγγελοι/ θρόνοι κυριότητες ἀρχαὶ ἐξουσίαι δυνάμεις/ τὰ πολύμματα χερουβὶμ καὶ τὰ ἐξαπτέρυγα σεραφίμ/ [...] τοῦ ποιούντος τοὺς ἁγγέλους αὐτοῦ πνεύματα/ καὶ τοὺς λειτουργοὺς αὐτοῦ πῦρ φλέγον.

This is the most elaborate mention of angels in the baptismal exorcisms. The only other reference to angels in the baptismal exorcisms is in the third exorcism. Although titled “exorcism,” the text is addressed not to demons, but to God, asking him to expel the demons. God’s form of address is “Lord Sabaoth.”⁴⁹ This is noteworthy, because the Hebrew term Sabaoth is rare in the Euchologion, in which the Greek equivalent “τῶν δυνάμεων” (i.e., of the hosts) is preferred. In amulets, on the other hand, the term Sabaoth is one of the most common Judaeo-Christian elements.

Angels attending to God in fear appear also in a prayer for the blessing of the baptismal water; this prayer is included in the same form in the water blessing at the feast of Epiphany (January 6):

The spiritual powers tremble before you [...]. The angelic powers minister unto you; the choirs of archangels worship before you; the many-eyed cherubim and the six-winged seraphim, as they stand and fly around you, veil themselves with fear of your unapproachable glory [...]. Make it (sc. this water) filled with angelic might.⁵⁰

In some manuscripts, the prayer for the water blessing at Epiphany concludes with a phrase which is unique in adding a material dimension to the already discussed theme of cosmic worship:

So that through the elements and the human beings and the angels and the visible and invisible things your all-holy name is glorified.⁵¹

Only once is a guardian angel mentioned in the baptismal service, in the prayer after the catechuminate. This appearance is in conjunction with the deliverance from the demon of noonday (Psalm LXX 90) discussed above:

Join to his life an angel of light, who may deliver him from every snare of the adversary, from encounter with the evil one, from the demon of noonday, and from evil illusions.⁵²

A few more brief mentions of angels are scattered in prayers related to initiation throughout the Euchologion. The theme of the heavenly hosts at the throne of God is resumed in a prayer related to the initiation into the Byzantine Church: “the one seated 49. Ibid., B2:4, p. 177: Ἀφορκισμὸς γ': Κύριε σαβαῶθ.

50. Ibid., B5:2, p. 184–91 and T4a, p. 200–2: Σε τρέμουν σὶ νοεραὶ πᾶσαι δυνάμεις/ [...] Ἀγγελικαὶ δυνάμεις σοὶ λειτουργοῦσιν/ οἱ τῶν ἀρχαγγέλων χοροὶ σὲ προσκυνοῦσιν/ τὰ πολυόμματα χειρουβὶμ καὶ τὰ ἐξαπτέρυγα σεραφὶμ/ κύκλῳ ἐστῶτα καὶ περιπτάμενα/ φόβῳ τῆς ἀπροσίτου σου δόξης κατακαλύπτεται. [...] Ποίησον αὐτὸ (sc. τὸ ὕδωρ) [...] ἀγγελικῆς ἰσχύος πεπληρωμένον.

51. Ibid., T4b:8, p. 204: ἵνα καὶ διὰ στοιχείων/ καὶ διὰ ἀνθρώπων/ καὶ διὰ ἀγγέλων/ καὶ διὰ ὁρωμένων καὶ δι' ἀοράτων/ δοξάζηται σου τὸ πανάγιον ὄνομα.

52. Ibid., B3, p. 178: Εὐχὴ μετὰ τὸ ποιῆσαι κατηχούμενον τὸν πρὸς ὥραν βαπτιζόμενον. [...] σύζευσον τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ ἄγγελον φωτεινὸν ῥυόμενον αὐτὸν ἀπὸ πάσης ἐπιβουλῆς τοῦ ἀντικειμένου ἀπὸ δαιμονίου μεσημβρινοῦ ἀπὸ φαντασμάτων πονηρῶν.

upon the cherubim and glorified by the seraphim” is God’s epithet in a prayer for the conversion of a heretic.⁵³

A further prayer for the making of the holy myron is indirectly related to baptism, since the anointment with myron is part of the Byzantine baptismal service. According to the petition in this prayer, the anointed shall be “recognised by the holy angels and archangels, and every heavenly power.”⁵⁴ This implies that Christian initiation establishes a special connection with angels. Yet, it has a different nuance from an appointment of a guardian angel to the newly initiated. Here, the angels and archangels are in plural, and they are not expected to accompany the baptised through life. The wording rather reminds one of the discourse of the eucharistic liturgies: the heavenly hosts recognising the initiated as their co-celebrant.

b. “An Antitype of the Angels’ Service:” Prayers Related to the Altar

The idea of the ecclesiastic hierarchy as a type of heavenly hierarchy was elaborated by Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita.⁵⁵ In a prayer for the consecration of an altar the address and anamnesis (or divine epithets) outline the theology of the priests as antitype of the angels, who minister at the heavenly liturgy:

Lord of heaven and earth, who with ineffable wisdom have founded your holy church and have appointed the order of the priesthood upon the earth for an antitype of the angels’ service in heaven.⁵⁶

God is addressed as “Lord/ God of the hosts” in five further prayers: two prayers for the consecration of an altar, two for the restoration of an altar that has been moved, and one for re-opening a church after use by heretics.⁵⁷

Occasionally, the idea of antitype extends to worldly authorities. In a prayer for the designation of high officials the latter are explicitly said to imitate the angelic hosts—implying that the emperor imitates God. The prayer says of God: “You appointed in it (sc. the earthly polity) principalities and authorities imitating your angelic hosts.” In a further prayer for the same occasion, God is addressed as “God of the hosts.”⁵⁸

53. Ibid., B1III-b:1: Ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τῶν χερουβὶμ καὶ δοξαζόμενος ὑπὸ τῶν σεραφίμ.

54. Ibid., B8:1, p. 217: Ἐπιγινώσκεισθαι δὲ [...] ὑπὸ ἁγίων ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀρχαγγέλων/ καὶ ὑπὸ πάσης ἐπουρανίου δυνάμεως.

55. Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita, II, De coelesti hierarchia, De ecclesiastica hierarchia, De mystica theologia, Epistulae, kritische Ausg. von G. Heil und A. M. Ritter (PTS 67), Berlin – Boston, MA 2012², pp. 61-132.

56. Eucol. Constantinop., ed. Arranz (quoted n. 17), ded:4, p. 237: Κύριε τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῆς γῆς/ ὁ τὴν ἁγίαν σου ἐκκλησίαν ἀρρήτῳ σοφίᾳ θεμελιώσας/ καὶ ἀντίτυπον/ τῆς ἀγγελικῆς ἐν οὐρανῷ λειτουργίας/ τὴν τῆς ιεροσύνης τάξιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς συστησάμενος.

57. Ibid., o. c., ded:5, p. 232; alt:1, p. 248; alt:2, p. 250 and ape:1, p. 252: Κύριε τῶν δυνάμεων; ded:2: Ὁ Θεὸς τῶν δυνάμεων.

58. Ibid., H2, p. 338: Καὶ θέμενος ἐν αὐτῇ ἀρχὰς καὶ ἐξουσίας/ κατὰ μίμησιν τῶν ἀγγελικῶν σου δυνάμεων; o. c., H5:2, p. 343: Ὁ Θεὸς τῶν δυνάμεων.

c. “Angels Register your Vows”

Occasionally, the angels appear as registering the vows given at the baptism or monastic tonsure. The texts, in which angels exercise this function, are not prayers per se, as they are not addressed to a higher being, but exhortations addressed to the candidates. Some Euchologia transmit an exhortation to be delivered by the patriarch of Constantinople to the catechumens. Among other sources of divine authority, the patriarch asserts that:

All the powers of heaven are present here; all the angels and archangels invisibly register your utterances; now the cherubim and the seraphim lean over from heaven in order to receive your professions and bring them to the master.⁵⁹

Similarly, according to the service of monastic tonsure: “it is angels who register your vows.”⁶⁰ Angels were also declared present at the posthumous tribunal, in which the baptised or the monks will render an account of whether they fulfilled their vows. These angels appeared in similar exhortations: “the entire human nature is present and judged; myriads of angels, camps of archangels, the orders of angels,” “when we all stand before angels and humans.”⁶¹ Apart from this function of angels, the theme of the “angelic polity” appears often in the monastic services. I will not discuss this discourse in detail, as it exceeds the scope of this article.

Professing before angels and people appears as a formula in two prayers for establishing non-biological familial ties. The first is a prayer for ritual brotherhood (adelphopoiesis), a rite which has its origins in the monastic milieu:

these servants of yours want to enter into brotherhood and want to profess, before angels and people, spiritual love in everything.⁶²

The second is a prayer for filial adoption:

so that he boldly says at the terrible tribunal and impartial court before angels and people: “you gave him to me.”⁶³

59. Ibid., B4-II:K1, p. 208: Πᾶσαι αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν οὐρανῶν ἐνταῦθα πάρεσι/ πάντες οἱ ἄγγελοι καὶ ἀρχάγγελοι/ ὁράτως τὰς ὑμετέρας φωνὰς ἀπογράφονται/ τὰ χερουβὶμ καὶ τὰ σεραφὶμ/ νῦν ἐκ τῶν οὐρανῶν παρακύπτουσιν/ ἵνα δέξωνται ὑμῶν τὰς συνθήκας/ καὶ προσκομίσωσι τῷ Δεσπότη.

60. Ibid., R3:Q, p. 400: Ἄγγελοι εἰσὶ οἱ ἀπογραφόμενοι τὴν ὁμολογίαν σου.

61. Ibid., B4-II:K2, p. 210: Πᾶσα τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἡ φύσις κρινομένη παρέστηκεν/ ἀγγέλων μυριάδες ἀρχαγγέλων στρατόπεδα/ τῶν ἄνω δυνάμεων τὰ τάγματα; o. c., R4:C-2, p. 410: παρίστασθαι ἐνώπιον ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀνθρώπων.

62. On adelphopoiesis see C. RAPP, Brother-Making in Late Antiquity and Byzantium (Onassis Series in Hellenic Culture), Oxford 2016. The quoted prayer is in A. DMITRIEVSKIĬ, Описание литургических рукописей, хранящихся в библиотеках Православного Востока, II, Εὐχολόγια, Kyiv 1901, p. 122: τοὺς βουλομένους εἰς ἀδελφότητα ἐλθεῖν, καὶ ὁμολογήσας ἐπὶ πᾶσιν πνευματικὴν ἀγάπην ἐπὶ ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀνθρώπων. Transl.: RAPP, o. c., Prayer E, pp. 296–7.

63. Unedited, transmitted in codices Patm. 703, f. 61v; Patm. 811, f. 93v–94r; Patm. 690, f. 86v–87r: Οὕτως καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ φοβεροῦ βήματος καὶ ἀδεκάστου κριτηρίου ἐπὶ ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀνθρώπων μετὰ

The theme of the registering angels is borrowed from non-liturgical Late Antique and Byzantine texts, notably ones related with the posthumous judgment: angels register every single deed, good or bad, in the life of the humans and confront the soul with them after death. The angels have important functions in the bureaucracy of the other world.⁶⁴ However, a study of these sources (apocalyptic journeys, accounts of visions, beneficial tales, homilies) exceeds the scope of the present article, which is limited to the discourse of ritual texts. It is worth mentioning in this context that the archangels Michael and Gabriel are among the holy persons invoked as witnesses in the Magisterial Oath that features in the Codex Justinianus. The Codex's oath for magistrates accepting appointment to office has them vow:

I swear by omnipotent God, by his only son our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the Holy Spirit, by the glorious, perpetually Virgin Mary, by the four Gospels which I hold in my hand, by the holy archangels Michael and Gabriel.”⁶⁵

d. “Guard her by your bright angels:” Protection in the Household and Beyond

The Euchologion prayers discussed until now—mainly prayers in the eucharistic liturgies, daily services, and baptism—assign little significance to the function of angels as guardians and protectors. This changes in later prayers for concerns related to protection in the household, in the fields and in the sea. The prayers I will discuss in this section are occasional prayers. Although some occasional prayers could be also said in a church, the following prayers are meant to be said in other locations: at home, on the fields, at the sea, etc. This is noteworthy, as it indicates that the significance of angels as protectors increased, once one departed from the space of the church. Prayers for protection and household prayers often come in many versions, meaning that each iteration rarely appears in more than a few manuscripts. Again, once a prayer was performed outside of the sacred space of the church, priests felt at greater liberty to improvise by creating new texts. Therefore, in this section I will present, together with prayers edited in the already mentioned editions by Miguel Arranz and Elena Velkovska – Stefano Parenti, also texts from the editions by Jacques Goar, Alexei Dmitrievskii and Valerio Polidori.⁶⁶ Moreover, I will present unedited παρρησίας εἰπεῖν· καὶ αὐτὸν ἔδωκάς μοι. For the unpublished texts I use the transcriptions made by the Vienna Euchologia Project team with some adaptations.

64. See for example AFENTOULIDOU, Space and Power (quoted n. 8).

65. Corpus iuris civilis, rec. R. Schoell et G. Kroll, III, Berolini 1885 (repr. Hildesheim 1963), Novella 8, Coll.II tit.3, p. 89: Ὁμνυμι ἐγὼ τὸν θεὸν τὸν παντοκράτορα, καὶ τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν μονογενῆ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν τὸν θεὸν ἡμῶν, καὶ τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, καὶ τὴν ἁγίαν ἑνδοξον θεοτόκον καὶ ἀειπαρθένον Μαρίαν, καὶ τὰ τέσσαρα εὐαγγέλια, ἃ ἐν ταῖς χερσὶ μου κρατῶ, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους ἀρχαγγέλους Μιχαὴλ καὶ Γαβριὴλ etc. Transl.: The Novels of Justinian. A Complete Annotated English Translation, transl. by D. J. D. Miller and P. Sarris, Cambridge 2018.

66. Euchologion sive Rituale Graecorum, rec. J. Goar, Parisiis 1647, Venetiis 1730² (repr. Graz 1960), p. 261; DMITRIEVSKII, Εὐχολόγια (quoted n. 62); L'Eucologio della Grande Chiesa di Otranto: Cod. Otroboni gr. 344 (AD 1177), ed. critica a cura di V. Polidori (Independent publication Amazon KDP), 2018.

material transcribed by my colleagues and myself during library visits in the framework of the Vienna Euchologia Project.

The largest group of prayers including mentions of the guardian angel are prayers said on the day that a woman gives birth to a child. These prayers were said in the house in which the child was born. The main concerns of these prayers are the accouchée's ritual purity (which was disturbed by the pollution of birth), health and healing (mainly for the woman, but also for the new-born), protection from demonic influence, and protection for the household. These were concerns for which Byzantine Christians had been seeking divine help for centuries, with means and rites that were sometimes approved by the official church, and sometimes condemned as magic. However, it is only in the fifteenth century that prayers addressing these concerns are included in the Euchologion to be said by a priest. The prayers for the day of birth vary largely from manuscript to manuscript. Usually, formulas appear in various combinations in different prayers. A number of prayers address the issue of protection from demonic influence, as new-borns and their mothers in the liminal stage of childbed were considered particularly vulnerable to demonic attacks in Byzantine Christianity and beyond. Prayers approached this by asking God for angelic protection:

Guard her from every tyranny of the devil. Preserve the child born from her from every sorcery, from every hardship, from every distress coming from the opponent (sc. devil), from evil spirits of the day and the night ... guard her by your joyous and bright angels and preserve her from every attack of the invisible evil ones.⁶⁷

Order an angel to preserve her together with the born infant day and night from every tangled and wily contrivance of the devil.⁶⁸

Preserve her together with her child from every tyranny of the devil, from every sorcery, from every hardship, from every distress coming from the opponent, from evil spirits of the night ... and guard them by your bright angels.⁶⁹

Moreover, four manuscripts include among the prayers for the day of birth the third baptismal exorcism discussed above. The text is repurposed, as is common in Euchologia, for the occasion of the birth. In this prayer, God is addressed as "Lord Sabaoth."⁷⁰

67. Euchologion, ed. Goar (quoted n. 66), p. 261: Διαφύλαξον αὐτήν, ἀπὸ πάσης τοῦ διαβόλου τυραννίδος, καὶ τὸ ἐξ αὐτῆς κυηθὲν νήπιον διατήρησον, ἀπὸ πάσης φαρμακίας, ἀπὸ πάσης χαλεπότητος, ἀπὸ πάσης ζάλης τοῦ ἀντικειμένου, ἀπὸ πνευμάτων πονηρῶν, ἡμερινῶν τε καὶ νυκτερινῶν [...] καὶ δι' ἁγγέλων σου φαιδρῶν καὶ φωτεινῶν, ταύτην περίθਾਲσον, καὶ περιφρούρησον, ἀπὸ πάσης ἐπελεύσεως τῶν ὁρατῶν πονηρῶν.

68. Codex Serdic. NB 39, f. 93v, unpublished: Κέλευσον ἄγγελον διατηρεῖν αὐτήν σὺν τῷ τεχθέντι παιδίῳ νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας ἀπὸ πάσης τοῦ διαβόλου πολυπλόκου καὶ πολυτρόπου μηχανουργίας.

69. Codex Patm. 690, f. 66v, unpublished: Διαφύλαξον αὐτήν μετὰ τοῦ ἑαυτῆς παιδίου ἀπὸ πάσης τοῦ διαβόλου τυραννίδος, ἀπὸ πάσης φαρμακίας, ἀπὸ πάσης χαλεπότητος, ἀπὸ πάσης ζάλης τοῦ ἀντικειμένου, καὶ ἀπὸ πνευμάτων νυκτερινῶν ... καὶ δι' ἁγγέλων φωτεινῶν τούτους περίθਾਲσον.

70. Codices Vindob. theol. gr. 286, f. 37v; Sin. gr. 968, f. 75v; Patm. 689, f. 79v–80r; Paris. gr. 393, f. 134v.

Besides childbirth, angelic protection is sought for further concerns, though less often. Among the numerous prayers for the blessing of a house, some mention angels. In the following prayer for the blessing of a house, a biblical event involving angels is part of the anamnesis:

Eternal God, who blessed the tent of Abraham under the oak of Mamre and set it an unbreakable foundation and sent him angels and archangels etc.⁷¹

A variation of this anamnesis appears in a prayer for threshing. Again, prayers for threshing are common in the Euchologia. But very few include references to angels:

God, the maker and creator of all, who blessed the tent of Abraham because of his observance and revealed the angels as visible.⁷²

A later Euchologion manuscript transmits a different prayer for the blessing of a house, which includes the supplication that God sends a guardian angel—again with the quote from Psalm LXX 90 discussed above:

Order your faithful angel to guard them (the inhabitants) in this (the house) from all things that walk in darkness, from the mishap and demon of noonday.⁷³

Two prayers for animal sacrifice include the petition that God protects those who offer the victims through angels:⁷⁴

Accept, Lord, our prayer and dispatch the angel for peace and bless this ox and these lambs.⁷⁵

Accept this sacrifice as an offering of spiritual fragrance; make their ox fat, multiply their wheat harvest, safeguard their herds to be prolific in their goings and comings (Ps. LXX 120, 8) through angelic power.⁷⁶

71. Codex Sinait. gr. 966, ed. DMITRIEVSKII, Euchologia (quoted n. 62), p. 218: Εὐχὴ ἐπὶ θεμέλιον οἰκίας. Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ αἰώνιος, ὁ εὐλογήσας τὴν σκηνὴν Ἀβραάμ ὑπὸ τὴν δρῦν τὴν Μαμβρὴν καὶ θεμέλιον αὐτῇ τιθεὶς ἄρρηκτον καὶ ἀποστείλας αὐτῷ ἀγγέλους καὶ ἀρχαγγέλους.

72. Codex Hierosol., Patriarchal Library 273 (274) (15th c.), ed. DMITRIEVSKII, Euchologia (quoted n. 62), p. 525: Εὐχὴ ἐπὶ ἄλωνα. Ὁ Θεός, ὁ τῶν ὅλων ποιητὴς καὶ πάντων δημιουργός, ὁ εὐλόγησας τὴν σκηνὴν τοῦ Ἀβραάμ διὰ τῆς τηρήσεως αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀγγέλους ὁρατοὺς δεῖξας.

73. Codex Patm. 703, f. 183v, unpublished: Εὐχὴ ἑτέρα ἐπὶ θεμελίου οἴκου κοινοῦ. [...] ἔντειλα ἄγγελῳ σὺ πιστῷ τοῦ διαφυλάξαι αὐτοὺς ἐν αὐτῷ, ἀπὸ παντὸς πράγματος ἐν σκότει διαπορευομένου, ἀπὸ συμπτώματος καὶ δαιμονίου μεσημβρινοῦ.

74. See B. CASEAU, Nourritures terrestres, nourritures célestes. La culture alimentaire à Byzance (MTM 46), Paris 2015, pp. 158–60. V. PERMIKOV, “Thine Own of Thine Own”: Prayers for Animal Sacrifice in Byzantine and Non-Byzantine Euchologia, paper presented at the XVII. International Conference on Patristic Studies, Oxford 2015.

75. Codex Sinait. gr. 957 (9th-10th c.), f. 28r, ed. DMITRIEVSKII, Euchologia (quoted n. 62), p. 6: Εὐχὴ ἐπὶ θυμάτων. [...] πρόσδεξαι, Κύριε, τὴν εὐχὴν ἡμῶν καὶ ἐξαπόστειλον τὸν ἐπὶ τῆς εἰρήνης ἄγγελον καὶ εὐλόγησον τὸν βοῦν τοῦτον καὶ τοὺς ἄρνες τούτους.

76. Codex Sinait. gr. 959 (11th c.), f. 60, ibid., p. 46: Εὐχὴ ἐπὶ προσφερόντων θυσίαν. [...] πρόσδεξαι καὶ τὴν θυσίαν ταύτην εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας· τοὺς βόας αὐτῶν παχεῖς ποιήσον, τὴν σιτοποιίαν αὐτῶν πληθύνον, τὰ ποίμνια αὐτῶν πολυτόκα πληθύνοντα ἐν ταῖς ἐξόδοις αὐτῶν καὶ εἰσόδοις ἀγγελικῇ δυνάμει κατασφάλισον.

In two further prayers for the construction of a ship, God is asked to send a guardian angel. The first is edited by Jacques Goar, without information on the manuscripts used: “Do you yourself, Lord, preserve this ship now. Give it a good peaceful angel. Guard those who will sail in it.”⁷⁷

The second prayer is transmitted in an Euchologion from Patmos. The guardian angel is this time named, which is highly unusual for any text included in an Euchologion: “Send your angel Michael to guard and govern and save this ship from evil and unclean spirits.”⁷⁸

The occasional prayers examined in this section seek angelic protection for concerns of the lay community. Most of these prayers also address the danger coming from evil spirits. The prayers mark a shift compared to the prayers of the eucharistic liturgies and the other services examined in previous sections: a shift from the liturgy to everyday life, from the church to the household and/or spaces of laypersons’ labour, from the exclusively male space of the altar to spaces of female agency—that is, a shift to spaces, in which angels had long been seen as protectors.

This does not mean that the roles of angels as ministers and as guardians were mutually exclusive. As the seventh-century author Eustratios the Presbyter put it:

the servitude of the angels is their unceasing praise to God, and their ministering and serving and being dispatched and assisting those in need and guiding the misled.⁷⁹

Accordingly, the angels in these prayers are still God’s ministers: they are never directly addressed to come and help, but are dispatched as guardians at God’s command. Yet, contrary to the eucharistic liturgies, angels in these prayers never appear praising God and attending his throne. They are not the hosts and powers of the eucharistic prayers, but individual, albeit mostly unnamed, angels. Thus, the prayers examined in this section still have the same structure as the prayers of the eucharistic liturgy, but they include elements from amuletic traditions. Most notably, angels appear as protecting powers against demons and other dangers. In this sense, these prayers represent efforts of the official Church to consolidate priestly authority in the lay community. They pursued this by selectively appropriating elements from ritual traditions, which were established as providing protection in concerns such as childbirth, household integrity, and seafaring.

77. Euchologion, ed. Goar (quoted n. 66), p. 559: Εὐχὴ εἰς τὸ κατασκευάσαι πλοῖον. [...] αὐτὸς καὶ νῦν Δέσποτα καὶ τὸ πλοῖον τοῦτον διατήρησον. δὸς αὐτῷ ἄγγελον ἀγαθόν, εἰρηνικόν, τοὺς μέλλοντας πλέειν ἐν αὐτῷ διαφύλαξον.

78. Codex Patm. 690, f. 92r–93r, unpublished: Ἀπόστειλον τὸν ἄγγελον Μιχαήλ, ἵνα περιφυλάττῃ καὶ κυβερνῇ καὶ λυτρῶνῃ τὸ πλοῖον τοῦτο ἀπὸ πονηρῶν καὶ ἀκαθάρτων πνευμάτων.

79. Eustratii presbyteri Constantinopolitani De statu animarum post mortem (Corpus Christianorum Series Graeca 60), ed. by P. Van Deun, Turnhout – Leuven 2006, I. 1199–1202: Δουλεία δὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἢ πρὸς θεὸν ἀκατάπαυστος δοξολογία, καὶ τὸ λειτουργεῖν καὶ διακονεῖν καὶ ἀποστέλλεσθαι καὶ βοηθεῖν τοῖς δεομένοις καὶ χειραγωγεῖν τοὺς πεπλανημένους.

c. “I adjure you by the Lord Sabaoth:” Exorcisms and Prayers Against Demonic Influence

Some of the texts discussed in previous sections name demons as one of the dangers to be averted through angelic protection. In the texts that will be discussed subsequently, demonic influence is the main concern. Not every Euchologion includes texts against demonic influence or possession. But whenever such texts are included, they almost invariably mention angels. Indeed, in no other priestly texts as in those against demonic influence are angels so consistently present. Some of these texts are titled “prayer” (εὐχή), whereas others bear the title “exorcism” (ἐξορκισμός/ ἀφορκισμός). Some supplicate God, while others adjure the demons.

Already the oldest surviving Euchologion, codex Barberini gr. 336, includes a text titled “Prayer for a house bewitched or otherwise bothered by evil spirits.” The structure is that of a typical Euchologion prayer. The divine epithets are along the well-known lines of God sitting on the throne of Cherubim. But they are much more elaborate than the ones used in the eucharistic liturgies:

Lord, [...] who is borne upon the Cherubim and rides upon the Seraphim, who is above every principality, authority, power, and dominion.

Part of the supplication is that the beneficiaries of the prayer are “guarded by an angelic camp.”⁸⁰

The two exorcisms transmitted in the Otranto Euchologion from the year 1177 have a different form. They are attributed to famous church fathers—a common feature of exorcisms, meant to enhance their credibility and power.⁸¹ These adjurations are addressed to the demons in the name of God, who is then characterised by divine epithets—including ones elaborating on his dominion over the angels:

Exorcism of saint John Chrysostom on those possessed by spirits. [...] He himself (sc. God) shall forbid you, devil, who is ministered and praised in fear by innumerable flaming heavenly orders, to whom make obeisance and glorify in terror the undepictable choruses of angelic hosts. The lord shall forbid you, devil, who is praised by the spiritual most horrible six-winged seraphim, who surround him; with two wings they cover their faces, and with two wings their feet so as not to be burned down by the unspeakable glory of the incomprehensible godhead, and with two wings they fly, while proclaiming the unceasing trisagion hymn and filling the whole heaven with their horrifying cries.⁸²

80. Euchol. Barber., ed. Velkovska–Parenti (quoted n. 10), no. 257: Εὐχή ἐπὶ οἰκίας περιεργασμένης ἢ ἄλλως πως ὀχλουμένης ὑπὸ πνευμάτων πονηρῶν. Κύριε [...] ὁ τῶν Χερουβεὶμ ἔποχος καὶ τῶν Σεραφὶμ ἡνίοχος, ὁ ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος [...] ἀγγελικῶ στρατοπέδῳ φρουρούμενοι.

81. I. NESSERIS, First-Person Prayers attributed to the Church Fathers, StP 108, forthcoming.

82. L'Eucologio di Otranto, ed. Polidori (quoted n. 66), no. 200: Ἀφορκισμός τοῦ ἁγίου Ἰωάννου τοῦ Χρυσοστόμου ἐπὶ πνευματιζομένων. [...] Αὐτὸς ἐπιτιμῆσαι σοι, διάβολε, ὁ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀναριθμῶν

Exorcism by our holy father Gregory the wonderworker and expeller of spirits on those attacked by an unclean spirit. [...] He himself will forbid you, unclean spirits, [...] the creator of angels and archangels, the king of all powers.⁸³

The exorcisms are among the rare liturgical texts that use the term Lord Sabaoth for God, as already shown in discussing baptismal exorcisms. An exorcism first attested in the first quarter of the twelfth century adds two further Hebrew words: “I adjure you, unclean spirit, by the Lord Sabaoth and all the hosts of God’s angels, Adonai, Elohim.”⁸⁴ The names Adonai and Elohim refer to God in Hebrew, but in Late Antique and Medieval Christian amulets they were often understood as angelic names. All three terms, Sabaoth, Adonai and Elohim appear frequently in amulets. For many Medieval Christians these Hebrew words would be more meaningful than other voces magicae and nomina barbara of ancient and Late Antique amulets. Yet, the “exotic” sounds would have a similar function in enhancing the power of the exorcism. Tellingly, the database CÉNOB (Corpus des énoncés des noms barbares) includes the names Sabaoth, Adonai and Elohim/Eloi among the nomina barbara.⁸⁵

Among the prayers for agricultural concerns transmitted in the Euchologia, there are some which are formulated as exorcisms. Often, they address and adjure the danger (illness, bugs, etc.) instead of supplicating God. This adjuration is sometimes framed by a historiola, an otherwise unattested narration that enables the ritual practitioner (in this case a priest, as the text is transmitted in an Euchologion) to utter an adjuration in the name of a powerful persona.⁸⁶ Often, these texts are attributed to Saint Tryphon (for agriculture)⁸⁷

ἐπουρανίων ταγμάτων πῦρ φλεγόντων φόβῳ λειτουργούμενος καὶ ὑμνούμενος, ὁ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνεικάστων χορῶν ἀγγελικῶν στρατιῶν τρόμφ προσκυνούμενος καὶ δοξαζόμενος. Ἐπιτιμήσαι σοι κύριος, διάβολε, ὁ ὑπὸ τῶν κυκλῶθεν παρεστώτων νοερῶν φρικωδεστάτων ἐξαπτερύγων Σεραφὶμ αἰνούμενος, τῶν τὰ πρόσωπα ἑαυτῶν ταῖς δυσὶ πτέρυξι καλυπτόντων, ταῖς δὲ δυσὶ τοὺς πόδας εἰς τὸ μὴ κατακαυθῆναι ἐκ τῆς ἀρρήτου δόξης τῆς ἀκατανοήτου θεότητος, καὶ ταῖς δυσὶ πετομένων τὸν ἀκατάπαυστον τρισάγιον ὕμνον κεκραγόντων καὶ πάντα τὸν οὐρανὸν πληρούντων ἐκ τῆς φρικτῆς αὐτῶν βοῆς.

83. Ibid., no. 201: Ἀφορκισμὸς τοῦ ὁσίου πατρὸς ἡμῶν Γρηγορίου τοῦ θαυματουργοῦ καὶ πνευματοδιδάκτου ἐπὶ χειμαζομένους ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἀκαθάρτου. [...] Αὐτὸς ὑμῖν ἐπιτιμήσει τοῖς πνεύμασι τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις [...] ὁ τῶν ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀρχαγγέλων ποιητής, ὁ τῶν δυνάμεων πασῶν βασιλεὺς.

84. Codex Vat. gr. 329, f. 84v–88v, unpublished: Ἐξορκίζω σε πνεῦμα ἀκάθαρτον, κατὰ τοῦ Κυρίου Σαβαώθ καὶ πασῶν στρατιῶν ἀγγέλων Θεοῦ, Ἀδωναί, Ἐλωί. Another version of this exorcism is edited in Euchologion, ed. Goar (quoted n. 66), p. 578.

85. Corpus des énoncés des noms barbares, <http://www.cenob.org>. See also Noms barbares, I, Formes et contextes d'une pratique magique, éd. par M. Tardieu, A. Van den Kerchove et M. Zago (BEHE 162), Turnhout 2013.

86. D. FRANKFURTER, Narrating Power. The Theory and Practice of the Magical Historiola in Ritual Spells, in Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, ed. by M. Meyer and P. Mirecki, Leiden et al. loc. 1995, pp. 455–76.

87. M. DIMITROVA, Molitvite na sv. Trifon v trebnik № 167 ot Chilendarskija manastir, in Svettsi i sveti mesta na Balkanite, II, Sofia 2013, pp. 328–51.

or to Saint Mamas (for livestock)⁸⁸. It is not surprising that such texts almost invariably mention angels.

Thus, a sixteenth-century Euchologion transmits the following prayer:

We call upon you, master who loves humankind, Lord Jesus Christ, only-begotten son of the only God and Father, and your Holy Spirit, of one essence and almighty. Send your holy angel to expel and strike and exterminate all sixteen mean and harmful beasts that damage the vineyard and the field and the garden etc.⁸⁹

The prayer resembles the typical Euchologion prayers, inasmuch as it addresses God, although the petition that God sends an angel is unusual. In the same Euchologion, in another text for the same occasion angels again are described as striking the beasts. But this time, it is not a prayer addressed to God, but a historiola narrated by Saint Tryphon in the first person:

I, Tryphon, prayed to the Lord my God. Seven angels descended from heaven to strike down and expel all harmful beasts.⁹⁰

The last example of a Tryphon prayer to be discussed here is transmitted in an Euchologion from the year 1613. Here, it is only in the title that we learn that the prayer is put in the mouth of Saint Tryphon. While beginning by addressing God, the speaker abruptly turns to the bugs, and adjures them. Besides adjuring the bugs by the angels at the throne of God, the exorcism threatens them that God will send an angel named Phirigiel to expel them. Further nomina sacra / nomina barbara are Adonai Elohim Sabaoth:

I adjure all of you by the order of the name of God; Adonai Elohim Sabaoth; whose name the stone heard and immediately broke and scattered and became like dust in the face of the wind as if from threshing. I adjure you before those who fly around God and cry: Holy, holy, holy Lord Sabaoth, heaven and earth are full of your glory. I adjure you to leave quickly this vineyard, this garden and these vegetables. If you disobey me, you will not have to do will me, but with the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, who will come to judge living and dead. For he will send his angel Phirigiel, your head, and he will expel you from all this.⁹¹

88. A. MARAVA-HATZINIKOLAOU, 'Ο ἅγιος Μάμας, Athina 1953.

89. Codex Patm. 811 (16th c.), f. 112r, unpublished: Ἐπικαλούμεθά σε δέσποτα φιλόανθρωπε Κύριε Ἰησοῦ Χριστέ υἱὲ μονογενὲς τοῦ μόνου Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρός καὶ τὸ Πανάγιόν σου Πνεῦμα, ὁμοούσιόν τε καὶ παντοδύναμον· ἀπόστελλον τὸν ἄγγελόν σου τὸν ἅγιον, ὥστε ἐκδιῶξαι καὶ πατάξαι καὶ ἀπολέσαι πάντα τὰ φαῦλα καὶ κακοῦργα δεκαέξη θηρία τὰ ἀδικοῦντα τὴν ἄμπελον τὴν χώραν καὶ τὸν κῆπον.

90. Codex Patm. 811 (16th c.), f. 110v, unpublished: Ἐγὼ Τρύφων προσευξάμενοι πρὸς Κύριον τὸν Θεόν μου· κατήλθον ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἑπτὰ ἄγγελοι πατάξαι καὶ διῶξαι πάντα τὰ κακοῦργα θηρία.

91. Codex Patm. 763 (a. 1613), f. 33r–36v, unpublished: Εὐχαὶ τοῦ ἁγίου μεγαλομάρτυρος Τρύφωνος, λεγομέναι εἰς κῆπον ἢ χώραν βλαπτόμενα ὑπὸ ἐρπετῶν: ἐξορκίζω ὑμᾶς πάντα προστάξει τοῦ

Similar texts against ailments of herd animals are usually associated with Saint Mamas or Saint Modest. The following text, transmitted in a sixteenth-century Euchologion, begins with a historiola:

Saint Mamas, the arch-shepherd, herded a thousand five hundred sheep and milked them and filled big and small flasks and made cheese and gave them to widows and orphans. And Satan, who fell from heaven, says: let us make Mamas blaspheme the Lord his God. [The Satan poisons the sources and Mamas finds his sheep poisoned]. And the Lord sent the two archangels Michael and Gabriel because of his [sc. Mamas'] sighs. And they say to him [the archangels inquire about the cause of Mamas' distress, and advise him to take a bell, water and salt and say the following words, which the Lord ordered]: "Neither thirst, nor [a list of various names for rabies follows], nor (demonic) influence, nor possession, nor any other from the thousand myriads of poisons; but multiply, Lord, the livestock of the servant of God so and so, in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit."⁹²

Occasionally, Euchologia include texts in the tradition of exorcisms and amulets for human illnesses. These included fever, migraine, and gynaecological concerns. Thus, a text "against paroxysm" added to an Euchologion by a later hand begins as follows—the syntax seems improvised:

ονόματος Θεοῦ Ἀδονέ· Ἐλωί· Σαβαώθ· οὐ τὸ ὄνομα ἀκούσασα ἡ πέτρα, παραχρῆμα εὐθὺς διερράγη καὶ διεσκορπίσθη καὶ γέγονεν ὥσει χνοὺς κατὰ πρόσωπον ἀνέμου ὡς ἀπὸ ἄλωνος θερινῆς· ὀρκίζων ὑμᾶς ἐνώπιον τῶν περιεπταμένων κύκλῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ κραζόντων· ἅγιος ἅγιος ἅγιος Κύριε Σαβαώθ· πλήρης ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ τῆς δόξης σου· ὀρκίζω ὑμᾶς τοῦ φυγεῖν ἐν τάχει ἀπὸ τῆς ἀμπέλου ταύτης· ἐκ τοῦ κήπου καὶ τῶν λαχάνων καὶ τῆς χώρας· εἰ δὲ παρακούσητέ μου, οὐκ ἔχετε πρὸς ἐμὲ τὸν ταπεινόν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα καὶ Υἱὸν καὶ Ἅγιον Πνεῦμα τὸν ἐρχόμενον κρίναι ζῶντας καὶ νεκρούς· αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐξαποστελεῖ τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ Φιριγιήλ τὸν ἑξαρχον ὑμῶν καὶ διώξει ὑμᾶς ἐκ πάσης ταύτης.

92. Codex Patm. 689, f. 120v–121r, unpublished: Ὁ ἅγιος Μάμας ὁ πρωτοποιμὴν, χίλια πεντακόσια πρόβατα ἔβοσκε καὶ ἤρμεγεν αὐτά καὶ ἐγέμιζε βρασκία καὶ παραβράσκια· καὶ ἐποίει τύρον καὶ τυροτρόχην καὶ ἔδιδεν αὐτὰ χερῶν καὶ ὀφρανῶν. Καὶ ἀκούσας ὁ Σατανᾶς ὁ πεσὼν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, λέγει· δεῦτε ποιήσωμεν Μάμαν ἵνα βλαστημήσῃ πρὸς Κύριον τὸν Θεὸν αὐτοῦ· ἐλθὼν δὲ ἡ εὐλαπτος καὶ ἐπικατάρατος καὶ ἐπῆρε τὰ δώδεκα φάρμακα καὶ ἀνήλθεν ὅπου ὁ ἅγιος Μάμας ἔβοσκε καὶ ὅπου ἐπότιζε· καὶ ἐξέραςε καὶ ἐμόλυνε τὰς πηγάς. Καὶ ἀπήγαγεν ὁ ἅγιος Μάμας νὰ ποτίσῃ τὰ ποίμνια αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐφαρμακώθησαν ἐκ τοῦ ἰοῦ τῆς ἀδικίας. Ἰδὼν δὲ ὁ ἅγιος Μάμας αὐτὰ φαρμακωμένα, ἐθλίβην περὶ αὐτ(.). Καὶ ἀπέστειλεν ὁ Κύριος τοὺς δύο ἀρχαγγέλους Μιχαήλ καὶ Γαβριήλ διὰ τὴν ἀναστέναξιν αὐτοῦ. Καὶ λέγουσιν αὐτῷ· χαῖρε Μάμα, ἀρχιποιμὴν προβάτων· διατὶ ἀναστέναξας πρὸς Κύριον τὸν Θεόν καὶ ἤκουσε Κύριος τοῦ ἀναστεναγμοῦ σου καὶ ἔστειλεν ἡμᾶς πρὸς σέ· Καὶ λέγει ὁ ἅγιος Μάμας· κύριοί μου, ζῶα εἶχον, καὶ ἄρτι οὐκ ἔχω. Καὶ ἀπεκρίθησαν οἱ ἄγγελοι λέγοντες· ἔπαρον ἐκ τῆς μάνδρας κουδούν(.). εὐλαλον· καὶ ὕδωρ ἀπὸ ἀνατ(....)ην πηγῇ· καὶ ποία δρᾶξ ἄλας καὶ ράνον αὐτὰ σταυροειδῶς· καὶ εἶπε τοὺς λόγους τούτους, οὓς εἶπεν ὁ Κύριος· μὴ δίψα, μὴ στεροδίψα· μὴ ὕξα· μὴ ὑπερξ(.). μὴ ἐνέργειαν· μὴ σεληνιακόν· μὴδὲν τι ἄλλον ἐκ τῶν χιλίων μυρίων φαρμάκων· ἀλλὰ πλήθυνον αὐτὰ Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς τὰ κτήνη τοῦ δούλου τοῦ Θεοῦ ὁ δεῖνα· εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ καὶ τοῦ Ἁγίου <Πνεύματος>.

Holy angel, chosen one, Michael, upon two-year and four-year [mistakenly for tertian and quartian] and quotidian chills, you disrupt the chills from the servant of God NN, because he cannot bear the chills.⁹³

The text is followed by the rubric “write (this) on Thursday, Friday or Saturday,” indicating that it is an instruction for making an amulet.

The texts discussed in this section belong to the tradition of exorcisms. There are indications that their inclusion in the Euchologion was considered an irregular phenomenon. Most of the oldest Euchologia do not transmit exorcisms apart from baptismal exorcisms. Exorcisms other than baptismal exorcisms sometimes are later additions to the manuscript, or the textual tradition is so fluid that there is no standard text. These prayers contain formal features that are common in amulets, but uncommon in the Euchologion. Some of these features are related to an increased role of the angels.

First, the frequency in which angels appear in these prayers is unusual in the Euchologion: almost every exorcism mentions angels in one way or another. Contrastingly, in the rest of the Euchologion references to angels are mostly concentrated in the eucharistic liturgies and few other prayers. Moreover, references to angels are more expanded than the address “Lord of the hosts” or the divine epithet “who sits upon the cherubim” found in other parts of the Euchologion. The function of the elaboration of the cherubic throne theme is to exemplify God’s magnitude and might. Angels are also more strongly involved in human affairs: they are asked to come to help and expel the demons or whatever endangers crops and livestock. This is related to another feature that distinguishes most exorcisms from the other Euchologion texts: the addressee is not God who is asked to dispatch angels. Rather, the addressees are the demons and other dangers threatened that the angels will come, or the angels asked to come to help. Finally, some of these texts do not mention angels or angelic orders collectively, but name specific angels. These can be the “canonical” Michael and less often Gabriel, or other (pseudo) angelic names such as Uriel, Adonai and Elohim, or even otherwise unattested names such as Phirigiel. In general, there is a tendency to avoid the most obvious deviations from the typical prayer form in the texts included in the Euchologion: Whereas it is not unusual to find texts against demonic influence addressing God as “Lord of the hosts” or asking him to send angels in an Euchologion, texts adjuring demons are less often. Euchologia with texts addressing angels or naming individual angels are the exception.

93. Codex Patm. 703 (composite codex, 12th–15th c.), f. 115v, unpublished: Τοῦ Θεοῦ περὶ τοῦ παροξυσμοῦ. Ἅγιε ἄγγελε ἐκλεκτὲ σὺ Μιχαὴλ καταπάνω τοῦ ῥιγοपुरετοῦ διετοῦς καὶ τετραετοῦς [sic, lege τριταίου et τεταρταίου] καὶ ἀφεμερινὸν [?] σὺ διάρρηξον τὸν ῥιγοपुरετὸν ἀπὸ τὸν δοῦλον τοῦ Θεοῦ ὃ δεῖνα ὅτι οὐ δύναται βαστάζειν τὸν ῥιγοपुरετὸν [...] γράφε ἡμέρα Πέμπτη ἢ Παρασκευή ἢ Σάββατο.

II. HYMNOGRAPHY

The second group of liturgical texts examined here are hymns. Hymns are meant to be sung as part of a liturgical service. Poems of private devotion, which are often also titled “hymn” in the sources and in secondary literature, are beyond the scope of this article. Unlike the priestly prayers discussed above, hymns can be sung also by non-ordained Christians. The hymnographic material is not only much larger and often unedited, or even uncatalogued and undated, but also more multifaceted than the prayers. The following is not a comprehensive study on angels in Byzantine hymnography. Rather, I discuss selected hymns that represent some trends and developments in the way angels are represented in hymns.

1. “The bodiless nature, the cherubim.” Stichic hymns

The first hymnographic texts to be examined here are a group of stichic (or κατὰ στίχον) hymns, that is, hymns consisting of lines that follow the principles of isosyllaby and stress regulation.⁹⁴ Except for the first hymn, they are first attested in the Horologium Sinaiticum, i.e. codex Sinaiticus graecus 864, a ninth-century manuscript, but they are earlier. These hymns are not associated with a feast day, and it is not clear in which service they were originally sung. But they were presumably meant for the daily cycle. In the Horologium Sinaiticum they are part of the Midnight Service. These are the following:

- a) Ἡ ἀσώματος φύσις τὰ (τῶν) Χερουβίμ. Earliest witness: Papyrus Lond. III 1029 (6th c.), possibly from Fayum.⁹⁵
- b) Δεῦτε πάντες πιστοὶ προκυνήσωμεν. Earliest witness: Horologium Sinaiticum (9th c.).⁹⁶
- c) Δεῦτε προσκυνήσωμεν, δεῦτε ἱκετεύσωμεν. Earliest witness: Horologium Sinaiticum (9th c.).⁹⁷
- d) Τῇς σαρκός σου Χριστὲ μετελάβομεν. Earliest witness: Horologium Sinaiticum (9th c.).⁹⁸

94. See A. GIANNOULI, Hymn Writing in Byzantium: Forms and Writers, in A Companion to Byzantine Poetry, ed. by W. Hörandner, A. Rhoby, and N. Zagklas, Leiden – Boston, MA 2019, pp. 487–516, here pp. 491–2.

95. P. MAAS – G. S. MERCATI – S. GASSISI, Gleichzeitige Hymnen in der byzantinischen Liturgie, BZ 18, 1909, pp. 309–56, here no. 1, pp. 311–2. On the Papyrus Lond. 1029 see ΜΗΑΛΥΚΟ, Christian Liturgical Papyri (quoted n. 11), multiple references, cf. index. The hymn is included also in later Horologia.

96. Livre d'heures du Sinai (Sinaiticus graecus 864), éd. critique et trad. par M. L. Ajjoub et J. Paramelle (SC 486), Paris 2004, no. 35, pp. 268–72; MAAS et al., Gleichzeitige Hymnen (quoted n. 95), no. 2, p. 313.

97. Livre d'heures du Sinai, ed. Ajjoub–Paramelle (quoted n. 96), no. 36, pp. 272–3 and MAAS et al., Gleichzeitige Hymnen (quoted n. 95), no. 3, p. 314.

98. Livre d'heures du Sinai, ed. Ajjoub–Paramelle (quoted n. 96), no. 37, pp. 274–7 and MAAS et al., Gleichzeitige Hymnen (quoted n. 95), no. 4, pp. 314–5.

The structure of these hymns bears some similarities: They begin by venerating or thanking God, who is praised by the angels—in hymns b) and c) this is formulated as a call to venerate God. In hymn d) the theme of the angelic praise is preceded by a thanksgiving for having received communion and finished the day. In the next verses, holy human beings are called to intercede on behalf of the faithful: Mary Theotokos, prophets, apostles, martyrs, all saints. In hymns b) and d) the addressee changes from God, or the faithful to the holy intercessors, whereas in hymn a) the addressee is still God. In all four hymns, there is a sharp distinction between the angels who praise God, and the sanctified human beings who intercede for humanity—even if both angels and human beings unite in worship. The angels are never addressed and never called to intercede. Thus, the stichic hymns examined here follow the angelology of the prayers of the eucharistic liturgy in ascribing to the angels the role of the attendants to God's throne and not addressing them directly.

For example, in hymn c) cited below, verses 1–3 address the brethren, who are called to venerate God. It is in this part that the angelic orders are mentioned: in a relative clause that functions as divine epithet, they appear as praising the Trinity. In verses 4–5 the hymn turns to sanctified human persons in order of reverence, who are asked for intercession:

- 1) Venez, prosternons-nous, venez, supplions celui que louent les Anges et les Archanges ;
- 2) les Vertus célestes, les Trônes, les Seigneuries, les Principautés et les Puissances servent Dieu.
- 3) Père céleste, Fils coéternel et Éspirit très saint, Paraclet, (que) glorifient sans dormir les Chérubins glorieux (et devant qui) les Séraphins se cachent le visage.
- 4) Souveraine Toute Sainte, prophètes, apôtres et saints martyres, suppliez
- 5) le seul Ami de l'homme, le seul Compatissant, en demandant l'absolution pour nos âmes.⁹⁹

2. "The Archangel Invites us to a Joyful Banquet:" Hagiographic Hymns

With the consolidation of the cult of angels, and especially Michael,¹⁰⁰ in Byzantine Christianity, hymnographic texts mentioning angels or dedicated to them proliferated. Angels appeared in biblical narrations that became major celebrations of the Byzantine

99. Livre d'heures du Sinai, ed. Ajjoub–Paramelle (quoted n. 96), Greek text and French transl.: pp. 272–3: Δεῦτε προσκυνήσωμεν, δεῦτε ἱκετεύσωμεν ὃν ὑμνοῦσιν ἄγγελοι καὶ ἀρχάγγελοι, / δυνάμεις οὐράνιαι θρόνοι κυριότητες ἀρχαὶ ἐξουσίαι <τε> λειτουργοῦσιν Θεῷ. / Πατέρα οὐράνιον καὶ Υἱὸν συνάναρχον καὶ Πνεῦμα πανάγιον τὸ Παράκλητον, / ἀύπνω δοξάζουσιν Χερουβὶμ τὰ ἔνδοξα, Σεραφὶμ τὰ πρόσωπα συγκαλύπτουσιν. / Παναγία Δέσποινα, προφῆται, ἀπόστολοι καὶ ἄγιοι μάρτυρες, δυσωπήσατε / τὸν μόνον Φιλάνθρωπον, τὸν μόνον Οἰκτίρμονα, ἰλασμὸν αἰτούμενοι ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἡμῶν.

100. P. ALLEN, Severus of Antioch and the Homily: The End of the Beginning?, in The Sixth Century: End or Beginning?, ed. by P. Allen and E. Jeffreys (Byzantina Australiensia 10), Brisbane 1996, pp. 163–75. On the cult of Michael in Late Antique–early Abbasid Egypt see A. PAPA-CONSTANTINOU, Le culte des saints en Égypte des Byzantins aux Abbassides. L'apport des inscriptions et des papyrus grecs et coptes (Le monde byzantin), Paris 2001, pp. 168–73.

Church. These included the angel at the Annunciation, the angelic hosts at the Nativity, the angel announcing the Resurrection, and the angels at the Ascension. Hymns—notably the kontakion, a lengthy hymnographic composition in strophes (“oikoi,” houses) that flourished in the fifth-sixth centuries¹⁰¹—further elaborate biblical scenes involving angels by expanding the dialogues between angels and humans. Even when the biblical narrative does not mention angels, hymnographers dramatise events from the life of Christ by adding the angels as spectators who wonder at their Lord’s condescension: “While the angels sang hymns to the lover of men, Mary advanced, holding him in her arms,” wrote Romanos the Melodist in a kontakion on the feast of the presentation (Hypanante, February 2).¹⁰²

Moreover, an increasing number of “hagiographic” hymns are dedicated to angels. They share features of hymns dedicated to saints: the praise is addressed directly to the angels. They include “biographic” elements, in this case biblical events involving angels. There is a reference to a cult: a church dedicated to the celebrated person, a feast day, many miracles. And most importantly, there are supplications to the celebrated holy person to intercede to God on behalf of the faithful.

One of the earliest “hagiographic” hymns dedicated to angels is a kontakion on Gabriel the archangel falsely attributed to Romanos the Melodist.¹⁰³ The date of composition is unknown. It is probably later than Romanos (6th c.), but not much later than the seventh century. At this point, the kanon (see below) prevailed over the kontakion as a lengthy hymnographic composition. The kontakion on the archangel Gabriel consists of 19 strophes. The first 14 strophes either address God, praising him for creating the angels as guardians of humans, or narrate biblical events featuring Gabriel. Strophes 15–19, however, are entirely addressed to Gabriel: the poetic self praises Gabriel for the protection and the healing miracles that take place in the church dedicated to him and asks him to continue providing protection and pray to God on behalf of the faithful. These last strophes constitute a departure from the discourse of the prayers and the stichic hymns discussed above. Even if the date of the hymn is only approximate, it is one of the earliest examples of a hymn addressed directly to an angel and asking for protection and intercession.

Other early hymns dedicated to angels and asking for intercession are transmitted in the already mentioned Horologium Sinaiticum, and in the Ancient Iadgari.¹⁰⁴ Besides the stichic hymns discussed above and other texts, the Horologium Sinaiticum includes 101. See GIANNOULI, Hymn Writing in Byzantium (quoted n. 94), pp. 492–6.

102. “Υμνοῦν ἐν τούτοις οἱ ἄγγελοι τὸν φιλόανθρωπον, Μαριὰμ δὲ ἐβάδιζεν ἀγκάλας τοῦτον βαστάζουσα. Sancti Romani Melodi Cantica, I, Cantica genuina; II, Cantica dubia, critical ed. by P. Maas and C. A. Trypanis, [Oxford 1963] Berlin 1970, here I, hymn 4, strophe 3. Engl. transl.: Kontakia of Romanos, Byzantine Melodist, I, On the Person of Christ, transl. by M. Carpenter, Columbia, MO 1970, p. 40.

103. Rom. Melod., Cantica dubia (quoted n. 102), hymn 62 and Appendix II, pp. 189–90.

104. Uzvelesi Iadgari (the most ancient hymnal), codex H 2123 of the Kekelidze Institute of Manuscripts, Tbilisi. L’hymnaire de Saint-Sabas (V^e-VIII^e siècle): le manuscrit Géorgien H 2123, I-II, éd. critique et trad. par Ch. Renoux, PO 50:3, 53:3, Turnhout [2008] 2015.

a group of four hymns (stichera) on the angels. They are all addressed to God, but in one of them the angels are said to “te supplient en notre faveur.”¹⁰⁵ The Ancient Iadgari is a ninth/tenth-century Georgian hymnal transmitting fifth to the eighth-century hymns, translated from Greek. It was copied at the Lavra of St. Sabas, Palestine, but the hymns are of Jerusalem provenance. The Iadgari includes a group of hymns for the feast of the archangels (November 14), some of them addressed to the archangels. The theme of the angels at the throne of God is prominent, but in some of the hymns it is connected with the intercession for the humanity, such as in the following hymn:

Glorieux Archanges,
 Vous qui intercédez pour la race des hommes,
 Intercédez sans cesse pour le salut de nos âmes, nous vous en prions, Afin que descende sur nos âmes une grande miséricorde.¹⁰⁶

In the following centuries, especially from the ninth century onwards, hymns dedicated to the angels in general, or the archangels in particular, proliferate. The archangel Michael seems especially favoured. These hymns are in the form of kanones, a hymnographic genre that prevailed from the seventh century onwards: lengthy hymnographic compositions, with strophes (troparia) grouped in odes modelled after or inspired by the first nine biblical odes.¹⁰⁷

Besides the fixed feast of the archangels according to the yearly cycle, in Byzantine tradition usually set on November 8th,¹⁰⁸ angels gradually become part of the eight-week cycle as well. Sporadically in tenth-century Oktoechoi (i.e. the liturgical books with hymns and readings of the eight-week cycle, organised according to the eight-mode system), and more often from the eleventh-twelfth centuries, Mondays are dedicated to the Bodiless Powers.¹⁰⁹ This means that besides the hymns for the yearly feast, there are hymns for further eight days of the eight-week cycle in the Byzantine liturgical books. Kanones on angels are thus among the most common ones. Apart from the numerous kanones edited in modern editions of liturgical books and elsewhere, many kanones remain unedited: Papailiopolou registered the unusually high number of 23 unedited kanones on angels in 105. Livre d'heures du Sinai, ed. Ajjoub–Paramelle (quoted n. 96), no. 90, pp. 396–9, here 398.6.

106. L'hymnaire de Saint-Sabas, ed. Renoux (quoted n. 104), p. 656.

107. GIANNOULI, Hymn Writing in Byzantium (quoted n. 94), pp. 496–9.

108. For alternative dates for the feastday of the archangels/the archangel Michael in Egypt see PAPAConstantinou, Le culte des saints (quoted n. 100), pp. 172–3. In the above mentioned Iadgari the feastday is November 14: L'hymnaire de Saint-Sabas, ed. Renoux (quoted n. 104), p. 655.

109. E. D. V. BULAEV, Rukopisnie istočniki vizantiiskogo Oktoicha i ich tipologija, Dissertation, Postgraduate and Doctoral Studies Programme of the Russian Orthodox Church St. Cyril and Methodius, Moskva 2020; O. A. KRASHENINNIKOVA, K istorii formirovaniia sedmičnykh pamiatei oktoicha, Bogoslovskie trudy 32, 1996, pp. 260–8. I wish to thank Epifanii Bulaev, Alexandra Nikiforova and Daniel Galadza for sharing their expertise in early Oktoechoi and Tropologia.

the codices she examined—six of them written by Joseph the Hymnographer (9th c.) are meanwhile edited.¹¹⁰

In all these kanones, angelic intercession is a central theme: just like Mary Theotokos and the saints, angels ask God to have mercy upon humanity. Angels are often addressed directly: instead of asking God to send a guardian angel, the poetic self asks the angels to intercede, so that God shows mercy. Thus, in a kanon by George the Hymnographer (9th c.),¹¹¹ the initial of the strophes form the acrostichis: “Michael, together with Gabriel guard and shelter me. By George.”¹¹² In the text proper, terms denoting intercession (πρεσβεία/δέησις) appear eight times—Michael’s intercession is the main manifestation of his guardianship.

The collective or individual poetic selves who ask the angels for intercession sometimes refer to themselves as “servants” of the angels in phrases such as “Become a helper for us, your servants, in all times” and “fulfil the prayers and petitions of your servants.”¹¹³ The self-designation “servant” is common for petitioners in Byzantine culture. In the priestly prayers examined above, the formula “servant of God NN” refers to the recipient of a blessing in the third person. In first-person hymns and prayers, the self-designation “servant” mostly means servant of God, but can also mean of other holy persons, notably Mary Theotokos. Referring to oneself as “your servant” when addressing angels is a further hagiographic element that brings the veneration of angels closer to the veneration of saints. It marks a departure from the angelology of the eucharist, in which the humanity joins the angels in ministering the one and only Lord.

The portrayal of angels as intercessors for humanity in Middle Byzantine kanones is connected with their individualisation and humanisation. Angels as beardless male humanlike individuals appear in Byzantine art early.¹¹⁴ In the early liturgical texts discussed above, however, references to angels are collective. Naming angelic orders already implies non-human like beings. In many of these texts, non-human features like six wings and many eyes are explicitly mentioned. In Middle Byzantine hymns, angelic orders fade out: apart from the occasional cherubim and seraphim, mentions of other orders are rare. Instead, angels and archangels, especially Michael and less often Gabriel are celebrated. This results

110. E. PAPAILIOPOULOU-FOTOPOULOU, Ταμείον ἀνεκδότων ἁσματικῶν κανόνων, Athina 1996, nos. 186–208. Six kanones are edited in Joseph the hymnographer: Kanones on saints according to the eight modes (Byzantinistische Studien und Texte), ed. by P. Toma, Berlin – Vienna 2018. On Joseph the Hymnographer see also E. I. TOMADAKIS, Ἰωσήφ ὁ ὑμνογράφος. Βίος καὶ ἔργον, Athina 1971.

111. E. PAPAILIOPOULOU-FOTOPOULOU, Προβλήματα βυζαντινῆς ὑμνογραφίας ἢ περὶ τινῶν ἀκροστιχίδων τοῦ ὑμνογράφου Γεωργίου, Δίπτυχα 6, 1994–5, pp. 43–78.

112. AHG, III, kanon 17: Σὺν Γαβριήλ με Μιχαὴλ φρουρῶν σκέπε. Γεωργίου.

113. Ios. Hymn., Kanones, ed. Toma (quoted n. 110), Kanon 10, p. 105, l. 37–88: Γενοῦ ἡμῖν τοῖς δούλοις σου παντὶ καιρῷ βοηθός and ibid., Kanon 11, p. 122, l. 205–7: τὰς προσευχὰς καὶ τὰ αἰτήματα τῶν σῶν δούλων ἀποπλήρωσον.

114. PEERS, Subtle bodies (quoted n. 4).

to a masculinisation of angels, beginning with the grammatical gender: cherubim and seraphim are neuter plural; orders, powers, principalities, and authorities are feminine plural; angel and archangel, on the other hand, are masculine, and so are all names of individual angels. Tellingly, it is in these kanones that the archangels are often named “commanders-in-chief” (ἀρχιστράτηγοι, ταξίαρχαι): whereas words such as “powers” are vague, the term “commander-in-chief” would evoke images of military masculinity, similar to the image of Michael in Byzantine iconography.

An aspect of this humanisation is the portrayal of angels as beings with emotions. Patristic and Byzantine authors leave out of their scope any emotions that their praising God and guarding humanity might evoke for angels. Angels praise God in fear in theological literature, and also in the liturgical texts examined above—but this state can hardly be considered an emotion. A biblical passage that could be interpreted as the angels’ emotional response to an event is “joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repents” (Lk 15, 7). In patristic and Byzantine literature this passage is often quoted, and interpreted as referring to angels. Yet, even these elusive mentions of rejoicing angels prompted Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite in the sixth century to conclude his De coelesti hierarchia with the clarification that the joy of angels is unlike human emotions. Instead, Pseudo-Dionysius tells us their response was more similar to the spiritual joy of the mystics:

There remains for accurate explanation, the statement respecting the rejoicing of the Heavenly Orders; for they are utterly incapable of our impassioned pleasure. Now they are said to rejoice with God over the discovery of what was lost, as befits their Divine good nature, and that Godlike and ungrudging rejoicing over the care and salvation of those who are turned to God; and that joy, beyond description, of which also holy men often partake, whilst the deifying illumination of the Deity rest upon them.¹¹⁵

All the more noteworthy are the numerous mentions of angels’ emotions in hymns from the ninth century onwards. The most common emotion is joy. Even if the hymnographers would subscribe to Pseudo-Dionysius’ claim that the angels’ joy is of a different nature than worldly joy, the hagiographic topos of the angels’ joy mark a new interest in angels as persons. Christ or Mary Theotokos are often “the joy of angels,” implying that angels feel joy at the presence and contemplation of these persons: “rejoice, joy of angels” wrote Joseph the Hymnographer in a kanon to Mary known as “kanon of the Akathistos.”¹¹⁶

115. Dion. Areop., CH, ed. Heil–Ritter (quoted n. 55), pp. 58.23–59.4: Λοιπὸς ἡμῖν εἰς διασάφησιν ὁ περὶ τῆς χαρᾶς τῶν οὐρανίων διακοσμῆσεων λόγος. Καὶ γὰρ ἄδεκτοι παντελῶς εἰσι τῆς καθ’ ἡμᾶς ἐμπαθοῦς ἡδονῆς, συγχαίρειν δὲ θεῷ λέγονται τῇ τῶν ἀπολωλῶτων εὐρέσει κατὰ τὴν θεοειδῆ ῥαστώνην καὶ τὴν ἐπὶ τῇ προνοίᾳ καὶ σωτηρίᾳ τῶν ἐπὶ θεὸν ἐπιστρεφόμενων ἀγαθοειδῇ καὶ ἄφθονον εὐφροσύνην καὶ τὴν εὐπάθειαν ἐκείνην τὴν ἄρρητον ἥς ἐν μεθέξει πολλάκις γέγονασι καὶ ἄνδρες ἱεροὶ κατὰ τὰς θεουργοὺς τῶν θείων ἐλλάμψεων ἐπιφοιτήσεις. Engl. transl.: Dionysius the Areopagite. Works, transl. by J. Parker, London 1897, pp. 65–6.

116. Τριψῆδιον κατανυκτικόν, Romi 1879, pp. 509–20, here p. 512: Χαῖρε, τῶν Ἀγγέλων χαρμονή.

Angels rejoice not only at contemplation of God, but also at human participation in their feast:

When the choruses of angels see their commander-in-chief being praised with hymns by human beings, they are filled with joy in a mystic way.¹¹⁷

The choruses of angels apprehend you as being praised longingly in hymns by human choruses and they are filled with perpetual joy, archangel Michael, and glorify God, who because of his compassionate mercy joined those who are below to the heavenly ones in a mystical way.¹¹⁸

Indeed, the angels' interaction with humanity is often described in a language that comes in sharp contrast to the image of the passionless (ἀπαθήs) angelic state: "With sighs and tears I fall down before you, as you are compassionate/sympathetic"¹¹⁹ prays Joseph the Hymnographer, whereas in other kanones the same author refers to Michael or to the archangels in general as "warmest intercessors."¹²⁰

The angels can also feel intense love towards God, which is sometimes described with an erotic language. In a kanon by Theophanes (9th c.) transmitted in the Oktoechos to be sung on Mondays of the first mode we read:

Inflamed by divine desire, the principalities, authorities and powers, the second ranks [i.e. second to God] sing hymns of praise with incessant mouths to the one divine principle, of one essence and power.¹²¹

In a further kanon the same Theophanes addresses the angels:

In a steadfast love and unyielding relationship, bowing to the beauty of the creator, you, choruses of angels, become second lights, crying "Blessed is God."¹²²

This strophe exemplifies another typical point in the humanisation of angels: biblical hymns sung by human biblical persons are attributed to angels. In this case it is Dan 3, 117. AHG, III, kanon 18, l. 100–3: Ὁρῶντες τῶν ἀγγέλων οἱ χοροὶ ὑμνολογούμενον ὑπὸ ἀνθρώπων χαρᾶς πληροῦνται τὸν ἀρχιστράτηγον τούτων μυστικῶς.

118. AHG, III, kanon 18, l. 352–60: Τῶν ἀγγέλων οἱ χοροὶ κατανοοῦντές σε πόθῳ χοροστασίαις βροτῶν ὑμνούμενον χαρᾶς πληροῦνται ἀδιαδόχου καὶ δοξάζουσι Θεόν, τὸν διὰ σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρῶν τοὺς κάτω συνάψαντα τοῖς οὐρανίοις μυστικῶς, ἀρχάγγελε Μιχαήλ.

119. Ios. Hymn., Kanones, ed. Toma (quoted n. 110), kanon 11, p. 120, l. 218–220: Στεναγμοῖς καὶ δάκρυσι/ σοὶ προσπίπτω/ ὄντι συμπαθεῖ.

120. Ibid., kanon 12, p. 131, l. 167 and kanon 15, p. 167, l. 195: τὸν θερμότερον πρέσβυν and πρεσβευταὶ θερμότετοι.

121. Παρακλητικὴ ἦτοι Ὁκτώηχος ἡ μεγάλη, Romi 1885, p. 29: Πόθῳ θεῷ πυρπολούμεναι αἱ Κυριότητες, Ἐξουσίαι, αἱ Δυνάμεις, αἱ τάξεις αἱ δεύτεραι ἀσιγήτοις στόμασι θεαρχικὴν ὑμνολογούσι μίαν οὐσίαν καὶ δύναμιν.

122. Παρακλητικὴ (quoted n. 121), p. 209: Ἀκλινεῖ τῷ ἔρωτι ἀνεκδότῳ σχέσει τε νεύοντες ταῖς καλλολογαῖς τοῦ Κτίσαντος, τῇ θέσει γίνεσθε φῶτα δεύτερα· εὐλογητὸς εἰ, κράζοντες, ὁ Θεός, οἱ τῶν Ἀγγέλων χοροί.

26-56, which in Byzantine rite is known as seventh biblical ode. Phrases from the seventh biblical ode, notably “Blessed is God,” often function as a refrain in strophes of the seventh ode of Byzantine kanones. In the biblical text this ode is sung by Azariah and his two companions in the furnace. Here, however, it is angels who sing the hymn of the three human youths—a reversal of the human congregation singing the angelic Trisagion at the eucharistic liturgy.

Moreover, just like saints, the angels have a direct connection with humans (most notably Michael). Besides their willingness to act as intercessors on behalf of humanity, angels actively seek contact with human beings by inviting them to co-celebrate, and rejoice over human participation in their feast, as seen above. As a reward, the angels show human beings their glory, which causes joy similar to divine contemplation:

Today the commander-in-chief sounds the trumpet loudly, calling all to a joyful banquet. He presents those who glorify the Lord of all with his shining as treats.¹²³

Rather than fear and awe, angels in hymnography instil love and desire: “look upon the desire of my soul, look upon my heart’s clear disposition towards you.”¹²⁴ The faithful praise the angels with the same terms employed in hymns celebrating Mary Theotokos, the saints—and God. Joseph the Hymnographer, for example, uses the following verbs of praise to Michael in a single kanon:¹²⁵ praise in song (ὕμνολογῶ, l. 8, 55, 101), worship (σέβω, l. 40), praise in song (ἀνυμνῶ, l. 88, 336, 499), love (στέργω, l. 89), honour (γεραίρω, l. 111), magnify (μεγαλύνω, l. 208), praise (εὐφημῶ, l. 261, 296), sing in praise (ὕμνῶ, l. 354).

The humanisation of angels is also reflected in the short hagiographic texts for the saints of the year known as Synaxarion. The biographical pattern of these Synaxarion notes also apply to the angel Michael. Thus, we encounter the praise of the celebrated person’s high origin:

When the all-good God who loves humankind wanted to create this world, first he reflected on creating the angelic and heavenly powers, and the thought became deed.¹²⁶

In place of ascetic struggles or martyrdom, Michael is praised for his steadfast loyalty to God, as he did not follow Satan in his fall and hindered the fall of further angels. For this, God rewarded him as he rewards the saints:

123. AHG, III, kanon 17, l. 1–8: Σαλπίσας ἐξάκουστον ὁ ἀρχιστράτηγος σήμερον συγκαλεῖται ἅπαντας εἰς εὐωχίαν φαιδράν, ὡς ἐδέσματα τὰς αὐτοῦ ἐπιλάμψεις προθεῖς τοῖς δοξάζουσι τὸν πάντων Κύριον.

124. Ios. Hymn., Kanones, ed. Toma (quoted n. 110), kanon 11, p. 115, l. 36–8: ἴδε μου τὸν πόθον τῆς ψυχῆς, ἴδε μου τῆς καρδίας/ τὴν καθαρὰν πρὸς σὲ διάθεσιν.

125. AHG, III, kanon 18.

126. Synaxarium ecclesiae Constantinopolitanae e codice Sirmondiano nunc Berolinensi, Adjectis synaxariis selectis (Propylaeum ad Acta sanctorum novembris), rec. H. Delehaye, Bruxellae 1902 (repr. 1954), col. 203–4, here 203, l. 5–9: Βουληθεὶς ὁ πανάγαθος καὶ φιλόανθρωπος Θεὸς τοῦτον τὸν κόσμον δημιουργῆσαι, πρῶτον ἐνένόησε τὰς ἀγγελικὰς δυνάμεις καὶ οὐρανίους καὶ τὸ ἐννόημα γέγονεν ἔργον.

Because he kept the gratitude to the master like a most faithful servant [...] he was set as principle of the archangelic and spiritual orders by the ruler of all.¹²⁷

Hence, the praised one is granted the power to work miracles in favour of the faithful. The archangel's apparitions in the Old Testament count among these miracles.¹²⁸ This structure introduces (or at least emphasises) a temporal dimension in the life of the archangel, one that is in sharp contrast to the notion of the atemporal praise of the ministering angelic hosts.

In this article I concentrated on Christian ritual texts encountered in the liturgical books of the Byzantine Church. These texts bear witness to different angelologies: angels are not equally present in all these texts. And whenever they are present, their function varies. In the Euchologion, angels are mainly ministers surrounding the throne of God. They are mentioned primarily in the eucharistic liturgies, in which the visible and invisible world unite in the praise of God. In the daily services, angels are again surrounding the throne of God and giving praise. However, mentions of angels are infrequent; they are mostly short divine epithets such as "Lord of the hosts." Angels as guardians of human beings are mentioned occasionally in petitions asking God to dispatch a guardian angel. In other services and prayers, angels appear even less frequently, in functions depending on the occasion of the prayer. Yet, some prayers for protection in lay spaces appropriate elements from non-liturgical traditions for seeking protection, including angels as guardians against demons. This is notably common around childbirth. Some of these texts, such as several prayers on the day of birth, have the typical structure and diction of an Euchologion prayer. Other texts are formulated as exorcisms, addressing the danger directly, invoking individual named or unnamed angels, using historiolae and nomina barbara, etc. These texts are rare in early Euchologia, but they become more frequent from the fifteenth century onwards.

The angelology exemplified in these features is consistent with the concerns of the church authors quoted at the beginning of this article. Namely: God is the absolute Lord of heaven and earth. Accordingly, the hosts of angels surrounding and ministering him and performing tasks such as guarding people and registering their deeds at his command, only testify to his infinite power. This angelology is more or less consistent throughout the history of the Euchologion. This consistency is noteworthy, considering that Euchologia varied from manuscript to manuscript and that there was no centralised instance to control the contents of liturgical books.

127. DELEHAYE, Synaxarium (quoted n. 126), app., l. 39–41: Τὴν πρὸς τὸν Δεσπότην εὐγνωμοσύνην ὥς πιστότατος οἰκέτης διαφυλάξας [...] τῶν ἀρχαγγελικῶν καὶ νοερῶν τάξεων πρωτεύειν ἐτάχθη παρὰ τοῦ Παντοκράτορος.

128. Ibid., app., l. 42–7.

Early hymnography mostly reflects this angelology: Whenever they do not make the dramatisation of biblical events more vivid, angels are the hosts surrounding the throne of God. They are not addressed, and their function is strictly distinguished from that of sanctified human beings—who are addressed directly, by name or rank, and asked to help.

The transition from Late Antiquity to the Byzantine Middle Ages marks a shift in the angelology of the hymns. From this point on, angels are more and more venerated as saints. This ‘humanisation’ of angels reaches its peak in the hymnography of the kanones, especially from the ninth century onwards. At this point individual angels—Michael and to a lesser degree Gabriel—become among the most popular figures of Byzantine hagiographic hymnography. Similar to saints, angels became directly addressed in prayer. This did not constitute a departure from the Late Antique concerns about not worshipping angels as Gods. Instead, in the Byzantine hymnography of the kanones, we see angels move closer to human beings. Together with holy human persons, the angels bridge the space between God and humanity. They are not the powerful beings one can invoke to frighten the demons and achieve protection. Nor are they the angelic hosts at God’s throne, who interrupt their praise to attend to human affairs only when they are dispatched by God. Instead, they are the ones seeking communication with human beings. As they are depicted in Byzantine hymns, angels enjoy human hymns, they invite people to their feast, they listen to people’s requests, and they can even be moved to intercede and transfer people’s concerns to God. Angels served as a point of address, when the divine seemed too remote to be addressed directly. In Byzantine hagiographic hymnography, God’s supreme authority is uncontested—but the vast space between God and humanity is populated by benign, human or humanlike beings.

Eirini Afentoulidou

Wien, Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften
Institut für Mittelalterforschung, Byzanzforschung

RÉSUMÉS – ABSTRACTS

Komait ABDALLAH, L'iconographie des anges en Syrie à l'époque byzantine p. 521

The archaeological work in Syria has revealed evidence about the existence of angel's cult in Late Antiquity, well attested by the texts of the Syriac church fathers. The majority are epigraphic documents. Less known than epigraphy, iconography also testify the spread of this cult. The image of the angels is found on buildings, especially in churches, and on devotional objects. These iconographic documents confirm widespread use of the images of the angels in Syria in the Byzantine era and the relations with the propagation of their cult in the region at that time.

Eirini AFENTOULIDOU, Ministering spirits, guardians, intercessors: the discourse of angels in Byzantine liturgical texts p. 631

This chapter focuses on Christian ritual texts encountered in the liturgical books of the Byzantine Church, notably priestly prayers, and hymns. These texts bear witness to different angelologies. Angels are not equally present in all these texts and whenever they are present, their function varies. In priestly prayers, angels appear as ministering spirits at the throne of God and they protect human beings at God's command, according to the angelology codified by church authorities. Some prayers for protection in lay spaces go a step further in asking for protection through guardian angels, appropriating elements from non-liturgical traditions. From the 7th-8th centuries onwards hymns dedicated to the angels, notably Michael and Gabriel, proliferate. In these, angels become more and more humanised, and their veneration resembles the cult of saints.

Stéphanie ANTHONIOZ, Mutations angéliques ? p. 3

Written in the 2nd century BCE, the book of Daniel testifies to an unprecedented angelic interest (Dn 9:2Salamyeh; 10:5-6.13.21), confirmed by Qumran manuscripts, the Gospels and the apocryphal literature as a whole. Though angels are little known in the Hebrew Bible, they become the object of new theological speculations. The question of the birth of an angelology is not new, but it is not easy to write its history. It is clearly concentrated between the period of the closure of the Torah/Pentateuch, in the Persian-Achaemenid period, and the first centuries of the Christian era. This birth seems to be related to some particular traditions and not all texts reflect this new interest. In order to shed light on these developments, we first consider the etymology and semantics of the root *l'k. We then study the angel mal'āk among other mediating entities of the divine. This will allow us to propose an in-depth examination of the biblical angels, before questioning the historical and theological conditions of these evolutions.

Inventer les anges de l'Antiquité à Byzance : conception, représentation, perception.
éd. par D. LAURITZEN (Travaux et mémoires 25/2), Paris 2021.

Luc BRISSON, Les anges chez Proclus

p. 173

In his Elements of Theology, Proclus (5th c.) situates angels, along with demons and heroes, at a specific level of the hierarchy of his metaphysical system, seemingly adopting a tripartition derived from the Chaldean Oracles. In so doing, he remains faithful to the project of the Neoplatonic School of Athens, which aimed at demonstrating the agreement between the scientific theology of Plato, as set forth in the second part of the Parmenides, and the Orphic Rhapsodies and the Chaldean Oracles. We are thus in a context in which philosophy has become theology: a scientific theology opposed to Christianity, and derived from the allegorical interpretation of the central myth of the Phaedrus and the Myth of Er in Book X of the Republic.

Béatrice CASEAU, Jean-Claude CHEYNET, La place des anges dans l'iconographie des sceaux

p. 307

This chapter focuses on Byzantine seals and analyses the presence of angels, comparing their iconography with other types of artistic representations. Angels appear on imperial seals of the late 6th century. They replace Victories, winged figures close to angels in iconography. They are also found in biblical scenes, such as the Annunciation, the baptism of Christ, the Crucifixion, the Women at the Tomb, the Ascension and the Dormition. These scenes are rare on mediaeval seals, except for the Annunciation. After the period of Iconoclasm, Archangel Michael is quite frequently depicted on seals, because he is perceived as an effective protector, his shrines are popular and have been developing since the High Middle Ages. The archangel is often chosen by sigillants who bear his first name. He does not seem to be particularly chosen by eunuchs.

François CASSINGENA-TRÉVEDY, Les messagers du haut silence : l'angélogie d'Ephrem de Nisibe (Hymnes sur la Foi) : entre fonction liturgique et apophatisme exemplaire

p. 617

Ephraem de Nisibis, a Syriac writer in the middle of the 4th century, employs a rich angelology throughout his hymns. In his collection of "Hymns on the Faith", he attacks the rationalist posture of Arian theology by relying on scriptural examples and the referring to the model of the silent and reverent angels. They therefore appear as models of the apophatic theology that he promotes. They are also actors in a celestial liturgy of which earth is a reflection, according to the concept widely shared by the Syro-Antiochian liturgical tradition.

Paolo CESARETTI, Basema HAMARNEH, Visualising angels in the Life of Andrew, the Holy Fool (BHG 115z). Its sources and parallels

p. 695

This chapter examines the various ways in which angels are sketched in the Life of Andrew salos (BHG 115z). The composition of the hagiographic narrative concerning this fictional Holy Fool, whose life is set in an artificial 5th century Constantinopolitan context, is dated to the 10th century. It is characterized, in general, by alternating episodes with a strong visual impact, long conceptual—even abstract—digressions, and more specifically, by the ascendancy and authority of its protagonist, Andrew, on angels. This aspect is relevant when the text is compared to its 7th century model, the Life of Symeon salos (BHG 1677) by Leontios of Neapolis, and in parallel to the Life of Basil the Younger (BHG 264), one more fictional saint whose life is a product of 10th century Constantinopolitan hagiography. These texts, despite differences in authorship and settings, address various patterns of the reception of angels, especially seen from the perspective of human interaction with God, and the strive towards a proper Christian life and behaviour. The life of Andrew delineates the effective power of angels in the struggle against demons, and in fending off evil spirits. However, the stories and episodes in which angels are outlined seem to respond to a specific instructive intent, and touch upon a wide range of eschatological concerns in which angels appear to be utterly decisive.

Jean-Charles COULON, Le développement de la légende de Hārūt et Mārūt et des origines de la magie dans les premiers siècles de l'islam

p. 891

Hārūt and Mārūt are two angels ambiguously mentioned in a single verse of the Qur'ān. While angels are supposed to be created of light, inhabiting the heavens and totally subservient to the divine order, Hārūt and Mārūt are notably accused of teaching magic and the art of separating spouses in Babylon. This verse thus poses a number of problems, which have been reflected in an abundant exegesis that has attempted both to identify these angels and to develop their story in order to answer the theological questions they raise, including the question of the angels' sinfulness or their relationship to human beings. One account includes two angels who descended to earth and were seduced by Venus, who caused them to commit sins, for which they were punished in Babylon. Studies have been made of the possible ancient sources of these two angels in the Qur'ān (Indian, Zoroastrian, Hebrew, etc.), but the aim of this chapter is to trace the development of the exegesis of these verses in the early centuries of Islam, to see how the story was formed and how exegetes tried to reconcile this verse with the rest of the Qur'ān and its theological issues.

Korshi DOSOO, Ministers of fire and spirit: knowing angels in the Coptic magical papyri

p. 403

The Christianisation of Egypt, completed by the fifth century, produced a shift in the conception of the superhuman world found in magical texts, with the traditional Greek and Egyptian gods being almost entirely replaced by divine beings of the Christian religion—the Trinity, the saints, and, above all, the angels. This discussion surveys the role of angels in Christian magical texts written in Coptic, dating to between the fourth and twelfth centuries, focusing on two aspects—their role as agents of the divine will, which may be experienced positively or negatively by human beings; and the ways in which these (normally) unseen beings make their presence felt through their effects upon the material world. Beginning with a survey of the role of angels in older Graeco-Egyptian and Jewish magic, we then turn to the key roles of angels in Coptic magical texts—the gathering angel, the angelic name, the helping angel, and the dangerous angel.

Philippe FAURE, Le rayonnement angélique de Byzance en Occident (x^e-xiii^e siècle) p. 809

This study attempts to identify the modalities of the Byzantine influence on Western medieval art from the 10th to the 13th century in the field of the representation of angels, through the analysis of some major iconographic themes and motives. The main artistic centres concerned (Italy, Sicily, Catalonia) show that the Byzantine representation of angels is closely linked to the visionary, glorious and theophanic dimension of Christianity, which is expressed in particular in the conceptions of the kingdom of God and the heavenly court. The spread of this inspiration is so powerful that it can be found in works painted in Germany, France, and even Great Britain. The treatment of themes such as the angels beside Christ or the Virgin, the heavenly Jerusalem, the celestial hierarchy and the Last Judgement bear witness to this inspiration, but also to a work of appropriation and adaptation. The figures of the archangels are particularly significant in this process: as prince of heaven, Michael appears to be associated with the dramaturgy, eschatology and liturgical celebration. Gabriel, on the other hand, benefited from the promotion of the founding scene of the Annunciation. The creative process led to the integration of Byzantine models in the active form of quotation and the invention of new works. The orientation of Western piety in the 13th century, which tended to focus on the humanity and the Passion of Christ, was accompanied by a gradual retreat from Byzantine inspiration. However, the hieratic nature of the angelic figures tended to be maintained, within the framework of another pole of devotion, the representations of the Virgin in majesty, inseparable from her angelic escort.

Ryan HAECKER, Origen's speculative angelology p. 95

Origen of Alexandria (fl. AD 184-253/4) should be acknowledged as the founder of a Christian science of angels, or angelology. In 'On First Principles' (1.5-8), he introduces angels as the first created 'rational beings' who, in contemplating the divine Logos, freely choose to direct their will as holy angels in service to or as wicked demons in antagonism against the love of God. The angels and demons thereafter guide the movements of all spirits, substances, and signs in the created world. Origen's angelology has been regarded as an early Christian alternative to Middle Platonic daemonologies. After Karl Barth, his angelology has often been dispensed from Christian theology. However, as Jean Daniélou has observed, Origen departs from the principles of Platonic daemonology in affirming that angelic mediacy must pass away like the light of the stars before the Logos of Christ. He had assimilated the relative mediacy of the angels to the absolute mediation of Christ. And in assimilating angelic to Christic mediacy, Origen also assimilates the reason with which the world is moved to the divine Logos of Christ in God as Trinity. Origen's angelology can thus be read before and after Barth to recommend a new speculative angelology.

Magdalena ŁAPTAŚ, The apotropaic function of the archangels in Nubian art p. 479

People in the Nile Valley lived in the constant fear of monsters, demons and other misfortunes threatening them. Therefore, they had to turn to God for protection. God however was far in the Heavens, while his angelic messengers were closer, moving between celestial and earthly spaces. To ensure their protection, their images and names were placed wherever the exposure to the evil forces was the greatest. An attribution of these protective functions is not always clear from the way the archangels were depicted in art. The figures are shown frontally, frequently freestanding. For the most part, it is the context or accompanying inscriptions that allow an image to be identified as an archangel in its apotropaic function. Therefore, for this chapter, three groups have been chosen connected with the protection of buildings and their interiors; protection of the bodies of living Nubians and finally with deceased. Writing this paper, the author was aware that the subject is so rich that the presented material and its interpretations are only an introduction to further research, which will be gradually undertaken.

Delphine LAURITZEN, Des Amours et des anges dans l'art de l'Antiquité tardive p. 207

Angels are usually depicted anthropomorphically. We argue here that this appearance was drawn from Eros/Cupid, the god of love in Ancient Classical mythology. The paper compares and contrasts five main features: wings, age, genre, clothing, and number. Both cupids and angels are intermediaries. Two horizontal figures flying on each side of a central medallion is a favourite theme of Roman sarcophagi. In a funerary context, it symbolizes the transition from life to death. Transposed to angels, the motive encompasses a broader meaning. Angels (angeloi) are messengers who cross both ways between the divine and the human level. Moreover, angels never supplant cupids in Late Antique art. One may think that they served different purposes: decorative vs religious. The reality appears more nuanced. The meaning of cupids and angels' images is therefore reconsidered on the ground of their common, protective function.

Frederick LAURITZEN, Psellos' angels between Homer, Proclus, and Dionysius
(Phil. Min. 1.42 Duffy) p. 739

Psellos' essay on Homer's Iliad 4.1-4 offers one an insight into his angelology. He interprets Homer's gods as being God's angels. He achieves this identification by combining his reading of Plato's Cratylus with the Gospel of John. Moreover, he associates the angels with imperial courtiers. The analysis is the result of his reading of Proclus and specifically his commentary on the Timaeus of Plato. His analysis also appears to be in tune with the recent treaty of hierarchy written by Nicetas Stethatos. Thus, Psellos interprets the essay, not as an allegory, but as a transposition (μεταπόιησις) of myth into truth.

Maria LIDOVA, Divine Presence: gazing upon the angels in Early Byzantine art p. 241

This chapter focuses on the selection of roles played by angels in early Byzantine visual culture. In church decorations, the winged beings regularly appeared in pairs as guardians, assuming the likeness of courtiers or military officials. It is argued that within related depictions which show two winged guardians flanking a central motif, the significance of heavenly beings could vary depending on what was placed at the centre, be it a holy figure, a sacred object, or even an ecclesiastical space. Angels could also be depicted in narrative compositions representing the events of the Old and New Testaments. In these compositions, they often performed the role of divine agents enabling the realization of God's will. The chapter analyses the significance of angelic representations in visual rendering of the scriptural and apocryphal events using the rich and detailed programme of the so-called Murano ivory diptych (6th c.) as an example.

Jean-Pierre MAHÉ, Anges d'Arménie : gloire divine, liturgie, hiérarchie p. 847

In the Armenian tradition, angels are the emissaries of divine glory, that is to say, not mere envoys, but the living substance of the radiance of the divinity. Angels and glory are closely associated in the liturgy and in the decoration of the vessels, instruments and fabrics of the celebration. By representing the wonder of the angels before the Eucharist, this mystagogy stages the salutary effect of the Incarnation, the restoration of the first glory of Adam, created in the image of God. According to the Areopagite, the nine degrees of the angelic orders are the heavenly archetype of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. At the end of the seventh century, the Armenian Church structured itself accordingly to justify its autocephaly.

Marc MALEVEZ, The angels in Late Egyptian Antiquity: a study mainly based on two travelogues p. 341

After an introduction to the monastic spiritual approach described by Evagrius Ponticus, we evoke the travelogues in general, then more specifically The Mission of Paphnutius / Life of Onnophrius, of which we will present the various manuscripts and fragments of the Nile tradition known to this day, before we turn to the second travelogue analysed in this chapter, the Story of Pambo / Life of Cyrus, less famous and whose Coptic and Ethiopian versions we have studied to date. This will allow us to question the angelic nature, before focusing on the functions of angels in the world of Coptic desert monks, through our two texts. The conclusion is followed by quotations from the studied manuscripts not mentioned in the body of the chapter.

Jérôme MOREAU, Les anges, λόγοι de Dieu dans l'exégèse de Philon d'Alexandrie p. 43

Philo of Alexandria presents the angels (angeloi) as logoi. While he carefully dismisses the word daimon for the superstition it carries, he still refers to a Platonic demonology, where the angels are intermediary beings, messengers to and from God, but only insofar as it is confirmed by an exegesis of Scripture. Indeed, as always in his works, his conceptions lie only on the (little) information about angels he can find in the Pentateuch. His system allows him to claim that perfect human souls may also be qualified as angels, as they truly act as intermediaries between God and human beings, and that the Logos in itself, as well as God's Pneuma, are angeloi. However, Philo's intellectual angelology does not allow him to fully explain texts in which the angels are told to appear sensibly to someone, despite their purely intellectual nature: he is compelled to avoid this problem rather than addressing it directly.

Cécile MORRISSON, Les anges sur la monnaie byzantine : de l'omniprésence à la personnalisation p. 293

The image of the angel on coins replaces that of the Victory starting from the solidi of Justin I in 522. Its assimilation to the Eternal Victory of Rome gave it the wings that would become its characteristic feature. It also completed the slow Christianisation of this element derived from Hellenistic and Imperial coinage. In the 5th century numerous Christian attributes (labarum, globus cruciger, cross) were added and later disappeared completely at the beginning of the 6th century. From the 11th century onwards, the predominant image is that of the Archangel Michael, the patron saint of the military aristocracy. The archangel remains associated with the ideal of power and illustrates the protection granted to the emperor by the Pantocrator of whom he is, after the angels, another winged envoy. The late numismatics of the Thessaloniki workshop made the wings, attached to an effigy of the sovereign or alone, an imperial attribute, symbol of power and legitimacy.

François PACHA-MIRAN, Images des anges dans l'enluminure syriaque de l'Antiquité tardive

p. 267

Images of angels rarely appear in Late Antique Syriac manuscripts. Only two witnesses dating back to the 6th century contain such representations: Florence, Biblioteca Laurenziana, Cod. Plut. I 56, and Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, ms. syr. 33. Yet, the evidence of Syriac angels turns out to be essential to a better understanding of the formation and diffusion of iconographic patterns that marked Medieval art, such as the Annunciation and the Resurrection. These two manuscripts firstly attest the existence of a common visual language, shared among the Eastern Christian communities. The angels simultaneously adopt a role of messengers, witnesses, and heralds, that originates both in Christian literature and Classical art. The images also allow us to examine the different methods of layout and illustration used by Syriac artists, and the close relationships that linked the miniatures to the biblical texts. The presence of inscriptions on and around the miniatures reveals an astonishing concern for the creation of an ‘iconographic soundspace’. Through a careful depiction of the dialogues, the angels thereby embody the pronounced sensitivity of Syriac Christianity toward the written word and the dialogue. Between the lines, they finally evoke the vocal performance of hymns and canticles, sung during the main liturgical celebrations.

Ilaria L.E. RAMELLI, Conceptualities of angels in Imperial and Late Antiquity: nature and bodies of angels, degrees of corporeality, and comparative angelologies / daemonologies in “Pagan” and Christian Platonism

p. 115

The chapter studies the ways in which angels were conceptualised in Imperial and Late Antiquity, their nature or essence (for Origen, the same as that of all rational creatures), and their bodies. The reflection on their corporeality or incorporeality will be framed within the theories of degrees of corporeality in both “pagan” and Christian Platonism and within the relativity of notions such as “corporeal/incorporeal” and “material/immaterial.” Attention will be paid to the genderlessness of angels, contrasted with the apparent descriptions of Satan as a male creature. Finally, a brief comparative study will be offered of d(a)emonologies in “pagan” and Christian Platonism. This will point out, among other interesting elements, the partial overlap of angels and good δαίμονες.

Denis J.-J. ROBICHAUD, The Star of the Magi or the afterlife of Chaldean angels in Iamblichus, Proclus, Psellos, Pletho, and Ficino p. 763

This chapter studies how angelic epiphanies are understood in the exegetical tradition on the Chaldean Oracles in the writings of the Syrian Iamblichus, the Greek Proclus, two Byzantines, Michael Psellos and Georgius Gemistus Pletho, and the Florentine Marsilio Ficino. Working backwards from Ficino, the culmination of this philosophical approach to the Chaldean Oracles, it reconstructs this tradition through Ficino's sources for his sermon the De stella magorum and his eighteen-volume Platonic Theology. Examining new manuscript evidence, it demonstrates how this tradition of Chaldean epiphanies is central to Ficino's understanding of the Star of the Magi in the Gospel of Matthew and the angelic apparition to the shepherds in the Gospel of Luke, as well as the philosophical considerations on angels in Ficino's Platonic Theology.

Hélène ROCHARD, Le trône divin et les quatre Vivants dans la peinture égyptienne (VI^e-XIII^e siècle) p. 435

The depiction of Christ surrounded by the four living creatures is a widespread image of medieval art and a well-studied theme of Christian iconography. This type known as Maiestas Domini and principally based on the John's vision of the throne of God in Heaven and the vision of the Old Testament prophet Ezekiel is one way to visualize the divine. Christ in Majesty occurs in various forms in the Early Byzantine world and Egyptian examples provide several variants among which are the oldest remains of Christian art. In most early Egyptian wall paintings, the throne of Christ is carried by four beasts and four wheels. This chapter focuses on the allegorical interpretation of the divine throne and the living creatures in Late Antique and Medieval Egypt.

Artur RODZIEWICZ, Heft Sur – the Seven Angels of the Yezidi tradition and Harran p. 943

The chapter, based mainly on field research conducted by the author in Iraq, Turkey, and Georgia, is devoted to the Yezidi cult of the Seven Angels and their leader, called the Peacock Angel. Following an introduction to the Yezidi religion, it focuses on the relationship between the Yezidi concept of God's essence (sur) and the Seven Angels, who, like the seven Yezidi saints and the seven planets, are its manifestations and objects of religious worship. Apart from an attempt to answer the question which of the heavenly bodies the Peacock Angel is connected with and to which angel it corresponds to in other religious traditions, another object representing him, the sanjak, is discussed. The search for the origins of the Yezidi cult points to several other religions which also refer to the seven angels, and concludes with the Harranian 'Sabians', whose beliefs were a mixture of elements of Platonism and local traditions. The preserved accounts about them allow the conclusion that, after the destruction of their temples, when the last representatives of the Sabians migrated to the area of Mardin and Mosul, they could have joined the religious community that was forming there between the 12th and 14th centuries and which became known as Yezidis.

Anna SALSANO, The archangel Michael in Coptic homilies

p. 383

On the basis of the roles of the archangels Michael and Raphael in Coptic tradition and specifically fifteen Coptic homilies on the archangel Michael, one can say that he has different functions including devil's antagonist, intercessor, avenger, healer, rescuer, guardian, messenger, guide, encourager, archistrategus, tamer of beasts, Christ's fellow and psychopomp. Some roles show a specialization towards a particular aspect, others are more diversified. This chapter will analyse these roles and the related epithets applied to the archangel Michael. It will also include the comparison of these homilies with other types of literary texts such as hagiographic and apocryphal sources.

Georges SIDÉRIS, Quelques remarques sur les anges eunuques dans le Récit sur la construction de Sainte-Sophie

p. 721

Through an analysis of the presence of eunuch angels and eunuchs in the Narrative on the Construction of Hagia Sophia and the sources used by the anonymous author, the chapter proposes to date the writing of the Narrative during the reign of Leo VI the Wise (886-912), in the circles close to the emperor. It also argues that the work was perhaps written by an imperial eunuch. Concerning the eunuch angels, the author was inspired in particular by the Life of John the Chaplain composed by Leontios of Neapolis in the 7th century and known at the time in Byzantium. For the eunuchs he consulted sources dating from the reigns of Justinian I and Justin II, from which he drew an onomastic reserve. He was able to consult these sources in the Palace library. The aim of the Narrative is to exalt Leo VI, the new Justinian, to assert his authority over Hagia Sophia and the Imperial Church, to promote and legitimise the court eunuchs through the angels, their role with the Emperor and in the imperial ceremonial, as well as their presence in Constantinople, the city of eunuchs. The Narrative is presented as a historical and patriographic text, composed according to the technique of ekphrasis, the art of description, but it is in fact a work of propaganda.

Michel TARDIEU, Les anges du bouddhisme

p. 921

The god-kings of Buddhist mythology are recognisable by the name of angels, given to them in the non-Christianised epilogues of the Arabic versions of the History of Barlaam and Jehoshaphat. There are four of them, installed at the cardinal points as guardians of the universe, they intervene in dreams and transport their protégés in the air. What environment favoured the passage of the god-kings from the polytheistic Indian world to a monotheistic system or systems? The transfer cannot depend on Byzantine Greek writing, since it derives from Arabic via Georgian. Nor can it come from Qur'anic angelology, since the narrative, transmitted by the Ismaili and Shi'a Imamite compilations, is only superficially Islamised. The study compares the representations of the infant oracle with the biographical episodes of the Buddhist legend, as attested by the Barlaamian literature, by Rashid al-Din and in the Chinese Manichean iconography preserved in Japan. It follows from the comparison that the transfer of the god-kings into angels took place through contact with the Eastern Manichaeans.

Sipana TCHAKERIAN, Anges de pierre en Géorgie et en Arménie tardo-antiques : le témoignage des monuments crucifères à stèle quadrilatérale

p. 547

In Late Antique Armenia and Iberia, the cult of the Cross was materialized through an original type of carved architecture: the cross-bearing monument with a four-sided stela. This paper investigates the role of the angels in the decorative program of these monuments and in the experience of the faithful praying before them. After evoking the depictions of angels represented on diverse media throughout the region, the various types of angels identified on monumental crosses (angels, archangels, seraphim, cherubim) and their iconography are analysed. It appears that the angel contributes to the primary function of these peculiar monuments, namely the exaltation of the Cross of Christ. Moreover, the study of the angels' iconographical formulas and their display on the monument provides noteworthy information for a better understanding of these structures, especially when it comes to the hierarchization of their decorative program and to their functions as objects of prayer and sacred space. These monuments take advantage of their morphology, both vertical and polygonal, to offer the faithful a dual dynamic space, both circular and ascending. Through its plural presence, the angel accompanied the ritual apprehension of these monumental crosses.

Marie-Emmanuelle TORRES, « Chanter comme les anges ». Discours et pratiques d'une sensorialité « isangelique » dans les monastères cénobitiques (IX^e-XV^e siècle)

p. 665

From the 8th–9th century onwards, the Stoudios monastery required the coenobite monk to “live like the angels.” In this way, the monk could win divine favour for the Empire and for the founders. In fact, the imitation of the angels through chanting occupies most of the monk's life, providing him with a reason for being, an ascetic practice and an effective spiritual exercise. This chanting wins divine favour, contributes to the sanctification of the monk and allows him to approach the angelic model. This support in asceticism makes the isangelic transformation possible. To be effective, this chanting must be carried out without error, and each founder acts as a “vocal coach.” He chooses the songs, the places, the voices... but also the state of mind, the sensations, the emotions, the body attitude that are appropriate. This definition of the singer's body and voice is directly inspired by the common perception of angels. All these musical indications shed light on the way the angels' senses and body are understood. These typika thus show how to make an anthropomorphic angel.

Antonis TSAKALOS, Χιλιάδες ἀρχαγγέλων καὶ μυριάδες ἀγγέλων.
Angels in the painted decoration of Karanlık kilise, Cappadocia

p. 577

In the katholikon of the Cappadocian monastery of Karanlık kilise, the abundance of angelic portraits is in perfect accordance with the topos of the “angelic life” in monastic practice—the moral perfection monks and ascetics seek to achieve. Our analysis underlines the diversity of the archangels' functions as healers, protectors, guardians, and intercessors during life and at the moment of death, as well as intermediaries between the faithful and God. Two major themes are highlighted in the sophisticated iconographic programme: the reality of the Incarnation of the Logos and Christ's dual nature, in combination with the idea of defending the Orthodox faith against heretics or other religious apostates (which is unsurprising for the border region of Cappadocia during the agitated period of the second half of the 11th c.). The innovative arrangements in Karanlık kilise's painted decoration are so numerous that they should not be considered as simple confusion or random coincidence. The dynamic network of interactions among the images constitutes an important indication of the seven donors' interventions in shaping the architectural setting and the layout of this exceptional iconographic programme, connected with certain liturgical practices.

Alexandros TSAKOS, Invoking graphically archangels: the case study of the Archangel Michael in Christian Nubia

p. 461

The role of intermediate beings in the belief system of African Christianity cannot be overestimated. In the Sudanese Nile Valley, three Christian kingdoms thrived during the period that is termed "Medieval" or "Christian Nubia", and from the rich archaeological record that they have produced it appears that the most popular intermediate being was the Archangel Michael. The intermediation of Michael was manifested in his culturally conditioned appearances to humans, according to theological norms or by expressions of art and language. All manifestations of this archangel—as of all angels—were a message, either from God to the humans or from the humans to God. The study offers a qualitative presentation of the forms that these messages take, with a focus on the letter-shaped ones, and especially monograms and cryptograms. These are perceived as "grapho-linguistic techniques" which knowledgeable individuals use on the basis of a set of skills that has been termed "graphicacy". In some cases, the message is the archangel himself. New interpretations for understanding Nubian Christianity—as well as related Oriental Christianities—open up by investigating this possibility.

Françoise VINEL, Les anges, proches de Dieu, proches des hommes : jalons d'une réflexion, du livre de Tobit à la littérature chrétienne des premiers siècles

p. 69

The Old Testament's Book of Tobit was probably written during the 2nd century BCE. The short tale facilitates a comprehensive understanding of the angelic nature and qualities in the Biblical and Christian tradition. In the context of the development of Jewish angelology, Raphael's role with Tobit and his family reveals an angelic invisible people who are both close to God and close to the believer people who need some help. In Early Christian literature, especially in Origen's De oratione, the idea of guardian angels is formed. An important aspect of these celestial beings is their eschatological and liturgical missions. According to biblical images, the angelic army inhabits the whole universe and is ready to fight against evil's powers, as well as never stops praising God and inviting human beings to join its prayer. If we keep also in mind the legacy of the Greek daimones, there is some evidence that, from Origen to Augustine, the angelic Christian doctrine takes consistency, before Dionysius' developments and synthesis.

Marilena VLAD, Dionysius' concept of Hierarchy

p. 189

The chapter concerns both Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite and Proclus, specifically the idea of a structured reality. Dionysius' Celestial Hierarchy, even if influenced by Proclus' perspective, transforms the understanding the structure of the reality, namely as a hierarchy, or sacred governing of the reality. There is a double act of revelation at work between the hierarchy and the divine principle or thearchy, so that the role of the angelic hierarchy can only be understood inside this reciprocal manifestation. The difference between Dionysius' celestial hierarchy and Proclus' structure of the intelligible world, reveals that the hierarchy is not the highest object of knowledge, but rather a system through which God transmits knowledge and manifests his presence throughout the reality. In Dionysius' perspective, there is no knowledge about the hierarchy, but only knowledge transmitted inside the hierarchy, so that his own interpretative activity becomes a hierarchical act.

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Avant-propos et remerciements	VII
Introduction	IX
Liste des abréviations	XV

I. – MAÏEUTIQUE DE L'ANGE

Stéphanie ANTHONIOZ, Mutations angéliques ?	3
Jérôme MOREAU, Les anges, λόγοι de Dieu dans l'exégèse de Philon d'Alexandrie	43
Françoise VINEL, Les anges, proches de Dieu, proches des hommes : jalons d'une réflexion, du livre de Tobit à la littérature chrétienne des premiers siècles	69
Ryan HAECKER, Origen's speculative angelology	95
Ilaria L. E. RAMELLI, Conceptualities of angels in Imperial and Late Antiquity: nature and bodies of angels, degrees of corporeality, and comparative angelologies / daemonologies in "Pagan" and Christian Platonism	115
Luc BRISSON, Les anges chez Proclus	173
Marilena VLAD, Dionysius' concept of Hierarchy	189

II. – IMAGES ET USAGES

A. Dynamiques visuelles

Delphine LAURITZEN, Des Amours et des anges dans l'art de l'Antiquité tardive	207
Maria LIDOVA, Divine Presence: gazing upon the angels in Early Byzantine art	241
François PACHA MIRAN, Images des anges dans l'enluminure syriaque de l'Antiquité tardive	267
Cécile MORRISON, Les anges sur la monnaie byzantine : de l'omniprésence à la personnalisation	293
Béatrice CASEAU et Jean-Claude CHEYNET, La place des anges dans l'iconographie des sceaux	307

B. Terre d'Égypte

Marc MALEVEZ, The angels in Late Egyptian Antiquity: a study mainly based on two travelogues	341
Anna SALSANO, The Archangel Michael in Coptic homilies	383
Korshi DOSOO, Ministers of fire and spirit: knowing angels in the Coptic magical papyri	403
Hélène ROCHARD, Le trône divin et les quatre Vivants dans la peinture égyptienne (VI ^e -XIII ^e siècle)	435

C. Lieux angéliques

Alexandros TSAKOS, Invoking graphically archangels: the case study of the Archangel Michael in Christian Nubia	461
Magdalena ŁAPTAŚ, The apotropaic function of the archangels in Nubian art	479
Komait ABDALLAH, L'iconographie des anges en Syrie à l'époque byzantine	521
Sipana TCHAKERIAN, Anges de pierre en Géorgie et en Arménie tardo-antiques : le témoignage des monuments crucifères à stèle quadrilatérale	547
Antonis TSAKALOS, Χιλιάδες ἀρχαγγέλων καὶ μυριάδες ἀγγέλων. Angels in the painted decoration of Karanlık kilise, Cappadocia	577

III. – VOIX ET VISIONS

François CASSINGENA-TREVEDY, Les messagers du haut silence. L'angélogie d'Éphrem de Nisibe (Hymnes sur la Foi) : entre fonction liturgique et apophatisme exemplaire	617
Eirini AFENTOULIDOU, Ministering spirits, guardians, intercessors: the discourse of angels in Byzantine liturgical texts	631
Marie-Emmanuelle TORRES, « Chanter comme les anges ». Discours et pratiques d'une sensorialité « isangélique » dans les monastères cénobitiques (IX ^e -XV ^e siècle)	665
Paolo CESARETTI et Basema HAMARNEH, Visualising angels in the Life of Andrew, the Holy Fool (BHG 115z). Its sources and parallels	695
Georges SIDERIS, Quelques remarques sur les anges eunuques dans le Récit sur la construction de Sainte-Sophie	721
Frederick LAURITZEN, Psellos' angels between Homer, Proclus, and Dionysius (Phil. min. 1.42 Duffy)	739

IV. – À PARTIR, AUTOUR ET AU-DELÀ DU MONDE BYZANTIN

Denis J.-J. ROBICHAUD, The Star of the Magi or the afterlife of Chaldean angels in Iamblichus, Proclus, Psellos, Pletho, and Ficino	763
Philippe FAURE, Le rayonnement angélique de Byzance en Occident (x ^e -xiii ^e siècle)	809
Jean-Pierre MAHÉ, Anges d'Arménie : gloire divine, liturgie, hiérarchie	847
Jean-Charles COULON, Le développement de la légende de Hārūt et Mārūt et des origines de la magie dans les premiers siècles de l'islam	871
Michel TARDIEU, Les anges du bouddhisme	921
Artur RODZIEWICZ, Heft Sur – the Seven Angels of the Yezidi tradition and Harran	943
Résumés – Abstracts	1031
Table des matières	1043

APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

(First to Second Century A.D.)

A NEW TRANSLATION AND INTRODUCTION

BY R. RUBINKIEWICZ

The theme of the Apocalypse of Abraham seems to be Israel's election and its covenant with God. The document can be divided into two parts, chapters 1-8 and chapters 9-32. Chapters 1-8 constitute a story of Abraham's youth and his perception of idolatry. Abraham concludes that his father's idols are not gods, because some stone idols are crushed and a wooden idol is accidentally consumed by fire. Abraham consequently beseeches God to reveal himself, whereupon he hears God's voice, which instructs Abraham to leave his father's house.

Abraham is commanded to offer a sacrifice so that God will reveal "great things which you have not seen . . ." (9:6). God sends his angel Iael to lead Abraham up to heaven (15:4), where he sees seven visions: the light and fiery angels (15:5-7), the fire (17:1-3), the throne (18:1-14), the firmaments (19:4-9), the world (21:2-7), the seven sins of the world (24:3-25:2), and the destruction of the Temple (27:1-3). Finally God announces the punishment of the gentiles through ten plagues (chs. 29f.) and the victory of the just (chs. 31f.).

Texts

The Apocalypse of Abraham is known only in an Old Slavonic translation, which has come down to us in several Russian redactions. The combined witness of six manuscripts that contain essentially the full text allows us to discern fairly clearly the original form of the Slavonic text, although many details remain obscure. Four manuscripts provide confirmatory evidence only for the first eight chapters. Other fragments, summaries, and reworkings are obviously derived from the older long form; they will not concern us here.

The apocalypse appears as a completely independent unit only in one manuscript, but basically the same text is found in a second manuscript with a slightly different beginning and a radically truncated ending. A slightly different redaction is reflected in the text that has been incorporated into the Explanatory Palaia (Tolkovaja Paleja), a broad account of Old Testament history interspersed with exegesis, much of it anti-Jewish polemic. These are the manuscripts:

- S- Sil'vestrovskij sbornik, Moscow, Central'nyj Gosudarstvennyj Arkhiv Drevnikh Aktov, Sin. Tip. 53, fols. 164-83. 14th cent. Facsimile published as vol. 99, Obščestvo ljubitelej drevnej pis'mennosti, St. Petersburg, 1891. Published by N. S. Tikhonravov in Pamjatniki otrečenoj russkoj literatury (St. Petersburg, 1863) vol. 1, pp. 32-53.
- D- A miscellany, Lenin Library, Moscow, Tikhonravov 704, fols. 70-79. 16th cent. Unpublished.
- A- The Volokalamsk Paleja Tolkovaja, Moscow, Lenin Library, Mosk. Dukh. Akad. 172/549, fols. 85-101. 15th cent. Printed in N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki, vol. 1, pp. 54-77.
- B- The Synodal Paleja Tolkovaja, Moscow, Gosudarstvennyj Istoričeskij Muzej, 869 (Sin. 211) fols. 76-90. 16th cent. Unpublished.

C—A Palaia, Lenin Library, Moscow, fond 173.III, No. 136, fols. 18–43. 16th cent. Unpublished.

K—Solovec Palaia, Leningrad, Public Library, Kaz. Dukh. Akad. 431, fols. 79–95. 16th–17th cent. Published by I. J. Porfir'ev, in "Apokrifičeskie skazaniia o vetkhov-zavetnykh licakh i sobytijakh po rukopisjam Soloveckoj biblioteki," Sbornik Otd. russ. jaz. i slov. Imp. Akad. Nauk 17 (1877) 111–30.

We were able to consult the unpublished texts D, B, and C in microfilms, which were made available through the cooperation of the libraries and museums of the U.S.S.R.¹

The Palaia manuscripts, which contain the longer form of the Ladder of Jacob, have the first eight chapters of the Apocalypse of Abraham; this is the later Palaia redaction. The earlier redaction, represented by the Kolomna manuscript of A.D. 1406, has only a few fragments of the Apocalypse of Abraham. An abbreviated text, summarizing chapters 1–12, 15, 17, 20, and 30, is found in two manuscripts, while a derived legend is found in seven. They are not helpful in establishing the early Slavonic text.

Most critics have distinguished two parts to the Apocalypse of Abraham: chapters 1–8 and chapters 9–32; they claim that the former did not belong to the original apocalyptic work but was added later by an editor.² If our interpretation of the apocalypse 1–6 is correct, these chapters form an integral part of the work and were written by the same author who composed the rest of the apocalypse. It is generally accepted that the present text of the apocalypse has many insertions which are due to Slavonic editors. All of chapter 7 seems to be redactional.³

Original language

A thorough investigation of the original language of the Apocalypse of Abraham has never been undertaken. A. Rubinstein studied only ten passages from the apocalypse and concluded that the document probably was written in Hebrew.⁴ The Slavonic text of the Apocalypse of Abraham contains several Hebrew names, words, and phrases. The most impressive examples are the following: Ioavan is a Slavonic deformation of the Hebrew ywn (Greece); Souzouch is probably a transcription of the name kwrs (Cyrus); and Maroumat is an abbreviation of the Hebrew Martā Rômā. The use of parts of the body instead of a simple pronoun is frequent: "My heart was perplexed" (1:4), "Why now have you afflicted my heart?" (27:6).⁵ The parallelism of the verses reflects Semitic thought.⁶

The positive instead of a comparative betrays a Semitic original. "It was heavy of a big stone" (1:5) renders the Semitic khd mn (cf. also 6:9), which has to be translated: "heavier than a big stone." Moreover, the prepositions are sometimes utilized according to Hebrew rather than Slavonic syntax (for example: 8:4, "for the sins," lit. "in the sins"; 12:10, "you will see all," lit. "you will see in all" [= Heb. ʾh bʾ]; 27:11, "to rule from them in them," lit. "to rule in them" [= Heb. hmšlytly bhm]).

The syntax of the temporal phrases reflects the Hebrew original of our apocalypse. Frequently a phrase is introduced by the verb hyh: "And it came to pass, that when I saw it, my heart was perplexed . . ." (1:4; cf. e.g. 1:7; 2:5; 5:4; 5:10, 11; 8:5). Numerous other examples could be cited. The foregoing suggests that the Apocalypse of Abraham was written in a Semitic language, probably in Hebrew.

The Slavonic version of the Apocalypse of Abraham was made in the eleventh or twelfth century A.D. in the south of the Slavic world, probably in Bulgaria. It may be that this pseudepigraphon was translated directly from Hebrew into Slavonic. Between 1108/9 and 1120 the archbishop of Ochride (Macedonia) was Leon Mung, a Jew converted to Christianity.⁸ His teacher was Tobias b. Eleazar (11th cent.), the author of the Midrash Lekah Tov. Bulgaria at that time had educated men who could make the translation from Hebrew into Slavonic. Further study needs to be made regarding this issue.

Date

It is commonly held that our pseudepigraphon was composed at the end of the first century A.D. No decisive argument, however, has been given in support of this date. In the following paragraphs the issue will be discussed first in terms of the external and then in terms of the internal data.

The testimonies of Nicephorus,⁹ patriarch of Constantinople (806–15), of Pseudo-Athanasius (6th cent.),¹⁰ and of the Apostolic Constitutions (4/5th cent.)¹¹ are very vague and nothing can be deduced from them in regard to our apocalypse. Epiphanius (4th cent.) speaks about some "Apocalypse of Abraham" used by the Sethians.¹² The same apocalypse was utilized by the Audiens and we know its content, thanks to Theodore bar Konai (8th cent.)¹³ and Origen.¹⁴ There can be no doubt, however, that the writing used by the Sethians and our pseudepigraphon are two different works.

The text of Recognitiones (2nd cent.) gives us at least two traditions. The first one presents Abraham as an astrologer (Rec. 32:3f.), the second one (33:1f.) may be an allusion to the Apocalypse of Abraham. These witnesses permit us to suggest that the Apocalypse of Abraham was possibly known by the second century.

Our pseudepigraphon was written after A.D. 70, because the author describes the destruction of Jerusalem (cf. ch. 27). Hence, the apocalypse—that is the early Jewish stratum—was composed sometime after A.D. 70 and before the middle of the second century.¹⁵ It is unwise to speculate further regarding the date of the apocalypse in the present collection of documents.¹⁶

Provenance¹⁷

If the original language of the Apocalypse of Abraham is Hebrew, then it was most likely composed in Palestine. It is necessary to be conservative regarding the probable provenance of the apocalypse for two main reasons: First, it is preserved in Slavonic manuscripts that are far removed from the conjectured time and place of the original composition. Second, as stated herein by H. G. Lunt and F. I. Andersen respectively in the presentations of the Ladder of Jacob and 2 Enoch, pseudepigrapha preserved only in Slavonic may have been considerably altered by the Bogomils (a medieval dualist sect), who were influenced by passages in the pseudepigrapha and composed new ones.

⁸ Cf. "Notitia Archiepiscopi Iannis Comneni," ed. in: Fontes Historiae Bulgaricae (Sofia, 1968) vol. 7, p. 110; see also: N. Snegarov, Istirija na Ochridskata archiepiskopija (Sofia, 1924) vol. 1, pp. 204f.; I. S. Emmanuel, Histoire des Israélites de Salonique (Paris, 1935) p. 34.

⁹ PG, vol. 100, col. 1059.

¹⁰ PG, vol. 28, col. 432.

¹¹ PG, vol. 1, col. 1100.

¹² PG, vol. 41, col. 669.

¹³ Cf. H. Pognon, Inscriptions mandaites des coupes de Khoubir (Paris, 1892) p. 195; H. C. Puech, "Fragments retrouvés de l'Apocalypse d'Allogène," in Mélanges Franz Cumont (Brussels, 1936) pp. 937f.

¹⁴ PG, vol. 13, col. 1889.

¹⁵ L. Ginzberg ("Apocalypse of Abraham," JE, vol. 1, p. 92) placed the ApAb in "the last decades of the first century." G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman argued that the ApAb was composed between A.D. 70 and the first decades of the 2nd cent. See their discussion in The Apocalypse of Abraham, pp. xvf. This n. 15 and the sentence to which it is attached in the text have been added by J.H.C.

¹⁶ [R. Rubinkiewicz speculates on the date for the composition of ApAb in L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave. Édition critique du texte, introduction, traduction et commentaire. He argues that plagues 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 describe the events of the years A.D. 69 and 70, especially the war between the Jews and the Romans; and that plagues 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 reflect the eruption of Vesuvius in A.D. 79. On the basis of these observations he suggests that the ApAb was written shortly after A.D. 79, perhaps between 79 and 81. —J.H.C.]

¹⁷ The section of the introduction regarding provenance was written by J.H.C.

¹ A seventh text (Uvarov 85, fols. 297–313, Historical Museum, Moscow) turned out to be a copy of S and therefore of no interest. E. Turdeanu, in his preliminary study of the MSS on the basis of published materials ("L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," JJS 3 [1972] 156–64), did not know of MSS C and D, which we found during our work toward a critical edition of the ApAb. He believed that MS Sin. 548 (Historical Museum, Moscow) contained ApAb; N. B. Tikhonirov of the Lenin Library has kindly informed us that this is an error. I am grateful to the editor for polishing the introduction and to H. G. Lunt for improving the English translation.

² Cf. N. Bonwetsch, Die Apokalypse Abrahams: Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer, p. 41.

³ Ch. 7 seems to be derived from Palaia Tolkovaja (Moscow, 1892) pp. 123–45.

⁴ Cf. A. Rubinstein, "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 4 (1953) 108–15; idem, "Hebraisms in the 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 5 (1954) 132–35. He analyzed ten examples: ApAb 8:4; 12:3, 10; 14:4, 6, 13; 29:8, 20; 31:1, 2.

⁵ Cf. also 17:23; 22:2.

⁶ Cf. especially 1:4; 3:1; 6:1, 11; 12:20; 21:3.

⁷ Cf. also 31:4.

The Christian interpolations and gnostic glosses

Chapter 7 appears to be inserted from the legend of Abraham found in the Palaia. The interpolator of 29:3–13 was probably a Christian editor who had nothing to do with gnostic circles. However, the gloss in 22:5, the censure in 20:5, and the gloss in 20:7 reveal that their author wanted to indicate that the God of Abraham is a god of evil. This point of view is usually associated with the gnostics. The gloss in 22:5 and the censured text of 20:5, however, show that they could be made only in the Slavic world. The only Slavs who claimed that the God of the Old Testament was the god of evil were the Bogomils. Their founder was Pope Bogomil (10th cent. A.D.). According to the Bogomils, God had two sons: Satanael and Jesus. Satanael rebelled against God and created the visible world; everything described in the book of Genesis is the work of the devil. If then this world is created by Satanael (= god of the OT), one has to abstain from every contact with the material world. The Bogomils, therefore, condemned marriage, abstained from meat and wine, and did not believe in the resurrection of the body.¹⁸

The glosses in 20:5, 7 and 22:5 perfectly suit their doctrine. We can say the same about the interpolator of 29:3–13; he shows that Jesus came forth from the heathens and not from the Jews (= the people with Azazel!). Perhaps also inserted by a Bogomil were 9:7, an injunction against meat and wine, and 23:4–10, which claims that the sin of Adam and Eve consisted in the conjugal relation. Maybe the same Bogomil editor interpolated 10:6–12 and 17:8b–19. The general content of the account of the sin of Adam and Eve reveals that it comes from Jewish sources. It fit the Bogomil doctrine, however, and therefore was inserted into our apocalypse.

Theological importance

God. The God of eternity (9:3) is the God who protects Abraham and his descendants (9:4). He created the world (9:4), chose Israel, called this nation "my people" (22:5; 31:1), and will give it victory over its enemies (31:1f.).

Angelology. Angelology plays a large role in our apocalypse. The most important figure is the Angel of God, Iaoel. His fundamental role is to protect and strengthen Abraham (10:3).

Demonology. The chief of the fallen angels is Azazel (13:6). His power is over the earth, because he has chosen it for his dwelling place (13:7f.; 14:6). However, his power is limited (13:10) since God does not permit him to tempt all the righteous (13:11). For example, he cannot seduce Abraham (13:14), and he has no power over the body of the righteous (13:10).

Cosmology. God shows Abraham the firmaments in order that he may know that "on no single expanse is there any other but the one whom" Abraham has searched for or who has loved him (19:3). God says to Abraham: "Look now beneath your feet at the firmament and understand the creation that was depicted of old on this expanse" (21:1). Abraham sees then the earth with the wicked men, and the garden of Eden with the just, he sees the sea with Leviathan, and the waters over the firmaments; at last, he watches the men on the right and on the left side of the "picture of creation" (chs. 21f.). Abraham is told that as the world is divided into two parts: earth and Eden, the waters of the sea and the waters over the firmaments, so mankind is divided into the people of God and the heathens (21:3–7).

The numeration of the firmaments is due to editorial expansions, probably by a Slavic editor. The descriptions of the three heavens is similar to that in the Testament of Levi 3:1–4.

Dualism. In the Apocalypse of Abraham there is no ontological dualism. The created world is good before the eyes of God (22:2). There is no other God in the universe than "the one whom" Abraham has "searched for" and "who has loved" him (19:3).

There is evil in the world, but it is not inevitable. God has full control over the world and he does not permit the body of the just to remain in the hand of Azazel (13:10). Azazel is wrong if he thinks he can scorn justice and disperse the secret of heaven (14:4). He will be banished in the desert forever (14:5).

Eschatology. The age of ungodliness endures "twelve periods" (29:2). After the last period comes the final judgment, which precedes the redemption of the just. God announces ten plagues (29:15; 30:2–8); when they pass, he will send his "chosen one" (31:1) who will gather the dispersed people. Together with him God will punish the heathens (31:2). The apostates will be burned through the fire of Azazel (31:6); the Temple and the sacrifices will be restored (29:17f.).

The doctrine of resurrection is noticeably absent, although it may be reflected in the symbol of the dew (19:4). The Apocalypse of Abraham, however, passed through the hands of the Bogomils, who did not believe in the resurrection of the body. It is possible that phrases mentioning the resurrection were omitted. It is clear, regardless of that possibility, that our author believed in life after death (cf. 21:6).

Relation to the canonical books¹⁹

The books of Genesis and Ezekiel play a fundamental role in the Apocalypse of Abraham. The author begins with the text of Genesis 20:13 (ApAb 1:1), which is quoted according to the exegesis of the Targums; he ends his work with the citation of Genesis 15:13–16 (= ApAb 32:1–3), but he changes the biblical "fourth generation" into "seventh," i.e. a perfect one.

The apocalypse at 8:4 and 9:1–4 reflects respectively Genesis 12:1 and 15:1 seen in the light of Psalm 20:2f. or Deuteronomy 33:29. The author quotes Genesis 15:9f. (ApAb 9:5), and Genesis 15:17a (ApAb 15:1). Apocalypse of Abraham 20:4 calls to mind Genesis 18:27; 20:6 is based on Genesis 18:30.

Chapters 1 and 10 of Ezekiel are behind chapters 18f. Abraham sees four living creatures (ApAb 18:5–11; Ezek 1:10; 10:14), the wheels full of eyes (ApAb 18:3, 12), the throne (ApAb 18:3; Ezek 1:23), and the divine chariot (ApAb 18:12; Ezek 10:6).

There is no direct relationship between the Apocalypse of Abraham and the New Testament. There are some parallel expressions, however, which may indicate that both drew from a shared tradition.

Relation to the apocryphal books

The author of the Apocalypse of Abraham follows the tradition of 1 Enoch 1–36. The chief of the fallen angels is Azazel, who rules the stars and most men. It is not difficult to find here the traditions of Genesis 6:1–4 developed according to the tradition of 1 Enoch. Azazel is the head of the angels who plotted against the Lord and who impregnated the daughters of men.²⁰ These angels are compared to the stars.²¹ Azazel revealed the secrets of heaven and is banished to the desert.²² Abraham, as Enoch, receives the power to drive away Satan.²³ All these connections show that the author of the Apocalypse of Abraham drew upon the tradition of 1 Enoch.

Cultural importance

The Apocalypse of Abraham is one of the most important works written after the destruction of the nation in A.D. 70. The importance of the apocalypse may be compared to that of 2 Baruch or 4 Ezra, but our author analyzes the causes of the destruction of Jerusalem from a different perspective: The defeat was caused by the infidelity of Israel toward the covenant with God and the opportunistic politics of some leaders.

The pseudepigraphon is written with great talent and with a good understanding of biblical exegesis. The symbolical language is clear, logical, and easy to understand. The Apocalypse of Abraham provides us with an insight into the literary "workshop" of the Palestinian ¹⁹ For a full discussion see Rubinkiewicz, L'Apocalypse d'Abraham.

²⁰ ApAb 14:4; 1En 6:4 and ApAb 14:6; 1En 6:1f.; 10:4.

²¹ ApAb 14:6; 1En 86:1.

²² ApAb 14:4; 1En 8:1 and ApAb 14:5; 1En 10:4.

²³ ApAb 14:3; 1En 14:3.

¹⁸ Cf. D. Obolenski, The Bogomils (Cambridge, 1948); S. Runciman, The Medieval Manichees (Cambridge, 1947); D. Angelov, Bogomilstvo vŭ Bŭlgarija (Sofia, 1961).

writers of the first century A.D.; in consequence we may understand better the literary genres of that period.

The Apocalypse of Abraham was practically unknown for ten centuries. Neither the Semitic original nor the supposed Greek version has been found. Perhaps the latter never existed. Translated into Slavonic, our document circulated first in Bulgaria and afterward in Russia. Known only in the Orient, it had no influence on occidental literature.

The transmission of the Apocalypse of Abraham²⁴

The Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham is to be ascribed to the extraordinarily productive burst of cultural activity during the reign of Simeon of Bulgaria (893–927), when a prodigious amount of material was translated from Greek into Old Church Slavonic as part of the effort of the Bulgarian emperor to bring his realm to the level of Byzantium itself.²⁵ The translation contains Greek words well known from Old Church Slavonic (adū: “haidēs, Hades”; aerū: “aēr, air”; stuxija: “stoicheion, element”), along with the conventional bizarre rendering of Gehenna as “fiery race” (by a confusion of gēenna with genēd or some other derivative of the Gk. root gen-) and numerous literalistic phrases that make better sense in Greek than in Slavonic. There can be no question that this text, like the whole Slavonic culture of Bulgaria of the time, was translated from Greek.²⁶ It is, then, fully realistic to assume that a Greek text of the Apocalypse of Abraham still existed in the Balkans as late as the ninth century, although no trace has yet been found in surviving Greek manuscripts.

The style is strongly Semitic but generally within the bounds of the biblical Greek that was presumably used by some hellenistic Jews for original works, e.g. Revelation. It is reasonable to hypothesize that the text was composed in Hebrew or Aramaic and rendered very literally into Greek. While no decisive arguments for a Semitic original have yet been advanced, the sheer number of Semitisms is best explained by this hypothesis. The quotation of the Divine Name El, El, El, El (retained only in copy S) and Eli (glossed “that is, my God”; replaced, except in copy S, by the spelling Ili, in line with the accepted form in Mt 27:46) is suggestive but inconclusive. Final -il for Hebrew ’ēl in the names Azazel, Iaoel, and Michael indicates Greek mediation. Perhaps the strange wording of 9:4 reflects the Hebrew of Genesis 15:1 (see n. b to ch. 9). It is not impossible that puti zemīnū (10:4) reflects drk ’rṣ in the sense of “manners, morality,” but it may be an inept way of expressing “the road to the (promised) land.” This meager evidence may suggest a Hebrew original.

The Slavonic text has come down to us in relatively full form in six manuscripts, the oldest from the early fourteenth century, the second from the fifteenth, and the others from the sixteenth century. The chief distinction among the copies is that four contain the apocalypse more or less integrated into the Explanatory Palaia, while two present the text as an independent (copy S) or nearly independent unit (copy D). The Palaia variants contain long interpolations of anti-Jewish polemical passages, but otherwise the text is so close to S D that only in chapter 7 is a new redaction indicated. The oldest copy, S, is unfortunately extremely faulty, with numerous omissions of syllables, sentences, and even paragraphs; with frequent distortions even of obvious words; and with unsuccessful efforts to update the archaic language, the forms and vocabulary of which were often not understood by the

²⁴ [Due to the complicated history of transmission of ApAb, the following remarks by H. G. Lunt are intended to supplement the work of R. Rubinkiewicz. —J.H.C.]

²⁵ The translation of ApAb could be slightly earlier, from the last years of the initial period of Slavonic culture, viz., the Moravian mission of Cyril and Methodius (863–84), and its Bulgarian offshoot after 864; for it appears that the translation was made into an occidental version of OCS and then, like most texts that have come down to us through East Slavic mediation, adapted to the more eastern norm that was elaborated under Simeon. It is impossible, however, to exclude a dating up to about 1050, the end of the OCS period. In any case, the archaic language of ApAb makes Turdeanu's ascription of the translation to the 13th cent. unacceptable (cf. E. Turdeanu, JSJ 3 [1972] 156–64). The combined evidence of such works as IEn, the Palaia, and the *Visl*s requires us to posit Slavonic versions of many apocryphal and pseudepigraphic works—along with a remarkable store of more orthodox texts—before the final Byzantine military triumph of 1018 and the rapid withering of Slavonic cultural activity in the Balkans. See H. G. Lunt, “On the Language of the Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham,” Festschrift for Moshé Altbauer (Slavica Hierosolymitana; in press).

²⁶ A few translations from Lat., made in Moravia (or Pannonia or perhaps Dalmatia), may have been in use in Macedonia and Bulgaria, e.g. the GNic. The products of western Slavonic culture are somewhat better represented in Russia, where they were introduced between about 988 and 1100.

scribe.²⁷ Copy D stems ultimately from the same Vorlage as copy S, but unfortunately the scribe, clearly not at home in the style and special sphere of apocalyptic tradition and allusions, gave up well before the end and simply omitted most of the apocalyptic vision (from 26:5 on), reducing all of it to a few phrases. On the other hand, the Palaia texts A B C K continue beyond the end of S (in 31:3).²⁸ Tikhonravov²⁹ apparently chose to exclude a paragraph (ch. 32) that Porfir'ev,³⁰ probably rightly, assigns to this text rather than to the subsequent episode in the Palaia account of Abraham's life.

It is reasonable to assume that all six copies stem originally from a single old manuscript (very likely with some faults) representing the archaic language in South Slavic orthography. All copies reflect Novgorod phonetics at some state in their history; this shows up in 6:7 (učinen: “appointed, installed”) of A B C K instead of S D's correct učenēn: “valued.” B is, overall, the most reliable text, occasionally agreeing with S D against A C K (e.g. in retaining in 17:2 pokljače, “kneelt,” a word not known in Russian, against the replacement ponik, “having bowed his head,” of A C K). A and C often go together,³¹ but they have independent omissions and distortions. K, the youngest copy, shows many clarifying paraphrases or lexical substitutions that are illuminating even when they only show precisely in what way the scribe understood the old text. B has as marginal notes materials K incorporates into the text. The picture is approximately as follows:

Agreement of S D B provides the most reliable readings. On the whole, variations are minor and a plausible text can be established, but there are important passages where the textual corruptive cannot be repaired.

The German translation by Bonwetsch³² and the English one by Box, assisted by Landsman,³³ were based on rather indiscriminate selections of variants from the published texts of S A K. Neither translator was fully acquainted with the medieval language, and both made a number of conjectures and emendations based on modern Russian rather than Old Slavonic. Since these translations have been the basis of much of the work on the apocalypse, we have felt it necessary to point out some of their mistakes in our notes.

The aim of the present translation is to give readers the clearest possible picture of the complicated Slavonic text we believe to have been available in Russia in the thirteenth or fourteenth century. The history of that text back to about A.D. 900 and of its Greek model or models of earlier date remains a matter for speculation. It is quite possible that individual component parts have very diverse origins.

The translation follows the chapter divisions established by Bonwetsch and, with a few exceptions, the verses used by Rubinkiewicz in his Rome dissertation. The song in chapter 17 is treated as verse, but 21:3–7, which might be viewed as poetry, is set as prose.

²⁷ The scribe mistreats in the same way the other texts in the codex; however, some of these are far less exotic in theme and archaic in language. Thus no editorial purpose is to be discerned for the odd omissions and distortions in S, although of course they must be noted in cases where we must depend on the witness of other MSS.

²⁸ The scribe of S ends another text in mid-sentence.

²⁹ N. S. Tikhonravov, Pamjatniki otrečennoj russkoj literatury, vol. 1, p. 77.

³⁰ I. J. Porfir'ev, Sbornik Otd. r. jaz. i slov. 17 (1877) 130.

³¹ E.g. the angel's headdress in 11:3 is sudarī, “bandkerchief, sudarium,” in A C, but kidarī, “kidaris,” in S D B K. See also the variants discussed in n. c to ch. 8.

³² N. Bonwetsch, Die Apokalypse Abrahams.

³³ In G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman, The Apocalypse of Abraham (London, 1918).

In view of the difficulty and obscurity of much of the text, the translation has adhered as closely as possible to the original, and the notes supply even more literal renderings when necessary. The notes also point out the most important cases where the translation is based on emendations of S, where various manuscripts have omissions, where significant variants occur, or where the text must be deemed corrupt. Words added in the text to obtain idiomatic English have been enclosed in parentheses.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, PMR, pp. 68f.
 Delling, Bibliographie, pp. 163f.
 Denis, Introduction, pp. 37f.
 Bonwetsch, G. N. Die Apokalypse Abrahams. Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer. Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, Bd. 1, Heft 1; Leipzig, 1897.
 Box, G. H., and Landsman, J. I. The Apocalypse of Abraham. London, 1918.
 Frey, J. B. "Abraham (Apocalypse d)," DBSup, vol. 1, cols. 28–38.
 Ginzberg, L. "Abraham, Apocalypse of," JE, vol. 1, pp. 91f.
 Rubinkiewicz, R. "Apokalipsa Abraham," Ruch Biblijny i Liturgiczny 27 (1974) 230–37.
 ———. L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave. Édition critique du texte, introduction, traduction et commentaire. Ph.D. diss.; Rome, 1977.
 ———. "Les Sémitismes dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," Folia Orientalia 21 (1980) 141–48.
 ———. "La Vision de l'histoire dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," ANRW II. 19.1. Pp. 137–51.
 Rubinstein, A. "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 4 (1953) 108–15.
 ———. "Hebraisms in the 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 5 (1954) 132–35.
 ———. "A Problematic Passage in the Apocalypse of Abraham," JJS 8 (1957) 45–50.
 Turdeanu, E. "L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," JSJ 3 (1972) 153–80.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

TRANSLATED BY R. RUBINKIEWICZ

REVISED AND NOTES ADDED BY H. G. LUNT

The Book of the Apocalypse of Abraham, son of Terah, son of Nahor, son of Serug, son of Arphaxad, son of Shem, son of Noah, son of Lamech, son of Methuselah, son of Enoch, son of Jared.^a

Abraham's rejection of idolatry

- 1 On the day I was guarding^b the gods of my father Terah and the gods of my brother Nahor, while I was testing (to find out) which god is in truth the strongest, 2 I (then) Abraham, at the time when my lot came, when I was completing the services of my father Terah's sacrifice to his gods of wood, of stone, of gold, of silver, of copper, and of iron, •having entered their temple for the service, I found a god named Marumath, carved from stone, fallen at the feet of the iron god 4 Nakhin.^c •And it came to pass, that when I saw it my heart was perplexed and I thought in my mind that I, Abraham, could not put it back in its place alone, 5 because it was heavy, (being made) of a big stone. •But I went and told my father, 6 and he came in with me. •And when^d we both lifted it to put it in its place, its head 7 fell off, even while I was holding it by its head. •And it came to pass, when my father saw that the head of his god Marumath had fallen, he said to me, "Abraham!" 8 And I said, "Here I am!" •And he said to me, "Bring me the axes and chisels^e 9 from the house." And I brought them to him from the house.^f •And he cut another Marumath from another stone, without a head, and he smashed the head that had fallen off Marumath and the rest of Marumath.
- 1 2 He made five other gods and he gave them to me and ordered me to sell them 2 outside on the town road. •I saddled my father's ass and loaded them on it and 3 went out on the highway to sell them. •And behold, merchants from Phandana^a of Syria were coming with camels, on their way to Egypt to buy kokonil^b from 4 the Nile. •I asked them a question and they answered me. And walking along I conversed with them. One of their camels screamed. The ass took fright and ran

1 a. The heading is only in S; the badly garbled names are normalized here. D contains instead a few introductory lines (following a completely different text, from the Chronicle of John Malalas), which may be rendered as follows: "Moses put together the following, which he wrote in the Book of the Small Genesis (= Jubilees), how Abraham came to know God. For previously he obeyed the gods of his father Terah the astrologist. And (while I was) guarding his gods and the gods of my brother Nahor, my father complained about me. And it came to pass on one of the days . . ."

In the Palaia MSS, A B C K, the preceding text briefly mentions Serug's idol-making and the beginning of idol worship by his son Nahor, continued (to the joy of the Devil) by Nahor's son Terah, father of Abraham. But Abraham perceives that the idols are of unfeeling wood and recalls Ps 115:5–7. Then ApAb begins.

In view of the abrupt opening in all three variants, it is possible that the original beginning of the story has been lost.

b. The verb is found in no other text. G. N. Bonwetsch (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) and G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman (The Apocalypse of Abraham) translated "planed," supposing the root *strug, "scrape." Variant readings indicate rather naslirzajušcu here, with the root *sterg, "guard."

c. S by error naricena, "named"; A Nakhon.

d. S jegda, "when"; D K jedva = A B C odva, "scarcely."

e. Exact sense uncertain, but etymologically izimalo is "tool for taking (something) out."

f. A B C K omit.

2 a. Probably Paddan-aram, cf. Gen 25:20 and LadJac 4, n. b.

b. Unknown word, perhaps reflecting Gk. kokkina, "scarlet clothing," or koukkinos, "dour palm; fiber of palm." Bonwetsch's "papyrus" is a groundless conjecture.

away and threw off the gods. Three of them were crushed and two remained (intact). •And it came to pass that when the Syrians saw that I had gods, they said to me, "Why did you not tell us that you had gods? We would have bought them before the ass heard the camel's voice and you would have had no loss. •Give us at least the gods that remain and we will give you a suitable price." •I considered it in my heart. And they paid both for the smashed gods and the gods which remained. •For I had been grieving in my heart how I would bring payment to my father. •I threw the three broken (gods) into the water of the river Gur, which was in this place. And they sank into the depths of the river Gur and were no more.

3 As I was still walking on the road, my heart was disturbed and my mind distracted. •I said in my heart, "What is this inequality^b of activity which my father is doing? •Is it not he rather who is god for his gods, because they come into being from his sculpting, his planing, and his skill? •They ought to honor my father because they are his work. What is this food^c of my father in his works? Behold, Marumath fell and could not stand up in his sanctuary, nor could I myself lift him until my father came and we raised him up. •And even so we were not able (to do it) and his head fell off of him. And he put it on another stone of another god, which he had made without a head. •And . . . ^d the other five gods which got smashed (in falling) from the ass, who could not save themselves and injure the ass because it smashed them, nor did their shards come up out of the river." •And I said to my heart, "If it is so, how then can my father's god Marumath, which has the head of another stone and which is made from another stone, save a man, or hear a man's prayer, or give him any gift?"

WisSol 13:10-16

4 And thinking thus, I came to my father's house. And I watered the ass and gave him hay. And I took out the silver and placed it in the hand of my father Terah. And when he saw it, he was glad, and he said, "You are blessed, Abraham, by the god of my gods, since you have brought me the price for the gods, so that my labor was not (in) vain." •And answering I said to him, "Listen, father Terah! The gods are blessed in you, because you are a god for them, because you made them, for their blessing is their perdition and their power is vain. •They did not help themselves; how then can they help you or bless me? •I was good for you in this transaction,^a for through my good sense I brought you the silver for the smashed (gods)." •And when he heard my speech he became furiously angry with me, because I had spoken harsh words against his gods.

5 But having pondered my father's anger, I went out. And afterward when I had gone out, he called me, saying, "Abraham!" •And I said, "Here I am!" •And he said, "Up, gather wood chips, for I was making gods from fir before you came, and prepare with them food for my midday meal." •And it came to pass, when I was choosing the wooden chips, I found among them a small god which would fit^a . . . ^b in my left hand.^c •And on its forehead was written: god Barisat. •And it came to pass when I put the chips on the fire in order to prepare the food for my father, and going out to inquire about the food, I put Barisat near the enkindling

3 a. S omits through vs. 4.

b. Slav. likhoti, usually "excessiveness, superfluity," but it also represents Gk. "anomalia," "unevenness."

c. Though grammatical, (si) izēdi, "(this) food," is probably corrupt; izēdi usually renders the Gk. katabrōma, i.e. "food for beasts." K makes things worse by changing it to estī zlo prelisti, "is the evil of deceit," but the pronoun si does not fit.

d. Corrupt; perhaps "he made" is omitted.

e. Sic. Perhaps a Hebraism, meaning simply "to myself."

4 a. Slav. obrjašča, probably for Gk. heurēma, "what is found unexpectedly, piece of good luck; sum realized by a sale."

5 a. S D; A B C K "(was)."

b. Slav. vū oslony, meaning unknown. Bonwetsch's (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) "in die Streu" and Box and Landsman's (The Apocalypse of Abraham) "among the brush-wood" are both thoroughly implausible.

c. Slav. vū šuici mi cannot mean "on my left," as Bonwetsch and Box and Landsman render it.

7 fire,^d saying to him threateningly,^e "Barisat, watch that the fire does not go out before I come back! If the fire goes out, blow on it so it flares up." •I went out and I made my counsel.^f •When I returned, I found Barisat fallen on his back, his feet enveloped by fire and burning fiercely. •And it came to pass when I saw it, I laughed (and) said to myself, "Barisat, truly you know how to light a fire and cook food!" •And it came to pass while saying this in my laughter,^g I saw (that) he burned up slowly from the fire and became ashes. •I carried the food to my father to eat.^h •I gave him wine and milk, and he drank and he enjoyed himself and he blessed Marumath his god. •And I said to him, "Father Terah, do not bless Marumath your god, do not praise him! Praise rather Barisat, your god, because, as though loving you, he threw himself into the fire in order to cook your food." 15,16 And he said to me, "Then where is he now?" •And I said, "He has burned in the fierceness of the fire and become dust." •And he said, "Great is the power of Barisat! I will make another today, and tomorrow he will prepare my food."

6 When I, Abraham, heard words like this from my father, I laughed in my mind, and I groaned in the bitterness and anger of my soul. •I said, "How then is a figment of a body made by him (Terah) an aid for my father? •Or can he have subordinated (his) body to his soul, his soul to a spirit, and the spirit to stupidity and ignorance?" •And I said, "It is only proper to endure evil that I may throw my mind to purity and I will expose my thoughts clearly to him." •I answered and said, "Father Terah, whichever of these gods you extol, you err in your thought. Behold, the gods of my brother Nahor standing in the holy sanctuary are more venerable than yours. •For behold, Zouchaios,^a my brother Nahor's god is more venerable than your god Marumath because he is made of gold, valued^b by man. And if he grows old with time, he will be remodeled, whereas Marumath, if he is changed or broken, will not be renewed, because he is stone. •What about^c Ioav, the god on the other god,^c who stands with Zouchaios?^d For he is also more venerable than the god Barisat; he is carved from wood and forged from silver.^e Because he too is a term of comparison,^f being valued by man according to external experience. •But Barisat, your god, when he was still not carved,^g rooted^h in the earth, being great and wondrous, with branchesⁱ and flowers; and praised^j . . . •But you made him with an axe, and by your skill he was made a god. •And behold he has already dried up and his fatness has perished. •He fell from the height to the earth, he came from greatness to smallness, •and the appearance of his face wasted away.^k •And he himself was burned up by the fire •and he became ashes and is no more. •And you say, Let me make another and tomorrow he will make my food for me. •But in perishing he left himself no strength^l for his (own) destruction."

d. Lit. "the enkindling (or catching) of the fire."

e. S prěšćeníeml, "with a threat"; A B C K prěšćeníemū (D prě-), "with a visitation."

f. Old sūvētū, "counsel, council, advice," is hopelessly confused orthographically with svētū, "light," in all medieval Slav. MSS. We may posit here Gk. epoiēsa boulēn (or phōs). Box and Landsman suggest this phrase reflects Heb. "sh 'sh in the sense of "execute a plan."

g. S D; A B C K "in my mind and laughing."

h. S D; A B C K "and he ate it."

6 a. Here zuke, below in vs. 9 zukej or zukhij (or possibly uzukhej); a Gk. form Zouchaios is thus probable.

b. S D učēnen-, "valued"; A B C K, by phonetic substitutions common in Novgorod texts, učēnen-, "ordered, ordained."

c. S D corrupt; A B C K may reflect text altered by scribal conjecture. Original possibly "Iao, the other god."

d. S omits from here through vs. 15.

e. D omits.

f. A B C sūprimirenie, K sūprimērenie; Gk. symmetria, symmetrēsis; D omits prefix, producing primirenie, "reconciliation."

g. D A C K lit. "before being worked"; B "before the division" or "separation."

h. Lit. "uprooted," surely from an early scribal error.

i. C sū vēiem, B D sū vēem; A K by error sū vēnem, "with a bride-price" or "dowry."

j. S omits. The whole sentence is obscure, possibly corrupt.

k. Either vū istjaskovenie D or vū istjaskovenii B (others distorted), lit. "became in wasting-away."

l. S omits. The sentence is probably corrupt.

(S C)

(A B C K)

- 1 7^a This I say:
- 2 "Fire is more venerable in formation, for even the unsubdued (things) are subdued in it, and it
- mocks that which perishes^b easily by means of its
- 3 burning.^c •^d But neither is it venerable, for it is
- subject^e to the waters.^d
- 4 But rather the waters
- are more venerable than it (fire), because they overcome fire and sweeten the earth with fruits. •But I will not call them god either, for the waters subside under the earth^g and are subject to it.^g •But I will not call it a goddess either, for it is dried by the sun (and) subordinated to man for his work.
- 5 More venerable among the gods, I say, is the sun, for with its rays it illuminates the whole universe and the various airs.^h
- 6 Nor will I place among the gods the one who obscures his course by means of the moon and the clouds.ⁱ
- 7 Nor again shall I call the moon or the stars gods, because they too at times during the night dim their light.
- 8 Listen, Terah my father, I shall seek before you the God who created all the gods supposed by us (to exist).^j
- 9 For who is it, or which one is it who made the heavens crimson and the sun golden, who has given light to the moon and the stars with it, who has dried the earth in the midst of the many waters, who set you yourself among the things^k and who has sought me out in the perplexity of my thoughts?
- 10 If [only]^l God will reveal himself by himself to us!"

Abraham, having thought this, came to his father and said, "Father Terah, fire is more venerable than your gods, the gold and silver ones, and the stone and wooden ones, because the fire burns your gods. And your gods being burned obey the fire, and the fire mocks them while it is consuming your gods. But neither will I call it (fire) god, because it is subjugated to the waters.^f

The waters

The sun I call more venerable than the earth, for with its rays it illuminates the whole universe.

But I will not call it a god because when night comes it becomes murky with darkness.

But hear this, Terah my father, let me proclaim to you the God who created all things.

But this is the true God who has made the heavens crimson heavens crimson and the sun golden, who has given light to the moon and the stars with it, who has dried the earth in the midst of the many waters, who set you yourself among the things^k and who has sought me out now in the perplexity of my thoughts.

c. Plural palenii, "burnings" (D by error palenii, "fallings").

d. S omits.

e. D by error pokrovenū, "covered," for pokorenū, "subjugated, subject."

f. The plural "waters" is probably a Hebraism.

g. A B C K omit.

h. Cf. aer in the sense of "atmosphere" or "firmament" in 15:5 below. D has an ungrammatical phrase which adds a form (instrumental plural?) of the word "man, human."

i. Both S and D are slightly corrupt here, but together they yield a plausible sentence.

j. Lit. "the, supposed by us, gods."

k. Slav. vŭ g[lagol]lŭ, "in the words," reflecting Gk. rēmata (or logoi) for Heb. dbrym.

l. Lit. merely "if," which would imply omission of a clause; the Palaia exegesis obviously considers this a complete sentence. Possibly Gk. eiper or eithe translated as simple ei.

7 a. Ch. 7 (plus 8:1) is the only part of ApAb that occurs in the early redaction of the Explanatory Palaia (represented by the 1406 Kolomna MS and its family), where it follows immediately after Abraham's paraphrase of Ps 115:5-7 that in the later type of Palaia (like A B C K) precedes the beginning of ApAb. The ch. was supplied with somewhat clearer opening lines than the obscure text witnessed by S D, and subsequent minor modifications clearly change the emphasis and, as far as can be judged from the faulty work of the scribes of S and D, simply remove difficult phrases. Later, when the first six chs. were inserted into the Palaia type that underlies A B C K, the modified text of ch. 7 was unchanged, even though in B C the third-person reference to Abraham at the beginning violates the first-person narration that precedes and follows.

b. Lit. plural "the things which perish."

- 8 And it came to pass as I was thinking things like these with regard to my father Terah in the court of my house,^a the voice of the Mighty One came down^b from the heavens in a stream of fire, saying and calling, "Abraham, Abraham!" •And I said, "Here I am." •And he said, "You are searching for the God of gods, the Creator, in the understanding of your heart.^c I am he. •Go out from Terah, your father, and go out of the house, that you too may not be slain in the sins of your father's house." •And I went out. And it came to pass as I went out—I was not yet outside the entrance of the court—that the sound of a great thunder came and burned him and his house and everything in his house, down to the ground, forty cubits.^d

The Apocalypse

- 9 Then a voice came speaking to me twice: "Abraham, Abraham!" •And I said, "Here I am." •And he said, "Behold, it is I. Fear not, for I am Before-the-World and Mighty, the God who created previously, before the light of the age." •I am the protector for you^b and I am your helper. •Go, get me a three-year-old heifer, a three-year-old she-goat, a three-year-old ram, a turtledove, and a pigeon, and make me a pure sacrifice. And in this sacrifice I will place the ages.^c •I will announce to you guarded things^d and you will see great things which you have not seen, because you desired to search for me, and I called you my beloved. •But for forty days abstain from every kind of food cooked by fire,^e and from drinking of wine and from anointing (yourself) with oil. •And then you shall set out for me the sacrifice which I have commanded you, in the place which I will show you on a high mountain. •And there I will show you the things which were made by the ages and by my word, and affirmed, created, and renewed. •And I will announce to you in them what will come upon those who have done evil and just things in the race of man."

- 10 And it came to pass when I heard the voice pronouncing such words to me that I looked this way and that. •And behold there was no breath of man. And my spirit was amazed, and my soul fled from me. And I became like a stone, and fell face down upon the earth, for there was no longer strength in me to stand up on the earth. •And while I was still face down on the ground, I heard the voice^a speaking, "Go, ^bIaol of the same name,^b through the mediation of my ineffable name, consecrate this man for me and strengthen him against his trembling." •The angel he sent to me in the likeness of a man came, and he took me by my right

8 a. At this point, the text of A B C K is interrupted by a long passage (identical to that in the older redaction, cf. MS of 1406) with heterogeneous material. There is some exegesis, then the story of how Abraham burned Terah's sanctuary and his brother Haran perished trying to save the gods (derived from the Chronicle of George the Monk), then more exegesis concerning the lineage from Abraham to the Virgin Mary. Then the first part of 8:1 is repeated and ApAb continues.

b. Lit. "fell."

c. S D vŭ umě srdca svojego, probably Gk. "en dianoiā kardias sou," "in the thought of your heart." Since umŭ often means "mind," B K expanded to "in your mind and the thoughts of your heart," while A C simplified to "in your mind."

d. The syntax of the last two words is obscure.

9 a. D ite preže pervėje stvorixŭ svĕta vĕka; S omits preže; A B C preže s. pervėje sv. v. (K expands to "first created heaven and earth and then the first light of the light and world"). Not fully clear, for both preže and pervėje may mean "first of all" and "previously." Further, svĕtŭ may represent older sŭvĕtŭ, "counsel, council." Vĕkŭ reflects Gk. aiōn, "age, eternity," Heb. 'olam; both can also mean "world."

b. Probably Gen 15:1, 'nky mgn lk, read as mĕgĕn 'alĕka and translated absolutely literally.

c. A B C K add "for you." Vĕky, "ages," perhaps replaces archaic vĕtŭ, "word, pact, agreement, permission"; a similar conjecture was made by the scribe of C, who substitutes zavĕr, "covenant," producing the plausible "I will set down a covenant."

d. Slav. sŭbjudenaja, possibly Gk. (syn)tērēmēna.

e. Lit. "which issues from fire."

10 a. A B C K add "of the Holy One."

b. Slav. ioailŭ tŭze can be restored from the variants here, and at vs. 10:8, 13:1, and 17:7. The element -il- in the angels' names shows Gk. mediation, with -el for Heb. 'el. Here yhw'h'l is indicated.

5 hand and stood me on my feet. •And he said to me, "Stand up, Abraham, friend
6 of God who has loved you, let human trembling not enfold you! •For lo! I am sent 7 to you to strengthen you and to bless you in the name of God, creator of heavenly
8 and earthly things, who has loved you. •Be bold and hasten to him. •I am Iaoel 9 and I was called so by him who causes those with me on the seventh expanse, on 10 the firmament,^c to shake, a power through the medium of his ineffable^d name in 11 me. •I am the one who has been charged according to his commandment, to restrain 12 the threats of the living creatures^e of the cherubim^f against one another, and I teach 13 those who carry the song^g through the medium of man's night of the seventh hour.^h 14 I am appointed to hold the Leviathans, because through me is subjugated the 15 attack and menace of every reptile. •I am orderedⁱ to loosen Hades and to destroy 16 those who wondered^j at the dead. •I am the one who ordered your father's house
17 to be burned with him, for he honored the dead. •I am sent to you now to bless 18 you and the land which he whom you have called the Eternal One has prepared 19 for you. •For your sake I have indicated the way of the land.^j •Stand up, Abraham, 20 go boldly, be very joyful and rejoice. And I (also rejoice) with you, for a venerable^m
21 honor has been prepared for you by the Eternal One. •Go, complete the sacrifice
22 of the command.ⁿ Behold, I am assigned (to be) with you and with the generation
23 which is predestined (to be born) from you.^o •And with me Michael blesses you 24 forever. Be bold, go!"

1 11 And I stood up and saw him who had taken my right hand and set me on my 2 feet. •The appearance of his body^a was like sapphire, and the aspect of his face
3 was like chrysolite, and the hair of his head like snow. •And a kidaris^b (was) on 4 his head, its look that of a rainbow, and the clothing of his garments (was) purple;
5 and a golden staff^c (was) in his right hand. •And he said to me, "Abraham." And 6 I said, "Here is your servant!" And he said, "Let my appearance not frighten
7 you, nor my speech trouble your soul. Come with me! •And I will go with you 8 visible until the sacrifice, but after the sacrifice^d invisible forever. •Be bold and 9 go!"

10 12 And we went, the two of us alone together, forty days and nights. •And I ate 11 no bread and drank no water, because (my) food was to see the angel who was 12 with me, and his discourse with me was my drink. •We came to God's mountain, 13 glorious Horeb. •And I said to the angel, "Singer of the Eternal One, behold I have 14 no sacrifice with me, nor do I know a place for an altar on the mountain, so how 15 shall I make the sacrifice?" •And he said, "Look behind you." •And I looked

Dan 7:9
Rev 1:14

c. Slav. na tverdi is possibly a gloss explaining "on the seventh expanse."

d. Only S has the negation; the others thus read "speakable name."

e. I.e. Heb. hywt.

f. Or simply "the cherubim," an apposition explaining "living creatures."

g. A B C K "his song."

h. Slav. posrēdistvomi človečskija nošči sedmago časa is unclear, but Box and Landsman's (The Apocalypse of Abraham) omission of "medium" and the inversion to produce "the song of the seventh hour of the night of man" requires justification. Perhaps "at the seventh hour" might be possible. Cf. TAdam.

i. S D povelēnū, passive "having been commanded"; A B C K povelēyi, active "who gave the command."

j. The sentence is clear, but offers no clue as to why these people merit destruction. The verb diviti sja unambiguously means "wonder, be astonished at" and often renders Gk. thaumazein. Perhaps the Gk. version of ApAb had a related verb or phrase denoting some wonder-working that involved corpses, a practice abominated by pious Jews.

k. S omits from i to k through homoeoteleuton.

l. Conjecturing that pull zemenū, "the way of the land," reflects Heb. drk 'rs, we may translate "I have established manners (or morals) for you."

m. A B D K; S "eternal."

n. Probably means "the sacrifice which was commanded," cf. 9:8.

o. Slav. prougotovlenym is tebe, lit. "prepared out of you."

11 a. S B tēla ego; D A C K tēla nogu ego, perhaps "of his body (and) legs," or perhaps sapphire refers only to the legs or feet and a separate description of the body has been lost.

b. Kidaris in LXX is "headdress" (e.g. Ex 39:28), "turban" (e.g. Zech 3:5), and "cap" (e.g. Ezek 45:18). A D by error sudarī, "handkerchief" (Gk. sudarium), a word known to Slavs from Jn 20:7, but probably unclear in meaning.

c. Or "scepter."

d. B adds in margin "I will be for you."

10 behind me. And behold all the prescribed sacrifices were following us: the calf, Gen 15:9f.
11 the she-goat, the ram, the turtledove, and the pigeon. •And the angel said to me, 12 "Abraham." And I said, "Here I am." •And he said to me, "Slaughter all these 13 and divide the animals exactly into halves. But do not cut the birds apart. •And 14 give them to the men whom I will show you standing beside you, for they are the 15 altar on the mountain, to offer sacrifice to the Eternal One." •The turtledove and 16 the pigeon you will give to me, for I will ascend on the wings of the birds to show 17 you (what)^b is in the heavens, on the earth and in the sea, in the abyss, and in the 18 lower depths, in the garden of Eden and in its rivers, in the fullness of the universe.
19 And you will see its circles in all."^c

1 13 And I did everything according to the angel's command. And I gave the angels
2 who had come to us the divided parts of the animals. And the angel Iaoel^a took 3 the two birds. •And I waited for the evening gift.^b •And an unclean bird flew down Gen 15:11
4 on the carcasses, and I drove it away. •And the unclean bird spoke to me and said,
5 "What are you doing,^c Abraham, on the holy heights, where no one eats or drinks, 6 nor is there upon them food for men. •But these all will be consumed by fire and 7 they will^d burn you up. •Leave the man who is with you and flee! For if you
8 ascend to the height, they will destroy you."^e •And it came to pass when I saw 9 the bird speaking I said this to the angel: "What is this, my lord?" And he said, 10 "This is disgrace,^f this is Azazel!" •^gAnd he said to him, "Shame^h on you, 11 Azazel!" For Abraham's portionⁱ is in heaven, and yours is on earth, •for you have 12 selected here, (and) become enamored of the dwelling place of your blemish.^j 13 Therefore the Eternal Ruler, the Mighty One, has given you a dwelling^k on earth.
14 Through you the all-evil spirit (is) a liar, and through you (are) wrath and trials
15 on the generations of men who live impiously. •For the Eternal, Mighty One did 16 not allow the bodies of the righteous to be in your hand, so through them the 17 righteous life is affirmed and the destruction of ungodliness. •Hear, counselor, be 18 shamed by me! You have no permission to tempt all the righteous.^l •Depart from 19 this man! •You cannot deceive him, because he is the enemy of you and of those 20 who follow you and who love what you wish.^m •For behold, the garment which 21 in heaven was formerly yours has been set aside for him, and the corruption which 22 was on him has gone over to you."

1 14 And the angel said to me,^a "Abraham!" And I said, "Here I am, your 2 servant." •And he said, "Know from this that the Eternal One whom you have 3 loved has chosen you. •Be bold and do through your authority whatever I order
4 you against him who reviles^b justice. •Will I not be able to revile^c him who has 5 scattered about the earth the secrets of heaven^d and who has taken counsel against 6 the Mighty One? •Say to him, 'May you be the firebrand^e of the furnace of the

1En 9:6

12 a. The men are the altar. The infinitival phrase prinositi tervyu specifies no subject and its connection with the men remains unclear. Perhaps it should be taken literally, "to carry the sacrifice to the Eternal One."

b. The sentence is incomplete.

c. Obscure, perhaps corrupt. Possibly "in the fullness of the universe and its circles, and you will see . . . in all." Seems to look forward to ch. 21.

13 a. S D A C omit, B in margin.

b. Or "reward"; Gk. dōron, dōrea.

c. Or "what business do you have"; Gk. ti soi.

d. S (D unclear); A B C K, with unspecified subject, "they all will consume (you) with fire and."

e. Only in S.

f. Gk. atimia, "dishonor," or asebeia, "impiety."

g. S omits.

h. Gk. oneidos, "reproach."

i. Texts all have spellings reflecting čisti, "honor," but surely častil, "part, portion," was original.

j. Or "filth."

k. Texts faulty; emend acc. tja to dat. ti and read tičeli, "dwelling-place" rather than ungrammatical tičeli, "dweller."

l. Text odd, more literally "to be a tempter as far as all just men are concerned."

m. Or "want."

14 a. S omits from here through vs. 4.

b. Or "mocks," "mock."

c. Cf. 1En 9:6.

d. Or "torch" or "burning coal"; Gk. dolos or anthrax.

6 earth! Go, Azazel, into the untrodden parts of the earth.^c •For your heritage is over those who are with you, with the stars and with the men born by the clouds,^f
7 whose portion you are, indeed they exist through your being.^g •Enmity^h is for you 8 a pious act.ⁱ Therefore through your own destruction be gone^j from me!" •And 9 I said the words as the angel had taught me. •And he said, "Abraham." And I
10 said, "Here I am, your servant!" •And the angel said to me, "Answer him not!"
11,12 •And he spoke to me a second time. •And the angel said, "Now, whatever he 13 says to you, answer him not,^k lest his will run up to you.^l •For the Eternal, Mighty 14 One gave him the gravity^m and the will. Answer him not." •And I did what the angel had commanded me. And whatever he said to me about the descent,ⁿ I answered him not.^o

Gen 15:17

15 And it came to pass when the sun was setting, and behold a smoke like that of a furnace, and the angels who had the divided portions of the sacrifice ascended 2 from the top of the furnace of smoke. •And the angel took me with his right hand and set me on the right wing of the pigeon and he himself sat on the left wing of 3 the turtledove, (both of) which were as if^a neither slaughtered nor divided. •And 4 he carried me up to the edge of the fiery flames. •And we ascended^b as if (carried)
5 by many winds to the heaven that is fixed on the expanses.^c •And I saw on the air^d 6 to whose height we had ascended a strong light which can^e not be described. •And behold, in this light a fiery Gehenna was enkindled,^f and a great crowd in the 7 likeness of men.^g •They all were changing in aspect and shape, running and changing form and prostrating themselves and crying aloud words I did not know.

16 And I said to the angel, "Why is it you now brought me here? For^a now I can 2 no longer see, because I am weakened and my spirit is departing from me." •And 3 he said to me, "Remain with me, do not fear. •He whom you will see coming directly toward us in a great sound^b of sanctification^c is the Eternal One who has 4 loved you. You will not look at him himself. •But let your spirit not weaken,^d for I am with you, strengthening you."

17 And while he was still speaking, behold the fire coming toward us round about, and a voice was in the fire like a voice of many waters, like a voice of the 2,3 sea in its uproar. •And the angel knelt down^a with me and worshiped. •And I wanted to fall face down on the earth. And the place of highness on which we

e. Vss. 6-14 are omitted by S, which has only "And the angel said to me, 'Answer him not, for God has given him freedom [lit. 'will'] over those who answer him.'"

f. I.e. men to whom the clouds gave birth.
g. Or "generation"; Gk. to einai or genēsis.
The whole sentence is obscure.

h. Possibly Gk. echthra, "hatred."

i. Probably Gk. dikaïōma, "just action," or eusebeia, "piety." The sentence is unclear.

j. Lit. "may you have disappeared."

k. D omits.

l. Textual pritecei, "runs up to," surely represents archaic pritučeti*, "touch, come in contact with"; "lest his will affect you."

m. Probably Gk. baros for Heb. kbd, "honor, glory."

n. Slav. o sūniti is clear (Landsman to the contrary). The word usually reflects Gk. katabasis, referring to Christ's descent into Hades, but it may also be synkatabasis or sybāsis in any meaning possible.

o. S D negative; A C věščar, "I said, told," B onvěščar, "I answered."

15 a. S D omit "as if."

b. S omits from here to "ascended" in vs. 5.

c. Or "firmaments," see note to 19:3, below.

d. Slav. na aerē presents the air as a surface.

e. S; others "could."

f. Text somewhat corrupt. Archaic gen. ognīna rodu, "of fiery Gehenna," misread as nom. ognī narodu, "fire for the crowd (or nation)," and the grammar was adjusted, possibly with the loss of a word or two.

g. Lit. "of male shape, of male form."

16 a. S D jako; A B C K zane jako, "for it is as though."

b. Lit. "in many voice," perhaps rendering Gk.
en polyphōnia.

c. Variants of S D A C establish svjatiby, "of sanctification." Gk. hagiasmos. B K understood this old word in its narrower meaning "threefold Sanctus" and modified the text to clarify it: "saying, 'holy, holy, holy'" (K adds "[is] the Lord").

d. A B C K add "because of the shouting."

17 a. S D B K; A C replace an unfamiliar verb with "bent his head."

4 were standing now stopped on high, now rolled down low.^b •And he said, "Only 5 worship, Abraham, and recite the song which I taught you." •Since there was no ground to which I could fall prostrate, I only bowed down, and I recited the song 6,7 which he had taught me. •And he said, "Recite without ceasing." •And I recited, and he himself recited the song:^c

8 Eternal One, Mighty One, Holy El,^d God autocrat 9 self-originate, incorruptible, immaculate, unbegotten, spotless, immortal, 10 self-perfected,^e self-devised,^f without mother, without father, ungenerated,^g 11 exalted, fiery,
12 just, lover of men, benevolent, compassionate, bountiful, jealous over me, patient one, most merciful.
13 Eli,^h eternal, mighty one, holy, Sabaoth, most glorious 'El, El, El, El,ⁱ Iael, 14 you are he my soul has loved, my protector.
15 Eternal, fiery, shining,^j light-giving, thunder-voiced, lightning-visioned, many-eyed, 16 receiving the petitions of those who honor you^k and turning away from the petitions of those who restrain you by the restraint^l of their provocations, 17 redeemer of those who dwell in the midst of the wicked ones, of those who are dispersed among the just of the world,
in the corruptible age.^m 18 Showing forthⁿ the age of the just, you make the light shine^o
before the morning^p light upon your creation "from your face"
to spend the day^q on the earth,^r 19 and in your heavenly dwelling place (there is) an inexhaustible light of an invincible^s dawning from the light^t of your face.
20 Accept my prayer "and delight in it," and (accept) also the sacrifice which you yourself made to yourself through me as I searched for you.
21 Receive me favorably, teach me, show me, and make known to your servant
what you have promised me.

b. That is, the surface is undulating up and down.
c. A B C K add "with me." B has a marginal note, incorporated into the text of K: "The first song of Abraham which the holy angel Iael taught him when he was traveling with him about the air, crying out like this:"

d. Only S retains "El."

e. Gk. autoteleios or autotelēs.

f. Assuming original samosvētine, Gk. autoboulētos, rather than the derivationally implausible sāmosvētine. An inept calque of the Gk. autophōs or autophōtos, "absolute light," is not impossible, however.

g. Slav. bezrodine is probably Gk. agennētos or agenealōgētos (cf. Heb. 7:3), but it could also mean "without kin."

h. A B C K all distort this form and add a gloss:
"that is, my God."

i. S only.

j. Possibly a compound, "shining with fire,"
Gk. pyrophengēs, pyrophlogos.

k. S omits from here to end of first clause in vs. 22.

l. Or "hold you by the compassing."

m. The translation of vss. 21f. can only be approximate, for the grammatical relations are ambiguous.

n. D projavljaja; A B C K ponovljaja, an innovated form for expected old ponavljaja, "renewing, restoring."

o. Or "you, the light, shine."

p. S utrinimū; A B C D K vnuirnimū, "inner."

q. S omits.

r. Or possibly "by your face, through the agency of your countenance."

s. Or "continue through the day."

t. D nepobēdima (S nepovēdimo, surely with v for b, and with incorrect ending); A B C K neispovēdima, a late form (for neispovēdima),
"indescribable, unexpressible."

u. A C; S D B K plural "lights."

v. S omits.

18 And as I was still reciting the song, the mouth^a of the fire which was on the firmament^b was rising up on high. •And I heard a voice like the roaring of the sea, and it did not cease from the plenitude of the fire. •And as the fire rose up, soaring to the highest point, I saw under the fire a throne of fire •and the many-eyed ones round about, reciting the song, under the throne four fiery living creatures, singing. Ezek 1:6-12,23 4.5 And the appearance of each of them was the same, each having four faces. •And this (was) the aspect of their faces: of a lion, of a man,^d of an ox,^e and of an eagle.
Each one had four heads^f on its body so that the four living creatures had sixteen 6 faces. •And each one had^f six wings: two on the shoulders, two halfway down, and 7 two at the loins. •With the wings which were on their shoulders they covered their faces, with the wings at their loins they clothed their feet, and they would stretch 8 the two middle wings out and fly, erect.^g •And when they finished singing, they 9 would look at one another and threaten one another. •And it came to pass when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me 10 and went running to them. •And he turned the face of each living creature from the face which was opposite it so that they could not see each other's faces 11 threatening each other. •And he taught them the song of peace which the Eternal 12 One has in himself.^h •And while I was still standing and watching, I saw behindⁱ the living creatures a chariot with fiery wheels. Each wheel was full of eyes round 13 about. •And above the wheels was the throne which I had seen. And it was covered with fire and the fire encircled it round about, and an indescribable light^j surrounded 14 the fiery crowd.^k •And I heard the voice of their sanctification^l like the voice of Ezek 1:15-25; 10:6-12
a single man. Ezek 1:26-28

19 And a voice came to me out of the midst of the fire, saying, "Abraham, 2.3 Abraham!" •And I said, "Here I am!" •And he said, "Look at the expanses^a which are under the firmament to which you have now been directed and see that on no single expanse is there any other but the one whom you have searched for 4 or who has loved you." •And while he was still speaking, behold, the expanses under me, the heavens, opened and I saw on the seventh firmament upon which I stood a fire spread out^b and a light^c and dew^d and a multitude of angels and a host 5 else there. •And I looked from on high, where I was standing, downward to the 6 sixth firmament. •And I saw there a multitude of spiritual angels, incorporeal, carrying out the orders of the fiery angels who were on the eighth^f firmament, as 18 a. Perhaps for Gk. cheilos in the sense of "edge, brink," i.e. the fire is envisioned as a brimming lake or river.

b. Or "expanse," see n. to 19:3, below.

c. Ambiguous as to whether ot ognja, "from fire," describes the throne or the "many-eyed ones" (Gk. polymmatōi), or both; or perhaps the creatures were standing at a distance, "away from the fire."

d. S člveč for člověči, "of a human being"; D A B C K mužesk, "of a male," placed after "of an ox," perhaps under the influence of Rev 4:7.

e. As in Heb. Ezek 1:10; LXX has "calf," as does Rev 4:7.

f. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

g. The last clause is faulty and obscure. The final word is prostī, "simple," but may mean "upright."

h. Obscure; unclear whether "self" refers to the Eternal One or the angel, and whether "which" refers to "song" or "peace."

i. Or "following after."

j. If světū; possibly, however, sūvētū, "council."

k. Or "nation." Also possible: "an indescribable light (or council) of the fiery crowd (or nation) surrounded (it)." The text is probably corrupt.

l. Or "acclamation," Gk. hagiasmos, cf. 16:3 above.

19 a. Three Slav. roots underlie synonyms for "heaven" that probably stand for three Gk. words. Tvirđi (19:6, well-known elsewhere) and tvirdstvo (19:4) with a variant tvirdstvie (19:8), both known only from ApAb, surely translate stereōma, "firmament." Protjaženie, "a pulling out tightly," and prostiranie, "a spreading out broadly," doubtless reflect forms based on Gk. ten. Here prostiranie is rendered "firmament" (18:1; 19:3, 6; 21:1, 2) and protjaženie "expanse" (19:3, 4; 21:1); but the plural, prostiraja, at 15:4 is rendered "expanses."

b. Or "a widespread fire."

c. B adds "great" in the margin; K places it in the text. Cf. n. c to 17:7.

d. Slav. rosu; D ručku, "vessel, container."

e. S A C K ot svyše, D i tū svyše, B i svyše; perhaps something has been omitted.

f. Surely for "sixth"; the Glagolitic letter-symbol for 8 corresponds to the Cyrillic letter whose numerical value is 6. S has other indications of a fore-text written in Glagolitic.

7 I was standing on its elevation (?)^a. •And lo, neither on this firmament was there 8 in any shape any other host, but only the spiritual angels. •And the host I saw on 9 the seventh firmament commanded the sixth firmament and it removed itself.^b •I saw there, on the fifth (firmament), hosts^c of stars, and the orders they were commanded to carry out, and the elements^d of earth obeying them.

20 And the Eternal, Mighty One said to me, "Abraham, Abraham!" •And I said,
3 "Here I am!" •And he said, "Look from on high^a at the stars which are beneath Gen 15:5
4 you and count them for me and tell me their number!" •And I said, "When can 5 I? For I am a man."^b •And he said to me, "As the number of the stars and their Gen 18:27 power^c so shall I place for^d your seed the nations and men, set apart for me in my 6 lot with Azazel."^e •And I said, "Eternal and Mighty One. Let your servant speak Gen 18:30 7 before you and let your fury not rage against your chosen one. •Behold, before you led me up, Azazel^f insulted me. How then, since he is now not before you, did you establish^g yourself with them?"^h

21 And he said to me, "Look now beneath your feet at the firmament and understand the creation that was depicted of old^a on this expanse, (and) the creatures 2 which are in it^b and the age^c prepared after it."^d •And I looked beneath the firmament at my feet and I saw the likeness of heaven^e and the things that were therein.

3 And (I saw) there the earth and its fruit, and its moving things and its things that had souls, and its host^f of men and the impiety of their souls and their justification, ^gand their pursuit^h of their worksⁱ and the abyss and its torments,^j 4 and its lower depths and (the) perdition in it. •And I saw there the sea and its islands, and its cattle and its fish, and Leviathan and his realm and his bed and his lairs, and the world^k which lay upon him, and his motions and the destruction 5 he caused the world.^k •I saw there the rivers and their upper (reaches) and their circles.

6 And I saw there the garden^l of Eden and its fruits, and the source and the river flowing from it, and its trees and their flowering, making fruits, and I saw men doing justice^m in it, their food and their rest.

7 And I saw there a great crowd of men and women and children, half of them

g. Unclear; the word appears to mean lit. "suspensions."

h. Or "to remove itself."

i. "Hosts" here and "host" in vss. 4, 7, 8 above could be translated "powers" or "power."

j. Gk. stoicheia.

20 a. Explicitly contrasts with the "look up" of Gen 15:5.

b. B K add "earth and ashes" from LXX Gen 18:27. A C harmonize further by omitting "man."

c. Or "host."

d. Or "to," or perhaps "under."

e. Possibly "the lot [Gk. klēros] belonging to me and Azazel." S is slightly corrupt, and the others may represent some sort of modification of the original text.

f. Possibly "before Azazel led me up, he."

g. Or "support" or "secure."

h. S D sū nīmī. (A?) B C K sū nīmū "with him." The whole sentence is obscure.

21 a. Lit. "formerly shadowed," with a unique verb D sténovanuju, S corrupt, A B C K sténovanuju, cf. sténī, "shadow" which may be a clumsy calque of Gk. skiagraphēin, "sketch, outline, depict; prefigure, foreshadow."

b. Viz. "creation."

c. S (D "unto the age, forever"); A B C K "ages."

d. Or "according to it (creation)." The sentence is obscure, not least because vari is used apparently both for "creation" and "creature."

e. D A B C K podobie nebesa; S corrupt, podū 6 nbsē, roughly "under 6th heaven" (less likely "under 6 heavens"), but ungrammatical. The original text was surely acc. podūnebesie, Gk. tēn hyp' ouranon, i.e. "I saw (the terrestrial world) beneath the sky."

f. Or "power."

g. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

h. Gk. epitēdeumata.

i. Perhaps a gloss; in S it stands after "lower depths and perdition."

j. Or "inhabited world," oikoumenē.

k. Lit. "destructions to the world because of him."

l. Slav. sadū, usually "plant," Gk. phyton; "tree," Gk. dendron; here probably "newly planted area." At 12:10 Eden is vertepū, kēpos, at 23:4 ovošćnikū, "orchard."

m. Slav. pravdu dějuščixū is not found elsewhere. Pravida is "righteousness, justice, rule, truth"; dikaioσynē, dikaion, dikaïōma, alētheia.

on the right side of the portrayal, and half of them on the left side of the portrayal.ⁿ

22 And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One! What is this picture of creation?" And he said to me, "This is my will with regard to what is^a in the light^b and it was^c good before my face. And then, afterward, I gave them^d a command by my word and they came into existence. Whatever I had decreed was to exist had already been outlined^e in this^f and all the previously created (things) you have seen stood^g before me." And I said, "O sovereign, mighty and eternal! Why are the people in this picture on this side and on that?" And he said to me, "These who are on the left side are a multitude of tribes who existed previously . . . and after you^h some (who have been) prepared for judgment and order,ⁱ others for revenge and perdition at the end of the age. Those on the right side of the picture are the people set apart for me of the people with Azazel; these are the ones I have prepared to be born of you and to be called my people."

23 "Look^a again at the picture: Who is the one who seduced Eve, and what is the fruit of the tree?^b And you will know what will be and how much will be for your seed^c in the last days. And what you cannot understand,^d I will make known to you because you have been pleasing before my face and I will tell you what I have kept in my heart." And I looked at the picture, and my eyes ran to the side of the garden of Eden. And I saw there a man very great in height and terrible in breadth, incomparable in aspect, entwined with a woman who was also equal to the man in aspect and size. And they were standing under a tree^e of Eden, and the fruit of the tree was like the appearance of a bunch of grapes of the vine.^f And behind the tree was standing (something) like a dragon in form, but having hands and feet like a man's, on his back six wings on the right and six on the left. And he was holding the grapes of the tree^g and feeding^h them to the two I saw entwined with each other. And I said, "Who are these two entwined with each other, or who is this between them, and what is the fruit which they are eating, Mighty One, Eternal?" And he said, "This is the worldⁱ of men,^j this is Adam and this is their thought^k on earth, this is Eve. And he who is between them is the impiety of their behavior^l untoⁿ perdition, Azazel himself."^m And I said, "Eternal,

n. Slav. obrazstvo, attested only here, must be more than obrazŭ, "image," Gk. eikōn, typos, implying a suffixed Gk. form like eikonisma or eikonismos.

22 a. Slav. kŭ suščemu, lit. "toward that which is (or exists)," possible Gk. pros (or eis, epi) to onta.

b. If světŭ; possibly sŭvětŭ, "council, counsel."

c. Lit. "became, came to be."

d. The text of the previous sentence is probably corrupt; in any case it provides no clear referent for this plural pronoun.

e. S načerta sja; others inappropriately načertaša, "they outlined."

f. S B K imply original vŭ semŭ, although the reference is not clear; distorted in D A C to vsemŭ, "to all."

g. Or "came to stand, took position."

h. Or "because of, through you." The following phrases are in the acc., so loss of a preceding verb must be assumed.

i. Slav. ustrojenie, "ordering, being put in order; restoration."

23 a. D A B C K posmotri; S po smotrenii, "after a look."

b. Slav. dreva; A C črěva, "of the womb."

c. S differs: "for your name among people."

d. S "days of the age, or how one cannot understand."

e. Or "the things that."

f. Slav. sadŭ, not specifically a tree, cf. n. 1 to ch. 21.

g. Slav. vinična, probably "of a wild vine"; A K finična, "of the palm [Gk. phoenix]," is surely secondary within Slav.

h. B C zalaŭše, a verb with the specialized sense "put morsels of food into the mouth of someone" (a meaning preserved in Serbo-Croatian), other MSS distorted because this meaning was unknown. Bonwetsch (Die Apokalypse Abrahams) and Box and Landsman (The Apocalypse of Abraham) ignored the grammar and completely mistranslated the sentence. Here the serpent explicitly is feeding the fruit both to Adam and to Eve.

i. Slav. světŭ only rarely means "world," Gk. kosmos, ordinarily rendering "light," phōs, phen-gos, phōtismos. Or this may be sŭvětŭ, "council, counsel."

j. Or "of man, human."

k. Slav. pomyšlenie is "thought" in any possible sense, including "intention, plan" or negative "plot, evil design," and "desire."

l. Slav. načinanija, lit. "deed, act, doing."

m. D omits.

n. S A K vŭ; B C omit, making "perdition" an apposition with "impiety" and "Azazel."

Mighty One, why then did you adjudge him such dominion that through his works he could ruin humankind on earth?" And he said to me, "Hear, Abraham! Those who desire evil, and all whom I have hated as they commit^a them^b—over them did I give him dominion, and he was to be beloved of them." And I answered and said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Why did it please you to bring it about that evil should be desired in the heart of man, because you are angered^c at what was chosen by you^d . . . him who does useless things^e in your light (?)."

24 And he said to me thus, "Close^a to the nations . . . for your sake and for the sake of those set apart after you, the people of your tribe, as you will see in the picture, what is burdened on^b them. And I will explain to you what will be, and everything that will be in the last days. Look now at everything in the picture." And I looked and saw there the creatures that had come into being^c before me. And I saw, as it were,^d Adam, and Eve who was with him, and with them the crafty adversary and Cain, who had been led by the adversary to break the law, and (I saw) the murdered Abel (and) the perdition brought on him and given through the lawless one.^e And I saw there fornication^f and those who desired it, and its defilement and their zeal; and the fire of their corruption in the lower depths of the earth. And I saw there theft and those who hasten after it, and the system of their retribution, the judgment of the great court.^g I saw there naked men, forehead to forehead, and their shame and the harm (they wrought) against their friends and their retribution. And I saw there desire,^h and in her hand (was) the head of every kind of lawlessness; and her tormentⁱ and her dispersal^k destined to destruction.

25 I saw there the likeness of the idol of jealousy, like a carpenter's figure such as my father used to make, and its body was of glittering copper,^a and before it a man, and he was worshiping it. And (there was) an altar opposite it and boys being slaughtered on it in the face of the idol. And I said to him, "What is this idol, or what is the altar, or who are those being sacrificed, or who is the sacrificer, or what is the handsome temple which I see, the art and beauty^b of your glory that lies beneath your throne?" And he said, "Hear, Abraham! This temple which

o. Reading vŭvorjaščixŭ as acc. plural, whereby the sense of the prefix is unclear. Or perhaps "everything I hated in those who commit," reading vŭ tvorjaščixŭ as a prepositional phrase.

p. The plural pronoun has no obvious referent; it might be an error and somehow refer to "evil," or there may be an omission here.

q. The rest of the sentence is obscure, probably corrupt.

r. S D na izvolenoe tebe; A B C K na izvolenie tebe is meaningless.

s. Slav. dŭlajuščemu nepoleznoje is clear, but the only possible dat. that could agree is tebe, which would mean "by you who are doing useless things." Could Abraham be upbraiding God? If not, there must be a lacuna here.

t. S has nŭ svŭtstvovjemŭ, which could be emended to a plausible svŭtstvovjemŭ and mean "but through your radiance"; this phrase precedes dŭlajuščemu. The D A B C K vŭ svŭtŭ rojemŭ, "in your light [or world; or counsel, council]," could well be secondary, an attempt to repair an incomprehensible passage.

24 a. The text is corrupt and at some point there must be omissions. Perhaps "thus" goes with "close." The notion of anger introduced by Bonwetsch and copied by Box and Landsman is totally absent from the passage.

b. Slav. utjažčenaja, possibly "things which have been made grievous against"; grammatical connection with the preceding text is not clear.

c. Or "what had come into being in creation."

d. Slav. jako, "as," Gk. hōs.

e. Slav. bezakonnikomŭ, presumably an echo of the description of Cain just before, vragomŭ bezakoninovavŭšago Kaina.

f. I.e. Gk. porneia.

g. S omits.

h. Slav. želanie, a neuter, but the following possessives are feminine, surely reflecting mechanical translation of pronouns referring to Gk. epithymia.

i. S omits to end of the sentence.

j. D mučenie, Gk. martyrion, basanos, timōria; A B C K molčanie, "silence," Gk. hēsychia, is surely secondary, a scribal slip in the fore-text common to the Palaia MSS.

k. Slav. rastočenie, usually renders the Gk. diaskorpismos, but also possibly "alienation," ekpoiesis, or "abortion."

l. Slav. predajemo, lit. "being given over."

25 a. Or "bronze," Gk. chalkos.

b. None of the MSS is quite grammatical. Perhaps emend to dobrolŭpnu xyrostiju i krasotoju, "handsome [Gk. euprepēs] with the art and beauty."

you have seen, the altar and the works of art, this is my idea of the priesthood of the name of my glory, where every petition of man^c will enter and dwell; the ascent of kings^d and prophets and whatever sacrifice I decree to be made for me among my coming people, even of your tribe. • And the body^e you saw is my anger, because the people who will come to me out of you will make me angry. • And the man you saw slaughtering is he who angers me, and the sacrifice is a killing of those who are for me a testimony of the judgment of the completion at the beginning of creation."

1 26 And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Why did you establish it to be so and to call on the testimonies of this one?" • And he said to me, "Hear, Abraham, and understand what I will explain to you, and answer whatever I ask you. • Why did your father Terah not obey your voice and abandon the demonic worship of idols until he perished, and all his house with him?" • And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One, surely because it did not please him to obey me, nor did I follow his works." • And he said to me, "Hear, Abraham. As the counsel^a of your father is in him, as your counsel is in you, so also the counsel of my will is ready.^b • In days^c to come you will not know them in advance, nor the future (men) you will see with your own eyes that^d they are of your seed. • Look at the picture!"

1 27 And I looked and I saw, and behold the picture swayed. And from its left side a crowd of heathens^a ran out and they captured the men, women, and children who were on its right side. • And some they slaughtered^b and others they kept with them. • Behold, I saw (them) running to them^c by way of four ascents^d and they burned the Temple with fire, and they plundered the holy things that were in it. • And I said, "Eternal One, the people you received from me are being robbed by the hordes of the heathen. • They are killing some and holding others as aliens, and they burned the Temple with fire and they are stealing^e and destroying^f the beautiful things which are in it. • Eternal, Mighty One! If this is so, why now^g have you afflicted my heart and why will it be so?" • And he said to me, "Listen, Abraham, all that you have seen will happen on account of your seed who will (continually) provoke me because of the body^h which you saw and the murder in what was depicted in the Temple of jealousy, and everything you sawⁱ will be so."^h • And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Let the evil works (done) in iniquity now pass by; but make commandments in themⁱ more than his^j just works. • For you can do this."ⁱ • And he said to me, "Again the time of justice will come upon them, at first through the holiness^k of kings. • And I will judge with justice^l those whom I created earlier,^m to rule from them in them. • And from these same ones will come men who will have regard forⁿ them, as^o I announced to you and you saw."

c. Specifically "male."

d. S D; A B K "kingdoms"; C by error "temple."

e. Or "statue."

26 a. S D A C have světū, "light," but B specifies sūvēt and K the newer spelling sūvētū, "counsel, council." B K thus believed that "light" was inappropriate here.

b. Or "prepared."

c. From this point D departs radically from other MSS, reducing the rest of the work to a dozen lines made up of recognizable phrases from later chs., but utterly incoherent and therefore useless for our purposes.

d. Or "for, since." The sentence is not clear.

27 a. Or "a heathen people."

b. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

c. Slav. priekšaja, "(them) running," probably is the heathen, while "to them" denotes the victims; but the passage is not clear.

d. S suxody, "descents, goings down"; A B C

K vuxody, "entrances, goings in"; philologically also vuxody, "ascents, goings up," or isxody, "exits, goings out," are justifiable, cf. also 28:4, S below and Ladlac S, n. d. The acc. numeral četyri here makes no sense ("four descents running"); instrumental četyrimi is to be posited.

e. S omits.

f. A B C K "from now."

g. Or "statue."

h. A B C K omit.

i. S zapovědi stvori vū nixū, probably corrupt. Others are not much better, zapovědi stvorivūšixū, "those who have made commandments"; but neither acc. nor gen. fits the context.

j. Reference unclear. This whole sentence is garbled and probably has lost words or phrases.

k. Archaic prēpodobie, Gk. hosiotes, simplified in A B C K to podobie, "semblance."

l. Slav. vū pravdě, lit. "in justice."

m. Or "at first."

n. Slav. potūščati, probably Gk. spoudazein.

o. Or "inasmuch as."

1 28 And I answered and said, "Mighty, Eternal One, you who are sanctified by your power, be merciful in my petition, since for this you informed me^a and showed me. • Since you have brought me up on to your height, therefore inform me,^a your beloved, about whatever I ask: Will what I saw be their lot^b for long?" • And he showed me a multitude of his people. • And he said to me, "For this reason (it is) through the four ascents^c you saw^d (that) my anger will be because of them,^e and in them will be retribution^f for their works. • And in the fourth ascent^g is one hundred years. And one hour of the age will also be one hundred years^h in evil among the heathenⁱ and an hour in their mercy, even with reproaches as among the heathen."^j

1 29 And I said, "Eternal, Mighty^a One! How long a time is an hour of the age?" • And he said, "I decreed to keep twelve periods of the impious age among the heathens and^b among your seed, and what you have seen will be^b until the end of time. • Count (it) up, and you will understand. • Look down at the picture."^c • And I looked^d and saw a man going out from the left, the heathen side. From the side of the heathen went out men and women and children, a great crowd, and they worshiped him. • And while I was still looking, those on the right side came out, and some insulted this man, and some struck him and others worshiped him. • And I saw that as they worshiped him Azazel ran and worshiped and, kissing his face, he turned and stood behind him. • And I said, "Eternal, Mighty One! Who is this man insulted and beaten by the heathen, with Azazel worshiped?"^d • And he answered and said, "Hear, Abraham, the man whom you saw insulted and beaten and again worshiped is the liberation^e from the heathen for the people who will be (born) from you. • In the last days, in this twelfth hour of impiety, in the twelfth period of the age of my fulfillment,^f I will set up this man from your tribe, the one whom you have seen from my people. • All will imitate him, . . . (you) consider^g him as one called by me . . . (they) are changed^h in their counsels.ⁱ • And those you saw coming out from the left side of the picture and worshiping him, this (means that) many of the heathen will trust in him. • And those of your seed you saw on the right side, some insulting him, some beating him, and others worshiping him, many of them shall be offended^j because of him. • It is he who will test those of your seed who have worshiped him in the fulfillment of the twelfth hour, in the 28 a. S omits because of homoeoteleuton.

b. Lit. "will what I saw be to them."

c. S B C K sxody, "descents"; A isxody, "exists"; cf. n. d to ch. 27.

d. S A C K "which you saw"; B "as you saw."

e. Obscure. Lit. "will be to me from them anger (or angering)."

f. S B C K vūzdanie; A vzderžanie, "restraint." g. S sxodū, "descent"; A B C K vxod, "entrance"; cf. n. c.

h. C omits to end of vs.; but a mark in the MS leads one to expect a marginal note that is not visible in the microfilm.

i. S omits rest of sentence because of homoeoteleuton.

j. Sense of last clause is obscure.

29 a. S omits.

b. Ambiguous, could be "what you have seen will be among your seed even."

c. S omits.

d. This sentence is obscure and may well be corrupt; the translation is strictly literal and retains the original word order. Two opposite interpretations are possible. In one, the phrase "with Azazel" is construed with "by the heathen" to mean that the heathen are being aided by Azazel in insulting, beating, and, presumably, also worshiping the man. In the other, "with Azazel" is construed with the following participle to mean that both Azazel and the man are being worshiped.

e. Slav. oslaba, "liberation, security, relaxation," Gk. adeia, anesis.

f. Slav. sūkončanie, "ending, completion, consummation," Gk. symplērōsis, plērōsis, synleleia.

g. Slav. pritiūči, apparently imperative of pritiūknuti, "push, touch, prove," which furnishes the stem for the noun pritiūča, "comparison, proverb," and related words. The connection of this clause with the context is obscure.

h. This clause is corrupt, and omissions must be assumed. The nom. plural present participle preminujušče sja has no subject; and it requires emendation. Assuming the Novgorod substitution of i for ě (well attested in all MSS elsewhere), preminujušče sja means "being exchanged for, turning into." Alternatively, the reflexive particle sja may be suppressed, yielding the sense "passing by, going past."

i. The reflexive possessive may refer to the lost subject of the participle, or to some other possessor not preserved in the context. Instead of "counsels," the meaning may be "lights" or possibly "worlds."

j. Or "led into error," Gk. skandalizontai.

14 curtailment of the age of impiety. *Before the age of justice starts to grow,^k my judgment will come upon the heathen who have acted wickedly through the people
15 of your seed^l who have been set apart for me. *In those days I will bring upon all earthly creation ten plagues through evil and disease and the groaning of the 16 bitterness of their souls. *Such will I bring upon the generations of those who are on it,^m out of anger and corruption of their creationⁿ with which they provoke me.
17 And then from your seed will be left the righteous men in their number, protected by me, who strive^o in^p the glory of my name toward the place prepared beforehand
18 for them, which you saw deserted in the picture. *And they will live, being affirmed by the sacrifices and the gifts of justice and truth in the age of justice. *And they
19 will rejoice forever in me, and they will destroy those who have destroyed them, they will rebuke those who have rebuked them through their mockery, and they 20 will spit in their faces. *Those rebuked^q by me when they are to see me rejoicing^r with my people for those who rejoice and receive and truly return^s to me. *See, Abraham, what you have seen, hear^t what you have heard, know what you have known. *Go to your inheritance! And behold I am with you forever."^v

1 30 And while he was still speaking, I found myself on the earth, and I said, "Eternal, Mighty One, I am no longer in the glory in which I was above, and all
2 that my soul desired to understand in my heart I do not understand." *And he said to me, "I will explain to you the things you desired in your heart, for you have sought^a to know the ten^b plagues^c which I prepared against the heathen, and I
3 prepared them beforehand in^d the passing of the twelve hours on earth. *Hear what I tell you, it will be thus. *The first: sorrow from much need. The second: fiery
4 conflagrations for the cities. *The third: destruction by pestilence^e among the cattle. *The fourth: famine of the world, of their generation.^f *The fifth: among the rulers,
5 destruction by earthquake and the sword. The sixth: increase of hail and snow. *The seventh: wild beasts will be their grave. The eighth: pestilence and hunger
6 will change their destruction.^g *The ninth: execution by the sword and flight in distress. The tenth: thunder, voices, and destroying earthquakes.

1 31 "And then I will sound the trumpet out of the air, and I will send my chosen one, having in him one measure of all my power, and he will summon my people,

k. This clause may belong to the preceding sentence.

l. It is possible to read "of your seed" as describing the heathen.

m. Presumably on earth.

n. Slav. tvori, "creation, creature, creatures"; but also Gk. epitēdeuma, perhaps then ultimately here (as in Ezek 20:39) Heb. gōlīm, "idols." Yet the whole vs. is obscure, and may well be corrupt.

o. Or "hastening," Gk. spoudazontes.

p. S vū, "in"; A B C K kū, "toward." Either could be secondary.

q. Passage unclear; it is possible that the ones who "will be spitting in their faces" are identical with those "being rebuked."

r. Grammatical agreement fails here and the connections of this and the following participles cannot be established with certainty; the whole verse is corrupt.

s. S obrazujuščix sja, "forming themselves, being formed (shaped, depicted)"; B K obraščajuščix sja (acc. or gen.), A C -im sja (dat.), "returning, turning back, converting."

t. S omits.

u. S omits.

v. At this point A B C K insert a long passage beginning "And the Lord said to him from the clouds: 'Abraham, I am the Lord himself, maker of heaven and earth.' " In the earlier Palaia which does not contain ApAb this passage is an independent unit, which is introduced by the sentence: "This is written out of the Book of the Sons of Jacob [is knigū iže sutl l'jakovičij]." The passage has some echoes from earlier parts of ApAb, then specific reference to 29:11f., 14, 15, 19, 20, but simplified. (Porfir'ev prints this much in his edition of K, p. 129.) These quotations, or rather paraphrases, are then explicated in the anti-Jewish Christian polemic manner usual in the Palaia commentaries.

30 a. A B C K iskalū; S by error skazalū, "explained."

b. All desjatyja, acc. plural "tenth," surely by error for desjati, "ten," but perhaps this is a sign of a more serious corruption.

c. S vredy (from vrédū), "wound, ulcer, illness; hurt, harm," Gk. blabē; A B C K věry, "faiths." The word translated "plague" in 29:15 is jazva, "wound," Gk. plēgē.

d. A B C K v; S po, "after."

e. S gen. mora; A B C K nom. morū, making it appositive to "destruction."

f. Obscure.

g. Obscure; possibly means "take turns in causing destruction," but this cannot be certain.

2 humiliated by the heathen. *And I will burn with fire^a those who mocked them and ruled over them in this age^b and I will deliver those who have covered me with
3 mockery over to the scorn^c of the coming^d age. *Because I have prepared them^e (to be) food for the fire of Hades, and (to be) ceaseless soaring in the air of the underworld (regions)^f of the uttermost depths,^g (to be) the contents^h of a wormy
4 belly. *For the makersⁱ will see in them^j justice, (the makers) who have chosen my desire and manifestly kept my commandments, and they will rejoice with merry-making over the downfall of the men who remain and who followed^k after the 5 idols and after their murders. *For they shall putrefy in the belly of the crafty
6 worm Azazel, and be burned by the fire of Azazel's tongue. *For I waited so they 7 might come to me, and they did not deign to. *And they glorified an alien (god).
8 And they joined one to whom they had not been allotted, and they abandoned the Lord who gave them strength.^l

1 32 "Therefore, hear, Abraham, and see, behold your seventh generation shall 2 go with you. *And they will go out into an alien land. *And they will enslave^a Gen 15:13
3 them and oppress them as for one hour of the impious age. *But of the nation
4 whom they shall serve^b I am the judge."^c *And the Lord said this too,^d "Have you
5 heard, Abraham, what I told you, what your tribe will encounter in the last days?"
6 Abraham, having heard, accepted the words of God in his heart.

31 a. S ognimī; A B C K s nimī, "with him."

b. Slav. vū věkū, "in an age, for an age" (or "the age"), but usually "forever," Gk. eis aiōnion.

c. Slav. ukoriznišvo, unique to this passage; not clearly different from usual ukorū or ukorizna, "shame, mockery, derision, reproach."

d. S nastajuščago, a rare word; A B C K substitute the ordinary nastajuščego, "present" (which is used for Gk. epiousios in the Lord's Prayer).

e. S ry; A B C K to "this."

f. S podzemnyū, dat. plural adjective, "underworld, subterranean"; A B C K pod zemnyū, "under the earthy," with an instrumental plural noun to be supplied.

g. S ends here; the rest of ApAb is transmitted only in the Palaia texts.

h. C napolnenie, "filling"; B adds ploda, "fruit," which might mean "fullness of/with fruit" but the syntax is odd; A has past passive participle napolneny (acc.), "filled"; K has nom. napolneni, plus ploda, "filled with (the) fruit." Translation assumes plod is a gloss to explain napolnenie.

i. Slav. tvorici, "doers," Gk. poiētoi.

j. Reference unclear.

k. The participle sedūše lacks agreement, but this is a common fault of Slavonic MSS. It is probably to be taken as gen. referring to the same people as the previous clause. If it is nom. and belongs with the next clause, then the conjunction bo, "for," is inappropriate.

l. Accepting either A vzmozgšago ja, "having strengthened them," or C vzmozguščago ja, "strengthening them"; B vūzmuščago sja, "who became a man [adult], gained courage," does not fit; and K vzmozgšago is meaningless.

32 a. The text gives no clue that the subject of this sentence is different from that of the preceding and following sentences, but perhaps this represents secondary harmonization with LXX Gen 15:13.

b. Lit. "to whom they will be slaves," not exactly either LXX or Heb. Gen 15:14.

c. Lit. "I am the one who judges," reflecting Heb. dn translated as (ho) krinōn.

d. The exact end of ApAb is not certain. Porfir'ev printed vss. 5, 6 in his edition of K (p. 130). Tikhonravov, however, excluded them from his edition of A, surely because he considered them additions made by the editors of the Palaia. To be sure, these two sentences do occur in the older Palaia, following the text referred to above in n. v to ch. 29, but in the absence of detailed studies of the Abraham material in different redactions of the Palaia, it is premature to make a final judgment. After the two sentences, the older Palaia says: "After this, it is said, Abraham rose up (to go) to Egypt because of the famine," and continues with a paraphrase of Gen 12:14-20 about Sarah and Pharaoh. B C (and presumably A K, which are not available), on the other hand, quote Gen 12:1-3 and paraphrase in some detail the following account.

SECRETS OF CREATION IN 2 (SLAVONIC) ENOCH

Enoch was found blameless, and he walked with the Lord and he was taken away, a sign of עֵתָא for generations.

(Cairo Geniza Ms. B Sirach 44:16)

... the learned savant who guards the secrets of the great gods.

(Tablet from Nineveh, 19)

I. The Secrets

The notion of «secrets» occupies a distinct place in 2 (Slavonic) Enoch. The importance of this terminology is highlighted by its prominent position in the title of the book. While various manuscripts of 2 Enoch are known under different titles, most of them¹ include the word «secrets».² In some of these titles the term is connected with Enoch's books — «The Secret Books of Enoch».³ In other titles «secrets» are linked either to God («The Book[s] [called] the Secrets of God, a revelation to Enoch»)⁴ or to Enoch himself

¹ Several MSS do not include the word «secrets» in their titles. Among them — J («The word of Enoch...»), B («The life of righteous Enoch...»), MPr («From the book of righteous Enoch»), P² («The book of Enoch the son of Ared»). Cf. М. И. Соколов, Материалы и заметки по старинной славянской литературе. Выпуск третий, VII: Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного / Тексты, латинский пер. и исследование. Посмертный труд автора приготовил к изд. М. Сперанский // ЧОИДР 4 (1910) 2.47; 2.83; 2.106 and 1.145.

² таинны. Cf. A. VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch: Texte slave et traduction française (Paris, 1952) 2. Unless noted otherwise, this and the subsequent Slavonic citations are drawn from Vaillant's edition.

³ Cf. MSS A: «From the secret book(s) about the taking away of Enoch the just», Tr.: «Which are called the secret books of Enoch», U: «From the secret books about the taking away of Enoch the just», and Rum.: «From the secret books of Enoch». Cf. F. ANDERSEN, 2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch // ОТР. Vol. 1. 103; Соколов, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 1.161; 1.111; 1.153.

⁴ MSS V, N «And these are the books (called) the secrets of God, a revelation to Enoch». Соколов, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 1.83. Cf. also B² «This is the book of the secrets of God, a revelation to Enoch». Ibid. 1.133.

(«The Book of the Secrets of Enoch»):⁵ This consistency in the use of the term «secrets», in spite of its varied attribution to different subjects, may indicate that the authors and/or the transmitters of the text viewed the motif of «secrets» as a central theme of the apocalypse. The purpose of this chapter is to call attention to some details of this theme in 2 Enoch.

The Story

Despite the prominent role the word «secrets» seems to play in the titles of the book, it occurs, quite unexpectedly, only three times in the main body of 2 Enoch, twice in chapter 24 and once in chapter 36. It is not, however, coincidental that the term is found in this section of the book. Chapters 24–36 of 2 Enoch can be viewed as the climax of angelic and divine revelations to Enoch during his celestial tour. From these chapters we learn that Enoch, previously described to have been «placed» into the clothes of glory and instructed by the archangel Vereveil, was called by the Lord. The book tells that the Lord decided to reveal to Enoch the secrets of his creation, which he never explained even to his angels. Further the term «secrets» is applied only to this account of God's creation, conveyed to Enoch by the Lord himself, «face to face».⁶ The content of these revelations includes the following details:

1. Prior to the creation the Lord decided to establish the foundation of all created things;
2. He commanded one of the invisible «things» to come out of the very lowest darkness and become visible;
3. By Lord's command a primordial «great aeon», bearing the name Adoil, descended and, disintegrating himself, revealed all creation which the Lord «had thought up to create»;⁷
4. The Lord created a throne for himself. He then ordered the light to become the foundation for the highest things;
5. The Lord called out the second aeon, bearing the name Arukhas, who became the foundation of the lowest things;
6. From the waters the Lord «hardened big stones», establishing the solid structure above the waters;
7. The Lord fashioned the heavens and the sun;
8. From fire the Lord created the armies of «the bodiless ones»;
9. The Lord created vegetation, fish, reptiles, birds, and animals;
10. The Lord created man.

⁵ Cf. P «The book about the secrets of Enoch, the son of Ared», and R «The books of the holy secrets of Enoch...» Cf. VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... 2; СОКОЛОВ, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 1.1.

⁶ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 140.

⁷ Ibid. 144.

While the general structure of the account of creation appears to be similar in the shorter and the longer recension, the latter offers a lengthy account dedicated to Adam's creation and his transgression.

Let it be also noted that the notion of «secrets» sets symbolic boundaries for the story of creation; it begins and closes the account of creation. In chapter 24 the Lord tells Enoch that he wants to instruct him in His secrets. In some manuscripts of the longer recension, chapter 24 even has a specific heading, «About the great secrets of God, which God revealed and related to Enoch; and he spoke with him face to face».⁸ In chapter 36, which serves as a conclusion of the Lord's instruction, the Lord promises Enoch the role of the expert in His secrets — «Because a place has been prepared for you, and you will be in front of my face from now and forever. And you will be seeing my secrets (ТАИНЫ МОЯ)...».⁹

Expert in Secrets

The tradition about Enoch as an expert in God's secrets does not begin in 2 Enoch. Already in the earliest Enochic books of 1 (Ethiopic) Enoch, the knowledge and the revelation of secrets become major functions of the elevated Enoch.¹⁰ Later Enochic traditions also emphasize the role of Enoch as the «Knower of Secrets» (יֹדֵעַ סֵּדֵרִים). According to 3 Enoch, Enoch-Metatron is able to behold «deep secrets and wonderful mysteries».¹¹ In this Merkabah text Metatron is also responsible for transmitting the highest secrets to the Princes under him, as well as to humankind. H. Kvanvig observes that «in Jewish tradition Enoch is primarily portrayed as a primeval sage, the ultimate revealer of divine secrets».¹²

Two recent important studies¹³ in Enochic traditions trace the origin of the image of Enoch as a primeval sage preoccupied with divine secrets to ⁸ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 140.

⁹ Ibid. 161.

¹⁰ The origin of the role in Enochic traditions can be traced to 1 Enoch 72:1, 74:2, and 80:1. In 1 Enoch 41:1 Enoch is attested as the one who «saw all secrets of heaven...». M. KNIBB, The Ethiopic Book of Enoch. 2 vols (Oxford, 1978) Vol. 2. 128.

¹¹ 3 Enoch 11:2. Here and later I have used Philip Alexander's English translation of 3 Enoch, and follow his division in chapters. Cf. P. ALEXANDER, 3 (Hebrew Apocalypse of) Enoch // OTP. Vol. 1. 264.

¹² H. S. KVANVIG, Roots of Apocalyptic: the Mesopotamian Background of the Enoch Figure and of the Son of Man (Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1988) (WMANT, 61) 27.

¹³ J. VANDERKAM, Enoch and the Growth of an Apocalyptic Tradition (Washington, 1984) (CBQMS, 16); KVANVIG, Roots of Apocalyptic... On Mesopotamian origins of Enoch's figure, see also: H. ZIMMERN, Urkönige und Uroffenbarung // E. SCHRA-DER, Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament. 2 vols (Berlin, 1902–1903) Vol. 2. 530–543; H. L. JANSEN, Die Henochgestalt: Eine vergleichende religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Oslo, 1939) (Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo II. Hist.-Filos.

some heroes of the Mesopotamian lore. According to these studies, one of these possible prototypes can be an intriguing character of the «Sumerian» Kings list — Enmeduranki, king of Sippar. In three copies of the List he occupies the seventh place, which in Genesis' genealogy belongs to Enoch. In other Mesopotamian sources Enmeduranki appears in many roles and situations remarkably similar to Enoch's story. Among these roles are that of the knower and the guardian of the secrets of gods.¹⁴

The tablet from Nineveh, possibly dated before 1100 B.C.E., is a primary witness to the parallels between the stories of Enoch and Enmeduranki.¹⁵ The text, reconstructed by W. G. Lambert,¹⁶ describes Enmeduranki's initiation into the divine secrets and attests him as «the learned savant, who guards the secrets of the great gods». In this text¹⁷ Enmeduranki also functions as a Klasse, 1); P. GRELOT, La légende d'Hénoch dans les apocryphes et dans la Bible: origine et signification // RSR 46 (1958) 5–26, 181–210.

¹⁴ GRELOT, La légende d'Hénoch dans les apocryphes et dans la Bible... 182, 186. Enmeduranki was also regarded as the founder of the bārû guild, the elite group of diviners, the experts in omens. Cf. VANDERKAM, Enoch and the Growth of an Apocalyptic Tradition... 42.

¹⁵ KVANVIG, Roots of Apocalyptic... 190.

¹⁶ W. G. LAMBERT, Enmeduranki and Related Matters // JCS 21 (1967) 126–138.

¹⁷ The text reads as follows:

3. «Šamaš in Ebabbara [appointed]
1. Enmeduranki [king of Sippar],
2. the beloved of Anu, Enlil [and Ea].
4. Šamaš and Adad [brought him in] to their assembly,
5. Šamaš and Adad [honored him],
6. Šamaš and Adad [set him] on a large throne of gold,
7. They showed him how to observe oil on water, a mystery of Anu, [Enlil and Ea],
8. They gave him the tablet of the gods, the liver, a secret of heaven and [underworld],
9. They put in his hand the cedar[-rod], beloved of the great gods.
10. Then he, in accordance with their [word(?)] brought
11. the men of Nippur, Sippar and Babylon into his presence,
12. and he honoured them. He set them on thrones before [him],
13. he showed them how to observe oil on water, a mystery of Anu, Enlil and Ea,
14. He gave them the tablet of the gods, the liver, a secret of heaven and under world,
15. He put in their hand the cedar[-rod], beloved of the great gods.
16. {The tablet of the gods, the liver, a mystery of heaven and underworld;
17. how to observe oil on water, a secret of Anu, Enlil and Ea;
18. 'that with commentary', When Anu, Enlil; and how to make mathematical calculations.}
19. The learned savant, who guards the secrets of the great gods, mediator between the deities and the people of Nippur, Sippar and Babylon. He instructs them in the secrets, which he received from the deities.

Kvanvig observes that the tablet emphasizes the esoteric character of the divine wisdom revealed to Enmeduranki, reinforced by such terms as niširtu (mystery) and pirištu (secret).¹⁸

Another important detail in the passage is the juxtaposition of the terms «secrets» and «mysteries» with the phrases «heaven and underworld» and «heaven and earth». Kvanvig points out that both phrases have a «cosmological» meaning.¹⁹ Intended to describe the totality of creation — «the whole world», this terminology can also be related to cosmogonic and creational concepts.

Secrets in Enochic traditions

Just as the role of Enoch as the Knower of secrets does not begin in 2 Enoch, so also the information about the heavenly secrets is not peculiar only to this apocalypse. We encounter this theme in other biblical and the pseudepigraphical texts,²⁰ including the early Enochic booklets of 1 Ethiopic Enoch.

20. will bind his son whom he loves with an oath

21. before Šamaš and Adad by tablet and stylus and

22. will instruct him. When a diviner,

23. an expert in oil, of abiding descent, offspring of Enmeduranki, king of Sippar,

24. who set up the pure bowl and held the cedar[-rod],

25. a benediction priest of the king, a long-haired priest of Šamaš

26. as fashioned by Ninhursagga,

27. begotten by a nišakku-priest of pure descent:

28. if he is without blemish in body and limbs

29. he may approach the presence of Šamaš and Adad where liver inspection and oracle (take place)».

LAMBERT, Enmeduranki and Related Matters... 132.

¹⁸ KVANVIG, Roots of Apocalyptic... 188.

¹⁹ Ibid. 188.

²⁰ On the notion of «secrets» in the Old Testament and the Pseudepigrapha see M. N. A. BOCKMUEHL, Revelation and Mystery in Ancient Judaism and Pauline Christianity (Tübingen, 1990) (WUNT, 2/136). Qumran texts also use extensively the notions of «secret» (סֵּתֶר) and «special knowledge» (עֵלְיוֹן) and apply them to varied things, including the Torah and the halachic precepts. Cf. BOCKMUEHL, Revelation and Mystery... 53–56; W. D. DAVIES, «Knowledge» in the Dead Sea Scrolls and Matthew 1.1:25–30 // W. D. DAVIES, Christian Origins and Judaism (Philadelphia, 1962) 119–144; B. REICKE, Daʿat and Gnosis in Intertestamental Literature // Neotestamentica et Semitica. Studies in Honor of Matthew Black / Eds. E. EARLE ELLIS, M. WILCOX (Edinburgh, 1969) 245–255; H. RINGGREN, Qumran and Gnosticism // Le Origini dello Gnosticismo / Ed. U. BIANCHI (Leiden, 1967) (SHR, 12) 379–388.

I Enoch applies the term «secrets» to various things Enoch acquires during his celestial tour. In 41:1–3 Enoch tells about his experience:

... I saw all the secrets of heaven, and how the kingdom is divided, and how the deeds of men are weighed in the balance. There I saw the dwelling of the chosen and the resting-places of the holy; and my eyes saw there all the sinners who deny the name of the Lord of Spirits being driven from there, and they dragged them off, and they were not able to remain because of the punishment which went out from the Lord of Spirits. And there my eyes saw the secrets of the flashes of lightning and the thunder, and the secrets of the winds, how they are distributed in order to blow over the earth, and the secrets of the clouds and of the dew...²¹

The passage shows that in I Enoch the secrets include not only astronomical, cosmological, and calendrical information, but also eschatological details which Enoch acquired either himself or through angelic mediators.²² The unity between the cosmological and the eschatological, between the secrets of «heaven» and the secrets of «earth», is prominent in I Enoch 52:2, where Enoch attests that he «saw the secrets of heaven, everything that will occur on earth: a mountain of iron, and a mountain of copper, and a mountain of silver, and a mountain of gold, and a mountain of soft metal, and a mountain of lead ...all these things which serve the authority of the Messiah».²³ Markus Bockmuehl notes that cosmological and eschatological secrets occur repeatedly in tandem and show the intimate link between the cosmological mysteries of heaven and the eschatological questions pursued by the visionaries.²⁴

The tendency to include the knowledge about future eschatological events in the notion of «secrets» can be found both in the Pseudepigrapha and in the Bible. Bockmuehl observes that the term רִיב in Daniel always relates in some way to a disclosure of the future.²⁵ The labeling of disclosures of the future as «secrets» becomes a prominent motif in the later «Enochic» text, Sefer Hekhalot. In 3 Enoch 11:2–3 Enoch-Metatron tells R. Ishmael that from the time of his elevation he has acquired an ability to see deep secrets and wonderful mysteries.²⁶ According to the text, before a man thinks in secret, Metatron is able see his thought; before a man acts, he can see his act. Metatron

²¹ KNIBB, The Ethiopic Book of Enoch... Vol. 2. 128–129.

²² For a complete discussion about «revealed things» in apocalyptic literature see M. Stone's pioneering research in M. STONE, Lists of Revealed Things in the Apocalyptic Literature // Magnalia Dei: The Mighty Acts of God / Eds. F. M. CROSS, W. E. LEMKE, P. D. MILLER, Jr. (New York, 1967) 414–452.

²³ KNIBB, The Ethiopic Book of Enoch... Vol. 2. 136.

²⁴ BOCKMUEHL, Revelation and Mystery... 35.

²⁵ Ibid. 36.

²⁶ להסתכל ברזי עמוקה ובסוד מופלאה. P. SCHÄFER with M. SCHLÜTER and H. G. VON MUTIUS, Synopse zur Hekhalot-Literatur (Tübingen, 1981) (TSAJ, 2) 9.

concludes that «there is nothing in heaven above or deep within the earth concealed from me».²⁷ It is clear that the passage understands «secrets» to be foresights of human deeds and thoughts.

3 Enoch also demonstrates some other affinities with 1 Enoch in its usage of the notion «secrets». First, it applies the word «secrets» to various revealed «things» — «all mysteries of wisdom, all the depths of the perfect Torah, and the thoughts of human hearts».²⁸ Second, in similarity with 1 Enoch, it includes eschatological and historical details under the category of the «secrets». Third, the angels in 3 Enoch are aware of God's secrets: «YHWH the God of Israel is my witness that when I revealed this secret to Moses, all the armies of the height, in every heaven, were angry with me...».²⁹ Fourth, Gruenwald's research emphasizes the close proximity between apocalyptic and Merkabah mysticism in the concept of «secret oath/name» which plays a significant role in the cosmology of 1 Enoch and 3 Enoch.³⁰

In contrast to these apocalyptic and Merkabah Enochic texts, 2 Enoch offers a different understanding of «secrets». At least four points of difference need to be noted. First, 2 Enoch does not apply the notion of «secrets» to many types of revelation. This term occurs very rarely in the book and is reserved only for the particular cosmogonic³¹ revelation of the Lord. Second, the term is never applied to an earthly affair, not even in reference to historical and eschatological information. Third, the «secret name» does not play any significant role in 2 Enoch's cosmogony. Fourth, the angels in 2 Enoch do not know about God's cosmogonic «secrets».

Moreover, it seems that in 2 Enoch the realm of the secrets, even «topologically», transcends the angelic world. The shorter recension tells us that before the cosmogonic revelation took place, the Lord had «placed» Enoch to the left of Himself, closer than Gabriel.³² Further, the Lord confirms the transcendence of the knowledge about creation over the angelic world when He informs Enoch that even to his angels He has explained neither his secrets nor his «endless and inconceivable creation which He conceived».³³

²⁷ ALEXANDER, 3 Enoch... 264.

²⁸ 3 Enoch 11:1. Cf. ALEXANDER, 3 Enoch... 264.

²⁹ Ibid. 315.

³⁰ I. GRUENWALD, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism (Leiden, 1980) (AGJU, 14) 10–11.

³¹ On cosmogony in 2 Enoch, see S. PINES, Eschatology and the Concept of Time in the Slavonic Book of Enoch // Types of Redemption / Ed. R. J. ZWI WERBLOWSKY, J. JOUCO BLEEKER (Leiden, 1970) (SHR, 18) 72–87; M. PHILONENKO, La cosmogonie du «Livre des secrets d'Hénoch» // Religions en Égypte: Hellénistique et romaine (Paris, 1969) 109–116; G. SCHOLEM, On the Mystical Shape of the Godhead (New York, 1991) 98–101; IDEM, Origins of the Kabbalah (Princeton, 1987).

³² ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 143.

³³ Ibid. 143.

The «secrecy» of the Lord's revelation is underscored further by several additional factors.

First, immediately following the cosmogonic instructions, the Lord informed Enoch that he appointed an intercessor, the archangel Michael, and guardian angels, Arioch and Marioch,³⁴ for Enoch's writings which should not perish in the impending flood:

For I will give you an intercessor, Enoch, my archistratig, Michael, on account of your handwritings and the handwritings of your fathers — Adam and Seth. They will not be destroyed until the final age. For I have commanded my angels Arioch and Marioch, whom I have appointed on the earth to guard them and to command the things of time to preserve the handwritings of your fathers so that they might not perish in the impending flood which I will create in your generation (33:10–12).³⁵

The motif of the guardian angels of the books is peculiar to the esoteric tradition conveyed to Enoch. It might indicate that we are dealing here with the famous «secret» books by which antediluvian wisdom reached postdeluvian generations. This motif of antediluvian «secret» writings has a number of parallels in Mesopotamian lore.³⁶

Second, the esoteric details of the Lord's cosmogonic revelations do not appear in chapters 39–66, dedicated to Enoch's instructions to his children. In these chapters Enoch shares the information about his heavenly tour and his extraordinary experiences near the Throne of Glory. He conveys to his children an esoteric knowledge which includes meteorological, cosmological, and eschatological information. In this section of the book Enoch even offers a lengthy description of the Lord's limbs «without measure and analogy»³⁷ which, some scholars believe, belongs to another highly esoteric trend of Jewish mysticism.³⁸ The full account of God's cosmogonic revelations, however, does not appear in these instructions of Enoch. Even though the text makes several allusions to the creation story, telling us that «the Lord was the one who laid the foundations upon the unknown things and ... spread out the heavens above the visible and the invisible things»,³⁹ Enoch never discloses to his children the full story about Adoïl and Arukhas.

³⁴ On the origin of the names Arioch and Marioch see J. FOSSUM, The Name of God and the Angel of the Lord (Tübingen, 1985) (WUNT, 36) 321–328; L. GRY, Quelques noms d'anges ou d'êtres mystérieux en II Hénoch // RB 49 (1940) 199–200.

³⁵ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 157.

³⁶ Cf. GRELOT, La légende d'Hénoch dans les apocryphes et dans la Bible... 9–13.

³⁷ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 163.

³⁸ G. Scholem argues that the terminology of this section in 2 Enoch shows apparent similarities to the שֵׁנוֹר קִימָה tradition. Cf. SCHOLEM, On the Mystical Shape of the Godhead... 29.

³⁹ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 174.

II. Secrets of Creation in the Merkabah Tradition

Despite the differences in the treatment of «secrets» in 2 Enoch and 3 Enoch that have been mentioned earlier, the approach to the mysteries of creation found in 3 Enoch demonstrates close affinities with that in the Slavonic Enoch.

The theme of the secrets of creation plays an important role in 3 Enoch; it is surrounded by several details found in 2 Enoch. The similarities include the following points:

1. One of these parallels is Enoch's initiation into the secrets of Creation. The important detail in both texts is that some preparatory instructions before the account of creation were given through angels. In the case of 3 Enoch, the instructions were given through the angels known as the «Prince of Wisdom» (שֵׁר הַחִכְמָה) and the «Prince of Understanding» (שֵׁר הַבִּינָה); in the case of 2 Enoch they came through the angel Vereveil (ВЕРЕВЕИЛ). In both books these angelic mediators do not reveal «secrets» but offer instead some preparatory knowledge. In 2 Enoch Vereveil instructs Enoch in different «things» — «all things of heaven and earth and sea and all the elements and the movements and their courses ... and the Hebrew language, every kind of language of the new song of the armed troops and everything that it is appropriate to learn» (23:1–2).⁴⁰ In 3 Enoch the Prince of Wisdom and the Prince of Understanding teach Enoch-Metatron «wisdom» — «the wisdom of those above and those below, the wisdom of this world and the world to come».⁴¹

2. Both texts also mention that immediately after these preparatory angelic instructions, the Lord (the Holy One) reveals «the secrets of creation» to Enoch (Metatron). From 3 Enoch 11:2 we learn that all the secrets of creation (סֵתֵרֵי בְרֵאשִׁית)⁴² now stand revealed before Enoch-Metatron as they stand revealed before the Creator. In 2 Enoch 24:2–4 the Lord instructs Enoch in the secrets of his «endless and inconceivable creation», the mysteries which he never explained even to his angels:

Whatever you see, Enoch, things standing still and moving about and which were brought to perfection by me, I myself will explain it to you.... And not even to my angels have I explained my secrets, nor related to them their composition, nor my endless and inconceivable creation which I conceived, as I am making them known to you today.⁴³

3. As was mentioned earlier, the notion of «secrets» in 3 Enoch includes various types of revelations. Even though the book applies the term «secrets»

⁴⁰ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 140.

⁴¹ ALEXANDER, 3 Enoch... 264.

⁴² MS M40. Cf. SCHÄFER, Synopse... 8. MS V228 instead of «the secrets of creation» uses — «the orders of creation» (סִדְרֵי בְרֵאשִׁית). Cf. SCHÄFER, Synopse... 9.

⁴³ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 143.

to several things, including the Torah, it also seems to use the notion of «the special secret» in reference to certain details of the Account of Creation. According to the book, this special secret plays an important role in «God's creation of everything». We learn about the secret from 3 Enoch 48D, where Metatron tells R. Ishmael that he was the person who revealed the special secret Moses, in spite of the protests of the heavenly hosts:

YHWH the God of Israel is my witness that when I revealed this secret to Moses, all the armies of the height, in every heaven, were angry with me. They said to me, «Why are you revealing this secret to humankind, born of woman, blemished, unclean, defiled by blood and impure flux, men who excrete putrid drops — that secret by which heaven and earth were created, the sea and the dry land, mountains and hills, rivers and springs, Gehinnom, fire and hail, the garden of Eden and the tree of life? By it Adam was formed, the cattle and the beasts of the field, the birds of heaven and the fish of the sea, Behemoth and Leviathan, the unclean creatures and reptiles, the creeping things of the sea and the reptiles of the deserts, Torah, wisdom, knowledge, thought, the understanding of things above, and the fear of heaven. Why are you revealing it to flesh and blood?»⁴⁴

P. Alexander observes that in this passage «the secret» could be either (1) the Torah, or (2) the secret names of God. He further suggests that «the identification of the secret with the Torah appears to be excluded by the fact that Torah is one of the things created by the secret».⁴⁵ This situation in which the notion of «secret» transcends the realm of the Torah and refers instead to God's creation appears to have close affinities to the position of 2 Enoch, where the Torah is not listed among God's mysteries.

III. Secrets of Creation in the Zoharic Tradition

The cosmogonic account in 2 Enoch demonstrates close similarities not only with that in the Merkabah tradition⁴⁶ but also with much later developments of Jewish mysticism. The following analysis is an attempt to trace some affinities between the account of creation in 2 Enoch and that in some medieval texts of Jewish mysticism.

Stones

In one of his books⁴⁷ G. Scholem points to an interesting detail in the creation narrative in 2 Enoch. The story involves the enigmatic stones the ⁴⁴ ALEXANDER, 3 Enoch... 315.

⁴⁵ Ibid. 315.

⁴⁶ On the Merkabah features of 2 Enoch cf. A. ORLOV, Titles of Enoch-Metatron in 2 Enoch // JSP 18 (1998) 71–86; IDEM, The Origin of the Name Metatron and the Text of 2 (Slavonic Apocalypse of) Enoch // JSP 21 (2000) 19–26.

⁴⁷ SCHOLEM, Origins of the Kabbalah... 73.

Lord placed in the waters during the process of creation. In chapters 28–29, when the Lord instructed Enoch about the secrets of the Account of Creation, He said:

Then from the waters I hardened⁴⁸ big stones,⁴⁹ and the clouds of the depths⁵⁰ I commanded to dry themselves. And I did not name what fell to the lowest places.⁵¹ Gathering the ocean into one place, I bound it with a yoke. I gave to the sea an eternal boundary, which will not be broken through by the waters. The solid structure⁵² I fixed and established it above the waters (28:2–4).⁵³

The theme of the «big stones» plays an important role in the creation narrative of 2 Enoch. G. Scholem draws attention to the relationship between these enigmatic stones and the cosmogonic tradition of «an esoteric baraita»⁵⁴ in which the word בְּהוֹרֵי וְבְהוֹרֵי of Genesis 1:2 was interpreted as muddy stones, sunk in the abyss». ⁵⁵ Scholem's remark⁵⁶ invites a further exploration into the role of the enigmatic stones in Aggadic traditions. m. Hag. 2:1 prohibits the exposition of מַעֲשֵׂה בְּרֵאשִׁית in the public. Cosmogonic doctrines, however, were important during all stages of Jewish mysticism,⁵⁷ and occupied a prominent place in such books as Sefer Yetsirah and Sefer ha-Bahir.⁵⁸ Isaiah Tishby observes that the understanding of the causes and proc-

⁴⁸ The verb оутвърдити could be also rendered as «to place». Sreznevskij's Dictionary lists this translation among possible meanings of the Slavonic word. See И. СРЕЗНЕВСКИЙ, Словарь древнерусского языка. 3 тома (Москва, 1989) Т. 3. 1306.

⁴⁹ КАМЕНЬ ВЕЛИКО.

⁵⁰ БЕЗДНЫМЪ. Another choice for translation can be «abyss». Kurz and Sreznevskij equate the Slavonic term with the Greek ἄβυσσος. Cf. J. KURZ (ed.), Slovník Jazyka Staroslovenského [Lexicon Linguae Palaeo-Slovenicae]. 4 vols. (Prague, 1966) Vol. 1. 76; СРЕЗНЕВСКИЙ, Словарь древнерусского языка... Т. 1. 55.

⁵¹ БЕЗДНЫ. Again the same term, which can be translated as «abyss».

⁵² Твердь. This Slavonic word can be also translated as «a foundation». The verb основахъ («established») favors such a translation.

⁵³ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 147.

⁵⁴ b. Hag. 12a.

⁵⁵ SCHOLEM, Origins of the Kabbalah... 74. He points also to «the muddy stones from which darkness flows» in the Targum on Job 28:8. Another interesting early parallel could be «stones of bohu» in Isa 34:11.

⁵⁶ Gershom Scholem was a unique exception in his field, as he persistently tried to investigate the relationships between 2 Enoch and the Jewish mystical traditions. Even though his observations on possible parallels between 2 Enoch and Jewish texts are not systematic, they are very perceptive and can provide many insights for students of 2 Enoch.

⁵⁷ Cf. G. SCHOLEM, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (New York, 1954).

⁵⁸ For the discussion of the parallels between the cosmogonies of these two texts and 2 Enoch cf. SCHOLEM, Origins of the Kabbalah... 73–75; IDEM, On Mystical Shape of the Godhead... 98–100.

esses of the formation of the world became one of the central themes in late Jewish mysticism.⁵⁹

In late Jewish mysticism, especially in the Zohar, the theme of the big stones placed by the Creator in the waters (in the abyss) occupied an important place. In spite of the late date of the Zohar, these materials have preserved important early traditions relevant to the subject of our research. Moreover, this medieval compendium of Jewish mystical knowledge mentions a book under the title «The Book of the Secrets of Enoch»⁶⁰ which is identical with the titles given to 2 Enoch in some manuscripts.⁶¹

Similarities between 2 Enoch and the Zohar are not confined only to the title of the Slavonic Enoch. Several scholars, including G. H. Box and H. Odeberg, have noted striking parallels between both texts, especially in the materials of the longer recension. G. H. Box points to the connection between 2 Enoch and the Zohar and observes that «the Slavonic Enoch... is remarkably illuminating in its realistic presentment of some of the Kabbalistic ideas — e.g. as to the process of creation, the constitution of the heavens, and so on».⁶² H. Odeberg, who was Box's student at the University of London, holds a similar view.⁶³ In spite of some apparent deficiencies in his edition⁶⁴ of 3 Enoch his work contains important insights into possible relationships between the Slavonic Enoch and late Jewish mysticism. Odeberg, who used Forbes' separate translations of the shorter and longer recensions of 2 Enoch, makes a number of provocative comments on the nature of the Jewish mystical traditions incorporated in these texts. In his opinion, the longer recension sometimes contains concepts that belong to a later (post-Hekhaloth) development of Jewish mysticism. In this respect, he found a number of striking similarities with the Zoharic tradition. It should be noted that Odeberg's position was partially conditioned by his favoring of the shorter recension as more ancient and original.⁶⁵ He viewed the longer recension as a later ⁵⁹ I. TISHBY, The Wisdom of the Zohar: Anthology of Texts. 3 vols. (London, 1994) Vol. 2. 549.

⁶⁰ וְסֵפֶר הַזֹּהָר, 2.180b. Cf. R. MARGALIT (ed.), סֵפֶר הַזֹּהָר. 3 vols. (Jerusalem, 1940) Vol. 2. 360.

⁶¹ Cf. Р КНИГА О ТАЙНАХЪ ЕНУХОВИХЪ («The book about the secrets of Enoch») and Р КНИГИ СВАТИХЪ ТАИНЪ ЕНУХОВЪ («The books of the holy secrets of Enoch»). Cf. VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... 1; СОКОЛОВ, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 1.1.

⁶² W. O. E. OESTERLEY, G. H. BOX, A Short Survey of the Literature of Rabbinical and Mediaeval Judaism (New York, 1920) 236.

⁶³ Cf. H. ODEBERG, 3 Enoch or the Hebrew Book of Enoch (New York, 1973) 1.22.

⁶⁴ Cf. J. GREENFIELD, Prolegomenon // ODEBERG, 3 Enoch... xi–xlvii.

⁶⁵ Although, «original» might be an inappropriate word here. P. Sacchi rightly observes that «the original is an abstract concept; no one possesses the author's manu-expansion of the shorter one. In the light of the recent studies of F. Andersen, J. Charlesworth,⁶⁶ A. de Santos Otero,⁶⁷ and C. Böttrich,⁶⁸ who argue for the originality of the longer recension, Odeberg's hypothesis is losing its persuasive power. In this context an investigation of the possible parallels between the story of creation in 2 Enoch and the Account of Creation in the Zohar can contribute not only to our understanding of the hypothetical provenance of the longer recension but to the provenance of the text in general. It also can clarify the formative value of the account of creation in 2 Enoch for subsequent rabbinic developments. The importance of such inquiry constitutes one of the reasons for the inclusion of some materials from the Book of Zohar in our research.

Zohar I, 231a reads:

The world did not come into being until God took a certain stone, which is called the «foundation stone»,⁶⁹ and cast it into the abyss⁷⁰ so that it held fast there, and from it the world was planted. This is the central point of the universe, and on this point stands the holy of holies. This is the stone referred to in the verses, «Who laid the corner-stone thereof» (Job XXXVIII, 6), «the stone of testing, the precious corner-stone» (Is. XXVIII, 16), and «the stone that the builders despise became the head of the corner» (Ps. CXVIII, 22). This stone is compounded of fire, water, and air, and rests on the abyss. Sometimes water flows from it and fills the deep. This stone is set as a sign in the centre of the world.⁷¹

Zohar II, 222a continues the theme of the foundation stone:

When the Holy One, blessed be He, was about to create the world, He detached one precious stone⁷² from underneath His Throne of Glory and script. Even the original of the Book of the Secrets of Enoch is only the most ancient form of the text available, and therefore the closest to the Original (with a capital 'O')». Cf. P. SACCHI, Jewish Apocalyptic and Its History (Sheffield, 1990) (JSPSS, 20) 237.

⁶⁶ Cf. J. H. CHARLESWORTH, The SNTS Pseudepigrapha Seminars at Tübingen and Paris on the Books of Enoch (Seminar Report) // NTS 25 (1979) 315–323; IDEM, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha and the New Testament. Prolegomena for the Study of Christian Origins (Cambridge, 1985) (SNTSMS, 54) 102–106.

⁶⁷ A. DE SANTOS OTERO, Libro de los secretos de Henoc (Henoc eslavo) // Apocri-fos del AT / Ed. A. DÍES MACHO. 4 vols. (Madrid, 1984) Vol. 4. 147–202.

⁶⁸ C. BÖTTRICH, Weltweisheit, Menschheitsethik, Urkult: Studien zum slavischen Henochbuch (Tübingen, 1992) (WUNT, 2/50); IDEM, Das slavische Henochbuch (Gütersloh, 1995) (JSHRZ, 5); IDEM, Adam als Mikrokosmos: eine Untersuchung zum slavischen Henochbuch (Frankfurt am Main, 1995) (Judentum und Umwelt, 59).

⁶⁹ אֲבֵן שְׂטִיָּה. MARGALIT, ספר הזוהר... Vol. 1. 461.

⁷⁰ תְּהוֹמָא. Ibid. 461.

⁷¹ H. SPERLING, M. SIMON (trs.), The Zohar. 5 vols (London—New York, 1933) Vol. 2. 399.

⁷² אֲבֵנָא יְקִירָא. MARGALIT, ספר הזוהר... Vol. 2. 443.

plunged it into the Abyss, one end of it remaining fastened therein whilst the other end stood out above; and this other and superior head constituted the nucleus of the world, the point out of which the world started, spreading itself to right and left and into all directions, and by which it is sustained. That nucleus, that stone, is called shethyiah (foundation), as it was the starting-point of the world. The name shethyiah, furthermore, is a compound of shath (founded) and Yah (God), signifying that the Holy One, blessed be He, made it the foundation and starting-point of the world and all that is therein.⁷³

We will now examine some important similarities between 2 Enoch and these Zoharic passages. The text of 2 Enoch uses the term БЕЗДНА⁷⁴ (literally, «abyss») which also occupied a prominent place in the narrative of the Zohar. In the Zohar, the Holy One cast a stone into the abyss. 2 Enoch does not mention that the stone fell into the abyss but does utilize the phrase, «I did not name what fell to the abyss» (28:3), with the implication that this act of the Lord had already taken place.

Another important motif in relation to the stones in both texts has to do with the theme of «establishing the foundation». 2 Enoch tells that the stones (stone) are related to the foundation which the Lord has established above the waters.⁷⁵ This labeling of stones as «foundation» is very typical for the Zoharic narrative, where the stone is referred to many times as שִׁתִּי («foundation») or שִׁתִּי אֶבֶן («foundation stone»). The concept of the «Foundation Stone» occupies a prominent place in several cosmological stories.⁷⁶ E. Burrows' research points to the Mesopotamian provenance of the concept of the «Foundation Stone», which symbolizes in these traditions the bond between heaven and earth.⁷⁷ Burrows traces the geographical origins of this cosmogonic pattern to «the sanctuaries at Nippur, at Larsa, and probably at Sippar».⁷⁸ The possible connection with Sippar is especially important for the Enochic text, if we keep in mind the possible Mesopotamian origin of Enoch's figure, based on the antediluvian king Enmeduranki of Sippar.

Finally, the difference in the number of stones in both texts must also be explained. The Zohar tells about one foundation stone, 2 Enoch speaks about ⁷³ SPERLING, SIMON, The Zohar... Vol. 4. 258–259.

⁷⁴ МЛАМЪ ЖЕ БЕЗДНЫМЪ — the clouds of the abyss, or the darkness of the abyss; ОУПАДЪКЪ БЕЗДНЫ — what fell to the abyss.

⁷⁵ ТВЕРДЬ ВОДРОУЖИХЪ И ОСНОВАХЪ ВРЪХОУ ВОДЪ (literally — «I erected a firm foundation and established it above the waters»).

⁷⁶ On the concept of the Foundation Stone, see L. GINZBERG, Legends of the Jews. 7 vols. (Philadelphia, 1955) Vol. 5. 15; E. BURROWS, Some Cosmological Patterns in Babylonian Religion // The Labyrinth / Ed. S. H. HOOKE (London, 1935) 45–59; FOSSUM, The Name of God and the Angel of the Lord... 250ff.

⁷⁷ BURROWS, Some Cosmological Patterns... 45–59.

⁷⁸ Ibid. 46–47.

stones.⁷⁹ But later in the narrative of 2 Enoch, the term switches from the plural to the singular, and refers only to one stone: «From the stone I cut off a great fire... (29:3)».⁸⁰

Adoil and Arukhas: Etymology of the Names

During His instructions in the secrets of creation, the Lord told Enoch that in the beginning of creation he had thought to create a visible creation from the invisible. This process occupies an important place in the narrative of 2 Enoch and demonstrates in complicated imagery this stage of creation. To assist our inquiry, the following passage must be quoted:

The Lord told Enoch: And I thought up the idea of establishing a foundation, to create a visible creation. And I commanded the lowest things: «Let one of the invisible things come out visibly!» And Adoil⁸¹ descended, extremely large. And I looked at him, and, behold, in his belly he had a great age.⁸² And I said to him, «Disintegrate yourself, Adoil, and let what is disintegrated from you become visible». And he disintegrated himself, and there came out from him the great age. And thus it carried all the creation which I had wished to create. And I saw how good it was. And I placed for myself a throne, and I sat down on it. To the light I spoke: «You go up higher and be solidified and become the foundation for the highest things». And there is nothing higher than the light, except nothing itself. And I spoke, I straightened myself upward from my throne. And I called out a second time into the lowest things, and I said, «Let one of the invisible things come out solid and visible». There came out Arukhas,⁸³ solid and heavy and very black. And I saw how suitable he was. And I said to him, «Come down low and become solid! And become the foundation of the lowest things!» And there is nothing lower than the darkness, except nothing itself (24–26).⁸⁴

The passage deals with two enigmatic names, Adoil and Arukhas. Much attention has been devoted to the etymology of these words which might indicate that many scholars consider these names as important cues for clarifying the origins of the text.

R. H. Charles asserts that Adoil might be derived from Hebrew, אֵל תְּ, translated as «The hand of God».⁸⁵ M. Philonenko supports this etymology pointing to some Egyptian parallels in which «les premières créatures nais-

⁷⁹ КАМЕНІЕ.

⁸⁰ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 149.

⁸¹ АДОИЛЪ.

⁸² ВѢКА БЕЛИКАГО. It can be also translated as «a great aeon».

⁸³ АРЪХАЗЪ.

⁸⁴ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 143–145.

⁸⁵ APOT. Vol. 2. 445.

sent du liquide séminal que le démiurge solitaire avait fait jaillir au moyen de sa main». ⁸⁶

L. Gry suggests reading Adoil as אור אל, «the light of God». In his opinion, some letters in the Hebrew word אור, «light», were transformed. Resh was changed into daleth. Waw was transposed. As a result of these transformations, it sounds like Adoil. ⁸⁷

A. Vaillant suggests that the name might be derived from a Hebrew word עד with a suffix, «his eternity, his aeon». ⁸⁸ G. Scholem criticizes this rendering and shows that in Hebrew the word עד has the peculiar characteristic of being unable to carry a pronominal suffix. ⁸⁹ According to Scholem's own interpretation Adoil derives from Sadoqil. ⁹⁰

J. Milik considers the name Adoil as «a Greek and Semitic hybrid: Hades + El». ⁹¹ G. Quispel derives it from Adonai-el, where the first element is the circumlocution for the Tetragrammaton. ⁹²

Another proper name in the narrative, Arukhaz, also poses several problems for interpretation. R. H. Charles believes that Arukhaz may have originated from the Hebrew word רקיע («firmament»). ⁹³

A. Vaillant supports the view that the term «Arukhas» is connected with the image of foundation (Greek, στερέωμα; Hebrew, רקיע). In his opinion it was composed from the Hebrew words ערוך «arranged» and עז «hard». ⁹⁴

J. Milik traced «Arukhas» to the Hebrew feminine term ארוכה («geographical basin»), transcribed with the masculine flexional ending as Arukhas. ⁹⁵

F. Andersen, while thinking that the name could probably be derived from the Greek word ἀρχή, points out that the ending -as, which is not Slavonic, is doubtful. ⁹⁶ He opts for another translation that connects the name with a Hebrew word ערוך («extended»). ⁹⁷

However, some materials found in the Zohar might lead us to quite different interpretations of the names «Adoil» and «Arukhas». In the Zohar I, 17b ⁸⁶ Philonenko, La cosmogonie du «Livre des secrets d'Hénoch»... 114.

⁸⁷ See GRY, Quelques noms d'anges ou d'êtres mystérieux... 201.

⁸⁸ VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... xi.

⁸⁹ SCHOLEM, Origins of the Kabbalah... 73.

⁹⁰ G. SCHOLEM, Die Lehre vom «Gerechten» in der jüdischen Mystik // Eranos-Jahrbuch 27 (1958) 252.

⁹¹ J. T. MILIK, The Books of Enoch. Aramaic Fragments of Qumran Cave 4 (Oxford, 1976) 113.

⁹² Cf. FOSSUM, The Name of God and the Angel of the Lord... 288.

⁹³ APOT. Vol. 2. 445.

⁹⁴ VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... xi–xii.

⁹⁵ MILIK, The Books of Enoch... 113.

⁹⁶ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 144–145.

⁹⁷ Ibid. 145.

one may find some provocative material from the Account of Creation that describes the same stage in the story of creation which began, just as the passage of 2 Enoch, with the idea of establishing a «foundation»:

Let there be a firmament: i.e. let there be a gradual extension. Thereupon El (God), the «right cluster», El Gadol (Great God),⁹⁸ spread forth from the midst of the waters to complete this name El and to combine with this extension, and so El was extended into Elohim (=El+H, Y, M). These H, Y, M, extended and became reversed so as to form lower waters, Y, M, H. This extension which took place on the second day is the upper waters. The hé, yod, mim, form hayam (the sea), which the upper waters. The reversal of these letters, yamah (seaward), is the lower waters. When they were firmly established, all became one whole, and this name was extended to a number of places. The upper waters are male and the lower waters female. At first they were commingled,⁹⁹ but afterwards they were differentiated into upper and lower waters. This is the meaning of «Elohim upper waters», and this is the meaning of «Adonai lower waters»; and this is the meaning of upper Hé and lower Hé.¹⁰⁰

First, the applicable correlation between this narrative and the passage of 2 Enoch lies in the similarities between the name «Adail» which is spelled in the majority of Slavonic manuscripts as «Adoil»,¹⁰¹ and אֵל גָּדוֹל — El gadol (or Gadol-el, «the great one»). Let it be noted that the Slavonic text, after it introduces the name «Adoil», defines it as «the great one» Ѧдоиль превеликы ѡѡло¹⁰² «Adoil, the great one»,¹⁰³ which, in Hebrew, is identical with his name.¹⁰⁴

⁹⁸ אֵל גָּדוֹל. MARGALIT, ספר הזוהר... Vol. 1. 34.

⁹⁹ Literally: «there were waters within waters» (היו מים במים). MARGALIT, ספר הזוהר... Vol. 1. 34.

¹⁰⁰ SPERLING, SIMON, The Zohar... Vol. 1. 75.

¹⁰¹ In the majority of MSS this name has a form Adoil (Ѧдоиль) with «o» in the middle of the word:

J — Adoil. ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 144.

R — Adoil. СОКОЛОВ, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 1.25.

P — Adoilju. Ibid. 25.

U — Adoil'. Ibid. 117.

N — Idoil. VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... 28.

B — Adoil'; Idoil'. СОКОЛОВ, Славянская Книга Еноха Праведного... 91.

B² — Adoil. Ibid. 137.

Chr — Adoil'. Ibid. 150.

¹⁰² VAILLANT, Le livre des secrets d'Hénoch... 29–30.

¹⁰³ Andersen translated it as «extremely large».

¹⁰⁴ The title El gadol, «the great God», can be connected with the term «Great Aeon», which came out from the belly of «Great One» — Adoil. Compare also Zohar's narrative: «At first there were waters within waters».

Second, the title El Gadol in the Zohar is identified with the upper waters. A similar correspondence can be found in 2 Enoch where Adoil is matched with the upper foundation.

The same symmetrical pattern also shows in the case of Arukhaz: Arukhaz, the lower foundation in 2 Enoch, and the «other extension», the lower waters in the Zohar. Both texts use the term «lower» in reference to Arukhaz. This term can serve as a clue to resolving the etymological mystery of this enigmatic name. The word «Arukhas» in 2 Enoch might be related to the Aramaic אַרְכַּחַז, translated as «lower».¹⁰⁵ It is noteworthy that Frg. Tg. on Gen 1:6 uses this term in the expression «the lower waters» (מִיַּם אַרְכַּחַז).¹⁰⁶

Conclusion

It would be helpful now to offer some concluding remarks about the Account of Creation in 2 Enoch. These inferences will be concerned mainly with the form and the content of the examined textual material.

1. 2 Enoch appears to contain a systematic tendency of treating the story of creation as containing the most esoteric knowledge. Even though 2 Enoch deals with various meteorological, astronomical, and cosmological revelations, it specifically emphasizes the «secrecy» of the account of creation. 2 Enoch, unlike other early apocalyptic materials (such as the Book of Daniel and 1 Enoch), does not include the variety of «revealed things» in the notion of «secrets».

2. 2 Enoch's emphasis on the «secrecy» of the creation story demonstrates an intriguing parallel to the later rabbinic approach to מַעֲשֵׂה בְּרֵאשִׁית as esoteric knowledge. 2 Enoch, therefore, can be seen as an important step in the shaping of the later rabbinic understanding of «secret things», which eventually led to the esoterism of the Account of Creation.

3. The Account of Creation in 2 Enoch includes the cosmogonic motifs of God's creation of the primordial order. These descriptions show a number of parallels with late Jewish mysticism, namely the Zoharic tradition. It supports the Box-Odeberg hypothesis, that the creation narrative of the longer recension shows a presentment of some of the Zoharic ideas of creation. At this stage of our research, it is difficult to determine whether these blocks of the Account of Creation are interpolations during the later stages of transmission or whether they belong to the original layer of the text.

4. The story of Creation appears to be more developed in the manuscripts of the longer recension. To illustrate this fact, we could point to the important description of the creation of Adam¹⁰⁷ in chapters 30–32, which are absent in ¹⁰⁵ M. SOKOLOFF, A Dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic (Ramat-Gan, 1990) 77.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid.

¹⁰⁷ Cf. GRUENWALD, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism... 51.

the manuscripts of the shorter recension. It supports Andersen's position that «the claims of the longer recension need special attention in the sections dealing with creation, chapters 24–33».¹⁰⁸

ABSTRACT

The article explores the theme of the secrets of creation in 2 Enoch. The Slavonic pseudepigraphon appears to contain a systematic tendency of treating the story of creation as containing the most esoteric knowledge. Even though 2 Enoch deals with various meteorological, astronomical, and cosmological revelations, it specifically emphasizes the «secrecy» of the account of creation. 2 Enoch's emphasis on the «secrecy» of the creation story demonstrates an intriguing parallel to the later rabbinic approach to מעשה בראשית as esoteric knowledge. 2 Enoch, therefore, can be seen as an important step in the shaping of the later rabbinic understanding of «secret things», which eventually led to the esoterism of the Account of Creation.

¹⁰⁸ ANDERSEN, 2 Enoch... 94.

BS
1830
E8
A3
1896

BARNES REFERENCE LIBRARY

THE GIFT OF ALFRED C. BARNES

~~NOT TO BE TAKEN FROM BARNES HALL~~ ~~WHEN DONE WITH, RETURN AT ONCE~~ ~~TO THE REFERENCE DIVISION~~

CORNELL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

UNDERGRADUATE LIBRARY

Cornell University Library
BS 1830.E8A3 1896

The book of the secrets of Enoch;

3 1924 014 633 568

Cornell University
Library

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

Other Works by the same Author.

The Book of Enoch. Translated from Dillmann's Ethiopic Text (emended and revised) with Introduction, Notes, Appendices, and Indices. 8vo, 16s.

The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees.
Edited from four Manuscripts, and critically revised, emended and restored in accordance with the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek and Latin Fragments of this Book, by R. H. CHARLES, M.A. 4to, 12s. 6d.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New York

MACMILLAN & CO., 112 FOURTH AVENUE

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH

TRANSLATED FROM THE SLAVONIC

BY

W. R. MORFILL, M.A.

READER IN RUSSIAN AND THE OTHER SLAVONIC LANGUAGES

AND

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES AND INDICES

BY

R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN, AND EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1896
5

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

PREFACE

THE Book of the Secrets of Enoch cannot fail to be of interest to students of Apocalyptic literature and of the origins of Christianity. It is with a view to help such that this the first edition of the book has been undertaken. In certain respects it will appeal also to specialists in Assyriology. So far indeed as it does so, I have been able to do little more than refer to the leading scholars in this department, as my knowledge of such subjects is very slight, and all secondhand.

This book has had a peculiar history. For more than 1200 years it has been unknown save in Russia, where acquaintance with it goes several centuries back. Further, by its present name it was never known in any literature save the Slavonic. Even in Slavonic the name was not quite constant, if we may trust one of the MSS. (B); for there it appears as 'The Secret Books of God which were shown to Enoch.' And yet the book was much read in many circles in the first three centuries of the Church, and has left more traces of its influence than many a well-known book of the same literature (see § 5), and it is undoubtedly of much greater importance in respect of exegesis. In its Greek form it passed current probably under the general designation of Enoch. Occasionally we find that it was not distinguished by those who used it from the older book which has come down to us through the Ethiopic. We have, in fact, in this book another fragmentary survival of the literature that once circulated under the name of Enoch.

That such a book had ever existed was not known in Western Europe till 1892, when a writer in a German review stated that there was a Slavonic version of the Ethiopic Book of Enoch. By Mr. Morfill's help it soon became clear that there was no foundation whatever for such a statement, and subsequent study showed that we had recovered therein an old and valuable pseudepigraph. The next step was naturally to secure its publication, and this was soon made possible through the kindness of the Delegates of the Press.

It will be generally understood that great difficulties beset such an undertaking, and particularly in the case of a book of whose existence there had never been even a surmise in the world of scholarship, and to which there was not a single unmistakable allusion in all ancient literature. The editor in such a case has to pursue untravelled ways, and if, in his efforts to discover the literary environment, the religious views, the date, and language of his author, he has fallen once and again into errors of perception or judgement, he can therein but throw himself on the indulgence of his critics.

The first edition of such a work must have many shortcomings. The editor will be grateful for corrections and further elucidations of the text.

In order to appreciate the value of this book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought, the reader should consult pp. xxix-xlvii of the Introduction.

In conclusion, I must express my gratitude to Mr. Morfill for his great kindness in undertaking the translation of the Slavonic texts, and for his unfailing courtesy and unwearying energy in the prosecution of the task. It is to him that I am indebted for the account of the Slavonic MSS. in § 2.

R. H. C.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xi-xlvii
§ 1. Short Account of the Book (pp. xi, xii). § 2. The Slavonic MSS. (pp. xii-xiv). § 3. The Text followed in the Translation (pp. xiv-xvi). § 4. The Language and Place of Writing—main part of the Book written originally in Greek at Alexandria, but some sections originally in Hebrew in Palestine (pp. xvi, xvii). § 5. Relation of the Book to Jewish and Christian Literature. Authors and Writings influenced directly or indirectly by this Book:—Book of Adam and Eve, Apoc. of Moses, the pseudo-Cyprian De Montibus Sina et Sion, Apoc. of Paul, St. Augustine, Sibylline Oracles, Irenaeus, Origen, Clement of Alex., Ascension of Isaiah, Ep. of Barnabas, New Testament, Tests. of the Twelve Patriarchs (pp. xvii-xxiv). § 6. Integrity and Critical Condition of the Book (pp. xxiv, xxv). § 7. Date and Authorship. Originally Hebrew sections—pre-Christian: the rest 1-50 A. D. The author—an orthodox Hellenistic Jew of Alexandria (pp. xxv, xxvi). § 8. Some of the author's views on Creation, Anthropology, and Ethics (pp. xxvii-xxix). § 9. The value of this Book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought—1. Sin the cause of death. 2. The Millennium. 3. The Creation of Man with freewill and the knowledge of good and evil. 4. The Seraphim. 5. The Intercession of Saints. 6. The Seven Heavens—an early Jewish and Christian belief (pp. xxix-xlvii).
THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH. Translation and Notes	1-84
APPENDIX. Melchizedekian Fragment	85-93
ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE PHOENIXES	94
INDEX I. Passages from the Scriptures and ancient writers	95-97
INDEX II. Names and Subjects	98-100

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK.

THE Book of the Secrets of Enoch has, so far as is yet known, been preserved only in Slavonic. It will suit our convenience to take advantage of this fact, and call it shortly 'the Slavonic Enoch,' in contradistinction to the older book of Enoch. As the latter has come down to us in its entirety through the Ethiopic alone, it will be no less convenient to designate it as 'the Ethiopic Enoch.'

This new fragment of the Enochic literature has only recently come to light through certain MSS. which were found in Russia and Servia. My attention was first drawn to this fact when editing the Ethiopic Enoch by an article by Kozak on Russian Pseudepigraphic Literature in the Jahrb. f. Prot. Theol. pp. 127-158 (1892). As it was stated in this article that there was a Slavonic Version of the Book of Enoch hitherto known through the Ethiopic Version, I at once applied to Mr. Morfill for help, and in the course of a few weeks we had before us printed copies of two of the MSS. in question. It did not take much study to discover that Kozak's statement was absolutely devoid of foundation. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch was, as it soon transpired, a new pseud-epigraph, and not in any sense a version of the older and well-known Book of Enoch. In many respects it is of no less value, as we shall see in the sequel.

The Slavonic Enoch in its present form was written somewhere about the beginning of the Christian era. Its author or final editor was an Hellenistic Jew, and the place of its composition was Egypt.

Written at such a date, and in Egypt, it was not to be expected that it exercised a direct influence on the writers of the New Testament. On the other hand, it occasionally exhibits striking parallelisms in diction and thought, and some of the dark passages of the latter are all but inexplicable without its aid.

Although the very knowledge that such a book ever existed was lost for probably twelve hundred years, it nevertheless was much used both by Christian and heretic in the early centuries. Thus citations appear from it, though without acknowledgement, in the Book of Adam and Eve, the Apocalypses of Moses and Paul (400–500 A.D.), the Sibylline Oracles, the Ascension of Isaiah and the Epistle of Barnabas (70–90 A.D.). It is quoted by name in the Apocalyptic portions of the Testaments of Levi, Daniel, and Naphtali (circ. 1 A.D.)¹. It was referred to by Origen and probably by Clement of Alexandria, and used by Irenaeus, and a few phrases in the New Testament may be derived from it.

§ 2. THE SLAVONIC MANUSCRIPTS.

The Slavonic redaction of the text of the Book of Enoch, which is now for the first time translated into English, has come down to us mainly in two versions. It will be clear from the evidence in § 4 that they are translations from a lost Greek original. The manuscripts may be thus classified. I. First those in which we find the complete text, and of these two have been preserved; (a) a MS. in the possession of Mr. A. Khludov ; this is a South Russian recension. The MS. belongs to the second half of the seventeenth century, and is found in a Sbornik or volume of miscellanies containing also lives of the Saints and other religious treatises. This text was published by Mr. A. Popov in the Transactions of the Historical and Archaeological Society of the University of Moscow, vol. iii. (Moscow 1880). It is unfortunately in many places very corrupt. It forms the basis of the present text, but where it is corrupt attempts have been made to supply a sounder text from other MSS. It is marked by the letter A in the critical notes to the present translation. (b) A MS. discovered by Prof. Sokolov of Moscow in the Public Library of Belgrade in the year 1886. This is a Bulgarian recension, and the orthography belongs to the middle Bulgarian period. This MS. is probably of the sixteenth century. It contains the account of the priesthood of Methuselah and Nir, the birth of Melchizedek and the Deluge. Though this legend does not belong to this Book of Enoch, it is added as an Appendix. II. There is also a shortened and incomplete redaction of the text of which three MSS. are known ; (a) that preserved in the Public Library of Belgrade ; a Serbian redaction, which was printed by Novaković in the sixteenth volume of the literary magazine Starine (Agram, 1884). Many of the readings of this MS. are very interesting. It is of the sixteenth century, and is cited as B. (b) That in the Vienna Public Library, which is almost identical with the preceding ; (c) a MS. of the seventeenth century in the possession of Mr. E. Barsov of Moscow.

¹ The grounds for this date of the original. These I hope to give at length in an edition of these Testaments cannot be stated here, nor yet for the assumption some pages later that they sprang from a Hebrew

Of the above MSS. I have direct acquaintance only with A and B : of the other MSS. I have only an indirect knowledge through the text prepared by Prof. Sokolov, which is based on all the above MSS. Unfortunately, however, this text has not fully discriminated these sources. Accordingly, to avoid misconceptions, this text which is designated as Sok, is to be understood as representing all authorities other than A and B.

Other fragments of the Book of Enoch are to found in Tikhonravov's Memorials of Russian Apocryphal Literature (Памятники отреченной русской литературы), and Рупин's Memorials of Old Russian Literature (Памятники старинной русской литературы). By allusions and citations in early Slavonic literature, we can see that these late manuscripts are only copies of much earlier ones, which have perished. Thus Tikhonravov cites from a fourteenth century MS.

The duty of the translator has been a comparatively simple one—to present a text which would be of service to the Western students of apocryphal literature. To this end all philological questions have been subordinated, and therefore my Slavonic friends must not blame me for not going more into linguistic matters. These would be out of place on the present occasion; certainly the time for such a work has not yet come in England. My translation will have served its purpose by enabling my friend, the Rev. R. H. Charles, to treat the subject as fully and learnedly as he has done from the standpoint of Biblical apocryphal literature. In conclusion, I must say that I am glad in however small a way to be able to contribute to such studies through the agency of Mr. Charles. I wish also to express my thanks to Professors Sokolov and Pavlov of the University of Moscow; to the former for allowing me the use of his emendated text and furnishing me with valuable notes on some obscure passages; and to the latter for the kind interest which he has taken in the book.

W. R. M.

§ 3. THE TEXT FOLLOWED IN THE TRANSLATION.

The formation of the text has been a matter of great difficulty. As I have no knowledge of Slavonic, Mr. Morfill has been so good as to furnish me with literal translations of A, B and of Prof. Sokolov's text. The number of variations which was unduly great at the outset has to some extent been diminished by Mr. Morfill's critical acumen. This careful scholar, however, I should remark, has conscientiously refrained from all but obvious corrections of the text. Starting then from his translations of the Slavonic MSS. and of Sokolov's text, I resolved after due examination to follow A in the main. B of course is followed when it preserves the obviously better reading, and that it does frequently. When both A and B are corrupt, I have fallen back on the text of Sokolov. Occasionally I have been obliged to follow one reading to the rejection of the others, in cases where all the readings were equally probable or improbable. In only two or three passages have I emended the text, and that in the case of numbers, which are frequently corrupted in tradition through MSS. In all cases the rejected variants are given in the critical notes below, so that, in the event of the discovery of fresh critical materials, the reader can revise the text for himself, and in the process will reverse, no doubt, many of the editor's judgements.

As regards the relative merits of A and B, though the former is very corrupt, it is nevertheless a truer representative of the original than B. B is really a short résumé of the work—being about half the length of A. In the process of abbreviation its editor or scribe rejected in some instances and in others recast entire sections with capricious rearrangements of the text. For an example of the method pursued occasionally in B the reader can consult the critical notes on xl.

In A we find many interpolations. Thus in xx. 3 there is a mention of the tenth heaven, and in xxi-xxii. 3 a description of the eighth, ninth and tenth heavens, though the rest of the work directly speaks of and indirectly implies only seven heavens. B omits all reference to this addition in A. The reader will find many other like additions which have as a rule been relegated to the critical notes or given in the text in square brackets.

The titles at the head of the chapters are given by A. I have enclosed them in square brackets, as they have no claim to antiquity. They are not given in Sokolov's text, nor are they found in B. A few titles do appear in B, but with one exception these consist merely of Entry of Enoch into the first heaven, Entry of Enoch into the second heaven, &c., &c., Entry of Enoch into the seventh heaven.

§ 4. THE LANGUAGE AND PLACE OF WRITING.

1. The main part of this book was written for the first time in Greek. This is shown by such statements, (1) as xxx. 13, 'And I gave him a name (i. e. Adam) from the four substances: the East, the West, the North, and the South.' Adam's name is here derived from the initial letters of the Greek names of the four quarters, i. e. ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἄρκτος, μεσημβρία. This fancy was first elaborated in Greek, as this derivation is impossible in Semitic languages. (2) Again, the writer follows the chronology of the LXX. Enoch is 165 years old when he begat Methuselah. According to the Hebrew and Samaritan chronologies he was 65. Josephus also (Ant. i. 3. 3), it is true, adopts the LXX chronology. (3) In l. 4 the writer reproduces the LXX text of Deut. xxxii. 35 against the Hebrew. (4) The writer frequently uses Ecclesiasticus, and often reproduces it almost word for word: cf. xliii. 2, 3—Ecclus. xxiii. 7; x. 20, 22, 24: also xlvii. 5—Ecclus. i. 2: also li. 1, 3—Ecclus. vii. 32; ii. 4: also lxi. 2—Ecclus. xxxix. 25: also lxv. 2—Ecclus. xvii. 3, 5. (5) lxv. 4 seems to be derived from the Book of Wisdom vii. 17, 18. So far as we can judge, it was the Greek Versions of Ecclesiasticus and Wisdom that our author used.

Some sections of this book were written originally in Hebrew. (See p. xxiv.)

2. This book was written in Egypt, and probably in Alexandria. This is deducible from the following facts. (1) From the variety of speculations which it holds in common with Philo and writings which were Hellenistic in character or circulated largely in Egypt. Thus the existent was created from the non-existent, xxiv. 2; xxv. 1: cf. Philo, de Justit. 7; souls were created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5: cf. Philo, de Somno, i. 22; de Gigantibus 3; Wisdom viii. 19, 20. Again, man had seven natures or powers, xxx. 9: cf. Philo, de Mundi Op. 40. Man could originally see the angels in heaven, xxxi. 2: cf. Philo, Quaest. in Gen. xxxii. There is no resurrection of the body, l. 2; lxxv. 6: so the Book of Wisdom and Philo taught. Finally swearing is reprobated by both, xlix. 1, 2: cf. Philo, de Spec. Leg. ii. 1. (2) The whole Messianic teaching of the Old Testament does not find a single echo in the work of this Hellenized Israelite of Egypt, although he shows familiarity with almost every book of the Old Testament. (3) The Phoenixes and Chalkydries, xii—monstrous serpents with the heads of crocodiles—are natural products of the Egyptian imagination. (4) The syncretistic character of the account of the creation, xxv–xxvi, which undoubtedly betrays Egyptian elements.

We should observe further that the arguments that make for a Greek original tend to support the view that the book was written in Egypt, especially when we take them in conjunction with the date of its composition.

§ 5. RELATION OF THE BOOK TO JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

The discoveries regarding the planets, &c., which Joel (circ. 1200 A.D.) in his Chronography assigns to Seth are, as we have shown on p. 37, most probably derived ultimately from this Book of Enoch. In like manner the statements regarding the sabbath and the duration of the world, which according to Cedrenus (circ. 1050 A.D.) were drawn from Josephus and the Book of Jubilees are likewise to be assigned to this book ; for nothing of this nature appears either in Josephus or the Book of Jubilees. Cedreus, we should remember, is largely dependent on Syncellus, and Syncellus is very often wrong in his references in the case of Apocalyptic literature (see xxxiii. 1, 2 notes). It is natural that these late writers should err regarding all facts derived from this book, inasmuch as it was already lost to all knowledge many centuries before their day. Let us now pass over these intervening centuries to a time when this book was still in some measure known. Now in the Book of Adam and Eve of the fifth century we find two passages drawn from our book which are quotations in sense more than in words. Thus in I. vi we read: 'But the wicked Satan . . . set me at naught, and sought the Godhead, so that I hurled him down from heaven.' This is drawn from xxix. 4, 5: 'One of these in the ranks of the Archangels (i.e. Satan, cf. xxxi. 4) . . . entertained an impossible idea that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. And I hurled him from the heights.' Again in the Book of Adam and Eve, I. viii: 'When we dwelt in the garden . . . we saw his angels that sang praises in heaven.' This comes from xxxi. 2: 'I made for him the heavens open that he should perceive the angels singing the song of triumph.' See notes on xxxi. 2 for similar view in Philo and St. Ephrem. Again in I. xiv of the former book the words: 'The garden, into the abode of light thou longest for, wherein is no darkness,' and I. xi: 'That garden in which was no darkness,' are probably derived from Slav. En. xxxi. 2: 'And there was light without any darkness continually in Paradise.'

Next in the Apocalypse of Moses (ed. Tischend. 1866), p. 19, we have a further development of a statement that appears in our text regarding the sun: see xiv. 2-4 (notes).

In the anonymous writing De montibus Sina et Sion 4, we have most probably another trace of the influence of our text in this century. In this treatise the derivation of Adam's name from the initials of the four quarters of the earth is given at length. This derivation appears probably for the first time in literature in xxx. 13 (see note).

In the fourth century there are undoubted indications of its use in the Apocalypse of Paul (ed. Tischend. 1866). Thus the statement, p. 64, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ παράδεισος, ἐνθα . . . δένδρον παμμεγέθη (sic) ὠραῖον, ἐν ᾧ ἐπανεπαύετο τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον is beyond the possibility of question a Christian adaptation of the Slavonic Enoch viii. 3: 'And in the midst (of Paradise is) the tree of life, in that place, on which God rests, when He comes into Paradise.' Again the words, p. 64, ἐκ τῆς ρίζης αὐτοῦ ἐξήρχετο . . . ὕδωρ, μεριζόμενον εἰς τέσσαρα ὀρύγματα, and p. 52, ποταμοὶ τέσσαρες . . . ῥέοντες μέλι καὶ γάλα καὶ ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον, are almost verbal reproductions of our text, viii. 5: 'From its root in the garden there go forth four streams which pour honey and milk, oil and wine, and are separated in four directions.' With two characteristic features of hell in this Apocalypse, i.e. οὐκ ἦν ἐκεῖ φῶς and ὁ πυρινὸς ποταμός (pp. 57, 58), we may compare x. 1 of our text: 'And there was no light there . . . and a fiery river goes forth.'

The peculiar speculation of St. Augustine in the De Civ. xxii. 30. 5 seems to be derived ultimately from xxxiii. 2 (see notes). Compare with xxxiii. 2 especially the words: 'Haec tamen septima erit sabbatum nostrum cuius finis non erit vespera, sed dominicus dies velut octavus aeternus.'

In the early part of the third and in the second century there is the following evidence of the existence of our text. Thus in the Sibylline Oracles, ii. 75 ὀρφανικοῖς χήραις τ' ἐπιδευομένοις τε παράσχον, and 88 σὴν χεῖρα πενιτεύουσιν ὀρεξον are too closely parallel to l. 5—li. 1, 'Stretch out your hands to the orphan, the widow [and the stranger, B om.]. Stretch out your hands to the poor,' to be accidental.

In Irenaeus contra Haer. v. 28. 3 we have the Jewish speculation in our text, xxxiii. 1, 2, reproduced to the effect that as the work of creation lasted six days so the world would last 6,000 years, and that there would be 1,000 years of rest corresponding to the first sabbath after creation. See text, xxxiii. 1, 2 (notes).

In Origen (according to Methodius; see Lommatzsch edition, xxi. p. 59) we find a reference to this speculation: χιλίων γὰρ ἐτῶν περιοριζομένων εἰς μίαν ἡμέραν ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς θεοῦ, ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως μέχρι καταπαύσεως μέχρις ἡμῶν, ὥς οἱ περὶ τὴν ἀριθμητικὴν φάσκουσι δεινοί, ἐξ ἡμέραι συμπεραιοῦνται. Ἐξακισχιλιοστὸν ἄρα ἔτος φασὶν ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ εἰς δεῦρο συντείνειν τῇ γὰρ ἑβδομάδι τῷ ἑπτακισχιλιοστῷ ἔτει κρίσιν ἀφίξεσθαι φασιν. Whether this passage argues a direct knowledge of the Slavonic Enoch is doubtful. There can be no doubt, however, with regard to the direct reference in the de Princip. i. 3. 2 ‘Nam et in eo libello . . . quem Hermas conscripsit, ita refertur: Primo omnium crede, quia unus est Deus, qui omnia creavit atque composuit: qui cum nihil esset prius, esse fecit omnia. . . . Sed et in Enoch libro his similia describuntur.’ Now since there is no account of the creation in the Ethiopic Enoch, Origen is here referring to the Slav. Enoch xxiv-xxx; xlvii. 3, 4.

The fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah preserved in Clement, Strom. v. 11. 77, is likewise to be traced to our text: cf. xviii. (notes).

During the years 50-100 A.D. our text seems not to be without witness in the literature of that period. Thus in the Ascension of Isaiah, viii. 16, we read with regard to the angels of the sixth heaven: ‘Omnium una species et gloria aequalis,’ whereas the difference between the angelic orders in the lower heavens is repeatedly pointed out. Now in our text, xix. 1, it is said of the seven bands of angels present in the sixth heaven that ‘there is no difference in their countenances, or their manner, or the style of their clothing.’

In 4 Ezra [vi. 71] the words ‘ut facies eorum luceant sicut sol’ are found in i. 5 ‘Their faces shone like the sun.’

With the Apocalypse of Baruch, iv. 3 ‘Ostendi eam (i.e. Paradisum) Adamo priusquam peccaret,’ compare xxxi. 2.

In the Epistle of Barnabas xv. 4 τί λέγει τό· “συντελέσειεν ἐν ἐξ ἡμέραις.” τοῦτο λέγει ὅτι ἐν ἑξακισχιλίαις ἔτεσιν συντελέσει Κύριος τὰ σύνπαντα. ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα παρ’ αὐτῷ σημαίνει χίλια ἔτη, we have an exposition of the rather confused words in our text, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. In xv. 5–7, however, the writer of this Epistle does not develop logically the thought with regard to the seventh day; for the seventh day on which God rested from His works should in accordance with the same principle of interpretation as in xv. 4 have been taken as a symbol of a thousand years of rest, i.e. the millennium. In xv. 8, however, this writer shows his return to our text by his use of the peculiar phrase ‘the eighth day’: οὐ τὰ νῦν σάββατα [ἐμοί] δεκτά, ἀλλὰ ὁ πεποίηκα, ἐν ᾧ καταπαύσας τὰ πάντα ἀρχὴν ἡμέρας ὀγδόης ποιήσω, ὅ ἐστιν ἄλλου κόσμου ἀρχή. It may not be amiss here to point out that in the next chapter, in verse 5, the Ethiopic Enoch (lxxxix. 56, 66) is quoted as Scripture. The fact, therefore, that Barnabas does not quote our text as Scripture may point to his discrimination between the two books of Enoch to the detriment of the latter. Again in this Epistle, xviii. 1, the words ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶν . . . ἥ τε τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἡ τοῦ σκότους are derived from our text, xxx. 15, ‘I showed him the two ways, the light and the darkness.’ Though the Two Ways are often described in early literature (see note on xxx. 15), only in Barnabas are they described in the same terms as in our text.

In the New Testament the similarity of thought and diction is sufficiently large to establish a close connexion, if not a literary dependence. With St. Matt. v. 9, ‘Blessed are the peacemakers,’ compare lii. 11, ‘Blessed is he who establishes peace.’ With St. Matt. v. 34, 35, 37, ‘Swear not at all: neither by the heaven . . . nor by the earth . . . nor by Jerusalem, . . . but let your speech be, Yea, yea : Nay, nay,' compare xlix. 1, 'I will not swear by a single oath, neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by any other creature which God made. . . . If there is no truth in men, let them swear by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay.' (See notes.)

With St. Matt. vii. 20, 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' compare xlii. 14, 'By their works those who have wrought them are known.' The words 'Be of good cheer, be not afraid,' St. Matt. xiv. 27, are of frequent occurrence in our text, i. 8 ; xx. 2 ; xxi. 3, &c. With St. Matt. xxv. 34, 'Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world,' compare ix. 1, 'This place (i.e. Paradise) O Enoch, is prepared for the righteous . . . as an eternal inheritance.' Next with St. Luke vi. 35 μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, compare xlii. 7, 'Expecting nothing in return' Next with John xiv. 2, 'In my Father's house are many mansions,' compare lxi. 2, 'For in the world to come . . . there are many mansions prepared for men, good for the good, evil for the evil.' With Acts xiv. 15, 'Ye should turn from these vain things unto the living God, who made the heaven and the earth,' compare ii. 2, 'Do not worship vain gods who did not make heaven and earth.' In the Pauline Epistles there are several parallels in thought and diction. With Col. i. 16, 'Dominions or principalities or powers,' compare xx. 1, 'Lordships and principalities and powers': with Eph. iv. 25, 'Speak ye truth each one with his neighbour,' compare xlii. 12, 'Blessed is he in whom is the truth that he may speak the truth to his neighbour.' For other Pauline parallels with our text see pp. xxxix-xli. With Heb. xi. 3, 'The worlds have been framed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear,' compare xxv. 1, 'I commanded . . . that visible things should come out of invisible,' and xxiv. 2, 'I will tell thee . . . what things I created from the non-existent, and what visible things from the invisible.' For two other parallels of Hebrews with our text see p. xli. With Rev.

i. 16, 'His countenance was as the sun shineth,' compare i. 5, 'Their faces shone like the sun': with ix. 1, 'There was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss,' compare xlii. 1, 'Those who keep the keys and are the guardians of the gates of hell.' With Rev. iv. 6, 'A glassy sea,' compare iii. 3, 'A great sea greater than the earthy sea.' This sea in the first heaven, however, may be merely 'the waters which were above the firmament' (Gen. i. 7). With Rev. x. 5, 6, 'And the angel . . . sware . . . that there shall be time no longer,' compare lxxv. 7, 'Then the times shall perish, and there shall be no year,' &c.: xxxiii. 2, 'Let there be . . . a time when there is no computation and no end; neither years, nor months,' &c.

Finally, in the Apocalyptic portions of the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, which were written probably about the beginning of the Christian era we find our text quoted directly or implied in several instances. In Levi 3 we have an account of the Angels imprisoned in the second heaven: ἐν αὐτῷ εἰσὶ πάντα τὰ πνεύματα τῶν ἐπαγωγῶν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἀνόμων. This must be rendered 'In it are all the spirits of the lawless ones who are kept bound unto (the day of) vengeance.' With this statement compare our text vii. 1, where the fallen angels in the second heaven are described as 'the prisoners suspended, reserved for (and) awaiting the eternal judgement.' Again, in the same chapter of Levi, there are said to be armies in the third heaven, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης. With these compare the angels of punishment in the third heaven in x. 3. The statement from Enoch in Test. Dan. 5 τῶν πνευμάτων τῆς πλάνης. 'Ἀνέγνων γὰρ ἐν βιβλῷ Ἐνὼχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅτι ὁ ἄρχων ὑμῶν ἐστὶν ὁ Σατανᾶς is drawn from xviii. 3, 'These are the Grigori (i.e. Ἐγγρηγοροί) who with their prince Satanail rejected the holy Lord.' In the Test. Napht. 4 the authority of Enoch is claimed by the writer as follows: Ἀνέγνων ἐν γραφῇ ἁγίᾳ Ἐνὼχ, ὅτι καὶ γε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀποστήσεσθε ἀπὸ κυρίου, πορευόμενοι κατὰ πᾶσαν πονηρίαν ἐθνῶν, καὶ ποιήσετε κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν Σοδόμων. καὶ ἐπάξει ὑμῖν κύριος αἰχμαλωσίαν . . . ἕως ἂν ἀναλώσῃ κύριος πάντας ὑμᾶς. This is a loose adaptation to later times of xxxiv. 2, 3, 'And they will fill all the world with wickedness and iniquity and foul impurities with one another, sodomy. . . . And on this account I will bring a deluge upon the earth, and I will destroy all.' The quotation in Test. Sim. 5 is probably derived from the same source, and that in Test. Benj. 9 ὑπονοῶ δὲ καὶ πράξεις ἐν ὑμῖν οὐ καλὰς ἔσεσθαι, ἀπὸ λόγων Ἐνῶχ τοῦ δικαίου πορνεύσετε γὰρ πορνείαν Σοδόμων, καὶ ἀπώλησθε ἕως βραχύ, may confidently be traced to it. The words in Test. Juda 18 ἀνέγνων ἐν βίβλοις Ἐνῶχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅσα κακὰ ποιήσετε ἐπ' ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις. φυλάξασθε οὖν, τέκνα μου, ἀπὸ τῆς πορνείας may likewise be founded upon it. The loose and inaccurate character of the quotations may in part be accounted for as follows.

Although it is a matter of demonstration that the main part of the book was written originally in Greek, it seems no less sure that certain portions of it were founded on Hebrew originals. Such an hypothesis is necessary owing to the above Enochic quotations which appear in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs. For the fact that the latter work was written in Hebrew obliges us to conclude that its author or authors drew upon Hebrew originals in the quotations from Enoch. I have not attempted in the present work to discriminate the portions derived from Hebrew originals. For such a task we have not sufficient materials, and what we have, moreover, have not been preserved with sufficient accuracy.

§ 6. INTEGRITY AND CRITICAL CONDITION OF THE BOOK.

In its present form this book appears to be derived from one author. We have in the notes called attention from time to time to certain inconsistencies, but these may in part be due to inaccurate tradition; for the book in this respect has suffered deplorably. There are of course occasional interpo-lations—of these some are Jewish, and one or two are Christian: xxxvii seems foreign to the entire text.

The text, further, has suffered from disarrangement. Thus xxviii. 5 should be read after xxix, and, together with that chapter, should be restored before xxviii.

§ 7. DATE AND AUTHORSHIP.

The question of the date has to a large extent been determined already. The portions which have a Hebrew background are at latest pre-Christian. This follows from the fact of their quotation in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs. As I have remarked above (p. xxiv) it is impossible to define the exact extent of such sections.

Turning, therefore, to the date of the rest of the book, we can with tolerable certainty discover the probable limits of its composition. The earlier limit is determined by the already existing books from which our author has borrowed. Thus Ecclesiasticus is frequently drawn upon: see xliii. 2, 3 (notes); xlvii. 5 (note); lii. 8 (note); lxi. 2, 4 (notes), &c. The Book of Wisdom also seems to have been laid under contribution: see lxv. 4 (note). With this book our author shares certain closely related Hellenistic views. Again, as regards the Ethiopic Enoch, our author at times reproduces the phraseology and conceptions of that book: see vii. 4, 5 (notes); xxxiii. 4 (note), 9, 10 (notes); xxxv. 2 (note), &c.; at others he gives the views of the former in a developed form: see viii. 1, 5, 6 (notes); xl. 13 (note); lxiv. 5; at others he enunciates views which are absolutely divergent from the former: see xvi. 7 (note); xviii. 4 (note). It is noteworthy also that our author claims to have explained certain natural phenomena, but the explanations in question are not to be found in his writings but in the Ethiopic Enoch: see xl. 5, 6, 8, 9 (notes). Finally we observe the same advanced view on Demonology appearing in the Slavonic Enoch and in the latest interpolation in the Ethiopic Enoch; see xviii. 3 (note).

Ecclesiasticus, the Book of Wisdom (?), and the Ethiopic Enoch (in its latest and present form) were thus at our author's service. The earlier limit of composition, accordingly, lies probably between 30 B. C. and the Christian era.

We have now to determine the later limit. This must be set down as earlier than 70 A. D. For, (1) the temple is still standing; see lix. 2 (notes). (2) Our text was probably known to some of the writers of the New Testament (see pp. xxi-xxiii; xxxix-xliii). (3) It was known and used by the writers of the Epistle of Barnabas and of the latter half of the Ascension of Isaiah.

We may, therefore, with reasonable certainty assign the composition of our text to the period 1-50 A. D. The date of the Hebrew original underlying certain sections of our text is as we have already seen pre-Christian.

The author was a Jew who lived in Egypt, probably in Alexandria. He belonged to the orthodox Hellenistic Judaism of his day. Thus he believed in the value of sacrifices, xlii. 6; lix. 1, 2; lxvi. 2; but he is careful to enforce enlightened views regarding them, xlv. 3, 4; lxi. 4, 5; in the law, lii. 8, 9; and likewise in a blessed immortality, l. 2; lxv. 6, 8-10; in which the righteous shall wear 'the raiment of God's glory,' xxii. 8. In questions affecting the origin of the earth, sin, death, &c., he allows himself the most unrestricted freedom and borrows freely from every quarter. Thus, Platonic (xxx. 16, note), Egyptian (xxv. 2, note), and Zend (lviii. 4-6 notes) elements are adopted into his system. The result is naturally syncretistic.

The date (1-50 A. D.) thus determined above makes our author a contemporary of Philo. We have shown above (p. xvii) that they share many speculations in common, but in some they are opposed. Thus our author protests against the Jewish belief in the value of the intercession of departed saints for the living; see liii. 1 (note). Philo undoubtedly taught this, De Exsecrat. 9.

§ 8. SOME OF THE AUTHOR'S VIEWS ON CREATION, ANTHROPOLOGY, AND ETHICS.

God in the beginning created the world out of nothing, xxiv. 2¹. (For a detailed account of each day's creations see xxv-xxx.) In this creation He made seven heavens, xxx. 2, 3², and all the angelic hosts—the latter were created on the first day—and all animal and plant life, and finally man on the sixth day. After His work on the six days God rested on the seventh. These six days of work followed by a seventh of rest are at once a history of the past and a forecasting of the future. As the world was made in six days, so its history would be accomplished in 6,000 years, and as the six days of creation were followed by one of rest, so the 6,000 years of the world's history would be followed by a rest of 1,000 years, i. e. the millennium³. On its close would begin the eighth eternal day of blessedness when time should be no more, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. 2.

As regards man, all the souls of men were created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5, and also a future place of abode in heaven or hell for every individual soul, xlix. 2; lviii. 5; lxi. 2. The world was made for man's sake, lxv. 3. When Wisdom made man of seven substances, xxx. 8, at God's command, God gave him the name Adam from the four quarters of the earth—ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἄρκτος, μεσημβρία—xxx. 13. Man's soul was created originally good, while in the garden he could see the angels in heaven, xxxi. 2. Free-will was bestowed upon him, and the knowledge of good and evil. He was likewise instructed in the Two Ways of light and darkness, and then left to mould his own destiny, xxx. 15.

¹ Or else formed it out of pre-existing elements, xxv. 1, where we have an adaptation of the egg theory of the universe.

² Hell was in the north of the third heaven. It is possible, however, that there were also seven hells; see xl. 12 (note).

³ This millennium seems to be identical with a Messianic age, xxxv. 3 (note).

But the incorporation of the soul in the body with its necessary limitations biassed its preferences in the direction of evil, and death came in as the fruit of sin, xxx. 16. Men and angels will be judged and punished for every form of sin¹, xl. 12, 13; xlv. 3; lxv. 6; but the righteous will escape the last judgement, lxv. 8; lxvi. 7; and will be gathered in eternal life, lxv. 8, and will be seven times brighter than the sun, lxvi. 7, and they will have no labour, nor sickness, nor sorrow, nor anxiety, nor need, and an incorruptible paradise shall be their protection and their eternal habitation, lxv. 9, 10. As for sinners there is no place of repentance after death, xlii. 2, but hell is prepared for them as an eternal inheritance, x. 4, 6. And there is no intercession of departed saints for the living, liii. 1.

In an ethical regard there are many noble sentiments to be found in our author, but generally in a very unliterary form. The Slavonic Version is, no doubt, partially to be blamed here. I will append here an outline of a man's ethical duties with sundry beatitudes according to our author. Every man should work; for blessed is he who looks to raise his own hand for labour, but cursed is he who looks to make use of another man's labour, lii. 7, 8. And men, likewise, should be unselfishly just; for blessed is he who executes a just judgement, not for the sake of recompense, but for the sake of righteousness, expecting nothing in return, xlii. 7. And men should also practice charity and beneficence. They should not hide their silver in the earth, but assist the honest man in his affliction, li. 2, and stretch out their hands to the orphan, the widow and the stranger, l. 5, and give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked, and raise the fallen, and walk without blame before the face of the Lord, ix. Furthermore, men should not swear either by heaven or earth or by any other creature which God made, but by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay, xlix. 1 ; neither should they avenge themselves, l. 4, nor abuse and calumniate their neighbour, lii. 2 ; but endure every affliction and every evil word and attack for the sake of the Lord, l. 3 ; li. 3. Moreover, they should shun pride : for God hates the proud, lxiii. 4 ; and walk in long-suffering, in humility, in faith and truth, in sickness, in abuse, in temptation, in nakedness, in deprivation, loving one another till they depart from this world of sickness, lxvi. 6. Finally, whereas one man is more honourable than another, either on the ground of cunning or of strength, of purity or wisdom, of comeliness or understanding, let it be heard everywhere that none is greater than he who fears God, xliii. 2, 3.

¹ Observe that men will be specially punished for ill-treatment of animals, lviii. 4-6.

§ 9. THE VALUE OF THIS BOOK IN ELUCIDATING CONTEMPORARY AND SUBSEQUENT RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

On the value of this book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought I shall be brief, save in the case of the doctrine of the seven heavens. This doctrine is set forth by our author with a fullness and clearness not found elsewhere in literature. Thus many gaps in our knowledge of this doctrine have been filled up. It will not be surprising, therefore, if we are thus enabled to explain certain mysterious allusions bearing on this conception in the Bible and elsewhere, which have hitherto been doubtful or inexplicable.

Some of the beliefs which appear in our text, and which in some instances are either partially or wholly elucidated, are as follows :

1. Death was caused by Sin. This was a comparatively late view : see notes on pp. 43, 44.

2. The millennium. This Jewish conception is first found in this book, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. 2, and the rationale of its origin is clear from this passage when taken together with statements on the same subject in later writers (see notes in loc., and p. xxvii). Its origin was as follows. The account in Genesis of the first week of creation came in pre-Christian times to be regarded not only as a history of the past, but as a forecast of the future history of the world so created. Thus as the world was created in six days, so its history was to be accomplished in 6,000 years; for 1,000 years are with God as one day (cf. Ps. xc. 4; Jub. iv. 30; 2 Pet. iii. 8; Barnabas, Ep. xiv. 4; Iren. contra Haer. v. 28. 2; Justin M., Dial. c. Tryph. 80), and as God rested on the seventh day, so at the close of the 6,000 years there would be a rest of 1,000 years, i. e. the millennium.

3. On the creation of man with freewill and the knowledge of good and evil, see xxx. 15 (notes).

4. The Seraphim. In the Chalkidri¹, xii. 1, we have in all probability the serpents who are mentioned in the Ethiopic Enoch xx. 7 along with the Cherubim. They are a class of heavenly creatures, and like the Cherubim are formed by a combination of the members of different animals. The serpent-like form, however, predominated, and hence they were δρακόντες in Greek (Eth. En. xx. 7), and Seraphim (שרפים) in Hebrew. How the peculiar name Chalkidri (= Χαλκύδραι brazen serpents?) arose I cannot say, as it is by no means appropriate. The main objection to identifying the Chalkidri with the Seraphim of the Old Testament is the fact that our author only mentions them here in connexion with the sun, xii. 1; xv. 1; and speaks directly of Seraphim elsewhere, xx. 1. However this may be, the passage in the Eth. Enoch xx. 7 is conclusive as to the serpent-like forms of the Seraphim. By this interpretation the word receives the meaning which it naturally has in the Hebrew.

5. On the intercession of Saints, see liii. 1 (note).

6. The seven Heavens—an early Jewish and Christian belief.

Various conceptions of the seven heavens prevailed largely in the ancient world, alike in the far east and in the west. With these we shall deal only in so far as they influenced or were in any degree akin to the views that prevailed on this subject among the Jews and early Christians.

¹ Various spelt in the MSS. as Chalkadri, Chalkidri, Chalkedry.

For the sake of clearness it may be well to indicate the direction our investigations will take. We shall first set forth or merely mention the beliefs of this nature that prevailed among the Babylonians and the followers of Zoroaster in the East and the speculations of certain Greek philosophers in the West. We shall next touch briefly on certain indications in the Old Testament that point in the direction of a plurality of the heavens, and show that Israel was not unaffected by the prevailing traditions of the ancient world.

That we have not misinterpreted such phenomena in the Old Testament, we are assured, when we descend to Jewish Apocalyptic writings, such as the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, the Slavonic Enoch, 4 Ezra, and to the Talmud, and the Mandaic Religion. Having thus shown that speculations or definitely formulated views on the plurality of the heavens were rife in the very cradle of Christendom and throughout its entire environment, we have next to consider whether Christian conceptions of heaven were shaped or in any degree modified by already existing ideas on this subject. We shall find that there is undoubted evidence of the belief in the plurality or sevenfold division of the heavens in the Pauline Epistles, in Hebrews, and in the Apocalypse.

In early Christian literature such ideas soon gained clearer utterance in Christian Apocalypses, such as the Ascension of Isaiah, the Apocalypses of Moses, Ezra, John, Isaac, Jacob, and the Acts of Callistratus. Such writers also as Clement of Alexandria and Origen are more or less favourably inclined to such conceptions. But shortly after this date these views fell into the background, discredited undoubtedly by the exaggerations and imbecilities with which they were accompanied. And thus though a Philastrius declares disbelief in a plurality of the heavens a heresy, Chrysostom is so violently affected against such a conception that he denies any such plurality at all. Finally such conceptions, failing in the course of the next few centuries to find a home in Christian lands, betook themselves to Mohammedan countries, where they found a ready welcome and a place of authority in the temple of Moslem theology. We shall now proceed as we have above indicated.

Among the Babylonians we find that hell was divided into seven parts by seven concentric walls (see Sayce, Babylonian Religion, 1887, pp. 221-227; Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, Strashurg, 1890, pp. 232-3¹). Hence, we may here observe, this view passed over into the Talmud (Feuchtwang, Zeitschr. f. Assyr., iv. 42, 43).

This sevenfold division of things in general was a familiar one among this people². Thus the cities, Erech and Ecbatana, were each surrounded by seven walls, modelled, no doubt, as Jensen conjectures, on their conception of the seven world-zones (op. cit. 172). For the world was held to be divided in this fashion according to the Gudia (op. cit. 173). This division was due either to the overwhelming importance of the sacred number seven, or else specifically to the number of the planets (op. cit. 174). We should observe also that the temple of Erech was called the temple of the seven divisions. Since, therefore, both earth and hell were divided into seven zones, it is only reasonable to infer that a similar conception was entertained regarding the heavens. Jensen, indeed, says that he can find no trace of such a division in the inscriptions. But since the sevenfold division of the planets gave birth to the sevenfold division of earth and hell, it is next to impossible to avoid the inference with Sayce and Jeremias that this same division must have been applied to the heavens through which the planets moved.

In Parseeism we find the doctrine of the seven heavens. This does not appear in the earliest writings, but in the Ardâi-virâf-nâme there is an account of the seven heavens through which Sosiash made a progress in seven days. In the first heaven are men who feel heat and cold simultaneously. (If we might infer from corresponding ideas in the Slavonic Enoch, and other apocalypses, we should conclude this heaven to be an abode of the wicked, and not of the good. There is, however, a hell independently of this.) The inhabitants of the second heaven shine as the stars; of the third as the moon; of the fourth as the sun. The blessedness of endless light is reserved for heroes, lawgivers, and the preeminently pious. In the seventh heaven Zarathustra sits on a golden throne. As we have already remarked, there is only one hell mentioned in the Ardâi-virâf-nâme. On the influence which such ideas had on the Talmud see Kohut, Zeitschrift D M G, xxi. 562.

¹ See also Jeremias, Die babyl.-assur. Vorstellungen vom Leben nach dem Tode, 1887, pp. 34-45.

² Cf. Sayce, Babylonian Religion, p. 82 note.

If we now turn from the East to the West, we meet first of all with the Pythagorean tenfold division of the universe. In the centre there was the central fire around which revolved from west to east the ten heavenly bodies. Furthest off was the heaven of fixed stars; next came the five planets; then the sun, the moon, the earth, and finally the counter earth¹. According to the Timæus of Plato the universe is shaped as a sphere at the centre of which is placed the earth. Next follow the sun, the moon, and the five other planets, revolving round the earth in orbits separated from each other by distances corresponding to the intervals of the harmonic system. The outermost circle is formed of the heaven of fixed stars.

When we turn to the Stoics we find kindred conceptions; in the centre of the universe the earth is placed in a state of repose. Nearest to the earth revolves the moon, and next in their appropriate orbits the Sun, Venus, Mercury, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn.

We have thus seen that speculations were rife throughout the ancient world on the plurality of the heavens. It is clear further that these speculations were based mainly on astronomical considerations. That ancient Judaism was not unaffected by such views we may reasonably conclude from certain passages in the Old Testament. The plural form of the word for 'heaven' in Hebrew probably points to a plurality of heavens. Such phrases as 'the heaven of heavens,' Deut. x. 14; 1 Kings viii. 27; Ps. cxlviii. 4, cannot be adequately interpreted unless in reference to such a belief. In Job i. 6, 7; ii. 1, 2, 7 we find a further peculiar feature in the ancient conception of heaven. Satan there presents himself along with the angels in the presence of God. The place indicated by the context is heaven. Similarly in 1 Kings xxii. 19-22 an evil spirit presents himself among the heavenly hosts before the throne of God. The presence of evil in heaven, though offensive to the conscience of later times, seems to have caused no offence in early Semitic thought.

¹ For further details see the English translation of Zeller's Pre-Socratic Philosophy, i. 444-5.

We shall find in the course of our investigations that this peculiar idea reasserted itself from time to time in Judaism and Christianity till finally it was expelled from both.

The probability of an Old Testament belief in the plurality of the heavens is heightened, if we consider the fact that the Jews were familiar with and attached names to the planets. Thus Kronos, Aphrodite, Ares, Zeus, Hermes are mentioned respectively in Amos v. 26; Is. xiv. 12; 2 Kings xvii. 30; Is. lxv. 11; xlvi. 1. The Jews were acquainted also with the signs of the Zodiac (Job xxxviii. 32), and offered them an idolatrous worship (2 Kings xxiii. 5).

Since, therefore, we have seen that in the East astronomical considerations, i. e. the sevenfold division of the planets led in due course to a similar division of the heavens, it is not unlikely that this knowledge gave birth to a like result among the Jews.

However this may be, the reasonable probability we have already arrived at is converted into a certainty when we come down to the Apocalyptic and other writings of the Jews. Of these, the Slavonic Enoch and the Apocalyptic sections of the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs were written about or before the beginning of the Christian Era. As the description of the seven heavens in the latter is very brief we shall deal with it first. The rendering that follows presupposes an emendation of Dr. Sinker's text, which I cannot justify here, but hope to do so later in an edition of this work.

The third chapter of the Testament of Levi runs: 'Hear then concerning the seven heavens. The lowest is the gloomiest, because it witnesses every iniquity of men. The second has fire, snow, ice, ready against the day of the ordinance of the Lord, in the righteous judgement of God. In it are all the spirits of the lawless ones which are confined for punishment. (Cf. Slav. Enoch vii.) In the third are the hosts of the armies (cf. Slav. Enoch xvii) which are appointed against the day of judgement to execute vengeance on the spirits of deceit and of Beliar. . . . In the highest of all the Great Glory dwells, in the holy of holies. . . . In the heaven next to it (i. e. the sixth) are the angels of the presence of the Lord, who minister and make propitiation to the Lord for all the sins of ignorance of the righteous. . . . And in the heaven below this (i. e. the fifth) are the angels who bear the answers to the angels of the presence of the Lord. And in the heaven next to this (i. e. the fourth) are thrones, authorities, in which hymns are ever offered to God.' In chapter ii of the same Testament there is a short reference to the first three heavens: 'And I entered from the first heaven into the second, and I saw there water hanging between the two. And I saw a third heaven brighter than these two.'

We cannot pause here to deal with the details of the above account. We shall only draw attention to the description of the denizens of the second heaven. These are the fallen angels who are reserved for punishment. Although the description of the seven heavens just given is short, it is too definitely conceived to have appeared thus for the first time in Judaism. In the Slavonic Enoch, whose evidence we shall presently briefly summarize, we have, so far as I am aware, the most elaborate account of the seven heavens that exists in any writing or in any language. 'The Book of the Secrets of Enoch,' as it is named in the Slavonic MSS. in which it is alone preserved, but which for the sake of brevity I call 'the Slavonic Enoch,' was written in the main in Greek, at Alexandria, although portions of it are merely reproductions of a Hebrew original. In the first heaven there is 'a very great sea, greater than any earthly sea.' (Cf. Rev. iv. 6.) This sea seems to be described in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs as 'water hanging between the first and second heavens.' (See above.) In this heaven also are 'the elders and the rulers of the orders of the stars.' Although the number of these is not given, it is either twelve (and then we have here an account related to Eth. En. lxxxii. 9-18, 20) or possibly it is twenty-four, and thus there may be a remote connexion on the one hand between this class of 'elders and rulers . . . of the stars' and the twenty-four elders in Rev. iv. 4, and on the other between it and the Babylonian idea set forth in Diodorus Siculus, ii. 31 μετὰ δὲ τὸν ζῳδιακὸν κύκλον εἴκοσιν καὶ τέτταρας ἀφορίζουσιν ἀστέρας, ὧν τοὺς μὲν ἡμίσεις ἐν τοῖς βορείοις μέρεσι, τοὺς δὲ ἡμίσεις ἐν τοῖς νοτίοις τετάχθαι φασί, καὶ τούτων τοὺς μὲν ὀρωμένους τῶν ζώντων εἶναι καταριθμοῦσι, τοὺς δ' ἀφανεῖς τοῖς τετελευτηκόσι προσωρίσθαι νομίζουσιν, οὓς δικαστὰς τῶν ὅλων προσαγορεύουσιν (quoted by Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos, p. 308, who establishes a connexion between Rev. iv. 4 and this Babylonian idea). The first heaven, further, contains treasures of snow, ice, clouds, and dew.

In the second heaven (chap. vii) Enoch saw the prisoners suspended reserved for and awaiting the eternal judgement. 'And these angels were gloomy in appearance, . . . they had apostatized from the Lord and transgressed together with their prince.' For a similar account see Test. Levi, above.

In the third heaven (chap. viii) we have the garden of Eden and the tree of life, and likewise 'an olive tree always distilling oil,' i. e. the arbor misericordiae (cf. Evang. Nicodemi, ii. 3). We should observe that the location of Paradise in this heaven agrees with the Pauline account 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3.

But (chap. x) in the northern region of this heaven Enoch sees the place of the damned. 'That place has fire on all sides and on all sides cold and ice, thus it burns and freezes.' When Enoch exclaims, 'Woe, woe! how terrible is this place!' his escort replies: 'This place, Enoch, is prepared for those who did not honour God; who commit evil deeds on earth, sodomy, witchcraft, enchantments, . . . stealing, lying, calumnies, envy, evil thoughts, fornication, murder. (Chap. x. 4.)

In the fourth heaven (chap. xi-xv) Enoch sees the course of the sun and moon, and the angels and the wonderful creatures, the phoenixes and the chalkidri, which wait upon the sun. In the midst of this heaven (chap. xvii) are 'the armed host serving the Lord with cymbals and organs and unceasing voice.' Cf. Test. Levi on third and fourth heavens above.

In the fifth heaven (chap. xviii) are the watchers whose fallen brethren Enoch had already seen undergoing torments in the second heaven. These are troubled and silent on account of their brethren.

In the sixth heaven (chap. xix) are 'seven bands of angels, very bright and glorious,' who arrange and study the revolutions of the stars and the changes of the moon and the revolutions of the sun, &c.; 'And the angels over all the souls of men who write down all their works and their lives before the face of the Lord. In their midst are seven phoenixes and seven cherubim and seven six-winged creatures.'

In the seventh heaven (chap. xx) Enoch sees all the heavenly hosts, the ten great orders of angels standing before the Lord in the order of their rank, and the Lord sitting on His lofty throne.

With regard to this scheme, I will content myself with calling attention to the fact that a preliminary Tartarus is situated in the second heaven (cf. second heaven in the Test. Levi); and that hell is placed in the north of the third heaven, and that evil in various forms is found in the second and third heavens, and dissatisfaction and trouble in the fifth.

In 4 Ezra (vi. 55-74) there is a detailed description of the seven ways of the wicked and the seven ways of the righteous. These ways are represented in a form so essentially abstract, that as Gunkel rightly remarks (op. cit. p. 309), they must be derived from what were originally concrete conceptions such as the seven heavens and the seven hells. To the latter conception there is no reference in the Slavonic Enoch: yet see xl. 12 (note).

Passing onward we come to the Talmud. In the Talmud the views of the Rabbis waver. Some thought as the Rabbi Jehuda that there were two heavens, Chagiga 12^b, but Rabbi Simeon ben Lakish enumerated seven. This latter view was the usual one. In the Beresh. rabba c. 6 and the Chagiga 12^b, the seven heavens are as follows. The lowest which is called vilun is empty. In the second, named rakia, are the sun, moon, and stars. In the third, named shechagim, are the mills which grind the manna for the righteous. In the fourth heaven, zebul, are the heavenly Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, and Michael. In the fifth, maon, are the angels who sing by night, but are silent by day in order that God may hear the praises of Israel. In the sixth, machon, are the treasures of the snow, hail, rain, and dew. In the seventh, aravoth, are judgement and righteousness, the treasures of life, peace, and blessing, the souls of the departed pious as well as the spirits and souls yet to be born, and the dew wherewith God will awake the dead. Finally there are the seraphim, ophannim, chayyoth and other angels of service, and God Himself sitting on a throne. See Weber, Die Lehren des Talmud, pp. 197-8; Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, i. 467; Wetstein on 2 Cor. xii.

It is well to observe here that, though the Talmudic description of the seven heavens is puerile in the extreme, its character attests the influence of a growing ethical consciousness.

To such a consciousness the presence of evil in heaven could not but seem incongruous. In banishing evil, however, from the precincts of the heavens, the Rabbis weakened the vigour of the old conceptions; for they were not masters of sufficient imagination to fill up adequately the gaps brought about by their righteous zeal. In connexion with Jewish evidence on this subject, we might point out that the same division of the heavens probably prevailed in the Mandaic Religion, since at all events one of its dogmas was the sevenfold division of hell (Brandt, Die Mandäische Religion, p. 182).

We have now found that among the Babylonians, the later followers of Zoroaster, the Greeks, in all probability in ancient Judaism, and certainly in Judaism generally from before the Christian Era onward, speculations, and as a rule clearly defined conceptions, were rife on the plurality of the heavens. We have seen also that the prevailing view was that of the sevenfold division of the heavens, and we have observed further that a feature impossible in modern conceptions of heaven shows itself from time to time in pre-Christian religious conceptions, i. e. the belief in the presence of evil in the heavens.

We have now to consider whether Christian conceptions of heaven were shaped, or in any degree influenced, by already existing views of that nature. A knowledge of ancient thought on this subject would naturally lead us to expect such an influence at work, and we find on examination that our expectations are in certain respects fully realized. First from 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3 we learn that St. Paul believed in a plurality of the heavens. 'I know a man in Christ fourteen years ago . . . such a one caught up even to the third heaven. And I know such a man . . . how that he was caught up into Paradise.'

Heretofore exegetes have been divided as to whether St. Paul believed in the existence of three heavens or of seven. Owing to the fresh evidence on the subject furnished by the Slavonic Enoch there is no longer room for reasonable doubt on the question. In the Slavonic Enoch we have presented to us a scheme of the seven heavens which in some of its prominent features agrees with that conceived by St. Paul. Thus in the Slavonic Enoch Paradise is situated in the third heaven as in 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3, whereas according to later Judaism it belonged to the fourth heaven (see above). In the next place the presence of evil in some part of the heavens is recognized. Thus in Eph. vi. 12 we meet with the peculiar statement 'Against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavens,' πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις. The phrase ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις occurs only in Ephesians of the Pauline Epistles. It is found five times i. 3, 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; and vi. 12, and always in a local sense. It is thus in fact = ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

This phrase is then capable of two interpretations. The 'hosts' in question are the fallen angels in the second heaven, or else the powers of Satan, the prince of the air (cf. Eph. ii. 2). For the latter interpretation the Slavonic Enoch xxix. 4, 5 might be quoted as a parallel: 'One of the ranks of the archangels, having turned away with the rank below him, entertained an impossible idea, that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. And I hurled him from the heights with his angels. And he was flying in the air continually above the abyss.' The latter explanation of ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις is probably right. In Col. i. 20, however, we must, if we deal honestly with the context, suppose some such a view of the heavens as that given in the Slavonic Enoch to underlie the words: 'To reconcile all things unto Himself, whether things upon the earth or things in the heavens.' That 'things upon earth' need to be reconciled to God is universally intelligible; but so far as I am aware no exegete has hitherto recognized any such necessity on the part of 'things in the heavens.' Yet this is the obvious meaning of the words. Hence 'the things in the heavens' that are to be reconciled to God must be either the fallen angels imprisoned in the second heaven, or else the powers of Satan whose domain is the air. Though to some universalistic aspects of Paulinism the conversion of Satan is not impossible, it is nevertheless unlikely to be his thought here. Hence we seem to be restricted to the other interpretation, and thus we have therein an indirect parallel to 1 Pet. iii. 19, 'He went and preached to the spirits in prison.' Another statement in Eph. iii. 10 belongs to the same plane of thought: 'To the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavens (ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις) might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God.' These 'principalities and powers' may also be taken as the fallen angels in the second heaven; but it is more likely that they are the rulers of the various lower heavens which are mentioned in iv. 10: 'He . . . that ascended far above all the heavens.' This thought of the seven heavens through which Christ passed or above which he was exalted twice recurs in Hebrews iv. 14: 'Having then a great high priest, who hath passed through the heavens' (διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς); vii. 26: 'Made higher than the heavens' (ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος). Before we pass on to the consideration of the Apocalypse, we should observe that Paul used *ὀψαρός*¹ frequently (cf. Rom. i. 18 ; x. 6 ; 1 Cor. viii. 5 ; xv. 47), though he believed in a plurality of the heavens.

In the twelfth chapter of Revelation we have a record of the war in heaven between Michael and his angels against Satan and his angels, with the subsequent overthrow and expulsion of the latter. These events spiritually interpreted symbolize, it is true, the victory of good over evil, but when studied in reference to their origin, they mark a revolutionizing of the old Semitic conception of heaven. Evil can no longer be conceived as possible in the abode of righteousness, nor can its place be any more found in heaven. And thus Satan and his angels are cast down to the earth. When once evil in all its forms is driven forth from heaven, the rationale of a sevenfold division of it disappears. There are then no longer conflicting elements which must be restricted to certain divisions and kept apart by concrete barriers. The old Semitic doctrine of the seven heavens really presupposes in some respects dualistic influences. Such a conception could not long hold its ground in a monistic faith. It was this dualistic tinge that made it so acceptable with the heretics. We must now follow the subsequent fortunes of this doctrine in the early centuries of Christianity.

First we find in one of the Christian sections (chaps. vi-xi) of the Ascension of Isaiah an elaborate but sinewless account of the seven heavens. Evil has already been expelled, and the inhabitants of one heaven differ from those of another merely in possessing greater degrees of glory and knowledge. This account of the seven heavens is singularly wanting in variety and imaginative power : it is valuable, however, in an historical reference.

¹ The singular and plural of this word are used, according to Sir J. C. Hawkins, in the New Testament as follows :—

	Mat.	Mark	Luke	John	Acts	Paul.	Heb.	James	Pet.	Rev.
ὀψαρός	27	12	31	18	24	11	3	2	1	51
ὀψαροί	55	5	4	0	2	10	7	0	5	1*

*xii. 12—a quotation from, or reference to Is. xlv. 23 and xlix. 13.

Leaving the Ascension of Isaiah, we shall now give the evidence of Clement of Alexandria and Origen on the prevalence of this doctrine.

In the Stromata iv. 25 of Clement there is a reference to the seven heavens which are obviously regarded as a true conception ; while in v. 11 we have a quotation from a lost Apocalypse of Zephaniah : ἀρ' οὐχ ὅμοια ταῦτα τοῖς ὑπὸ Σοφονία λεχθεῖσι τοῦ προφήτου ; καὶ ἀνέλαβέν με πνεῦμα καὶ ἀνήνεγκέν με ὡς οὐρανὸν πέμπτον καὶ ἐθεώρουν ἀγγέλους καλουμένους κυρίους . . . ὑμνοῦντας θεὸν ἄρρητον ὕψιστον.

This passage seems to be ultimately derived from the Slavonic Enoch xviii.

In the lost Book of Baruch the Prophet, there was some account of the seven heavens according to Origen, de Princip. ii. 3, 6 : 'Denique etiam Baruch prophetae librum in assertionis huius testimonium vocant, quod ibi de septem mundis vel coelis evidentius indicatur.'

But to proceed to Origen's own views we read in contra Cels. vi. 21 as follows : ἐπὶ δὲ οὐρανοῦς, ἧ ὅλως περιωρισμένον ἀριθμὸν αὐτῶν, αἱ φερόμεναι ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἀπαγγέλλουσι γραφαί· ἀλλ' οὐρανοῦς, εἴτε τὰς σφαῖρας τῶν παρ' Ἑλληνισι λεγομένων πλανήτων, εἴτε καὶ ἄλλο τι ἀπορρητότερον εἰκόασι διδάσκειν οἱ λόγοι.

Though Origen says that there is no authoritative teaching as to there being seven heavens, it is clear that he really believes in there being this number ; for elsewhere he identifies these heavens with the planets of the Greeks, de Princip. ii. 11. 6 : 'Si quis sane mundus corde, et purior mente, et exercitior sensu fuerit, velocius proficiens cito ad aeris locum adscendet, et ad coelorum regna perveniet per locorum singulorum, ut ita dixerim, mansiones, quas Graeci quidem sphaeras, id est globos, appellaverunt, scriptura vero divina coelos nominat : in quibus singulis primo quidem perspiciet ea, quae ibi geruntur, secundo vero etiam rationem quare gerantur agnoscet : et ita per ordinem digredietur singula, sequens eum, qui transgressus est coelos, Iesum filium Dei, dicentem : " Volo, ut ubi sum ego, et isti sint mecum. " "

We shall now cite the evidence of Christian Apocalyptic works as attesting the prevalence of this belief in the seven heavens.

In the Apocalypse of Moses, p. 19 (Apocalypses Apocryphae, ed. Tischendorf, 1866), Eve is bidden to look up to the seven firmaments : ἀνάβλεψον τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς σου καὶ ἴδε τὰ ἑπτὰ στερεώματα ἀνεωγμένα. On p. 21 Michael is bidden : ἀπελθε εἰς τὸν παράδεισον ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ οὐρανῷ. Thus the writer of this Apocalypse, so far as he touches on the subject of the seven heavens, agrees with the teaching of the Slavonic Enoch. In the Apoc. Esdrae (pp. 29, 30 op. cit.) there is mention made of a plurality of the heavens, and of Paradise as lying in the east. In the Apoc. Johannis (p. 84 op. cit.) the seven regions of the heavens are spoken of : καὶ γενήσεται κρότος μέγας ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ σαλευθήσονται τὰ ἑπτὰ (α. ἱ. ἐννέα) πέταλα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.

In our account of the third heaven according to the Slavonic Enoch, we showed that hell was situated in the north of that heaven. Similarly in the Testament of Isaac (Testament of Abraham, ed. James, pp. 146-8) hell is understood to be in one of the heavens. The same holds true of the Testament of Jacob (op. cit. p. 153), and of the Apoc. Esdrae, p. 29.

Finally in the Acts of Callistratus (ed. Conybeare), pp. 311-12, the seven circles of the heavens are mentioned.

Speculations about the seven heavens prevailed largely among the heretics. Thus according to Irenaeus, contra Haer. i. 5, 2, the Valentinians taught : ἑπτὰ γὰρ οὐρανοὺς κατεσκευασμένοι, ὧν ἐπάνω τὸν δημιουργὸν εἶναι λέγουσι. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο Ἐβδμοάδα καλοῦσιν αὐτόν, τὴν δὲ μητέρα τὴν Ἀχαμῶθ Ὀγδοάδα . . . τοὺς δὲ ἑπτὰ οὐρανοὺς οὐκ (?) εἶναι νοητοὺς φασιν, ἀγγέλους δὲ αὐτοὺς ὑποτίθενται . . . ὥς καὶ τὸν παράδεισον ὑπὲρ τρίτον οὐρανὸν ὄντα, τέταρτον ἄγγελον λέγουσι δυνάμει ὑπάρχειν.

In Tertullian, Adv. Valent. xx, practically the same account is given : ' Tum ipsam caelorum septemplex scenam solio desuper suo fuit. Unde et Sabbatum dictus ab hebdomade sedis suae . . . Caelos autem noeros deputant, et interdum angelos eos faciunt . . . sicut et Paradisum Archangelum quartum, quoniam et hunc supra caelum tertium pangunt.'

The heretic Marcus taught according to Hippolytus a similar doctrine of the heavens, but according to Irenaeus, adv. Haer. i. 17, 1, he reckoned eight heavens in addition to the sun and moon.

Basilides' view as to their being 365 heavens is well known (Augustine, de Haer. i. 4).

The Ophites (Irenaeus, adv. Haer. i. 30. 4, 5) believed in seven heavens ruled over by seven potentates, named Jaldabaoth, Jao, Sabaoth, Adoneus, Eloeus, Horeus, Astaphaeus—a Hebdomad which with their mother Sophia formed a Ogdoad. A fuller account of this Hebdomad will be found in Origen, contra Celsum, vi. 31, and in Epiphanius Haer. xxvi. 10.

In the mysteries of Mithras described by Origen, contra Celsum, vi. 22, there are certain speculations akin to the doctrine of the seven heavens.

A fragment of Theodotus preserved by Clement is found regarding the creation of man : ὁθεὶς ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ τῷ τετάρτῳ οὐρανῷ δημιουργεῖται¹.

The doctrine of the seven heavens, therefore, being associated with so many grotesque and incongruous features even in the thoughts of the orthodox, became in due time an offensive conception to the sounder minds in the Church, and this offensiveness was naturally aggravated by the important role it played in heretical theology. Augustine, though he expounds a peculiar doctrine of his own which asserts the existence of three heavens (de Gen. ad Litt. xii. 67), feels himself beset with abundant difficulties on this question. On the subject in general he writes : ' Si autem sic accipimus tertium coelum quo Apostolus raptus est, ut quartum etiam, et aliquot ultra superius coelos esse credamus, infra quos et hoc tertium coelum, sicut eos alii septem, alii octo, alii novem vel decem perhibent . . . de quorum ratione sive opinione nunc disserere longum est' (de Gen. ad Litt. xii. 57). In the fourth century of the Christian era, Churchmen were required according to the clear tenor of Scripture to believe in the plurality of the heavens, but as to the number of these heavens they were at liberty to decide for themselves without prejudicing their orthodoxy. Thus Philastrius, Bishop of Brescia, at the close of the fourth century holds it a heresy to doubt the plurality of the heavens, but a man may without offence believe in seven, three, or two. 'De caelorum diversitate est haeresis quae ambigat. Scriptura enim in primo die caelum et terram facta declarat duo haec elementa, secundo firmamentum aquae factum, et nihilominus ipsum firmamentum caelum appellatum fuisse testatur. David autem dicit de caelis ita: Laudate dominum caeli caelorum et aquae quae super caelos sunt. Sive ergo sex caelos, secundum David, et septimum hoc firmamentum accipere quis voluerit, non errat; nam Solomon tres caelos dicit, ita: Caelum et caelum caeli. Paulus aequè apostolus usque ad tertium caelum se raptum fatetur. Sive ergo septem quis acceperit, ut David, sive tres, sive duos, non errat, quia et Dominus ait: Pater qui in caelis est.' (De Haeres. Liber xciv.)

¹ The Valentinians also placed Paradise in the fourth heaven.

But these and the like speculations had become so objectionable to the master mind of Chrysostom, that despite 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3 he declares the doctrine of a plurality of the heavens to be a mere device of man and contrary to holy scripture: τίς ἂν οὖν λοιπὸν μετὰ τὴν τοσαύτην διδασκαλίαν ἀνέχοιτο τῶν ἀπλῶς ἐξ οἰκείας διαβολῆς φθέγγεσθαι βουλομένων, καὶ ἀπεναντίως τῇ θείᾳ γραφῇ πολλοῖς οὐρανοῖς λέγειν ἐπιχειρούντων (Hom. in Gen. iv. 3). And again, in order to discredit the last traces of this view he maintains that the heaven neither revolves nor is spherical (In Epist. ad Hebraeos, Hom. xiv. 1).

Our task is now nearly done. It only remains for us to point out that this doctrine, on its rejection by the Christian Church, passed over with many similar ones into Mohammedanism. In fact, Mohammedanism formed in many respects the cloaca maxima into which much of the refuse of Christianity discharged itself.

Thus in the Koran xxiii it is written: 'And we have created over you seven heavens, and we are not negligent of what we have created.' And again in xli: 'And he formed them into seven heavens in two days, and revealed unto every heaven its office.'

Into a detailed representation of these heavens by later Mohammedan writers it is not necessary for us to enter.

So far as I am aware every detail is borrowed from Jewish and Christian Apocalypses. Some form of the Slavonic Enoch seems to have been in Mohammed's hands¹.

¹ The four streams of Paradise (Slav. En. viii. 5) which pour honey and milk and oil and wine, reappear in the Koran xlvii. Again, irrational animals are to be restored to life at the resurrection, to receive the recompense due to them, and then to return to the dust, with the exception of Ezra's ass and the dog of the seven sleepers (cf. Koran iii; xviii; Sale's note on vi; Slav. Enoch lviii. 4-6).

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH THE SON OF ARED; A MAN WISE AND BELOVED OF GOD¹.

[Concerning the Life and the Dream of Enoch*².]

THERE was a very ³ wise man and a worker of great things : God loved him, and received him, so that he should see the heavenly abodes, the kingdoms of the wise, great, inconceivable and never-changing God, the Lord of all, the wonderful and glorious, and bright and all-beholding station of the servants of the Lord, and the unapproachable throne of the Lord, and the degrees and manifestations of the incorporeal hosts, and should be an eye-witness of the unspeakable ministrations of the multitude of creatures, and of the varying appearance, and indescribable singing of the host of Cherubim, and of the immeasurable world.

I. 1. At that time he said : 'Hardly had I accomplished *165 years, when I begat my son Methusal : after that I lived 200 years and accomplished all the years of my life⁴, 365

¹ This general title appears in B as These are the secret books of God which were shown to Enoch.

Introduction. THIS IS ENTIRELY WANTING IN B. ² Sok. om. I have retained the headings of the Sections which are given in A, as they are valuable for critical purposes ; but as they do not belong to the original text I have enclosed them in brackets. ³ Sok. om.

I. ⁴ B om. ; Sok. supports text.

years. 2. *On the first day of the first month¹ I was alone in my house, *and I rested on my bed and slept. 3. And as I slept a great grief came upon my heart, and I wept with mine eyes² *in my dream, and I could not understand what this grief meant, or what would happen to me³. 4. And there appeared to me two men very tall, such as I have never seen on earth. 5. And their faces *shone like the sun⁴, and their eyes *were like burning lamps⁵; and fire came forth from their lips. *Their dress had the appearance of feathers: their feet were purple⁶, *their wings were brighter than gold⁷; *their hands whiter than snow⁸. They stood at the head of my bed and called me by my name. 6. I awoke from my sleep and *saw clearly these men standing in front of me⁹. 7. I *hastened and¹⁰ made obeisance to them and *was terrified, and the appearance of my countenance was changed¹¹ from fear. 8. And these¹² men said to me: "Be of good cheer, Enoch, be not afraid; the everlasting¹³ God hath sent us to thee, and lo! to-day thou shalt ascend with us into heaven.

¹ In the second month on an appointed day, B; Sok. is conflated.

² I had made myself melancholy weeping with my eyes, and I lay down on my bed to sleep, B. ³ B om.; Sok. supports text. ⁴ Were like the shining sun, Sok. ⁵ Burnt like lamps, A. ⁶ So Sok. A reads there was a conspicuousness in their raiment and singing, in appearance purple; B, their dress and singing were wonderful. ⁷ And on their shoulders as it were golden wings, B. ⁸ So Sok.; standing up quickly (?), B; A om. ⁹ A B om. ¹⁰ Veiled my face, B. ¹¹ The two, Sok. ¹² Almighty, B.

I. With verses 2, 3, cf. Eth. En. lxxxiii. 3, 5. 5. Faces shone like the sun: cf. xix. 1; Rev. i. 16; 4 Ezra [vi. 71]. Eyes were like burning lamps, from Dan. x. 6 עֵינָיו כְּלַפְיָדִי אֵשׁ: cf. Ezek. i. 13; Rev. i. 14; xix. 12. Fire came forth from their lips: cf. for language Rev. ix. 17; xi. 5. Their dress . . . purple: the text is corrupt. Their hands whiter than snow; cf. Eth. En. cvi. 2, 10 'his body was whiter than snow': Apoc. Petri τὰ μὲν γὰρ σώματα αὐτῶν ἦν λευκότερα πάσης χιόνης. 7. Countenance was changed: Dan. v. 6, 9, 10. 8. Be of good cheer: Matt. ix. 2 θάρσει; xiv. 27; Mark vi. 50; x. 29; Acts xxiii. 11; xxvii. 22, 25. In LXX Gen. xxxv. 17; Exod. xiv. 13, &c. θάρσει is a rendering of לֹא תִירָא. Be not afraid: cf. 2 Kings i. 15; Ezek. ii. 6, &c.; Eth. En. xv. 1. The conjunction of Be of good cheer and

9. And tell thy sons and thy servants, all ¹ *who work ² *in thy house ³, and let no one seek thee, till the Lord bring thee back to them.' 10. And I *hastened to obey ⁴ them, and went out *of my house ⁵. And I called my sons Methusal, Regim [*and Gaidal ⁶], and told them what wonderful ⁷ things *the two men ⁸ had said to me.'

[The Instruction: how Enoch taught his Sons.]

II. 1. 'Hear me, my children, for I do not know whither I am going, or what awaits me. 2. Now, my children, I say unto you: turn not aside from God: *walk before the face of the Lord and keep his judgements ⁹ *and do not worship vain gods ¹⁰, who did not make heaven and earth ¹¹, for these

¹ That they are to do without thee on the earth A. ² A and Sok. om. ³ Sok. om. ⁴ Obeyed, B. ⁵ B omits; A adds and shut the doors as was ordered me. ⁶ B om.; Sok. supports text. See exegetical note in loc. ⁷ B om. ⁸ They, A; these men, Sok.

II. A om. ⁹ Sok. adds do not defile the prayers (offered for) your salvation, that the Lord may not shorten the work of your hands, and ye may not be deprived of the gifts of the Lord, and the Lord may not deprive you of the attainment of His gifts in your treasures. Bless the Lord with the firstlings of your flocks and the firstlings of your children, and blessings shall be upon you for ever; and do not depart from the Lord. ¹⁰ To vain creatures, A. ¹¹ Sok. adds nor any other creature.

Be not afraid is found in Matt. xiv. 27. 10. Sons: these are mentioned though not named in Eth. En. lxxxi. 5, 6; xci. 1. Regim: see lvii. 2. Gaidal: this name is derived from LXX. Gen. iv. 18 ἐγεννήθη δὲ τῷ Ἐνώχ Γαῖδαλ. For Γαῖδαλ Mass. gives Irad (𐩨𐩣𐩪) and Syriac Idar (ܝܕܪ), which more nearly approaches LXX. Observe that this Gaidal is the son of Enoch who is the grandson of Cain, and therefore wrongly appears here. As however B omits it both here and in lvii. 2, it is probably spurious. A confusion of Enoch, son of Lamech, and Enos, son of Seth, is to be found in the Clementine Recognitions iv. 12.

II. 1. Know whither I am going, &c.: cf. vii. 5. 2. Turn not aside from God: 1 Sam. xii. 20. Walk before the face of the Lord: Ps. lvi. 13; cxvi. 9. Keep his judgements: Lev. xviii. 5; Ezek. xxxvi. 27. Worship vain gods: Deut. viii. 19; cf. 1 Sam. (LXX, Syr., Vulg.) xii. 21. Vain gods who did not make heaven and earth, for these will perish, from Jer. x. 11; cf. Ps. xcvi. 5; Is. ii. 18; Acts xiv. 15 'Ye should turn from these vain things unto the living God, who made the heaven and the earth.' Jub. xii. 2, 3, 4 'What help . . . have we from those idols which thou dost worship . . . worship them not. Worship the God of heaven.'

will perish, * and also those who worship them¹. 3. * But may God make confident your hearts in the fear of Him². 4. And now, my children, let no one seek me till the Lord brings me back to you.'

[Of the taking up of Enoch; how the Angels took him up into the first heaven.]

III. 1. It came to pass when I³ had spoken to my sons, * these men⁴ * summoned me and⁵ took me on their wings⁶ and placed me * on the clouds⁷. * And lo! the clouds moved⁸. 2. * And again (going) higher I saw the air and (going still) higher I saw the ether⁹, and they placed me in the first heaven. 3. * And they showed me a very great sea, greater than the earthly sea¹⁰.

[Of the Angels who rule the Stars.]

IV. 1. And they brought * before my face the elders, and the rulers of the orders of the stars¹¹, and they showed me the ¹ B om. ² But keep your hearts in the fear of God, B. For the fear of Him A reads His own paths.

III. Instead of 'Of the taking up of Enoch, &c.' B reads 'The entry of Enoch into the first heaven.' ³ Throughout this verse A speaks of Enoch in the third person. ⁴ The angels, A. ⁵ A om. ⁶ A B add and brought me (him A) to the first heaven, which should be read at end of verse 2. ⁷ There B. ⁸ A B om. ⁹ And there I gazed, and as I gazed higher I saw the air, A. ¹⁰ B trans. after the 200 angels, iv. 1.

IV. ¹¹ Me before the face of the elder, the ruler of the orders of the stars; and showed me their goings and comings from year to year, B.

3. Make confident your hearts in the fear of Him: Prov. xiv. 26.

III. 1. Placed me on the clouds. And lo! the clouds moved: cf. Eth. En. xiv. 8 'the clouds invited me . . . and the winds gave me wings and drove me.' The air . . . and the ether. This corresponds to the firmament in Asc. Is. vii. 9 'Ascendimus in firmamentum et ibi vidi Sammaelem ejusque potestates . . . 13. et postea me ascendere fecit supra firmamentum: hoc jam est (primum) coelum.' 3. A very great sea: cf. Rev. iv. 6; xv. 2 'sea of glass.' In Test. xii. Patriarch. Levi 2 this sea lies between the first and second heavens, ὕδωρ κρεμάμενον ἀνάμεσον τούτου καὶ κείνου.

IV. 1. Rulers of the orders of the stars, &c. For a full but divergent account of these see Eth. En. lxxxii. 9-18, 20. The 200 angels. In the Eth. En. Uriel is the sole ruler of the two hundred angels * who rule the stars and their heavenly service¹; 2. * And they fly with their wings² * and go round all (the stars) as they float¹.

[How the Angels guard the Habitations of the Snow.]

V. 1. And * then I looked and saw³ the treasures of the snow * and ice⁴ and the angels⁵ who guard their terrible⁶ store-places; 2. And the treasures of the clouds from which they come forth and into which they enter.

[Concerning the Dew and the Oil, and different Colours.]

VI. And they showed me the treasures of the dew, like * oil for anointing⁷, * and its form was in appearance like that of⁸ all earthly colours⁹: also many¹⁰ angels keeping their treasures, * and they shut and open them¹⁰.

[How Enoch was taken into the second Heaven¹¹.*]

VII. 1. And the men took me and brought me to the ¹ B om. ² B reads immediately after earthly sea, iii. 3. Sok. om.

V. ³ They showed me, B. There I saw, Sok. ⁴ A om. ⁵ Terrible angels, B. ⁶ B om.

VI. ⁷ The balm of the olive tree, Sok. ⁸ And the appearance of it as also of, A. And their robes are like, B. ⁹ May be rendered flowers. ¹⁰ B om.

VII. ¹¹ The Entry of Enoch into the second Heaven, B; Sok. om.

stars: cf. lxxii. 1; lxxx. 1. In Eth. En. vi. 5 this is the number of angels that apostatized.

V. 1. Treasures of the snow and ice: Job xxxviii. 22; cf. Eth. En. lx. 17, 18. These treasures are placed in the second heaven by the Test. xii. Patriarch. Levi 3 ὁ δεύτερος (οὐρανός) ἔχει πῦρ χιόνα κρίσταλλον. 2. Treasures of the clouds: cf. Eth. En. lx. 19.

VI. 1. Treasures of the dew: cf. Eth. En. lx. 20. In the Beresch. rabba c. 6, Bammid'ar rabba, c. 17, and the Chagiga 12^b, there is an enumeration of the seven heavens. The lowest of these which is called רִבְיָא (Lat. velum) is empty. According to some, it appears in the morning and disappears in the evening (see Weber, p. 197): according to Berachoth 58^b the Wilôn is rolled up in order that the light of the second heaven, the Rakia, may be seen. This heaven seems also to be empty according to the Test. xii. Patr. Levi 3 ὁ κατώτερος διὰ τοῦτο στυγνότερός ἐστιν ἔπειδὴ οὗτος ὁρᾷ πάσας ἀδικίας ἀνθρώπων.

second heaven, and showed me¹ *the darkness, and there I saw² the prisoners suspended³, reserved for (and) awaiting³ the eternal⁴ judgement. 2. *And these angels were gloomy in appearance, more than the darkness of the earth³. *And they unceasingly wept every hour⁵, and I said to the men who were with me: 'Why are these men continually³ tortured?' 3. *And the men⁶ answered me: 'These are they who apostatized from *the Lord⁷: who obeyed not the commandments of God, and took counsel of their own will *and transgressed together with their prince and have been already confined to the second heaven⁸. 4. And I felt great pity for them. *And lo! the angels⁹ made obeisance to me, and said to me: "O man of God! *pray for us to the Lord¹⁰." 5. And I answered¹¹ them: "Who am I, a mortal

¹ Sok. adds and I saw. ² B om.; after darkness, A adds greater than the darkness on earth. ³ B om. ⁴ Great and immeasurable, A; immeasurable, Sok. ⁵ And I saw those who were condemned weeping, B. ⁶ And they, A; The men, Sok. ⁷ God, A. ⁸ B om. For second A Sok. read fifth. ⁹ They, A; and these angels, Sok. ¹⁰ Oh! that thou wouldst pray to God for us! B. ¹¹ Sok. adds and said unto.

VII. 1. The darkness and . . . the prisoners . . . reserved for . . . judgement: cf. 2 Pet. ii. 4 'Committed them (the angels that sinned as here) to pits of darkness to be reserved unto judgement.' These prisoners are the angels that 'kept not their first estate' and are 'reserved . . . under darkness unto the judgement of the great day,' Jude 6. They appear to be referred to also in Test. xii. Patr. Levi 3 ἐν αὐτῷ (τῷ δευτέρῳ οὐρανῷ) εἰσὶ πάντα τὰ πνεύματα τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, where ἁμαρτωλῶν seems corrupt. Observe that the angels who sinned with women are imprisoned under the earth in the Eth. En. x as also in our text xviii. 7. On the other hand the angels who sinned through lust for empire are prisoners in the second heaven. 3. Took counsel of their own will. For phraseology cf. Eph. i. 11; Is. xlv. 10. These angels wished to form a kingdom of their own. Cf. Weber, p. 244. Their prince Satanail: xviii. 3. Second heaven. This emendation is necessary. When the angels of the fifth heaven rebelled they were cast down to the second heaven and imprisoned there. 4. The angels ask Enoch to intercede for them, exactly as in Eth. En. xiii. 4. 'They besought me to draw up a petition that they might find forgiveness.' Man of God: Deut. xxxiii. 1; 1 Tim. vi. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 17. 5. Cf. Eth. En. xv. 2 'Say to the watchers of heaven . . . you should intercede for men and not men man, that I should pray for angels? Who knows whither I go, or what awaits me: or who prays *for me¹? ”.

[* Of the taking of Enoch to the third Heaven ².]

VIII. 1. And these men took me from thence, and brought me to the third heaven, and placed me in the midst of a garden³— a place⁴ such as has never been known for *the goodness of its appearance⁵. 2. And *I saw⁶ all the trees of beautiful colours and⁷ their fruits ripe *and fragrant⁶, and all kinds of *food which they produced⁸, springing up with delightful fragrance⁹. 3. And in the midst (there is) the tree of life, in that place, on which God rests, when He comes into Paradise. And this tree cannot be described for its *excellence and sweet odour¹⁰. 4. And it is beautiful more than any created thing. And on all sides in appearance it is like gold and crimson and transparent as fire, and it covers everything¹¹. 5. *From its root in the

¹ B om.

VIII. ² Entry into the third Heaven, B. ³ So B and Sok. A reads There, I looked below and I saw gardens. ⁴ I looked below and saw that place, Sok. ⁵ Their goodness, A and Sok. ⁶ B om. ⁷ And I beheld, A. ⁸ Agreeable food, B. ⁹ B adds and four rivers flowing with soft course and every kind of thing good that grows for food. These words belong to verse 6. ¹⁰ The excellence of its sweet odour, B. ¹¹ The whole garden, Sok. After this A adds and the gardens have all kinds of fruits; Sok. adds and the garden has all kinds of trees planted and all fruits. B omits verse 4.

for you. Who knows whither I go, &c.: cf. ii. 1.

VIII. 1. A garden: as in 2 Cor. xii. 4, 4 Paradise is placed in the third heaven. 2. All the trees . . . fragrant: cf. Gen. ii. 9; Eth. En. xxix. 2; Apoc. Mosis (p. 20) . . . All kinds of food which they produced: cf. Rev. xxii. 2 'Bearing twelve manner of fruits.' 3. In the midst the tree of life: Gen. ii. 9. This is a familiar feature in Jewish Apocalypses. Cp. Eth. En. xxv. 4, 5; Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14; 4 Ezra vii. 53; viii. 52; Test. Levi 18. See also Iren. i. 5, 2. When we come to Epiphanius we find it denounced as a Manichaean doctrine, Haer. 66, p. 278. The tree of life . . . on which God rests. This is reproduced in a modified form in the Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 64) δένδρον παμμεγέθη ὠραῖον, ἐν ᾧ ἐπανεπαύετο τὸ πνεῦμα ἅγιον. There is a modification of this idea in Apoc. Mosis (ed. Tischend. p. 12) καὶ ὁ θρόνος τοῦ θεοῦ ὅπου ἦν τὸ ξύλον τῆς ζωῆς ἐν τρεπίζετο. 5. From its root, &c. This is the source of the words in Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 64) καὶ ἐκ τῆς ῥίζης αὐτοῦ ἐξήρχετο πᾶν εὐωδέστατον ὕδωρ, μερίζομενον εἰς τέσσαρα ὀρύγματα. The garden¹ there go forth four² streams which pour honey and milk³, oil and wine, and are separated in four directions, and go about with a soft course. 6. And they go down to the Paradise of Eden, between corruptibility and incorruptibility. And thence⁴ they go along the earth, and have a revolution in their circle like also the other elements⁵. 7. * And there is another tree, an olive tree always distilling oil⁶. And there is no tree there without fruit, and every tree⁷ is blessed⁸. 8. And there are *three hundred angels very glorious, who keep the garden⁹, and with never ceasing voices and blessed singing, they serve the Lord *every day¹⁰. And I said¹¹: 'What a very¹² blessed place is this!' And those men spake unto me:

[The showing to Enoch of the Righteous, and the Place of Prayers.]

IX. 'This place, O Enoch, is prepared for the righteous

¹ Emended with Apoc. Pauli from its root; B omits; A and Sok. add in the going out towards earth Paradise is between corruptibility and incorruptibility. This is clearly a corrupt addition. See quotation from Apoc. Pauli in explanatory notes. ² Two, A and Sok. See note 9 on p. 7 for text of B. ³ A adds and the streams pour. ⁴ Sok. adds they go forth and are divided into forty (four ?) and; B omits verse 6. ⁵ Sok. adds of the air. ⁶ A Sok. om. ⁷ Place, A. ⁸ Sok. adds in its fruit and every place is blessed. ⁹ Angels guarding them, very bright in appearance, B. ¹⁰ Every day and hour, A; the whole day, Sok. ¹¹ A adds lo! ¹² B om.

writer has tried to reduce to one organic conception the two originally different conceptions of the heavenly and the earthly Paradise. The latter seems to have been the older: Gen. ii. 8-17; Eth. En. xxxii. 3-6; lxxvii. 3. The heavenly Paradise is referred to in Eth. En. lx. 8; lxi. 12; lxx. 3. Four streams which pour honey and milk and oil and wine. Cf. Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 52) ποταμοὶ τέσσαρες ἐκκύκλουν αὐτὴν, ῥέοντες μέλι καὶ γάλα καὶ ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον. These four streams are taken over into the Koran xlvii, save that instead of a river of oil there is a river of incorruptible water. The earthly Paradise is said to be between corruptibility and incorruptibility, because existence in it was a probation and might issue either in corruptibility or incorruptibility: or because it lay on the confines of the regions of corruptibility and incorruptibility. 7. Another tree . . . distilling oil: Cf. xxi. 7. These are the arbor misericordiae and the oleum misericordiae of Evang. Nicodemi ii. 3: cf. ch. xxii. 8.

IX. 1. Prepared for the righteous:

who endure * every kind of attack ¹ * in their lives ² * from those who ³ afflict their souls: who turn away their eyes from unrighteousness, and accomplish a righteous judgement, and also give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked, and raise the fallen, and assist the * orphans who are ⁴ oppressed, and who walk * without blame ⁴ before the face of the Lord, and serve him only. For them this place is prepared as an eternal inheritance.'

[Here they showed Enoch the terrible Places, and various Tortures.]

X. 1. And the men then ⁵ led me to the Northern region ⁶, and showed me there ⁷ a very terrible place. 2. And there are all sorts of tortures in that place. Savage ⁷ darkness and impenetrable ⁷ gloom; and there is no light there ⁷, * but cf. Matt. xxv. 34. See note on Eth. En. lx. 8. Turn away their eyes from unrighteousness: Ps. cxix. 37; cf. Is. xxxiii. 15. Execute righteous judgement: Ezek. xviii. 8. Give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked: Ezek. xviii. 7: cf. Tob. iv. 16; 4 Ezra ii. 20; Or. Sibyll. ii. 83; viii. 404-405. Assist the orphans who are oppressed: cf. Is. i. 17; Jer. xxii. 3, 16. Walk without blame before . . . the Lord: cf. Luke i. 6. Eternal inheritance: cf. Heb. ix. 15.

IX. ¹ Attacks, B. ² A om. ³ Who, B. ⁴ B om.

X. ⁵ Removed me from thence and, B. ⁶ Part of the heavens, B.
⁷ B om.

X. 1. Northern region. To the modern mind it may seem strange that a division of heaven should be assigned to the wicked, but this idea presented no difficulty to the Jews and early Christians. Thus in the O. T. Satan can present himself in heaven, Job i. 7, 8; while in the N. T. evil may not only appear, but can also have a settled habitation there: Eph. vi. 12 'the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavens' (ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις). In Rev. xii. 7, 8, 9 this condition of things is represented as being at an end. Satan is cast out of heaven with his angels, and the sphere of his activity and residence is now limited to the earth, Rev. xii. 12. The old idea of wickedness being in heaven reappears in Test. Levi 3, where however it is limited to the second heaven (see also Test. Isaac 146, 147; Test. Jacob 153); but it was subsequently banished from Christian and Jewish thought. See Introduction. 2. Darkness and . . . gloom: Apoc. Petri 12 τόπος σκοτεινῶ: Apoc. Pauli, p. 62, where one region of a gloomy fire is always burning¹, *and a fiery river goes forth². * And all that place has fire on all sides, and on all sides³ cold and ice, * thus it burns and freezes⁴. (3) * And the prisoners are very savage². And the angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage² weapons, and their torture was unmerciful. 4. And I said: * 'Woe, woe²! How terrible is this place⁵!' And the men said to me: 'This place,

¹ Neither fire nor flame and a gloom is over that place, B. ² B. om.

³ In that place; on both sides fire and on both sides, Sok.; B om. ⁴ So Sok. A reads thirst and freezing, B; and murkiness. ⁵ What a terrible place is this! A.

Hades is said σκότους καὶ ζόφους πεπληρωμένον. There is no light there: quoted by Apoc. Pauli (p. 57) οὐκ ἦν ἐκεῖ φῶς. Fiery river. This idea appears first in Eth. En. xiv. 19; Dan. vii. 10, but not there as an instrument of punishment. It seems however to have been applied early to that purpose, as here, and in the form of a lake of fire in Rev. xix. 20; xx. 10, 14, 15; xxi. 8. Or. Sibyll. ii. 196-200, 252-253, 286; iii. 84; viii. 411: cf. Apoc. Petri 8 λίμνη τις ἦν μεγάλη πεπληρωμένη βορβόρον φλεγόμενου. Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 57) ἐνθα ἐπέρρεεν ποταμὸς πύρινος. In Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 38 the two ideas are combined: ποταμὸς ἐκπορεύεται πυρὸς ὑποκάτω τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ τόπου, καὶ βεῖ εἰς τὸ κενὸν τοῦ ἐκτισμένου, ὃ ἐστὶν ἡ γέεννα (quoted by James, Test. Abraham, p. 160). Fire on all sides, and on all sides cold and ice. This seems to be drawn from Eth. En. xiv. 13, where God's dwelling in heaven is said to be 'hot as fire and cold as ice.' 3. Angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage weapons. Angels of destruction are mentioned in the O. T. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16; 2 Kings xix. 35; 1 Chron. xxi. 15. A class of destroying angels may be referred to in Eccclus. xxxix. 28 πνεύματα, ἃ εἰς ἐκδίκησιν ἐκτισται. In Eth. En. liii. 3, 4; lvi. 1; lxii. 11; lxiii. 1, a class of evil angels whose sole function is to punish is mentioned and the conception is evidently a familiar one, though here found for the first time in Jewish literature. This idea appears in the N. T. Rev. ix. 11, 15; xvi. Of these the angel mentioned in ix. 11 is Ἀπολλών. In Matt. xiii. 49 good angels cast the wicked into the furnace of fire. These angels of destruction or punishment are frequently referred to in Latin literature. Test. Levi 3 αἱ δυνάμεις... οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλανῆς. These angels of punishment are placed in the third heaven as in our text. Cf. Apoc. Petri 6 οἱ κολάζοντες ἄγγελοι: 8 ἄγγελοι βασανισταί. The words angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage weapons seem to have been before the writer of Test. Abraham A. xii ἄγγελοι... ἀνηλεεῖς τῇ γνώμῃ καὶ ἀπότομοι τῷ

Enoch, is prepared for *those who do not honour God; who commit evil deeds on earth, vitium sodomiticum, witchcraft¹, enchantments, devilish² magic; and who boast of their evil² deeds, *stealing, lying, calumnies, envy, evil thoughts, fornication, and murder². 5. Who steal³ the souls of wretched² men⁴, oppressing⁵ *the poor and spoiling them of their possessions², and themselves grow rich *by the taking of other men's possessions⁶, *injuring them⁷. Who when they might feed the hungry, allow them to die of famine; who when they might clothe them, strip them naked. 6. Who do not know their Creator and have worshipped *gods without life; who can neither see nor hear, being² vain gods, *and have fashioned the forms of idols, and bow down to a contemptible thing, made with hands²; for all these this place is prepared for an eternal inheritance.

[*Here they took Enoch to the fourth Heaven, where is the Course of the Sun and Moon⁸.]

XI. 1. And the men took me and conducted me to the fourth heaven, and showed me all *the comings and⁹ goings forth and all the rays of the light of the sun and moon.

¹ The impure who have done godlessness on the earth, who practise, B. ² Bom. ³ B adds secretly. ⁴ B adds who bind them with a galling yoke. ⁵ Who see, A; B om. ⁶ And in order to acquire the goods of strangers, A. ⁷ Oppress them, A; B om.

XI. ⁸ Entry of Enoch into the fourth Heaven, B. ⁹ A om.

βλέμματι . . . ἀνηλέως τύπτοντες αὐτοὺς ἐν πυρίναις χαρσίναις. 4. Prepared for those who do not honour God. Contrast Matt. xxv. 41. Vitium sodomiticum. Cf. Apoc. Petri 17: Test. Isaac (James' ed.), p. 148. 6. Cf. Lev. xix. 4; xxvi. 1; Or. Sibyll. v. 77-85; viii. 378-81; 395-98; Fragm. i. 20-22; iii. 21-45.

XI. 1. Fourth heaven. According to the Rabbinic tradition Chagiga 12^b the fourth heaven was called רביע and it was said to contain the heavenly Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, and Michael who offered daily sacrifice. The following quotation (ἐκ τῶν Θεοδότην . . . Ἐπιτομῇ) seems to agree with the Rabbinic view: ἄθεν ἐν τῇ παραδείσῳ τῇ τετάρτῃ οὐρανῶ δημιουργεῖται. Comings and goings . . .

* And I measured¹ their goings, * and computed their light. 2. And I saw that² the sun has a light * seven times³ greater than the moon. * I beheld their circle, and their chariot⁴ on which * each goes⁵ like a wind * advancing with astonishing swiftness⁶, and * they have⁷ no rest day or night coming or going. 3. There are four great stars; * each star has under it a thousand stars⁸ at the right of the chariot of the sun; and four at the left⁹, * each having under it a thousand stars, altogether eight thousand⁶. 4. * Fifteen myriads of⁹ angels go * out with the sun and attend him during the day, and by night one thousand⁶. * Each angel has six wings. They go¹⁰ before the chariot of the sun¹¹. 5. And a hundred angels * keep warm and light up the sun¹².

[Of the wonderful Creatures of the Sun.]

XII. 1. * And I looked and saw other flying creatures, their names phoenixes and chalkadri wonderful and strange of the sun and moon: cf. Eth. En. lxxii-lxxviii. 2. The sun has a light seven times, &c.: Eth. En. lxxii. 37. Their chariot on which each goes like a wind: Eth. En. lxxii. 5 'the chariots on which he (the sun) ascends are driven by the wind': so also of the moon in Eth. En. lxxiii. 2 and of both in lxxv. 3; lxxxii. 8. Have no rest day or night: Eth. En. xli. 7 '(the sun and moon) rest not': lxxii. 37 'rests not . . . day and night.' Sibyllines iii. 21 'Ἡελίον τ' ἀκάμυντα. 3, 4. There is nothing corresponding to these verses in Eth. En. 5. Cf. Eth. En. lxxv. 4.

¹ Their dimensions, B. ² And I saw their goings, B. ³ A om. ⁴ His circle and his chariot, A; and around them is a chariot, B. ⁵ They go always, A. ⁶ B om. ⁷ He has, A. ⁸ B adds always going with the sun. ⁹ Fifteen, A; B om. ¹⁰ Six winged creatures go with the angels, A; B om. ¹¹ A adds in a fiery flame. ¹² Minister unto him fire, Sok.; B om. verse 5.

XII. 1. Phoenixes and chalkadri. This seems to be the only reference to such creatures in literature. The phoenix, which according to all ancient writers was solitary and unique ('unus in terris,' Tac. Ann. vi. 28; cf. Mart. v. 7; Ovid, Met. xv. 392) in its kind, is here represented as one of a class. The phoenix is mentioned in Job xxix. 18 according to Jewish authorities, where for 'I shall multiply my days as the sand' they render 'as the phoenix' כַּחֲסִי. There are many references to it among the Greeks and Romans: Herod. ii. 73; Tac. Ann. vi. 28; Ovid, Met. xv.

in appearance, with the feet and tails of lions, and the heads of crocodiles¹; *their appearance was of a purple colour, like XII. ¹ And the flying creatures are in form like two birds, one like a phoenix and the other like a chalkedry. And in their shape they resemble a lion in their feet and tail and in the head a crocodile, Sok.; B om.

392; Mart. Epigr. v. 7, 1; Stat. Sylv. ii. 4, 37; Plin. N. H. x. 2. The fable regarding it is recounted as sober fact by 1 Clem. ad Corinth. xxv; Tertullian, de Resurrect. Carn. xiii; Ambrose, Hexaem. v. 23; Epiphanius, Ancorat. lxxxiv; and the Apostolic Constitutions v. 7. Origen, contra Celsum iv. 98, doubts it; so also Greg. Naz. Orat. xxxi. 10, and among the later Greeks Maximus and Photius, and among the Latins Augustine de Anima iv. 33. To those who believed the fable we should add Rufinus Comment. in Symb. Apost. xi. and the Pseudo-Lactantius, from whose poem De Phoenice we draw the following references, which seem to be derived either directly or indirectly from our text. The phoenix in that poem is an attendant of the sun, 'satelles phoebi' ver. 33, as in xii. 2 are the phoenixes: when the sun appears it greets him with strains of sacred song (verses 43-50) and claps its wings (verses 51-54) exactly as the phoenixes in xv. 1. This poem belongs probably to the fourth century. The voice of the phoenix was celebrated for its sweetness: cf. the Jewish poet Ezekiel v. 10 φωνήν δὲ πάντων εἶχεν εὐπρεπεστάτην: Pseudo-Lactantius, de Phoenice 46 'miram vocem': 56 'inarrabilibus sonis.' Its colour was purple—purpureus (Pliny); κνέυεις ἔστιν ῥόδους ἐμφερής (Achil. Tat.), cf. xv. 1 and xii. 1. On the two different legends in the Talmud about the origin of the phoenix see Hamburger, R. E.

für Talmud 908-9. On the question generally see Lightfoot, and Gebhardt and Harnack on 1 Clem. xxv. 1; Eckermann in Ersch und Grueber sect. iii. xxiv. 310-16; Creuzer, Symbol. und Mythol. ii. 163 (third ed.); Piper, Mythol. und Symbol. der Christl. Kunst i. 446, 471; Ebert, Allgemeine Geschichte der Literatur des Mittelalters i. 93-98; Seyffarth, Z. D. M. G. 1849, 63-89; Gundert, Z. f. luth. Theol. 1854, 451-54. Chalkadri. This may be a transliteration of Χαλκιδῆραι, brazen hydras, or serpents. They are classed with the Cherubim in Eth. En. xx. 7 'Gabriel . . . who is over Paradise and the Serpents (τῶν δρακόντων in the Greek) and the Cherubim.' Hence they seem to have been a class of heavenly creatures, i. e. the Seraphim סְרָפִיִּם. The idea of flying serpents was a familiar one from the O. T. Is. xiv. 29; xxx. 6 הַמְּעוֹפֵי הָרָשׁ. It was not unfamiliar to the rest of the ancient world: cf. Herod. ii. 75; Lucan ix. 729-30; Ovid, Met. v. 642-4; Fast. iv. 562; also Claudian, Valerius Flaccus, Ammianus, Aelian, Apollonius. In the O. T. these flying serpents are venomous in such passages as Num. xxi. 6; Deut. viii. 15; Is. xiv. 29; xxx. 6. What relation these seraphim bear to those in Is. vi. 2, 6 it is hard to determine. That these latter were winged dragons we must assume according to Delitzsch (Das Buch Jesaja, pp. 124, 5). The analogy of the animal-like forms of the Cherubim in Ezek. i. 5-11 is the rainbow; their size nine hundred measures¹. 2. * Their wings were like those of angels, each with twelve, and they attend the chariot of the sun, and go with him², bringing heat and dew * as they are ordered by God³. 3. * So the sun makes his revolutions, and goes⁴ * under the heavens,

¹ B om. ² So A and Sok., but that the former omits chariot of the. Twelve flying spirits and twelve wings to each angel who accompanies the chariot, B. ³ And as he is ordered by God, Sok. ⁴ B om.; A adds and proceeds.

certainly in favour of this view. The serpent was anciently a symbol of wisdom and healing among the Greeks, the Egyptians (Brugsch, Rel. und Myth. pp. 103, 4), and the Hebrews, Num. xxi. 8, 9; 2 Kings xviii. 4; Matt. x. 16; John iii. 14. Hezekiah's destruction of the 'brazen serpent' as associated with idolatry may have caused the symbol to bear almost without exception an evil significance in later times, so that at last it became a designation of Satan: cf. Rev. xii. 9. We are therefore inclined to identify these Chalkadri with the Seraphim or heavenly creatures of Isaiah vi. These Chalkadri, we should add, sing in xv. 1 as do the Seraphim in Is. vi. 3, though their functions in the main are different. The idea here appears in a developed form and is no doubt indebted for its enlargement to Egyptian mythology. The Seraphim first appear in conjunction with other orders of angels in Eth. En. lxi. 10. Here their original character seems already to have been forgotten almost as wholly as in modern days, and they are regarded merely as a special class of angels; whereas in Eth. En. xx. 7 their true nature is still borne in mind. In the N. T. neither Cherubim nor Seraphim appear, but the characteristics of both reappear, fused together in the 'four living creatures' of Rev. iv. 6-8. However, though the N. T. takes no notice of the Seraphim save the indirect one of Rev. iv. 6-8, the conception obtained in later times the recognition of the Church through Dionysius the Areopagite's scheme of the nine heavenly orders. See Cheyne's Prophecies of Isaiah, i. 36, 42; ii. 283-6. Feet and tails of lions. The feet of the Cherubim in Ezek. i. 7 are like calves' feet. Their size nine hundred measures. In Bochart's Hieroicoicon iii. 225-227 we find by citations from Strabo, Aelian, Valerius, Philostorgius, Diodorus, &c., that the ancients were ready to believe in monstrous dragons or serpents. Aelian, for instance, speaks of one 210 feet long, while an Arabian writer describes one of 8,000 paces in length. In the Talmud there is frequent mention of angels and creatures of a like monstrous size. 2. Each with twelve. As the ordinary angels in xi. 4 have six wings each, these creatures are assigned twelve each. It would seem more natural to read this verse immediately after xi. 5; xii. 1 however must in some form and in some place appear in the text, as we see from xv. 1. Bringing heat and dew. Contrast and goes under¹ the earth with the light * of his beams unceasingly².

[The Angels took Enoch, and placed him on the East at the Gates of the Sun.]

XIII. 1. These men brought me to the East³ and * showed me the gates⁴ by which the sun * goes forth⁵ at the appointed seasons, and according to the revolution of the months * of the whole year⁶, and * according to the number of the hours, day and night⁷. 2. And I saw the six great⁸ gates * open, each gate having sixty-one stadia and a quarter of one stadium⁶; * and I truly measured them and understood their size to be so much⁹, by which the sun goes forth; and he goes to the west * and makes his course correspond. And he proceeds through all the months⁶. 3. * And by the first gates he goes out forty-two days; by the second gates thirty-five days; by the fourth gates thirty-five; by the fifth gates thirty-five; by the sixth gates⁸ forty-five¹⁰. 4. * And so he returns¹¹ * from the sixth gates in the course of time⁶: * and he enters by the fifth gates during thirty-five days, by the fourth gates thirty-five, by the third gates during thirty-five days; by the second gates thirty-five¹⁰. 5. * And so the ¹ To descend upon, B; under the heaven and under, Sok. ² The rays of the sun, B; Of his beams, Sok.

XIII. ³ B adds of the heavens. ⁴ Placed me at the gates of the sun, A. ⁵ Enters, B. ⁶ B om. ⁷ At the shortening up to the lengthening of the days and nights, B. ⁸ A om. ⁹ And I measured their size, and I could not comprehend their size, B. ¹⁰ A B om. ¹¹ B om. A adds to rest.

the conception in Eth. En. lx. 20. 3. Goes under the earth. This is undoubtedly corrupt, as the sun does not go under the earth but through the fourth heaven when he sets in the west. See xiv. 2 (note). Unceasingly: cf. xi. 2 (note).

XIII. 1. The gates by which the sun goes forth. These are the six gates mentioned in the next verse. For an account of the sun's six eastern gates and six western see Eth. En. lxxii. 2-4. Six gates: Eth. En. lxxii. 3. The rest of the chapter is hopelessly corrupt. The account seems to be derived originally from Eth. En.

days of the whole year¹ are finished according to the alternation of the four² seasons.

[They took Enoch to the West.]

XIV. 1. And *then these³ men took me to the *West of the heavens⁴ and showed me six great gates open, *corresponding to the Eastern gates⁵, opposite *to which the sun goes out by the Eastern gates⁶, according to the number of the days *three hundred and sixty-five, and the quarter of a day⁷. 2. *So he sets by the Western gates⁸. When he goes out by the Western gates⁹ *four hundred angels

¹ By his regular departure the years, B. And so the whole year, A.

² B om.

XIV. ³ The, B. ⁴ Western regions, A. ⁵ Corresponding to the Eastern entrance, B. Opposite to the circuit of the Eastern gates, Sok.

⁶ Where the sun retires, A. By which the sun passes, Sok. ⁷ B om.

⁸ A om. ⁹ A adds he conceals his light under the earth and the glories of his luminary.

lxxii. 2-37. 5. Four seasons: cf. xl. 6. The account of two of these seasons is found in Eth. En. lxxxii. 15-20: that of the remaining two is lost.

XIV. 1. Three hundred and sixty-five, and the quarter of a day. I have shown in my edition of the Eth. En. pp. 190-91 that the writer of chs. lxxii-lxxxii. was familiar with the solar year of 365 $\frac{1}{4}$ days, but that owing to national prejudices he refused to acknowledge it. 2. According to the Eth. En. lxxii. 5 the sun returns after sunset through the north in order to reach the east. In our text, however, the sun revolves through the fourth heaven, xi; xxx. 3, and when he rises in the east goes under the heavens and appears to men. During the night while he passes through the fourth heaven he is without light, or in the words of the text his crown is taken from him: when he is about to reappear in the east his crown, or in other words his light, is restored to him. The reason why the sun is obliged to surrender his crown in passing through the fourth heaven before God is presumably that which is given in the Apoc. Mosis (ed. Tischend. p. 19): the sun cannot shine before the Light of the Universe (ἐνώπιον τοῦ φωτὸς τῶν ὅλων). The passage in this Apocalypse appears undoubtedly to be founded on the present text. Eve is there represented as seeing the sun and moon praying for Adam before God but without their light. She thereupon asks: ποῦ ἐστὶν τὸ φῶς αὐτῶν, καὶ διὰ τί γεγόνασιν μελανοειδεῖς; καὶ λέγει αὐτῇ Σῆθ. οὐ δύνανται φαίνειν ἐνώπιον τοῦ φωτὸς take his crown and bring it to the Lord¹. 3. And the sun revolves² in his chariot *and goes without light³ *for seven complete hours in the night⁴. *And when he comes near the East⁵ *at the eighth hour of the night⁶, *the four hundred angels bring his crown and crown him⁷.

[The Creatures of the Sun; the Phoenixes and Chalkidri sang.]

XV. 1. Then sang the creatures⁸ called the Phoenixes and the Chalkidri. On this account every bird claps its wings, rejoicing at the giver of light, *and they sang a song at the command of the Lord⁹. 2. The giver of light comes to give his brightness to *the whole world¹⁰. 3. *And they showed me the calculation of the going of the sun. And the gates by which he enters and goes out are great gates, which God made for the computation of the year¹¹. 4. *On this account the sun is great¹².

¹ So B and Sok., but that the former reads four instead of four hundred. A reads but the crown of his splendour is in heaven before the Lord: and there are four hundred angels attending Him. ² Revolves, B Sok. Goes under the earth, A. ³ And rests, A. ⁴ B om.; A Sok. support text, but that Sok. omits complete. After night A adds and reaches half his course under the earth. ⁵ At the Eastern gates, B; Sok. om. ⁶ B om. ⁷ He brings forth his luminary and his shining crown, and the sun is lighted up more than fire, A. And places on it again the crown, B.

XV. ⁸ A adds of the sun; B omits VERSES 1, 2. ⁹ Singing with their voices, Sok. ¹⁰ His creation, Sok.; A adds and there will be the guards of the morning, which are the rays of the sun and the earthly sun will go out and will receive his brightness to light up all the face of the earth. ¹¹ So A and Sok. B reads this arrangement of the gates by which he enters and goes out the two angels showed me; these gates the Lord made for the computation and his yearly record of the sun. ¹² B om.; A adds its revolutions extend to twenty-eight years, and so it was from the beginning.

τῶν ὄλων, καὶ τοῦτου χάριν ἐκρύβη τὸ φῶς ἀπ' αὐτῶν. 3. Seven complete hours in the night. This is corrupt. The writer must have known that the length of the night varied with the season. In the Eth. En. a chapter (lxxii) is devoted to the explanation of the varying lengths of the day and night.

XV. 1. See xii. 1 (note). Every bird. We should expect 'all these winged creatures,' i. e. the Phoenixes and Chalkidri. Or are we to take it that the early song of birds at sunrise is here referred to? but this is unlikely.

[The Men took Enoch and placed him at the East, at the Course of the Moon.]

XVI. 1. *The other, the computation of the moon these men showed me¹; *all the goings and revolutions². *And they pointed out the gates to me³, twelve great⁴ gates extending *from the West to the East⁵, by which the moon enters *and goes out⁶ at the customary times. 2. She enters *the first gate when the sun is in the West thirty-one days exactly⁷; by the second gate thirty-one⁸ days exactly; by the third gate thirty days exactly; by the fourth gate thirty days exactly; by the fifth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the sixth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the seventh gate thirty days exactly; by the eighth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the ninth gate thirty-one⁹ days exactly; by the tenth gate thirty¹⁰ exactly; by the eleventh gate thirty-one days exactly; by the twelfth gate twenty-eight days¹¹ exactly. 3. And so by the Western gates in her revolutions, and corresponding to the number of the Eastern gates she goes, and accomplishes the year¹². 4. *And unto the sun there are three hundred and sixty-five days and a quarter

XVI. ¹ They also showed me the other arrangement, that of the moon, B. ² And all its course. And the men showed me all the movements of these two, B; A om. ³ A Sok. om. ⁴ Eternal, B. ⁵ Towards the East, B. ⁶ B om. ⁷ B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. Sok. reads the first gates (western place of the sun) 31 days to the place of the sun exactly. For 31 A reads 1. ⁸ Emended from 35 A Sok. ⁹ 35, A. ¹⁰ 31, Sok. ¹¹ 22, Sok. ¹² Sok. adds in the days.

XVI. 1. Twelve great gates. These are the same as the gates of the sun in xiii. 2-3. It is obvious that the text is here corrupt, as this account cannot possibly apply to the moon. In order to correct it we have only to read 'sun' instead of 'moon' wherever it occurs. We have thus a description of the Solar year. The numbers when added together = 365. Hence in ver. 4 we are told that a Solar year = 365½ days. Then in ver. 5 we proceed to consider the lunar year which amounts not to 365 but to 354 days, there being a difference of eleven days, or more exactly eleven and a quarter days.

of one day¹. 5. But in the lunar year there are three hundred and fifty-four days, making twelve months of twenty-nine days; and *there remain eleven days over, which belong to the solar circle of the whole year², and are *lunar epacts of the whole year³. [Thus the great circle has five hundred and thirty-two years.] 6. The fourth part (of one day) is neglected during three years and the fourth year completes it exactly. *On account of this they are omitted from the heavens during three years, and are not added to the number of the days⁴, on which account these change the seasons of the year *in two new months, to make the number complete and there are two others to diminish⁵. 7. And when she has gone through the Western gates, she returns and goes to the Eastern, with her light, *and so she goes day and night in the heavenly circles, below all the circles more quickly than

¹ So she sets by the western gates and finishes the year in 364 days that are accomplished, B. This may be the original text, or 364 may be an error for 354. B OMITTS VERSE 5. ² Eleven days of the solar circle are wanting, Sok. ³ Epacts of the lunar year, A. ⁴ She goes through the year on this account and therefore the computation is made apart from the heavens, and in the years the days are not reckoned, B. ⁵ B om.

XVI. 5. Twenty-nine days. This should be 'twenty-nine and a half days.' [Thus the great circle has 532 years.] I have bracketed these words as they have no real connexion with the context. They arose obviously from a marginal gloss. The writer in this chapter does not get beyond the Metonic cycle, whereas the great cycle of 532 years is produced by multiplying together the Metonic cycle of nineteen years, and the Solar cycle of twenty-eight years. This great cycle is called the Dionysian or Great Paschal Period. As it includes all the variations in respect of the new moons and the dominical letters, it is consequently a period in which Easter and all the movable and unmovable feasts would occur on the same day of the week and month as in the corresponding year of the preceding cycle. This cycle was first proposed by Victorius of Aquitaine, circ. 457 A.D. It is obvious that any reference to such a cycle here is an intrusion. 6. The fourth part, &c. Explanation of leap year. On which account these change the seasons of the year, &c. Hopelessly corrupt. 7. With her light. This seems to imply that her light is not borrowed from the sun as it is taught in the Eth. En. lxxiii.

the winds of the heavens, and there are spirits and creatures, and angels flying¹, with six wings to each of the angels². 8. * And seven (months) are computed to the circle of the moon during a revolution of nineteen years³.

[Of the singing of the Angels, which cannot be described.]

XVII. 1. In the middle of the heavens I saw an armed host serving the Lord with cymbals, and organs, and unceasing voice⁴. I was delighted at hearing it.

[Of the taking up of Enoch into the fifth Heaven.]

XVIII. 1. The men took * and brought⁵ me up into the fifth heaven⁶, and I saw there many hosts * not to be counted

¹ So Sok, but that it omits of the heavens and of the angels. B reads, So their circle goes as it were round the heavens and their chariot. The wind goes with it, urging its course and the flying spirits draw on the chariots. ² B adds and such is the arrangement of the moon.

³ So Sok.; and its course is in seven different directions for nineteen years, A; B om.

XVII. ⁴ A adds and noble and continuous and varied singing, which it is not possible to describe. And so wonderful and strange is the singing of these angels that it amazes every mind. Sok. adds and with noble singing.

XVIII. ⁵ A B om.

A ⁶ adds and placed me there.

Spirits . . . with six wings. The moon has its attendant six-winged spirits as the sun has its twelve-winged attendants (xii. 2). 8. This verse deals with the Metonic cycle. This cycle consists of a period of nineteen solar years, after which the new moons happen on the same days of the year. As nineteen solar years = 6,939.1860 days = 235 lunar months = nineteen lunar years and seven months, the solar and lunar years can be reconciled by intercalating seven lunar months at the close of the 3rd, 5th, 8th, 11th, 13th, 16th, and 19th years of the cycle.

XVII. An armed host. The purpose for which they are armed is given in Test. Levi 3, though in this Testament they are placed in the third heaven: ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ εἰσὶν αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν παρεμβολῶν, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης καὶ τοῦ Βελίαρ. Serving the Lord with cymbals . . . and unceasing voices. This is exactly the conception which Test. Levi 3 gives of the functions of the inhabitants of the fourth heaven: ἐν δὲ τῷ μετ' αὐτὸν εἰσὶ θρόνοι, ἔξουσία, ἐν ᾧ ὕμνοι αἰετὶ τῷ θεῷ προσφέρονται.

XVIII. 1. Fifth heaven. Our text and Test. Levi 3 differ absolutely called Grigori¹; and their appearance was like men, and their size was *greater than that of the giants². 2. And their countenances were withered, and their lips are always silent. And there was no service in *the fifth³ heaven. And I said to the men who were with me: 'Why are these men very withered, and their faces melancholy, and their lips silent, and there is no service in this heaven?' 3. And they said to me: 'These are the Grigori, who, with their prince Satanail, as to the inhabitants of the fifth heaven. According to the latter the inhabitants are οἱ ἄγγελοι οἱ φέροντες τὰς ἀποκρίσεις τοῖς ἀγγέλοις τοῦ προσώπου κυρίου. This view, however, seems limited to the Test. of Levi, whereas we find in Chag. 12^b the same view expressed as here: i.e. in נְעֻמַּי the fifth heaven are to be found 'hosts of angels praising God by night, but keeping silent by day that God may hear the praises of Israel.' The latter clause is a late Rabbinic idea. Again, in Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 11. 77, we find a fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah which supports, and in all probability is based on, our text: ἄρ' οὐχ ὁμοία ταῦτα τοῖς ὑπὸ Σοφονία λεχθεῖσι τοῦ προφήτου; καὶ ἀνέλαβέν με πνεῦμα καὶ ἀνήνεγκέν με εἰς οὐρανὸν πέμπτον καὶ ἐθεώρουν ἄγγέλους καλουμένους κυρίους . . ὑμνοῦντας θεὸν ἄρρητον ὕψιστον. This Apocalypse is extant in Thebaic in a fragmentary condition, but these fragments do not contain the passage just quoted. Grigori. These are the Watchers, the Ἐγρήγοροι, or עִירָיָה, of whom we have so full accounts in the Eth. En. vi-xvi.; xix.; lxxxvi. 3. The Grigori. These are the angels whose brethren rebelled and were confined in the second heaven. See vi. 3 (note). These Watchers rebelled against God before the angels were tempted to sin with the daughters of men. In other words, we have here the agents of the original revolt in heaven, the Satans; and their leader is naturally named Satanail. These existed as evil agencies before the fall of the angels; for in Eth. En. liv. 6 the guilt of the latter consisted in becoming subject to Satan. See Eth. En. xl. 7 (note). The myth here, however, varies somewhat from that in Eth. En. vi-xvi. The leaders in the Eth. En. vi-xvi. are not Satans, but 'watchers,' like their followers. In Eth. En. lxix, however, we have an account which harmonizes with our text. There we see that the superior angels had rebelled before the creation of Adam; that they had tempted Eve and brought about the fall of the angels in the days of Jared. Thus, in Eth. En. lxix. and here, the leaders of the angels who fell in Jared's days are Satans. This is practically the view of portions of the Talmud. See Weber, pp. 211, 243, 244. Who with their prince Satanail. Quoted in Test. Dan. 5 . . τῶν πνευμάτων τῆς πλάνης. Ἀνέγνω rejected the holy¹ Lord². 4. And *in consequence of these things³ they are kept in great darkness in the second heaven; *and of them there went three⁴ to the earth from the throne of God to the place Ermon; and they entered into dealings on the side of Mount Iermon, and they saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and took unto themselves wives. 5. And they made the earth foul with their deeds⁵. And they acted lawlessly in all times of this age, and wrought confusion, and the giants were born, and the strangely tall men, and there was much wickedness. 6. And on account of this God judged them with a mighty judgement. And they lament for their brethren, and they will be punished at the great day of the Lord. 7. And I said to the Grigori: 'I have seen your brethren and their works, and their great¹ γάρ ἐν βίβλῳ Ἐνὼχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅτι ὁ ἄρχων ὑμῶν ἐστὶν ὁ Σατανᾶς. ὑμῶν is here corrupt for αὐτῶν. The text cannot mean that all the watchers rebelled, but only that it was from the class of the watchers that the rebels proceeded. It is, of course, just possible that the writers' scheme may differ from the conception we have given above, and be as follows. The rebellious watchers, with their prince Satanail, are confined to the fifth heaven. The subordinate angels who followed them are imprisoned in the second heaven, whereas the watchers who went down to earth and sinned with women are imprisoned under the earth. This view is very attractive, but is open to more difficulties of interpretation than the one we have followed. The MSS. reading fifth in vii. 3 is indeed in its favour, but then for 'prince and' in the same verse we must read 'prince and leaders who.' The main objections to this interpretation, however, lie in xviii. 8, 9, and in vii. 3, where the prisoners of the second heaven are clearly identified with the watchers. In xxx. 1-3 Satanail with his angels is cast down from heaven. 4. Kept . . . in the second heaven: see vii. 3. Three. According to Eth. En. ix. 6 Azazel, or vi. 3, ix. 7 Semjaza: according to Jalkut Schim., Beresch 44 Assael and Semjaza. Ermon: see Eth. En. vi. 2-6 (notes). Entered into dealings on . . . Mount Iermon: Eth. En. vi. 5. 5. Eth. En. x. 8; vii. 2. 6. Eth. En. x. 4-15. They will be punished: i. e. the lustful watchers. 7. There is a confusion in this verse. In vii. Enoch has seen the rebellious watchers being tortured in the second heaven; whereas he says here that he torments¹. And I have prayed for them, but God has condemned them (to be) under the earth, till the heaven and earth are ended for ever.' 8. And I said: 'Why do ye * wait, brethren², and not serve before the face of the Lord? and perform your duties³ before the face of the Lord, and do not anger your Lord⁴ to the end.' 9. And they listened to my rebuke. And they * stood in the four orders in this⁵ heaven, and lo! as I was standing with these men, four trumpets resounded together with a loud voice, and the Grigori sang with one voice, and their voices went forth before the Lord⁶ with sadness and tenderness.

¹ B om. ² Greater than great wonders, B. Great and they were huge limbed, A. B OM. REST OF CHAPTER. ³ This, Sok.

¹ Sok. om. ² Sok. adds to the number of twenty millions. ³ Those who followed them are the prisoners who, Sok. ⁴ Who went, Sok.
⁵ Sok. adds And the wives of men continue to do evil.

[The taking up of Enoch into the sixth Heaven.]

XIX. 1. And these men took me thence and brought me to the sixth heaven, and I saw there seven bands of angels, very bright and glorious, and their faces shining more than * the rays of⁷ the sun. * They are resplendent⁷, and there is no difference * in their countenances, or their manner, or the style of their clothing⁸. 2. * And these orders⁹ arrange and study * the revolutions of the stars, and the changes

¹ Sok. adds and their great entreaties. ² Await your brethren, Sok. ³ Sok. adds and serve. ⁴ Sok. adds your God. ⁵ Spoke to the four orders in, A. ⁶ Sok. adds God.

XIX. ⁷ B om. ⁸ Of form between them nor in the fashion of their raiment, Sok. ⁹ Some of these angels, B.

has seen the lustful watchers who are punished under the earth. I have prayed for them: cf. vii. 5 (note). 8, 9. The watchers are silent out of sympathy with their brethren who are punished in the second heaven and under the earth, but at Enoch's rebuke they resume the worship they had left off. Even so their singing is still marked with sadness.

XIX. 1. The account of the sixth heaven disagrees more or less with that of Test. Levi 3, with that of Chag. 12^b, and with the colourless account in the Asc. Is. There is no difference in their countenances, &c.: Asc. Is. viii. 16 'Omnium una species et gloria aequalis,' seems to be derived from our text, as it emphasizes the differences in glory between the angelic orders in each of the first five heavens, and emphasizes no less the equality in glory of all the angels of the sixth heaven (cf. Asc. Is. viii. 5-7). 2. The heavenly bodies are under Uriel in Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii.

of the moon, and revolutions of the sun, and superintend the good or evil condition of the world¹. 3. *And they² arrange teachings, and instructions, and sweet *speaking, and³ singing, and all *kinds of glorious⁴ praise. *These are the archangels who are appointed over the angels! They hold in subjection all living things both in heaven and earth⁵. 4. And there are the angels who are over seasons and years, and the angels who are over rivers and the sea, and those who are over the fruits *of the earth, and the angels over every herb, giving all kinds of nourishment to every living thing⁶. 5. And the angels over all souls of men, who write down all their works and their lives⁷ before the face of the Lord. 6. In the midst of them are seven phoenixes and seven cherubims, and seven six-winged creatures, *being as one voice and singing with one voice⁸; and it is not possible to describe their singing, and *they rejoice before the Lord⁹ at His footstool.

[*Thence Enoch is taken into the seventh Heaven*¹⁰.]

XX. 1. And these men took me thence *and brought me¹¹

¹ The peaceful order of the world, and the revolutions of the sun, moon, and stars. ² Other heavenly angels, B. ³ And clear, A; voiced, Sok. ⁴ Things concerned with, A. ⁵ So A Sok.; but that A reads measure for hold in subjection, B om. ⁶ So A Sok.; but that A reads all those who give nourishment for giving all kinds of nourishment; B reads and grass and all things that grow. ⁷ And the angels who write down all the souls of men and all their works and their lives, A; Other angels arrange the things of all men and all living things, and write, B. ⁸ With one voice they sing in harmony, A; Each uttering words by himself, and singing by himself things in harmony, B. ⁹ The Lord rejoices with them, B.

XX. ¹⁰ Entry of Enoch into the seventh heaven, B. ¹¹ A om.

4. In Eth. En. lx. it is subordinate spirits that are over these natural objects. Cf. Eth. En. lxxxii. 13; Rev. ix. 14; xvi. 5. 5. It is Raphael in Eth. En. xx. 3. 6. Six-winged creatures: i. e. seraphim. Cf. xii. 1 (notes). Observes that both cherubim and seraphim are also in the seventh heaven. Chag. 12^b places the Sera-phim, Ophanim, and Chajjoth, and other angels of service in the seventh heaven. Test. Levi 3 in agreement with this verse represents the inhabitants of the sixth heaven as οἱ ἄγγελοι εἰσι τοῦ προσώπου κυρίου, οἱ λειτουργοῦντες.

XX. 1. With this description of the heavenly hosts cf. Is. vi; Ezek.

to the seventh heaven, and I saw there a very ¹ great light and *all the fiery hosts of great archangels, and incorporeal powers ² *and lordships, and principalities, and powers; cherubim and seraphim, thrones ¹ *and the watchfulness of many eyes. There were ten troops, a station of brightness ³, and I was afraid, and trembled *with a great terror ¹. 2. And those men *took hold of me and brought me into their midst ⁴ and said to me: 'Be of good cheer, Enoch, be not afraid.' 3. And they showed me the Lord from afar sitting on His lofty ⁵ throne ⁶. And all the heavenly hosts having approached stood ¹ on the ten ¹ steps, *according to their rank: and ¹ made ¹ Bom. ² A fiery host of great archangels of epiritual forms, A. All the fiery and bright host of the incorporeal archangels, B. ³ And the ten many-eyed bands of bright station, Sok.; Bom. After brightness A Sok. add the gloss like the followers of John. For nine (A) I have read ten with Sok. ⁴ Placed me in their midst, B. For unto their midst A reads after them. ⁵ Very lofty, Sok., B om. ⁶ A adds for it is that upon which God rests. In the tenth heaven, in the tenth heaven is God. In the Hebrew language it is called Avarat.

i; Eth. En. xiv. 9-17; lxxi. 7-9; Rev. iv. For Chag. 12^b see xix. 6 (note). But this account can well compare for grandeur with any of the above. Lordships, and principalities, and powers . . . thrones. So exactly Col. i. 16 εἶτε θρόνοι εἶτε κυριότητες εἶτε ἀρχαὶ εἶτε ἐξουσίαι. Cf. Eph. i. 21 ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος: also Rom. viii. 38; Eph. iii. 10, 15; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Eth. En. lxi. 10. Watchfulness of many eyes seems to be derived from Ezek. x. 12. These are the Ophanim, Eth. En. lxi. 10. Ten . . . brightness. These are the ten orders of angels mentioned in ver. 3. Was afraid and trembled: Eth. En. xiv. 14. 2. Be of good cheer, &c.: cf. i. 8. 3. The Lord . . . on His lofty throne: Is. vi. 1; Eth. En. xiv. 20; Rev. xix. 4. All the heavenly hosts . . . on the ten steps according to their rank.

These hosts consist of the ten troops mentioned in ver. 1, arranged in the order of their rank. According to Maimonides in the Mishne Thora S. 1; Jesode Thora C. 2, they are: Chajjoth, Ophannim, Arellim, Chashmallim, Seraphim, Mal'achim, Elohim, Bene Elohim, Kerubim, Ishim (Weber, p. 163). In the Berith menucha the list is different: Arellim, Ishim, Bene Elohim, Mal'achim, Chashmallim, Tarshishim, Shina'nim, Kerubim, Ophannim, Seraphim (Eisenmenger, ii. 374). But the nearest parallel is to be found in the nine orders of Dionysius the Areopagite, i.e. Σεραφίμ, Χερουβίμ, Θρόνοι, Κυριότητες, Δυνάμεις, Ἐξουσίαι, Ἀρχαί, Ἀρχάγγελοι, Ἀγγελοι. These are reproduced in Dante, Par. c. xxviii, where the slightly differing arrangement of Gregory the Great (Hom. xxxiv. 7) is censured.

obedience to the Lord. 4. And so they proceeded to their places in joy and mirth, and in boundless light *singing songs with low and gentle voices¹, *and gloriously serving Him².

[How the Angels placed Enoch there at the limits of the seventh Heaven, and departed from him invisibly.]

XXI. 1. They leave not *nor depart day or night³ standing before the face of the Lord, working His will⁴, cherubim and seraphim, standing round His throne. *And the six-winged creatures⁵ overshadow all⁶ His throne, singing *with a soft voice⁶ before the face of the Lord: *‘Holy, Holy, Holy: Lord God of Sabaoth! heaven and earth are full of Thy glory⁶!’ 2. When I had seen all these things, *these men said unto me: ‘Enoch, up to this time we have been ordered to accompany thee.’ And⁶ those men departed from me, and I saw them no more. And I remained alone at the extremity of the heaven⁷, and was afraid, and fell on my face, *and said within myself: ‘Woe is me! what has come upon me!’⁸ 3. And the Lord sent one of His glorious archangels⁶, Gabriel, and he said to me: ‘Be of good cheer, Enoch, *be not afraid⁹, *stand up, come with me¹⁰, and stand up before the face of the Lord for ever. 4. And I answered him, *and said¹¹: ‘Oh! Lord, my spirit has departed from me with fear *and trembling⁶! *call to me the men¹² who have brought me to this place: upon them

¹ B om. ² The glorious ones seeing Him, Sok.

XXI. ³ A om. ⁴ B adds and the whole host of. ⁵ With six wings and many eyes, A. ⁶ B om. ⁷ Seventh heaven, A. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Fear not thou these hosts, B. ¹⁰ Come unto me, B. A transposes these words after for ever. ¹¹ B om.; A adds within myself. B adds Woe is me, O Lord! ¹² I called the men, A B.

XXI. 1. Leave not nor depart day or night. This is derived from Eth. En. xiv. 23 ‘The holy ones of the holy—leave not by night nor depart.’ ‘Six-winged creatures . . . Holy, holy, holy, &c.’ Is. vi. 2, 3. 3. Be of good cheer, be not afraid. See i. 8; xx. 2; xxi. 5; Eth. En.

I have relied, and with them I would go before the face of the Lord.' 5. And Gabriel hurried me away like a leaf carried off by the wind, *and he took me¹ and set me before the face of the Lord².

XXII. 4. I fell down³ and worshipped the Lord. 5. And the Lord spake with His lips to me: 'Be of good cheer, ¹ Having taken me, Sok., A om. ² A adds 6. And I saw the eighth heaven, which is called in the Hebrew language, Muzaloth, changing in its season in dryness and moisture, with the twelve signs of the zodiac, which are above the seventh heaven. And I saw the ninth heaven, which in the Hebrew is called Kukhavim, where are the heavenly homes of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

Michael the Archangel led Enoch into the tenth heaven before the face of the Lord.

XXII. 1. In the tenth heaven Aravoth, I saw the vision of the face of the Lord, like iron burnt in the fire, and brought forth and emitting sparks, and it burns. So I saw the face of the Lord; but the face of the Lord cannot be told. It is wonderful and awful, and very terrible. 2. And who am I that I should tell of the unspeakable being of God, and His wonderful face? And it is not for me to tell of His wonderful knowledge and various utterances; and the very great thrones of the Lord not made with hands. And how many stand around Him, hosts of cherubim and seraphim. 3. And moreover their never-ceasing songs, and their unchanging beauty, and the unspeakable greatness of His beauty, who can tell?

In Sok. a duplicate, but somewhat different, version of XXII. 1-3 is given:—

I also saw the Lord face to face. And His face was very glorious, marvellous and terrible, threatening, and strange. 2. Who am I to tell of the incomprehensible existence of the Lord, and His face wonderful, and not to be spoken of: and the choir with much instruction, and loud sound, and the throne of the Lord very great, and not made with hands: and the choir standing around Him of the hosts of cherubim and seraphim!

³ B adds and could not see the Lord God.

xv. 1. 5. Cf. ver. 3. [6. This verse is clearly an interpolation. It is not found either in B or Sok. Furthermore, throughout the rest of the book only seven heavens are mentioned or implied. The term Muzaloth is the Hebrew name for the twelve signs of the Zodiac מְזָלוֹת. Kukhavim is merely a transliteration of כּוֹכָבִים. Some ground for this conception may be found in Eth. En.

xiv. 17, where the path of the stars is above the throne of God, and as the throne of God according to this book is in the seventh heaven, the signs and stars might be regarded as in the eighth or ninth.]

XXII. [1-3. Aravoth a transliteration of עֲרֵבוֹת, which according to Chagig 12^b was really the seventh heaven. The rest of ver. 1 and verses 2, 3, may in some form have belonged

Enoch, be not afraid: rise up and stand before my face for ever.' 6. And Michael, the chief captain, *lifted me up, and¹ brought me before the face of the Lord, and the Lord said to His servants making trial of them: 'Let Enoch come to stand before My face for ever!' 7. And the glorious ones made obeisance *to the Lord, and said: 'Let Enoch proceed according to Thy word²!' 8. And the Lord said to Michael: '*Go and take from Enoch his earthly robe, and anoint him with My holy³ oil, and clothe him with the raiment of My glory.' 9. And so Michael *did as the Lord spake unto him. He⁴ anointed me⁵ and clothed me, and the appearance of that oil was more than a great light, and its anointing was like excellent dew; and its fragrance like myrrh, shining like a ray of the sun. 10. *And I gazed upon myself, and I was like one of His glorious ones⁶. *And there was no difference, and fear and trembling departed from me⁷. 11. And the Lord called one of His archangels, by name Vretil⁸, who *was more wise than the other archangels, and⁹ wrote down all the doings of the Lord. 12. And the Lord said to Vretil⁸, 'Bring forth to the text. I have with some hesitation rejected them]. 6. Michael. Cf. Eth. En. lxxi. 13, 14, where Michael takes charge of Enoch. He is likewise the chief of the archangels, Eth. En. xl. 9. As being the angel set over Israel, Eth. En. xx. 5, he is naturally the chief captain. 8. This is τὸ ἔλαιον τοῦ ἑλέου of Apoc. Mosis ed. Tischend. p. 6. Holy oil. See viii. 7: Evang. Nicod. ii. 3. This oil is described in ver. 9, and its effects in ver. 10. Raiment of my glory. These are the garments of the blessed. Cf. Eth. En. lxii. 15; cviii. 12; 2 Cor. v. 3, 4; Rsv. iii. 4, 5, 18; iv. 4; vi. 11; vii. 9, 13, 14; 4 Ezra ii. 39, 45; Herin. Sim. viii. 2; Asc. Is. ix. 9. 11. Vretil. I cannot find this name anywhere else. 12. Give a read to Enoch. These words are drawn upon in Liber S. Joannis Apocryphus (Thilo, Cod. Apocr. N. T. vol. i. p. 890) 'Elavavit Henoc super firmamentum . . . et praecepit ei dari calamus . . . et sedens scripsit sexaginta septem libros.

¹ B om. and transposes verses 8-10 before 5. ² And told me to come forth, B. ³ Takes Enoch and strip from him all earthly things and anoint him with fine, B. ⁴ Stripped me of my clothes and, B. ⁵ With blessed oil, B. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ A Sok. om. ⁸ Pravuil, A; Vrevoil, Sok. ⁹ With wisdom, B.

the books from my store-places, *and give a reed to Enoch¹, *and interpret to him the books².’ *And Vretil made haste and brought me the books, fragrant with myrrh, and gave me a reed from his hand³.

[Of the Writing of Enoch how he wrote about his wonderful Goings and the heavenly Visions, and he himself wrote 366 Books.]

XXIII. 1. And he told me all the works of *the heaven and⁴ the earth and the sea, *and their goings and comings⁵, *the noise of the thunder; the sun and moon and the movement of the stars; their changings; the seasons and years; days and hours⁶; and⁷ goings of the winds; and the numbers of the angels; *the songs of the armed hosts⁸. 2. And everything relating to man, and every language of their songs, and the lives of men, and the precepts⁹ and instructions, and sweet-voiced singings, and all which it is suitable to be instructed in. 3. *And Vretil instructed me thirty days and thirty nights, and his lips never ceased speaking; and I did not cease thirty days and thirty nights writing all the remarks¹⁰. 4. And Vretil¹¹ said to me: *‘All the things which I have told thee, thou hast written down. Sit¹² down and *write all about¹³ the souls

¹ And take a reed for speedy writing and give it to Enoch, A Sok. ² A om. ³ And show him the books wonderful and fragrant with myrrh from thy hand, A; Sok. agrees with text, save that he adds wonderful before books, and adds for speedy writing after reed.

XXIII. ⁴ B om. ⁵ The movements of all the elements, B; A om. ⁶ The living things and the seasons of the year, and the course of his days and their changings, and the teaching of the commandments, B; Sok. supports text, save that for movement of the stars he reads stars and their goings. After hours Sok. adds and the coming forth of the clouds. ⁷ B omits from and goings to end of ver. 2. ⁸ The fashion of their songs, A. ⁹ Narratives, A. ¹⁰ A om.; Sok. supports text, but that for remarks he reads marks of every creature. After creature Sok. adds and when I had finished the thirty days and nights. ¹¹ Pravuil, A; Vrevoil, Sok. So also in previous verse. ¹² Lo! what things I have instructed thee in and what thou hast written: and now sit, Sok. ¹³ Write down all, Sok.

XXIII. 1. This verse would not unsuitably describe the Book of Celestial Physics in Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii. Songs of the armed hosts: see xvii.

of men, those of them which are not born, and the places prepared for them for ever. 5. For every soul was created eternally¹ before the foundation of the world.' 6. And I *wrote all out continuously² during thirty days and thirty nights, *and I copied all out accurately, and I wrote 366 books³.

¹ For eternity, Sok. ² Sat, Sok. ³ And so I ceased and I had written 360 books, B.

5. Every soul was created . . . before the foundation of the world. The Platonic doctrine of the pre-existence of the soul is here taught. We find that it had already made its way into Jewish thought in Egypt; cf. Wisdom of Solomon, viii. 19, 20 παῖς δὲ ἤμην εὐδυνής, ψυχῆς τε ἔλαχον ἀγαθῆς, μάλλον δὲ ἀγαθὸς ὢν ἦλθον εἰς σῶμα ἀμίαντον. This doctrine was accepted and further developed by Philo. According to him the whole atmosphere is filled with souls. Among these, those who are nearer the earth and are attracted by the body descend into mortal bodies (τούτων τῶν ψυχῶν αἱ μὲν κατὰσιν ἐνδεθούμεναι σώμασι θνητοῖς, ὅσαι προσγεύεσθαι καὶ φιλοσώματοι, De Somn. i. 22). When they have entered the body they are swept off by it as by a river and swallowed up in its eddies (ἐκεῖναι δὲ ὥσπερ εἰς ποταμὸν τὸ σῶμα καταβάσαι τοτὲ μὲν ὑπὸ συρμῶν δίνης βιαιοτάτης ἀρπασθεῖσαι κατεπόθησαν, De Gigant. 3). Only a few escape by obedience to a spiritual philosophy and come to share in the incorporeal and imperishable life that is with God (De Gigant. 3). But there were other souls, called demons in philosophy and angels in Scripture, who dwelling in the higher parts were never entangled by love of the earthly (μηδενὸς μὲν τῶν περιγέγων ποτὲ δρεχθεῖσαι τὸ παράπαν, De Somn. i. 22), and who reported the commands of the Father to the children, and the needs of the children to the Father (τὰς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπικελεύσεις τοῖς ἐκγόνοις καὶ τὰς τῶν ἐκγόνων χρείας τῷ πατρὶ διαγγέλλουσι, De Somn. i. 22; cf. De Gigant. 4). This doctrine of the preexistence of the soul was according to Josephus, Bell. Jud. ii. 8. 11, held by the Essenes: καὶ γὰρ ἔρρωται παρ' αὐτοῖς ἥδε ἡ δόξα, φθαρτὰ μὲν εἶναι τὰ σώματα καὶ τὴν ὕλην οὐ μόνιμον αὐτοῖς, τὰς δὲ ψυχὰς ἀθανάτους αἰεὶ διαμένειν, καὶ συμπλέκεσθαι μὲν, ἐκ τοῦ λεπτοτάτου φοιτῶσας αἰθέρος, ὥσπερ εἰρκταῖς τοῖς σώμασιν ἑνγγί τινη φυσικῇ κατασπομένης, ἐπειδὴν δὲ ἀνεθῶσι τῶν κατὰ σάρκα δεσμῶν, οἷα δὲ μακρὰς δουλείας ἀπηλλαγμέναις, τότε χαίρειν καὶ μετέρους φέρεσθαι. It became a prevailing dogma in later Judaism. All souls which were to enter human bodies existed before the creation of the world in the Garden of Eden (Tanchuma, Pikkude 3) or in the seventh heaven (Chagig 12^b) or in a certain chamber (7777) (Sifre 143^b) whence God called them forth to enter human bodies. These souls were conceived of as actually living beings. According to Bereshith rabba c. 8, God takes counsel with the souls of the righteous before He creates the earth (cf. Weber, pp. 204, 205, 217-220). See xxx. 16 (note).

[Of the great Secrets of God, which God revealed and told to Enoch, and spoke with him Face to Face.]

XXIV. 1. And the Lord called me *and said to me: 'Enoch, sit thou on My¹ left hand with Gabriel.' And I made obeisance to the Lord. 2. And the Lord spake to me: 'Enoch², *the things which thou seest at rest and in motion were completed by me³. I will tell thee *now, even⁴ from the first, what things I created from the non-existent, and what visible things from the invisible⁵. 3. Not even to My angels have I told My secrets, nor have I informed them of *their origin, nor have they understood My infinite creation⁶ which I tell thee of to-day. 4. *For before anything which is visible existed⁷, *I alone held my course among the invisible things⁸, like the sun from the east to the west, *and from the west to the east. 5. But even the sun has rest in himself, but I did not find rest, XXIV. ¹ And placed me on His, B. ² Beloved Enoch, A. ³ Thou seest the things which are now completed, A. ⁴ All, Sok. ⁵ A adds Listen Enoch and pay attention to these words, for. ⁶ Their origin nor of My infinite empire, nor have they understood the creation made by Me, A. My mysteries nor their explanations nor My boundless and inexplicable plans in creation, B. ⁷ B om. ⁸ I revealed the light: I went about in the light as one of the invisible.

XXIV. 2. From the non-existent. Here creation ex nihilo seems to be taught. In Philo, on the other hand, the world was not created, but only formed from pre-existent chaotic elements. In one passage, however, where the absolute creation of the world is taught, we have an actual and almost verbal agreement with our text—ὡς ἡλιος ἀνατείλας τὰ κεκρυμμένα τῶν σωμάτων ἐπιδείκνυται, οὕτω καὶ ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα γεννήσας οὐ μόνον εἰς τὸ ἐμφανὲς ἤγαγεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἂν πρότερον οὐκ ἦν ἐποίησεν, οὐ δημιουργοῦς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ κτίστης αὐτὸς ὦν (De Somn. i. 13). Probably, however, from the non-existent is a rendering of ἐκ τῶν μὴ ὄντων. This will harmonize with xxv. 1. Visible things from the invisible: cf. passage just quoted from Philo; also Heb. xi. 3 'The worlds have been formed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear.' These words from Hebrews do not necessarily imply creation, but can naturally be interpreted after Philo's conceptions. In Gen. i. 2 LXX we find the idea of invisible elements introduced, as it gives ἡ δὲ γῆ ἦν ἀόρατος as a rendering of what we translate with 'the earth was waste.' 3. Not even to My angels: cf. xl. 3; 1 Pet. i. 12.

because I was creating every thing¹. And I planned to lay the foundations and to make the visible creation.

[God tells Enoch how out of the lowest Darkness, there comes forth the visible and the invisible.]

XXV. 1. *And I commanded in the depths that visible things should come out of invisible. And out came Adoil very great², *and I gazed upon him. And lo! his colour was red, of great brightness³. 2. And I said unto him: "Burst asunder, Adoil⁴, and let that which comes from thee be visible." 3. And he burst asunder, and there came forth a great light⁵, and *I was in the midst of a great light, and as the light came forth from the light⁶, there came forth the great world, *revealing all the creation³, which I had purposed to make, and I saw that it was good. 4. And I made for Myself a throne, and sat upon it, and I said to the light:

¹ B om.

XXV. ² I summoned from the regions below the great Idoil to come forth who had in his belly a great stone, B. ³ B om. ⁴ A om. ⁵ Stone, B. ⁶ I was in the midst of light, and the light thus appearing out of it, Sok.; B om.

XXV. 1. Here the formation of the world from pre-existing elements is taught, as in the Book of Wisdom xi. 17 ἐξ ἀμόρφου ὕλης. Cf. also Philo, De Justitia 7 Μηνύει δὲ ἡ τοῦ Κόσμου γένεσις . . . τὰ γὰρ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι. This is in the main the teaching of the Talmud. See Weber, 193-196. Adoil. Is this from הָאֵל, the hand of God? The word does not occur elsewhere that I am aware of. In this and the two subsequent verses we have an adaptation of an Egyptian myth. 2. We have here a modification of the egg theory of the universe. See Clem. Reag. x. 17, 30. In Brugsch, Rel. u. Myth. d. alten Aegypter, p. 101, we find a very close parallel. According to the monuments: 'der erste Schöpfungsact began mit der Bildung eines Eies aus dem Urgewässer, aus dem das Tageslicht, die unmittelbare Ursache des Lebens in dem Bereiche der irdischen Welt herausbrach.' 3. There came forth a great light. This exactly agrees with the ancient Egyptian myth as described in preceding note. Cf. also Brugsch, Rel. u. Myth. pp. 160, 161 on Die Geburt des Lichtes. There came forth the great world. This should refer to the world of the heavens, as the earth is dealt with in the next chapter. 4. I made for Myself a throne. This throne was created before the world according to Bereshith rabba c. 1 as here. This idea may have found support in the LXX of Prov. viii. 27, where wisdom declares that she was with “Go forth * on high¹ and be established above My throne², and be the foundation for things on high.’ 5. And there was nothing higher than the light, and as I reclined, I saw it from My throne.

[God again calls from the Depths and there came forth Arkhas, Tazhis³, and one who is very red.]

XXVI. 1. And I summoned a second time from the depths, *and said: ‘Let the solid thing which is visible come forth from the invisible⁴.’ And Arkhas *came forth⁵ firm⁶ and heavy³ and *very red⁷. 2. And I said: ‘Be thou divided, O Arkhas, and let *that be seen which is⁸ produced from thee.’ And when he was divided, the world came forth, very dark and great, *bringing the creation of all things below⁹. 3. And I saw that it¹⁰ was good. And I said to him: ‘*Go thou down¹¹ and be thou established. *And be a foundation for things below’; and it was so. And it came forth and was established¹², and was a foundation for things below. *And there was nothing else below the darkness¹².

[How God established the Water, and surrounded it with Light, and established upon it Seven Islands.]

XXVII. 1. *And I ordered that there should be a separation between the light and the darkness, and I said: ‘Let

¹ Above My throne, Sok. ² Sok. om.

XXVI. ³ Corrupt in A, from ТАЗЕЦЬ = heaviness (Old Slav.). ⁴ I told him to come forth from the unseen into that which is fixed and visible, B; and said: ‘let the strong Arkhas come forth,’ and he came forth strong from the invisible, A. ⁵ A om. ⁶ Very firm, B. ⁷ Black, B. ⁸ The thing, A; B omits entire verse. ⁹ Bearer of the created things from all things below, A. ¹⁰ All, B. ¹¹ Come forth from below, A Sok. ¹² B om.

God at the creation when he established His throne upon the winds (ὅτε ἀφώριξεν τὸν ἑαυτοῦ θρόνον ἐπ’ ἀνέμων).

XXVI. 1. Formation, but not creation, of the earth. Arkhas may be from $\Psi^{\prime}\rho\gamma$ or even from ἀρχή.

XXVII. The title is very corrupt.

1. Separation between the light and the darkness: Gen. i. 4. I do there be a thick substance,' and it was so¹. 2. * And I spread this out and there was water, and I spread it over the darkness², below the light. 3. And thus I made firm the waters, that is, the depths, and I surrounded the waters with light, and I created seven circles and I fashioned them like crystal, moist and dry, that is to say, like glass and ice, and as for the waters, and also the other elements, I showed each of them their paths, (viz.) to the seven stars, each of them in their heaven, how they should go; and I saw that it was good. 4. And I separated between the light and the darkness; that is to say, between the waters here and there. And I said to the light: 'Let it be day³'; and to the darkness, 'Let it be night.' And the evening and the morning were the first day⁴.

XXVIII. 1. ⁵ And thus I *made firm the circles of the heavens, and caused the waters *below, which are under the heavens to be gathered into one place, and that the waves should be dried up, and it was so. 2. Out of the waves I made firm and great stones, and out of the stones I heaped together a dry substance, and I called the dry substance earth. 3. And in the midst of the earth I appointed a pit, that is to say an abyss. 4. I gathered the sea into one place, and I restrained it with a yoke. And I said to XXVII. ¹ And I ordered that they should take from the light and the darkness and I said: 'Let it be thick and covered with light,' Sok.; B om. ² So A Sok., but that A adds with light after out. B reads And having clothed (spread out?) certain things with light, I made broad and stretched out the path of the waters above the darkness. B OMITS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ³ Be thou day, Sok. ⁴ A adds as title of XXVIII, Sunday. On it God showed to Enoch all His wisdom and power: during all the seven days how He created the powers of the heaven and earth and all moving things and at last man.

XXVIII. ⁵ A and Sok. agree in this chapter. B is fragmentary and transposed, and reads: (2) And I made the great stones firm, (1) and ordered not pretend to understand what follows. 3. Seven stars: see xxx. 5. 4. Gen. i. 4, 5.

XXVIII. 1. Gen. i. 9. 2. I called the dry substance earth.

An exact rendering of Gen. i. 10. 3. This may be Sheol, or Tartarus (cf. xxix. 5), or it may be the abysses of the waters: cf. Gen. vii. 11; viii. 2; Eth. En. lxxxix. 7, 8; Jubilees ii.

the sea: 'Lo! I give thee an eternal portion and thou shalt not move from thy established position.' So I made fast the firmament and fixed it above the water. 5. This I called the first day of the creation. Then it was evening, and again morning, and it was the second day¹.

XXIX. 1. And for all the heavenly hosts I fashioned² a nature like that of fire, and My eye gazed on the very firm and hard stone. And from the brightness of My eye the lightning received its wonderful nature. 2. And fire is in the water and water in the fire, and neither is the one quenched, nor the other dried up. On this account lightning is brighter than the sun, and soft water is stronger than hard stone³. 3. And from the stone I cut the mighty fire. *And from the fire I made the ranks of the spiritual hosts, ten thousand angels⁴, *and their weapons are fiery, and the waters of the abysses to dry up, (4) and having collected into rivers the overflowings of the abysses and the seas into one place, I bound them with a yoke. I made an everlasting separation between the earth and the sea, and the waters cannot burst forth. And I made fast the firmament, and fixed it above the waters. ¹ A adds as title of the next three verses: The day is Monday, the fiery creations.

XXIX. ² B adds the sun of a great light and placed it in the heavens that it might give light upon earth. ³ So A and Sok., but that Sok. adds keener and before brighter. B omits a nature . . . hard stone. ⁴ And from stones I created the hosts of spirits, B. A supports text, but that for ten thousand it read of the ten. B adds and all the starry hosts, and the Cherubim, and the Seraphim, and the Ophannim, I cut out of fire.

2. 4. Cf. Job xxvi. 10; Ps. civ. 9; Prov. viii. 29; Jer. v. 22. Firmament: Gen. i. 7, 8. 5. This verse should be read immediately after xxix, and together with that chapter should be restored before xxviii. This is clear from the analogy of xxx. 1, 2, 7, 8. It is impossible in its present position.

XXIX. This chap. is clearly dislocated from its original position before xxviii. There is no mark of time attached to it. The work of the first day is given in xxv-xxvii; that of the second day in xxviii. 1-4; that of the third in xxx. 1. xxviii. 5, as we have already seen, must have been differently placed originally. Hence, if we recall the fact that in Jubilees ii. 2, and occasionally in patristic tradition, the creation of the angels is assigned to the first day—evidently on the ground of Job xxxviii. 7—we can restore the text to perfect harmony with itself and Jewish tradition by placing xxix, followed immediately by xxviii. 5, after xxvii.

their garment is a burning flame, and I ordered them to stand each in their ranks¹.

[Here Satanail was hurled from the Heights with his Angels.]

4. * One of these in the ranks of the Archangels, having turned away with the rank below him, entertained an impossible idea, that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. 5. And I hurled him from the heights with his angels. And he was flying in the air continually, above the abyss¹.

XXX. 1. * And so I created all the heavens, and it was the

¹ B om.

3. From the fire I made the ... angels. So Pesikta 3^a: see Weber L. d. J. 161. 4. One of these ... with the rank 'below him. This is clearly Satan. The rank below him is probably the watchers. But however we interpret the text we are beset with difficulties. There are conflicting elements in the text. See xii. and xviii. with notes: vii; xix; xxxi. 3-7 (notes). Make his throne higher than the clouds. If this is genuine we must take clouds in the sense of heavens. Satan was one of the highest angels before his fall: cf. xviii. 4. Satan and Sammael can not be distinguished in Rabbinic writings. On the attempt of Sammael to found a kingdom see Weber, 244. The following passage from the Book of Adam and Eve, I. vi. is evidently derived from our text: 'The wicked Satan ... set me at naught and sought the Godhead, so that I hurled him down from heaven.' 5. He was flying in the air continually. This view seems to have been generally received amongst the Jews. Cf. Eph. ii. 2 'The prince of the power of the air'; vi. 12; Test. Benj. 3 τοῦ ἀερίου πνεύματος τοῦ Βελίαρ: Asc. Is. iv. 2 'Berial angelus magnus res huius mundi ... descendet e firmamento suo'; vii. 9 'Et ascendimus in firmamentum, ego et ille, et ibi vidi Sammaelem eiusque potestates'; x. 29 'descendit in firmamentum ubi princeps huius mundi habitat.' Tuf. haarez, f. 9. 2 'Under the sphere of the moon, which is the last under all, is a firmament ... and there the souls of the demons are.' Cf. Eisenmenger, ii. 411. According to the Stoics, on the other hand, the abode of the blessed was under the moon. Cf. Tertull. De An. 54; Lucan ix. 5 sq. For other authorities see Meyer on Eph. ii. 2; Eisenmenger, ii. 456. It is hard to get a consistent view of the demonology of this book; it seems to be as follows: Satan, one of the archangels (xviii. 4; xxix. 4), seduced the watchers of the third day. On the third day¹ I ordered the earth to produce *great trees, such as bear fruit, and mountains², and *every sort of herb and every³ seed that is sown⁴, *and I planted Paradise, and enclosed it, and placed fiery angels armed, and so I made a renewing. 2. Then it was evening, and it was morning, being the fourth day⁵. On the fourth day⁶ I ordered that there should be great lights in the circles of the heavens. 3. In the first and highest circle I placed the star Kruno; and on the second⁷ Aphrodite; on the third

XXX. ¹ B om. In verse 1 A adds Tuesday as title before On the third day. ² All sorts of trees and high mountains, B. ³ A om. ⁴ B adds before I produced living things and prepared food for them. ⁵ Bom. ; Sok. supports text, but adds of the earth after renewing. A adds Wednesday as title of 2^{b-7}. ⁶ B OMITTS VERSES 2-7^a. ⁷ Sok. adds lower I placed.

fifth heaven into revolt, in order to establish a counter kingdom to God, xxix. 4. Therefore Satan, or the Satans (for it is the name of a class) (Weber, 244), were cast down from heaven, xxix. 5; xxxi. 4, and given the air for their habitation, xxix. 5. As for his followers, the watchers of the fifth heaven, they were cast down to the second and there kept imprisoned and tortured, vii. 3; xviii. 4. Some, however, of the Satans or Watchers went down to earth and married the daughters of men, xviii. 4. From these were born giants, xviii. 5. Thereupon these watchers were imprisoned under the earth, xviii. 6, 7, and the souls of the giants, their children, became subjects of Satan. To return to the Satans, however, when man was created, Satan envied him and wished to make another world, xxxi. 3. Out of envy he tempted Eve to her fall, xxxi. 6.

XXX. 1. Cf. Gen. i. 10, 11. Mountains. This is corrupt. We should have a reference here probably to non-fruit-bearing trees, as in Jub. ii. 7 τὰ ξύλα τὰ καρπία τε καὶ ἄκαρπα. Every seed that is sown. This phrase is found in Jubilees, ii. 7, as one of the third day creations. Paradise. Also in Jub. ii. 7, among the creations of the third day. 2. Circles of the heavens. In Philo, De Mundi Op. 38, we find seven circles as here, though with a different meaning: τὸν οὐρανὸν φασιν ἐπὶ τὰ διεζῶσθαι κύκλοις. 3. Gen. i. 14-19. In the Chronography of Joel, circ. 1200 A. D., p. 34 (ed. Bekker, 1836), the discovery of the signs of the Zodiac, the solstices and the seasons, and the naming of the planets, are assigned to Seth; but as such discoveries were anciently assigned to Enoch, and were only in later tradition ascribed to Seth, we may not unreasonably regard the mention in Joel of the five planets, Kronos, Zens, Ares, Aphrodite, Hermes, as ultimately derived from the Enoch literature. The statement in Joel is, ὁ δὲ Σὴθ πρῶτος ἐξεύρε . . . τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν . . . καὶ τοῖς ἄστροις ἐπέθηκεν ὀνόματα καὶ τοῖς πέντε πλανήταις εἰς τὸ

Ares; * on the fourth the Sun¹; on the fifth Zeus; on the sixth Hermes; on the seventh² the moon. 4. And *the lower air I adorned with the lesser stars. 5. And³ I placed the sun to give light to the day, and the moon and the stars to give light to the night; the sun that he should go *according to each sign of the Zodiac⁴; and the course of *the moon through the twelve signs of the Zodiac⁵. 6. And I fixed their names *and existence, the thunders, and the revolutions of the hours, how they take place⁶. 7. Then it was evening and the morning, the fifth day. *On the fifth day⁷ *I commanded the sea to produce⁸ fish, *and γνωρίζεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ μόνον· καὶ τὸν μὲν πρῶτον πλανήτην ἐκάλεσε Κρόνον, τὸν δὲ δεύτερον Δία, τὸν τρίτον Ἄρεα, τὸν τέταρτον Ἀφροδίτην καὶ τὸν πέμπτον Ἑρμῆν. In the mysteries of Mithras, described in Origen, Contra Celsum vi. 22, the five planets and the sun and moon are said to be connected by a heavenly ladder. From the first words of the preceding ch. we see that these heavenly bodies had some connexion with the seven heavens, as in our text. The order in which the planets and the sun and moon are mentioned in Contra Celsum differs from that given above, and is as follows: Kronos, Aphrodite, Zeus, Hermes, Ares, Selene, Helios. The five planets are first referred to by Philolaus, a Pythagorean, and later by Plato in his Timaeus, but not by their individual names (ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη καὶ πέντε ἄλλα ἀστροὶ ἐπικληνέχοντα πλανήται). These names, which are not found till we come down to the Epinomis, the work of a disciple of Plato, are enumerated as follows, each with an appellation derived from a god: τὸν τοῦ Κρόνου, τὸν τοῦ Διός, τὸν τοῦ Ἄρεος, τὴν τῆς Ἀφροδίτης, τὸν τοῦ Ἑρμοῦ. According to Archimedes (Maerob. in Somn. Scip. i. 19. 2) the order of the planets was as follows: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury, the Moon, and this order was generally adopted by Cicero (de Div. ii. 43), Manilius (i. 803, 6), Pliny, H. N. ii. 6. The five planets were known to Israel in O. T. times: Kronos as כִּיּוֹן Amos v. 26; Aphrodite as הִילָל Is. xiv. 12; Ares as נִרְנָל 2 Kings xvii. 30; Zeus as זֵבֵל Is. lxv. 11; Hermes as חֲבֹל Is. xlv. 1. 5. The Sun . . . according to each sign of the Zodiac. See ch. xiii-xiv. and Eth. En. lxxii. The moon, &c. See lvi. and Eth. En. lxxiii-lxxiv. 7. Cf. Gen. i. 20-26. Observe that most of the creations of the sixth day, Gen.

¹ A om. ² A adds the lesser. ³ And I adorned it with the lesser stars, and on the lower, A. ⁴ To every living thing, A. ⁵ The twelve months, A. ⁶ And their reverberations, and new births, and making of the hours as they go, Sok. ⁷ B om. After fifth day A adds Thursday, and after sixth day it adds Friday. ⁸ B adds and multiply.

winged fowls of all kinds¹, and all things that creep upon the earth, and four-footed things that go about the earth, and the things that fly in the air, *male and female, and every living thing breathing with life. 8. And it was evening and morning the sixth day¹. *On the sixth day¹ *I ordered My Wisdom to make man² of seven substances. (1) His flesh from the earth; (2) his blood *from the dew; (3) his eyes from the sun³; (4) his bones from the stones; (5) his thoughts from the swiftness of the angels, and the clouds; (6) his veins⁴ and hair from the grass of the earth⁵; (7) his

¹ B om. ² And when I had finished all I ordered My Wisdom to make man, B. B OMITTS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ³ From the dew and the sun (3) his eyes form the abysses of the seas, Sok. ⁴ For veins we should probably read nails. See quotation from Philo in the Commentary on this verse. ⁵ A Sok. add and from the wind—a manifest dittography.

i. 24-26, are here assigned to the fifth. 8. Ordered my Wisdom. Wisdom is here hypostatized as in Prov. viii. 30 'Then I was by him as a master workman.' In the Book of Wisdom, Wisdom is the assessor on God's throne, ix. 4; was with Him when He made the world, ix. 9; was the instrument by which all things were created, viii. 5; is the ruler and renewer of all things, viii. 1; vii. 27. Compare further this conception of Wisdom with that of the Logos of Philo, which was the instrument by which God created the world. Cf. Leg. All. iii. 31 σκιά θεοῦ δὲ ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ ἐστίν, ὥς καθάπερ ὄργανον προσχρησάμενος ἐκοσμοποιεῖ: De Cherubim 35 εὐρήσεις γὰρ αἰτίον μὲν αὐτοῦ τὸν θεόν, ὅφ' οὗ γέγονεν, ὕλην δὲ τέσσαρα στοιχεῖα, ἐξ ὧν συνεκράθη, ὄργανον δὲ λόγον θεοῦ, δι' οὗ κατεσκευάσθη. Of seven substances. The list of these substances is corrupt. See Critical Notes. It seems to have some connexion with the speculations of the Stoics (G. Sext. Math. ix. 81) and of Philo. Thus, as in our text, man's body is derived (1) from the earth, De Mundi Op. 51. Again, whilst in (4) his bones are derived from stones, in Philo, Leg. All. ii. 7, he is said at the lowest stage to have a nature in common with the stones and trees (ἡ μὲν ἔξῃς κοινὴ καὶ τῶν ἀψύχων ἐστὶ λίθων καὶ ξύλων, ἧς μετέχει καὶ τὰ ἐν ἡμῖν ἐοικότα λίθοις ὀστέα): again whilst in our text (6) his veins (p) and hair are from the grass of the earth, in Philo, Leg. All. ii. 7, he is said in the next higher stage to be allied to plant-nature, such as the nails and hair (ἡ δὲ φύσις διατείνει καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ φυτά: καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν δὲ εἰσιν ἐοικότα φυτοῖς, ὄνυχές τε καὶ τρίχες): finally, (7) agrees with Philo's doctrine: cf. De Mundi Op. 46. If we could restore the text as it stood originally the resemblance would probably be closer. Philo's view of man's nature is well summed up in De Mundi Op. 51 πᾶς ἄνθρωπος κατὰ μὲν τὴν διάνοιαν spirit from My spirit and from the wind. 9. And I gave him seven natures: hearing to his body, sight to his eyes, smell to the perception, touch to the veins, taste to the blood, the bones for endurance, sweetness for thought. 10. * I purposed a subtle thing¹: from the invisible and visible nature I made man. From both are his death and life, *and his form²; *and the word was like a deed³ *both small in a great thing⁴, and great in a small thing. 11. And I placed him upon the earth; like a second angel, in an honourable, great, and glorious way. 12. And I made him a ruler *to rule upon the earth, and to have My wisdom⁵.

¹ Lo! I purposed to say a subtle word, Sok. ² Sok. om. ³ A word is a message as it were something created, Sok. ⁴ Both in great things and in little things, A. ⁵ Upon the earth having rule by My wisdom, Sok.

φύκωται θείῳ λόγῳ, τῆς μακαρίας φύσεως . . . ἀπαύγασμα γεγονώς, κατὰ δὲ τὴν τοῦ σώματος κατασκευὴν ἅπαντι τῷ κόσμῳ· συγκρίνεται γὰρ ἐκ τῶν αὐτῶν, γῆς καὶ ὕδατος καὶ ἀέρος καὶ πυρός, ἐκάστου τῶν στοιχείων εἰσενεγκόντος τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος πρὸς ἐκπλήρωσιν αὐταρκεστάτης ὕλης, ἣν ἔδει λαβεῖν τὸν δημιουργόν, ἵνα τεχνιτεύσῃται τὴν ὁρατὴν ταύτην εἰκόνα. For the later Talmudic views cf. Weber, 202–204; Malan's Book of Adam and Eve, pp. 209–15. In the Anglo-Saxon Ritual (circ. 950), to which Dr. Murray has called my attention, man is said to be made out of eight substances: 'Octo pondera de quibus factus est Adam. Pondus limi, inde factus est caro; pondus ignis, inde rubens est sanguis et calidus; pondus salis, inde sunt salsae lacrimae; pondus roris, inde factus est sudor; pondus floris, inde est varietas oculorum; pondus nubis, inde est instabilitas mentium; pondus venti, inde est anihela frigida; pondus gratiae, inde est sensus hominis.' 9. Seven natures. Here again the text is very untrustworthy and the following words seem corrupt: body, veins, blood, whilst the clauses the bones . . . thought are quite irrelevant. Here we should possibly follow Philo, De Mundi Op. 40 τῆς ἡμετέρας ψυχῆς τὸ δίχα τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ μέρος ἐπταχῇ σχίζεται, πρὸς πέντε αἰσθήσεις καὶ τὸ φωνητήριον ὄργανον καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι τὸ γόνιμον, and thus for the corrupt clauses read the vocal organ and the generative power. Cp. Test. Napht. 2. Philo's division of man's nature is derived from the Stoics: cf. Plut. Plac. iv. 4 οἱ Στωικοὶ ἐξ ὀκτὼ μερῶν φασὶ συνιστάναι (τὴν ψυχὴν), πέντε μὲν τῶν αἰσθητικῶν, ὁρατικοῦ, ἀκουστικοῦ, ὁσφρητικοῦ, γευστικοῦ, ἀπτικοῦ, ἕκτου δὲ φωνητικοῦ, ἐβδόμου σπερματικοῦ, ὀγδόου αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ. Cf. also Plut. Plac. iv. 21. 10. Man's spiritual and material nature. 11. Like a second angel. According to the Beresh. Rab. fol. 17, Adam, when first created, reached from the earth to the firmament. In the Book of Adam and Eve, i. 10, Adam is called a 'bright angel.' 12. Gen. i. 26, 28. 13. This verse may

And there was no one like him upon the earth of all My creations. 13. And I gave him a name from the four substances: the East, the West, *the North, and the South¹. 14. And I appointed for him four special stars, and I gave him the name Adam. 15. *And I gave him his will², and I showed him the two ways, the light and the either be the source of or may be derived from the Sibylline Oracles, iii. 24-26

¹ A transposes.² A om.

Αὐτὸς δὲ θεὸς ἐστ' ὁ πλάσας τετραγράμματος Ἀδάμ,

Τὸν πρῶτον πλάσθέντα, καὶ οὐνομα
πληρώσαντα

Ἀντολίην τε δύσιν τε μεσημβρίην τε καὶ ἄρκτον.

The third line is used frequently, though with a different application, in the Oracles, i. c. ii. 195; viii. 321; xi. 3. It will be observed that this arrangement gives the initials Adna in the wrong order. This etymology is next found in the anonymous writing De Montibus Sina et Sion, 4, formerly ascribed to Cyprian: 'Nomen accepit a Deo. Hebraicum Adam in Latino interpretat "terra caro facta," eo quod ex quattuor cardinibus orbis terrarum pugno comprehendit, sicut scriptum est: "palmo mensus sum caelum et pugno comprehendi terram et confinxi hominem ex omni limo terrae; ad imaginem Dei feci illum." Oportuit illum ex his quattuor cardinibus orbis terrae nomen in se portare Adam; invenimus in Scripturis, per singulos cardines orbis terrae esse a conditore mundi quattuor stellas constitutas in singulis cardinibus. Prima stella orientalis dicitur anatole, secunda occidentalis dysis, tertia stella aquilonis arctus, quarta stella meridiana dicitur mesembria. Ex nominibus stellarum numero quattuor de singulis stellarum nominibus tolle singulas litteras principales, de stella anatole α, de stella dysis δ, de stella arctos α, de stella mesembria μ; in his quattuor litteris cardinalibus habes nomen αδαμ.' This etymology is given with approval by Bede, In Genesim Expositio iv. 'Hae quattuor literae nominis Adam propria habent nomina in partium nominibus, id est anatole, disis, arctus, mesembria; id est oriens occidens, septentrio, meridies. Et haec proprietas significat dominatum Adam in quattuor supradictis partibus mundi.' It is found also in the Chronikon of Glycas (circ. 1150), p. 143: κατὰ τοῦτο δὲ τῷ τοῦ Ἀδάμ ὀνόματι προσηγόρευσεν αὐτὸν . . . καὶ ὅρα τὰ τοῦ τοιοῦτον ὀνόματος γράμματα· τὰ τέσσαρα γὰρ ὑπεμφαίνονται κλίματα· ἄλφα ἀνατολή, δέλτα δύσις, ἄλφα ἄρκτος, μὺ μεσημβρία. See Jubilees iii. 28 (notes); Targ.-Jon. on Gen. ii. 7.

14. Four special stars. These stars are named from the four quarters of the earth, and Adam's name is formed from their initial letters. See citation from De Montibus Sina et Sion, which seems to be derived from our text. Stars may here mean 'angels.' According to the Jalk. Rub. fol. 13; Jalk. Shim. fol. 4 (see Book of Adam and Eve, p. 215) certain ministering angels were appointed to wait on Adam. 15. I gave him his will: cf. Tanchuma Pikkude 3 (quoted by Weber, p. 208), 'God does not determine beforehand whether a man shall be righteous or wicked, but puts this in the hands of the man darkness. And I said unto him: 'This is good and this is evil'; that I should know whether he has love for Me or hate: that he should appear in his race as loving Me. 16. I knew his nature, he did not know his nature. Therefore his ignorance is *a woe to him that he should sin, and only.' In the text free-will is conceded to man, but this is prejudicially affected by his ignorance (ver. 16): cf. Ecclus. xv. 14, 15 αὐτὸς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐποίησεν ἄνθρωπον καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτὸν ἐν χειρὶ διαβουλίου αὐτοῦ. ἐὰν θέλῃς συντηρήσεις ἐντολὰς καὶ πίστιν ποιῆσαι εὐδοκίας. On the question generally see Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 14; Antt. xiii. 5. 9; xviii. 1. 3; Psalms of Solomon, ed. by Ryle and James, pp. 95, 96. 15. The two ways, the light and the darkness. This popular figure of the Two Ways was suggested by Jer. xxi. 8 'Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death'; by Deut. xxx. 15 'I have set before thee this day life and good and death and evil'; Ecclus. xv. 17 ἐναντι ἀνθρώπων ἡ ζωὴ καὶ ὁ θάνατος, καὶ ὁ ἐὰν εὐδοκήσῃ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ: xvii. 6 καὶ ἀγαθὰ καὶ κακὰ ὑπέδειξεν αὐτοῖς. For parallel N. T. expressions cf. Mt. vii. 13, 14; 2 Pet. ii. 2. Of the two great post-apostolic descriptions of the Two Ways, in the Didachè and in the Ep. of Barnabas, that of the latter presents the nearest parallel to our text: chap. xviii. 1 ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶν διδασχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, ἥ τε τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἡ τοῦ σκότους. In the Didachè i. 1 we have ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶ, μία τῆς ζωῆς καὶ μία τοῦ θανάτου: cf. Test. Asher 1 δύο ὁδοὶς ἔδωκεν ὁ θεὸς τοῖς υἱοῖς ἀνθρώπων . . . ὁδοὶ δύο, καλοῦ καὶ κακοῦ: Sibyll. Or. viii. 399, 400 αὐτὸς ὁδοὺς προέθηκε δύο, ζωῆς θανάτου τε Καὶ γνώμην προέθηκε ἀγαθὴν ζωὴν προελίσθαι: cf. also Pastor Hermæ

Mand. vi. 1, 2; Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 5; Apost. Church Order, iv; Apost. Constitutions, vii. 1; Clem. Homilies v. 7. I said unto him: 'This is good and this is evil,' &c. This does not harmonize with the account in Gen., where the knowledge of good and evil follows on eating the forbidden fruit. That I should know whether he has love for Me or hate. Deut. xiii. 3 'Your God proveth you to know whether ye love the Lord your God.' 16. Ignorance is a woe to him that he should sin. This ignorance, as we see from the preceding verse, is not first and directly an ignorance of moral distinctions, but of his nature with its good and evil impulses (יצר הרע and יצר הטוב). Ignorance is thus regarded here as an evil in itself. This is probably the result of Platonic thought, which had gained great influence over Hellenistic Judaism, and the idea of the text seems related, however distantly, to that ethical system which may be summed up in the words πᾶς δ' ἄδικος οὐχ ἐκὼν ἄδικος (Plato, Legg. 731 c): οὐδένα ἀνθρώπων ἐκόντα ἑταμαρτάνειν (Prot. 345 D): κακὸς μὲν γὰρ ἐκὼν οὐδεὶς (Tim. 86 D). See also Legg. 734 B; Rep. ix. 589 c; Hipp. Maj. 296 c. Herein it is taught that no man willfully chooses evil in preference to good; but in every act of moral judgement the determining motive is to be found in the real or seeming preponderance of good in the course adopted: and that, should this course

I appointed death on account of his sin¹. 17. And²
I caused him to sleep, and he slumbered. And I took from ¹ Worse than sinning, and for sin there is nothing else but death, Sok. ² Sok. adds I cast upon him a shadow and.

be the worse one, the error of judgment is due either to physical incapacities or faulty education, or to a combination of both. This view of sin as an involuntary affection of the soul follows logically from another Platonic principle already enunciated by our author (see xxiii. 5, note). This principle is the pre-existence of the soul. The soul, as such, according to Platonic teaching, is wholly good. Evil, therefore, cannot arise from its voluntary preferences, but from its limitations, i. e. from its physical and moral environment, from its relation to the body and from wrong education. In the Book of Wisdom this view is widely diverged from. There the body is not held to be irredeemably evil, but souls are already good and bad on their entrance into this life (viii. 19, 20). In Philo, on the other hand, there is in the main a return to the Platonic and Stoic doctrine. The body is irredeemably evil; it is in fact the tomb of the soul (σῶμα = σῆμα); and only the sensuously-inclined souls are incorporated with bodies (see above, xxiii. 5, note). The views adopted by our author on these and kindred points stand in some degree in a closer relation to the Platonic principles than do those of Philo or the author of the Book of Wisdom. Thus he held: (1) That the soul was created originally good. (2) That it was not predetermined either to good or ill by God, but left to mould its own destiny (see xxx. 15). (3) That its incorporation in a body, however, with its necessary limitations served to bias its preferences in the direction of evil. (4) That faithful souls will hereafter live as blessed incorporeal spirits, or at all events clothed only in God's glory (xxii. 7); for there is no resurrection of the body. Death on account of his sin. So Ecclus. xxv. 24 ἀπὸ γυναικὸς ἀρχὴ ἁμαρτίας, καὶ δι' αὐτὴν ἀποθνήσκουσιν πάντες; for 'man was created exactly like the angels,' Eth. En. lxix. 11, righteous and immortal, but death came through sin, Book of Wisdom, ii. 23, 24; Eth. En. xcvi. 4. The same teaching is found in the Talmud: see Weber, 208, 214, 239. This doctrine of man's conditional immortality and of death entering the world through sin does not belong to O.T. literature; for Gen. ii. 17, when studied in its context, implies nothing more than a premature death; for the law of man's being is enunciated in Gen. iii. 19 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,' and his expulsion from Eden was due first and principally to the need of guarding against his eating of the tree of life and living for ever. Furthermore, even in Ecclus., where the idea of death as brought about by sin is first enunciated, the doctrine appears in complete isolation and in open contradiction to the main statements and tendencies of the book; for it elsewhere teaches that man's mortality is the law from everlasting (ὅ γὰρ διαθήκη ἀπ' αἰῶνος Ecclus. xiv. 17): and that being formed from earth unto earth must he return, xvii. 1, 2; xl. 11. Nor again is this doctrine a controlling principle in the system him a rib¹, and I made him a wife. 18. And by his wife death came, and I received his last word. And I called her by a name, the mother; that is Eve.

[God gives Paradise to Adam, and gives him Knowledge, so as to see the Heavens open, and that he should see the Angels singing a Song of Triumph.]

XXXI. 1. Adam had a life on earth², . . . and I made a garden in Eden in the East, and (I ordained) that he should observe the law and keep *the instruction³. 2. I made for him the heavens open that he should perceive the angels singing the song of triumph. And there was light *without any⁴ darkness continually in Paradise. 3. And the devil took thought, as if wishing to make another world, because things were subservient to Adam on earth, to rule it and have lordship over it. 4. The devil is to be the evil spirit of the lowest places⁵; *he became Satan, after he left the heavens. His name was formerly Satanail⁶. 5. And then, *though he became different from the angels in nature, he did not change his understanding of just and sinful

¹ Sok. adds as he slept.

XXXI. ² There is evidently a lacuna here. ³ It, Sok. B omits ENTIRE CHAPTER. ⁴ That never knew, Sok. ⁵ A adds as he wrought devilish things. ⁶ As flying from the heavens he became Satan, since his name was Satanail, Sok.

of the writers of the Book of Wisdom. When, however, we come down to N. T. times we find it the current view in the Pauline Epistles: cf. Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 21; 2 Cor. xi. 3. On various views on sin and death and their causes see Eth. En. vi-viii; x. 8; xxxii. 6; lxix. 6, 11; xcvi. 4, with notes. 18. By his wife death came: cf. Ecclus. xxv. 23; 1 Tim. ii. 14. See preceding note. I received his last word. Corrupt.

XXXI. 2. This verse is almost quoted in the Book of Adam and Eve I. viii. 'When we dwelt in the garden . . . we saw the angels that sang praises in heaven.' According to S. Ephrem, i. 139, Adam and Eve lost the angelic vision on their fall (Malan). Philo, Quaest. xxxii. in Gen., believes 'oculis illos praeditos esse quibus potuerunt etiam eas quae in coelo sunt.' For the continual light in Paradise see Book of Adam and Eve, I. xii; xiii; xiv. 3. On the envy of Satan see Wisdom, ii. 24; Joseph. Antt. i. 1. 4; Weber, 211, 244. 4. See notes on xviii. 3 and xxix. 4.

thoughts¹. He understood the judgement upon him, and the former sin which he had sinned. 6. And on account of this, he conceived designs against Adam; in such a manner he entered² and deceived Eve. But he did not touch Adam. 7. *But I cursed him for (his) ignorance³: but those I previously blessed, them I did not curse⁴, 8. nor man did I curse, nor the earth, nor any other things created, but the evil fruit of man, and then his works.

[On account of the Sin of Adam, God sends him to the Earth, 'From which I took thee,' but He does not wish to destroy him in the Life to come.]

XXXII. 1. I said to him: 'Earth thou art, and to earth also from whence I took thee shalt thou return. I will not destroy thee, but will send thee whence I took thee. Then I can also take thee in My second coming'; and I have blessed all My creation, visible and invisible⁵. 2. And I blessed the seventh day, *which is the Sabbath⁶, for in it I rested from all My labours.

[God shows Enoch the Duration of this World, 7000 Years, and the eighth Thousand is the End. (There will be) no Years, no Months, no Weeks, no Days.]

XXXIII. 1. Then also I established the eighth day. Let ¹ Though he was changed from the angels, he did not change his nature, but he had thought, as is the mind of just men and sinners, Sok. ² Sok. adds into Paradise. ³ Sok. om. ⁴ Sok. adds and those whom before I had not blessed, them also I did not curse.

XXXII. ⁵ A adds (against B Sok.) And Adam was five and a half hours in Paradise. B omits entire chapter. ⁶ Sok. om.

6. See xxx. 18, note; Weber, 211, 244.

7. Cursed him for (his) ignorance. This ought to refer to the Serpent or to Satan.

XXXII. 1. My second coming. God's coming to judge the earth, to bless His people, and to punish their enemies. This is called καρὸς ἐπισκοπῆς and ἡμέρα διαγνώσεως in the Book of Wisdom, iii. 7, 18. It is referred to again in xlii. 5 of our text. God's first coming to the earth was for the sake of Adam and to bless all that He had made, lviii. 1.

XXXIII. 1, 2. From the fact that Adam did not live to be 1000 years the eighth be the first * after My work¹, and let * the days² be after the fashion of seven thousand. 2. * Let there be at the beginning of the eighth thousand a time when there is no computation, and no end; neither years, nor months, nor weeks, nor days, nor hours³. 3. And now Enoch, what XXXIII. ¹ Of my rest, Sok. B OMITS VERSES 1, 2. ² A om. ³ And let the eighth day be for a beginning in the likeness of eight thousand. So concerning the first day of My rest, and also the eighth day of My rest, let them return continually, Sok. Margin of Sok.'s MS. reads: the beginning of unrighteousness, the time without end, neither years, nor months, nor weeks, nor days, nor hours.

old, the author of the Book of Jubilees, iv. 30, concludes that the words of Gen. ii. 17 'In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die' were actually fulfilled. It is hence obvious that already before the Christian era 1000 years had come to be regarded as one world-day. To arrive at the conception of a world-week of 7000 years—6000 years from the creation to the judgement, followed by 1000 years, or a millennium of blessedness and rest—it was necessary to proceed but one step further, and this step we find was taken by the author of our text. In Irenaeus, moreover, Contra Haer. v. 28. 3 this reasoning is given explicitly: ὅσαι . . . ἡμέραι ἐγένετο ὁ κόσμος, τοσαύταις χιλιοντάσι συντελείται. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο φησιν ἡ γραφή. Καὶ συνετέλεσεν ὁ θεὸς τῇ ἡμέρᾳ 5' τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἃ ἐποίησε, καὶ κατέπαυσεν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ 6' ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ. τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ τῶν προγεγονότων διήγησις καὶ τῶν ἐσομένων προφητεία· ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα κυρίου ὡς α' ἔτη. ἐν ἑξ ὧν ἡμέραις συντελέσεται τὰ γεγονότα. φανερόν οὖν ὅτι ἡ συντέλεια αὐτῶν τὸ 5 ἔτος ἐστί. Clemens Alex. Strom. iv. 25 refers to this conception—possibly to our text. It is not improbable that the statements of Cedrenus on this head are drawn from our text. Thus on p. 9 he writes: τούτου χάριν ἡλόγηθη καὶ αὕτη (ἡ ἡμέρα) ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἡγάσθη καὶ σάββατον ὡς καταπαύσιμος προσηγορεύθη, καὶ ὡς τύπος τῆς ἑβδόμης χιλιοετηρίδος καὶ τῶν ἀμαρτωλῶν συντελείας, ὡς Ἰώσηπος μαρτυρεῖ καὶ ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις ἣν καὶ Μωσέως εἶναι φασὶν τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. It is, we repeat, not improbable that our text is the original source of Cedrenus' statements, inasmuch as nothing of the kind is found either in Josephus or the Book of Jubilees, from which he professes to derive them. Syncellus, on whom Cedrenus is largely dependent, is frequently wrong in his references in the case of Apocalyptic literature. A most interesting expansion and an adaptation of the text to Christian conceptions are to be found in Augustin, De Civ. xxii. 30. 5 'Ipse etiam numerus aetatum, veluti dierum, si secundum eos articulos temporis computetur qui in Scripturis videntur expressi, iste Sabbatismus evidentius apparebit, quoniam septimus invenitur: ut prima aetas tanquam dies primus sit ab Adam usque ad diluvium, secunda inde usque ad Abraham . . . ab Abraham usque ad David una, altera inde usque ad transmigrationem in Babyloniam, tertia inde usque ad Christi carnalem nativitatem. Fiunt itaque omnes quinque. Sexta things I have told thee, *and what thou hast understood, and what heavenly things thou hast seen¹, and what thou hast seen upon the earth, and what *thou hast² written in books, by My wisdom all these things I devised *so as to create them³, and I made them from the highest foundation to the lowest, *and to the end¹. 4. And there is no counsellor⁴ *nor inheritor of My works¹. I am the eternal One, and the One not made with hands: *My thought is without change, My wisdom is My counsellor⁵ and My word is reality; and My eyes see all things, *if I look to all things³ they *stand fast⁶. If I turn away My face, all are in need of Me. 5. And now pay attention, Enoch, and know thou who is speaking to thee, and do thou take the books which thou thyself hast written. 6. And I give thee *Samuil and Raguil⁷ who brought thee *to Me³. And go *with them⁸ upon the earth, and tell thy sons what things I have said to nunc agitur . . . post hanc tanquam in die septimo requiescet Deus, cum eundem septimum diem, quod nos erimus, in se ipso Deo faciet requiescere. . . . Haec tamen septima erit Sabbatum nostrum, cuius finis non erit vespera, sed dominicus dies velut octavus aeternus. . . . Ecce quod erit in fine sine fine.' For other speculations in reference to the world-week see Evang. Nicodemi, ii. 12; Book of Adam and Eve, I. iii. A time when there is no computation . . . neither years nor months, &c. Sibyll. Or. viii. 424-427 may have been influenced by our text where it speaks of the eternity of blessedness:

¹ B om. ² I have, A. ³ A om. ⁴ Lamp, B. ⁵ My thought is a lamp, B. ⁶ Stand and tremble with fear, A Sok. ⁷ Semil and Basuil, B; B adds and him. ⁸ B Sok. om.

Οὐκ ἔτι λοιπὸν ἐρεῖς λυπούμενος "αὔριον ἔσται," Οὐκ "ἐχθὲς γέγονεν" οὐκ ἡματα πολ-λὰ μερίμνης,

Οὐκ ἔαρ, οὐ χειμῶν, οὐτ' ἄρ θέρος, οὐ μετόπωρον,
Οὐ δύσεις ἀντολή· ποιήσω γὰρ μακρὸν ἡμαρ.

3. I made them from the highest foundation to the lowest: cf. Ecclus. xviii. 1 ὁ ζῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα ἔκτισε τὰ πάντα κοινῇ, where κοινῇ is a rendering of יְחִיד. 4. My thought is without change. Num. xxiii. 19; 1 Sam. xv. 29; Ezek. xxiv. 14. My wisdom is My counsellor. See xxx. 8 (note). Cf. Ecclus. xlii. 22 καὶ οὐ προσεδέθη οὐδενὸς συμβούλου. My word is reality. So Eth. En. xiv. 22 (Gk.) πᾶς λόγος αὐτοῦ ἔργον. Cf. Ps. xxxiii. 9; Ecclus. xlii. 15 ἐν λόγοις κυρίου τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. My eyes see all things: cf. Ecclus. xxxix. 19. If I turn away My face, &c. Ps. civ. 29 'Thou hidest Thy face, they are thee, and what thou hast seen from the lowest heaven up to My throne. 7. For I have created all the hosts, and all the powers, and there is none that opposes Me, or is disobedient to Me. For all are obedient to My sole power, and labour for My rule alone. 8. Give¹ them the works written out by thee, *and they shall read them, and know Me to be the Creator of all; and shall understand that there is no other God beside Me². 9. *They shall distribute the books of thy writing to their children's children³, and from generation to generation, and from nation to nation. 10. *And I will give thee, Enoch, My messenger, the great captain Michael, for thy writings and for the writings of thy fathers, Adam, Seth, Enos, Kainan, Malaleel, and Jared, thy father⁴. 11. *And I shall not require them till the last age, for I have instructed My two angels, Ariukh and Pariukh, whom I have put upon the earth as their guardians. 12. And I have ordered them in time to guard them that the account of what I shall do in thy family may not be lost in the deluge to come⁵.

¹ I will give, A.

² B om.

³ Let the children give them to the children, B. ⁴ As being the messenger Enoch of my captain Michael. Because that thy writings and the writings of thy fathers, Adam and Sit, B.

⁵ (Because these) will not be required till the last age, I have ordered my angels, Oriokh and Mariokh, to give orders to guard in season the writings which I have placed upon the earth, and that they should guard the writings of thy fathers, so that what I have wrought in thy family may not be lost, B; A om. In the text I have followed Sok., but that for to punish them I have read to guard them with B.

troubled.' 6. Cf. Eth. En. lxxxi. 5, 6. Samuil. This is either from שָׁמַע אֱלֹהִים = heard of God, 1 Sam. i. 20, or from שָׁמַע and אֱלֹהִים = name of God. Raguil is a transliteration of רַעֲוִיאל = friend of God. 9. Cf. xlvii. 2, 3; xlviii. 7-9; liv; lxxv. 5; Eth. En. lxxxii. 1, 2, where, exactly as here, the books are to be transmitted straightway to the generations of the world, whereas in i. 2; xciii. 10; civ. 12 the method and times of the disclosure of the books are different. Though the writings are committed to the keeping of men, they are under the guardianship of special angels until the time for their complete disclosure and understanding has come. See verses 11, 12. 10. Michael was the guardian angel of Israel: Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1. See Eth. En. ix. 1; x. 11; xx. 5 (note); xl. 4, &c.; Weber, 165. 11. Till the last age. At last the time for the due comprehension of these books will arrive: see ver. 9, note; xxxv. 2, 3; (liv); Eth. En. xciii. 10; civ. 12. Ariukh. This proper

[God accuses the Idolators; the Workers of Iniquity, such as Sodom, and on this account He brings the Deluge upon them.]

XXXIV. 1. * For I know the wickedness of men that they will not bear the yoke which I have put upon them, nor sow the seeds which I have given them, but will cast off My yoke and accept another, and sow vain seeds and bow to vain gods, and deny Me the only God¹. 2. And they will fill all the world with * wickedness and iniquity, and foul impurities with one another, sodomy and all other impure practices, which it is foul to speak about². 3. And on this account I will bring a deluge upon the earth * and I will destroy all³, and⁴ the earth shall be destroyed in great corruption.

[God leaves one Just Man from the Family of Enoch, with all his House, which pleased God according to His Will.]

XXXV. 1. And I will leave a righteous man * of thy race⁵, with all his house who shall act according to My will. From XXXIV. ¹ Sok. supports text but that it omits nor sow . . . given them. A reads: They turned from My law and My yoke and raised up worthless races such as feared not God nor worshipped Me, but began to bow before vain gods, and denied Me, the only God. ² Unjust deeds and harlotries and services of idols, B; Sok. adds and evil service. ³ B Sok. omit. ⁴ A adds all.

XXXV. ⁵ A B om.

name is found in Gen. xiv. 1, 9; Dan. ii. 14. The derivation is doubtful, being êri-aku = servant of the moon-god (Delitzsch), or a compound from 𐤀𐤊𐤍: hence a lionlike man (Gesenius).

XXXIV. 1. Cast off My yoke: cf. for phrase xlviii. 9; Eccus. xxviii. 19, 20; Matt. xi. 29. Sow vain seeds. This is obscure. The words seem to be metaphorical and not to refer to Deut. xxii. 9. Deny, &c.: cf. Josh. xxiv. 27. 2. It is this verse that is referred to in Test. Napht. 4, though it is there somewhat differently applied: ἀνέγων ἐν γραφῇ ἀγία Ἐνώχ, ὅτι καί γε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀποστήσεσθε ἀπὸ κυρίου, πορευόμενοι κατὰ πᾶσαν πονηρίαν ἔθνων, καὶ ποιήσετε κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν Σοδόμων. 3. The words immediately subsequent to those just quoted from Test. Napht. seem to be in part derived from this verse: καὶ ἐπάξει ὑμῖν κύριος αἰχμαλωσίαν . . . ἕως ἂν ἀναλώσῃ κύριος πάντας ὑμᾶς is simply an adaptation of I will bring a deluge upon the earth, and I will destroy all.

XXXV. 1. Righteous man, i. e.

their seed *after some time¹ will be raised up a numerous² generation, but *of these, many will be¹ very insatiable. 2. Then on the extinction of that family, I will show them the books of thy writings, and of thy fathers, and the guardians of them on earth will show them to the men who are true, *and please Me, who do not take My name in vain¹. 3. And they shall tell to another³ generation, and these *having read them¹, shall be glorified at last more than before.

[God ordered Enoch to live on the Earth thirty Days, so as to teach his Sons, and his Sons' Sons. After thirty Days he was thus taken up into Heaven.]

XXXVI. 1. And now, Enoch, I give thee a period⁴ of thirty days to work in thy house. And tell thou thy sons⁵, *and all thy household before Me; that they may listen to what is spoken to them by thee⁶; that they read and understand, how there is no other God beside Me; *and let them always keep My commandments, and begin to read and understand the books written out by thee⁶. 2. And after thirty days, I will send My angels⁷ for thee, and they⁸ shall take thee from the earth, and from thy sons, *according to My will⁹.

[Here God summons an Angel.]

[XXXVII. 1. And God called one of His greatest angels,

¹ B om. ² Another, Sok. ³ That, B.

XXXVI. ⁴ Sok. adds of preparation. ⁵ B adds all that thou guardest in thy heart. ⁶ B om. ⁷ Angel, A Sok. ⁸ He, A Sok. ⁹ To Me, A Sok.

Noah. 2. On the extinction of that family. This seems to refer to the destruction of the wicked during the period of the sword. About the same time the books of Enoch were to be given to the righteous. See for the same connexion of ideas Eth. En. xciii. 9, 10; xci. 12. The guardians. See xxxiii. 9, 11 (notes). 3. The period of the sword and the disclosure of Enoch's books introduces the Messianic age.

XXXVI. 1. In Eth. En. lxxx. 6 the period is one year. Read and understand, &c.: cf. Eth. En. lxxxii. 1-3. 2. Cf. Eth. En. lxxx. 6.

XXXVII. This chapter, which *terrible and awful¹, and placed him by me, *and the appearance of that angel was like² snow, and his hands were like ice; *he had a very cold appearance³, and my face was chilled because I could not endure *the fear of the Lord⁴; *just as it is not possible to⁵ endure the mighty fire and heat of the sun, and the frost of the air. 2. And the Lord said to me, ' Enoch, if thy face is not chill here, no man can look upon thy face⁶.'

[Mathusal had Hope, and awaited his Father Enoch by his Bed, Day and Night.]

XXXVIII. 1⁷. And the Lord said to those men who first took me: 'Take Enoch with you to the earth, and wait for him till the appointed day.' 2. And at night they placed me upon my bed, and Mathusal, expecting my coming by day and by night, was a guard at my bed. 3. And he was terrified when he heard my coming, and I gave him directions that all my household should come, that I might tell them everything.

[The mournful Admonition of Enoch to his Sons, with Weeping and great Sorrow, speaking to them⁸.]

XXXIX. 1. *Listen, my children, what things are according to the will of the Lord. I am sent to-day to you to tell you from the lips of the Lord, what was and what is happening now, and what will be before the day of XXXVII. ¹ In a voice like thunder, B. ² In appearance he was white as, A. ³ In appearance having great cold, Sok.; Bom. ⁴ The great terror and awe, B. ⁵ For I could not, A; B omits just as . . . frost of the air. ⁶ B om.

XXXVIII. ⁷ B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER.

XXXIX. ⁸ The Instructions given by Enoch to his Sons, B.

is found in all the MSS., is read in its present position in A Sok., but after xxxix in B. I have bracketed it as it seems irrelevant to the entire text. XXXVIII. 1. Cf. xxxvi. 2. Cf. i. 2-4. 3. Cf. Eth. En. xci. 1.

judgement. 2. Hear, my children, for I do not speak to you to-day from my lips, but from the lips of the Lord who has sent me to you. For you hear¹ *the words of my lips, a mortal man like yourselves². 3. *I have seen the face of the Lord as it were iron that is heated in the fire, and when brought out sends forth sparks and burns. 4. Look at the eyes of me³, *a man laden with a sign for you⁴. *I have seen the eyes of the Lord shining like a ray of the sun and striking with terror human eyes. 5. You, my children, see the right hand of a man⁵ *made like yourselves⁶ *assisting you. I have seen the right hand of the Lord assisting me, and filling the heavens. 6. You see the *compass of my actions, like to your own⁶. I have seen the measureless and harmonious⁷ form of the Lord. To Him there is no end. 7. You therefore hear the words of my lips, but I have heard the words of the Lord, like great thunder, with continual agitation of the clouds. 8. And now, *my children⁸, listen to the⁸ discourses *of your earthly father⁸. It is terrible and awful to stand before the face of an earthly prince—*terrible and very awful⁸ because the will of the prince is death and the will of the prince is life⁹; how much more is it terrible and awful to stand before the face of the *Lord of lords, and of the earthly¹⁰ and the heavenly hosts. Who can endure this never-ending terror?

¹ 1. Hear, my children, my beloved ones, the admonition of your father: how according to the will of God, I am sent to you now. What exists and what was, and what is happening now, and what will be before the day of judgement, I do not now tell you from my own lips, but from the lips of the Lord; for the Lord sent me to you. 2. And do you therefore hear, A. I was sent of late to tell you from the lips of the Lord what things are, and what shall be before the day of judgement. And now, my children, I do not speak to you from my own lips, but from the lips of the Lord, B. ² B om.; Sok. adds I have heard from the fiery lips of the Lord: for the lips of the Lord are like a fiery furnace, and his angels [winds] are a flame of fire going forth. You, my children, as that of a man made like yourselves, but. ³ B om. ⁴ A man in his marks just like you, Sok.; B om. ⁵ A B om. ⁶ So A Sok., but that for actions Sok. reads body; B om. ⁷ Incomparable, B. B transposes 6^b after 7. ⁸ My, B. ⁹ A om.; B adds or great terrors, and omits the rest of the verse. ¹⁰ Heavenly Ruler, the Lord of the living and the dead, A.

[Enoch instructs faithfully his Children about all Things from the Mouth of the Lord; how he saw, and heard and wrote them down.]

XL. 1. And now, my children, I know all things¹ from the lips of the Lord; for² my eyes have seen from the beginning to the end³. 2. I know all things and have written all things in the books, both the heavens and the end of them, and their fulness, and all the hosts, and I have measured their goings, and written down the stars and their innumerable quantity. 3. What man has seen their alternations and their goings? Not even the angels know their number; I have written down the names of all. 4. And I have measured the circle of the sun, and I have measured his rays; *and his coming in and going out, through all the months, and all his courses, and their names I have written down. 5. I have measured the circle of the moon, and its waning which occurs during every day, and the secret places in which it hides every day and ascends according to all the hours. 6. I have laid down the four seasons, and from the seasons I made four circles, and in the circles I placed the years; I placed the months, and from the

XL. ¹ A Sok. add One thing I have learned. Throughout this chapter B is transposed in every way imaginable. B OMITS VERSES 2-7. ² And another, A Sok. ³ Sok. adds and from the end to the return.

XL. 1. I know all things . . . my eyes have seen, &c. This seems to be the passage to which Clem. Alex. Eclog. Proph. (Dind. iii. 456) refers: ὁ Δανιὴλ λέγει ὁμολογῶν τῷ Ἐνῶχ τῷ εἰρηκότῃ 'καὶ εἶδον τὰς ὕλας πάσας': and Origen (de Princ. iv. 35) 'scriptum namque est in eodem libello dicente Enoch universas materias perspexi.' Cf. Sibyll. Or. viii. 375, where, in a passage recalling several phrases of this chapter, ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος οἶδα, ὃς οὐρανὸν ἔκτισα καὶ γῆν. 2. Stars and their innumerable quantity.

Cf. Eth. En. xliii. 1, 2; xciii. 14. 3. Not even the Angels, &c. Cf. xxiv. 3. 4. See xiii, xiv (notes). 5. See xvi (notes). Its waning which, &c. There is not a single reference to this phenomenon in the Slav. Enoch, but there is a complete account of its waxing and waning in Eth. En. lxxiv. Secret places in which it hides, &c. Corrupt. 6. I have laid down the four seasons. In xiii. 5 we have a reference to the four seasons, but in Eth. En. lxxxii. 11-20 there is an account which, though months I calculated the days, and from the days¹ I have *calculated² the hours³. 7. Moreover, I have written down all things *moving⁴ upon the earth⁵. *I have written down all things that are nourished⁶, all seed sown and unsown, which grows on the earth, and all things belonging to the garden, and every herb and every flower, and their fragrance and their names. 8. And the dwellings of the clouds, *and their conformations and their wings⁷, how they bring rain and *the rain-drops, I investigated all. 9. And I wrote down the course of the⁷ thunder *and lightning⁷, and they⁸ showed me the keys, *and their guardians⁹ and their path¹⁰ by which they go. They are brought forth in bonds, in measured degree, *and are let go in bonds¹, lest by their *heavy course and vehemence¹¹ they should overload the clouds of wrath and destroy everything on earth. 10. I have written down the treasures of the snow, and the store-houses of the hail, and the cool breezes. *And I observed the holder of the keys of them during the season: and how he fills the clouds with them¹², and yet does not exhaust their treasures. 11. I *wrote down¹³ the abodes of the winds, *and I observed and saw⁷ how those who hold *their keys¹⁴ bear balances and measures, and in the first place they put them on a balance, in the second they¹⁵ let them go in measure *moderately, with care⁷ over the whole earth, so that with their heavy breathing they should now defective, was clearly complete originally. 8. Cf. Eth. En. lx. 19-22 for an account of these phenomena. 9. Course of the thunder, &c.

¹ A om. ² Measured and calculated, Sok. ³ Sok. adds and written them down. ⁴ That were arranged, Sok. ⁵ Sok. adds making inquiries into them. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ B om. ⁸ The angels, B. ⁹ Which guarded them, B. ¹⁰ Coming in and going out, Sok. ¹¹ Grievous vehemence, B. Heavy opening (p) and vehemence, Sok. ¹² I saw at that time how the clouds are restrained by them as a key does prisoners, B. I watched their seasons: how those that hold the keys of them fill the clouds with them, Sok. ¹³ Saw, B. ¹⁴ Keys of their prisons, B. ¹⁵ B adds measure and.

This is to be found in Eth. En. lix; lx. 13-15. 10. Cf. vi. 1, 2; Eth. En. lx. 17, 18. 11. See Eth. En. xli. 4.

not shake the whole ¹ earth. 12. * For I have measured the whole earth, its mountains and all hills, fields, trees, stones, rivers; all things that exist I have written down, the height from earth to the seventh heaven, and down to the lowest hell¹, * the place of judgement and the mighty hell² laid open, and * full of lamentation. And I saw how¹ the prisoners suffer, awaiting the immeasurable judgement. 13. * And I wrote out all of those who are being judged by the judge, and all the judgement they receive, and all their deeds¹.

¹ B om. ² From thence I was taken to the place of judgement, and I saw hell, B. I append here chapter XL in full, as it appears in B. This chapter in B is manifestly fragmentary and disarranged, and serves to justify the originality of the fuller form as preserved in A Sok. 1. My children, I know all from the lips of the Lord. For mine eyes saw from the beginning to the end, 8. and the dwelling places of the clouds, 9. with those which bring storms and thunder. And the angels showed me the keys which guarded them. 10. I saw the treasure of snow and ice, 9. and the path by which they go: they are brought forth in bonds in measure, and let go in bonds, so that with grievous vehemence they should not oppress the clouds and destroy in the earth, 10. both the air and the cold. I saw at that time how the clouds are restrained by them as a key does prisoners, and they are not allowed to exhaust their treasures. 11. I saw the abodes of the winds, how those who hold the keys of their prisons bear with them the balances and the measures: in the first place they lay on the balances; in the second they measure, and in measure do they let them go over the whole earth: so that by their powerful breath they should not shake the earth. 12. From thence I was taken to the place of judgement and I saw hell open and the prisoners and the eternal judgement.

12. Down to the lowest hell. We come here upon a conception irreconcilable with the general scheme of the author. Hell, according to this scheme, is really located in the third heaven. See x, where the place, its horrors, and the classes it is prepared for, are described at length. But the old Jewish beliefs of an underworld of punishment are too strong to be wholly excluded, and so consistency is here sacrificed to completeness. For an analogous comparison cf. xviii. 7. It is possible, further, that the author may have had some idea of a series of seven hells, as he speaks here of 'the lowest hell,' and as this idea is afterwards found in Rabbinic tradition; see Eisenmenger, ii. 302, 328-330. If, however, we observe how close this hell is to the Garden of Eden, in xlii. 3, we shall be inclined to identify it with the place of punishment described in x. The interpretation, however, of xlii. 3 is difficult. Awaiting the immeasurable judgement. These words, which are found also in vii. 1, in reference to the fallen watchers, would seem to imply an intermediate place of punishment, in fact, Sheol or Hades. 13. This was an ancient belief of the Jews: cf. liii. 2; lxiv. 5; Jubilees iv. 23; x. 17.

[How Enoch wept for the Sins of Adam.]

XLII. 1. And I saw *all our forefathers from the beginning with Adam and Eve¹, and I sighed and wept, *and spake of the ruin (caused by) their wickedness²: *Woe is me for my infirmity and that of my forefathers¹. 2. And *I meditated in my heart and said³: 'Blessed is the man who was not born, or, having been born, has never sinned before the face of the Lord, so that he should not come into this place, to bear the yoke of this place!'

[How Enoch saw those who keep the Keys, and the Guardians of the Gates of Hades standing by.]

XLII. 1. I saw *those who keep the keys, and are the guardians of the gates of hell, standing⁴, like great serpents, XLII. ¹ Bom. ² The destruction of the unholy, B. ³ I said in my heart, B.

XLII. ⁴ The guardians of hell holding the keys, standing opposite to the gates, B. B blends xli and xlii. 1-2 together in this order, xlii. 1; xli; xlii. 2. It will be seen that it omits reference to Adam and Eve.

From being the scribe of God's works, as he is universally in the Eth. and the Slav. Enoch, the transition was easy to the conception of Enoch as a scribe of the deeds of men. Cf. for later tradition Test. Abraham (ed. Jaines), p. 115 καὶ εἶπεν 'Αβραὰμ πρὸς Μιχαήλ· Κύριε, . . . τίς ἐστιν ὁ ἄλλος ὁ ἐλέγχων τὰς ἁμαρτίας; καὶ λέγει Μιχαήλ πρὸς 'Αβραὰμ . . . ὁ ἀποδεικνύμενος οὕτως ἐστιν ὁ διδάσκαλος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ γραμματεὺς τῆς δικαιοσύνης 'Ενώχ· ἀπέστειλεν γὰρ κύριος αὐτοῖς ἐνταῦθα, ἵνα ἀπογράφωσιν τὰς ἁμαρτίας καὶ τὰς δικαιοσύνας ἐκάστου.

XLII. 1. It seems to be implied here that the forefathers of Enoch, including Adam and Eve, are in the place of punishment, and that they are to remain there till God comes to judge the world (xlii. 5, note). That Adam and the patriarchs were in Hades was a prevalent early Christian belief. Cf. Descensus ad Inferos, viii-ix. 2. Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 12 'Melius erat nos non adesse quam advenientes . . . pati.' Eth. En. xxxviii. 2; Apoc. Bar. x. 6.

XLII. 1. Who keep the keys. In Sibyll. Or. viii. 121-2 we have a strange application of this idea:

αἰὼν κοινὸς ἅπασιν κλειδοφύλαξ εἰρκτῆς μεγάλῃς ἐπὶ βῆμα θεοῦ.

Keys. Cf. Rev. ix. 1; xx. 1. Guardians of the gates of hell. According to Emek hammelech, fol. 144, col. 2, each division of hell is under the control of a certain angel (Eisenmenger, ii. 332). The Greek word here may have been τημελοῦχοι. In the singular number it has become a proper name in Apoc. Pauli. Like and their faces were like quenched lamps, and their eyes were fiery¹, and their teeth were sharp². *And they were stripped to the waist³. 2. And I said *before their faces⁴, 'Would that I had not seen you, *nor heard of your doings⁵, *and that those of my race had never come to you⁶! *Now they have only sinned a little in this life, and always suffer in the eternal life⁷.' 3. *I went out to the East, to the paradise of Eden, where rest has been prepared for the just, and it is open to the third heaven, and shut from this world⁸. 4. *And guards are placed at the very great gates of the east of the sun, i. e. fiery angels, singing triumphant songs, that never cease rejoicing in the presence of the just. 5. At the last coming they will lead forth Adam with our forefathers, and conduct them there, that they may rejoice, as a man calls those whom he loves to feast with him; and they having come with joy hold converse, before the dwelling of that man⁹, *with joy awaiting his feast, the enjoyment and the immeasurable wealth, and joy and merriment in the light, and eternal life⁹. 6. *Then quenched lamps. Contrast the faces and eyes of the heavenly angels, i. 5. 2. Cf. xli. 2. 3. The expression 'open to the third heaven' is strange; it would seem to imply that this is not the heavenly Paradise in the third heaven, but the original Garden of Eden. On the other hand, as this Paradise is prepared for the righteous, we are obliged to identify it with the Paradise of this third heaven described in viii-ix. 5. The last coming. See xxxii. 1 (note); lviii. 1. Adam with our forefathers. See

¹ Like a darkened flame, B. ² B Sok. om. ³ A om. ⁴ To the persons (there), B. ⁵ B om. A OMIT'S VERSES 2-14^a. ⁶ Nor brought my family to you, Sok. ⁷ B om. ⁸ B seems to recall this verse in the words: And I saw there a blessed place and every created thing blessed. B introduces this section with the words: Entry of Enoch unto the Paradise of the Just. ⁹ And all living there in joy and in boundless happiness and eternal life, B.

xli. 1 (note). The idea that the patriarchs were in hell or hades is at variance with what is stated or implied in some parts of the Eth. En. Cf. lx. 8, 23; lxi. 12; lxx. 3, 4, where we find Paradise already peopled with the righteous; but it is not incompatible with lxxxix. 52; xciii. 8, where apparently Enoch and Elijah are its only inhabitants. According to xxii the patriarchs were to remain in hades till the final judgement. This would, in some degree, harmonize with our text. 6-14. Nine

I said¹, 'I tell you, my children: blessed is he who fears * the name of the Lord, and serves continually before His face, and brings his gifts with fear continually in this life², * and lives all his life justly, and dies³. 7. Blessed is he who executes a just judgement, * not for the sake of recompense, but for the sake of righteousness, expecting nothing in return: a sincere judgement shall afterwards come to him³. 8. * Blessed is he who clothes the naked with a garment, and gives his bread to the hungry. 9. Blessed is he who gives a just judgement for the orphan and the widow, and assists every one who is wronged⁴. 10. Blessed is he who turns from the * unstable path of this vain world⁵, and walks by the righteous path * which leads to eternal life³. 11. Blessed is he who sows just seed, ¹ Sok. om. ² And serves the Lord; and do you, my children, learn to bring gifts to the Lord that you may have life, B. ³ B om.

⁴ Blessed is he who has given a just judgement, and assists the orphan and the widow, and every one who is oppressed: clothes the naked, and gives bread to the hungry, B. ⁵ Path of deceit, B.

beatitudes. These are very colourless. 7. Executes a just judgement. Cf. ix; Ezek. xviii. 8. This verse recalls in some measure the words of Antigonos of Socho: 'Be not like servants who serve their master for the sake of reward, but be like those who do service without respect to recompense, and live always in the fear of God.' Expecting nothing in return. Cf. Luke vi. 35. Sincere. Corrupt. With the entire verse we have a good parallel in Orac. Sibyll. ii. 61, 63

πάντα δίκαια νέμειν, μηδ' εἰς ἄδικον κρίσιν ἐλθῆς.

ἦν σὺ κακῶς δικάσῃς, σὲ θεὸς μετέ-πειτα δικάσσει.

8. These words are found in ix. 9. Cf. ix; Ps. x. 18; Is. i. 17; Jer. xxii. 3, 16; Zech. vii. 9, 10. 10.

Walks by the righteous path. Cf. Prov. iv. 11; Or Sibyll. iii. 9-10

τίπτε . . . οὐκ εὐθείαν ἀταρπὸν βαίνετε ἀθανάτου κτιστοῦ μεμνημένοι αἰεῖ:

also Fragm. i. 23 sq. 11. Is the blessing for those who sow seed that is justly their own? In Orac. Sibyll. ii. 71-72, 'he who steals seed is accursed for ever':

σπέρματα μὴ κλέπτειν' ἐπαράσιμος ὅς τις ἔλθται
ἐς γενεὰς γενεῶν, ἐς σκαρπισμὸν βιόταιο.

On the other hand, the reference may be metaphorical and the sense as follows: 'From your righteous deeds ye will reap sevenfold.' This is probably an adaptation of Ecclus. vii. 3 μη σπείρε ἐπ' αὐλακας ἀδικίας, καὶ σὺ μὴ θερίσῃς αὐτὰς ἑπταπλασίως. Cf. Job iv. 8;

he shall reap sevenfold. 12. Blessed is he in whom is the truth, that he may speak the truth to *his neighbour¹. 13. Blessed is he *who has love upon his lips, and tenderness in his heart². 14. Blessed is he who understands every work of the Lord, *and glorifies the Lord God³; *for the works of the Lord are just, and of the works of man some are good, and others evil, and by their works those who have wrought them are known⁴.

[Enoch shows his Children how he measured and wrote out the Judgements of God.]

XLIII. 1. *Lo! my children, the things which I have gained on the earth and meditated upon from the Lord God I have written down both winter and summer. I have compiled the account of all, and concerning the years I have calculated each hour; I have measured the hours and written out the lists of them and I have ascertained all their differences⁵. 2. As one year is more honourable than another⁶, so is one man more honourable than another. This ¹ The man who is sincere, Sok. ² Upon whose lips are tenderness and mercy, B. ³ Accomplished by the Lord and glorifies him, Sok. ⁴ B om. A reads And I saw all the works of the Lord how righteous they are, and of the works of men some (are righteous) but others wicked. And the impure are known by their deeds.

XLIII. ⁵ I, my children, have measured and written out every deed and every measure, and every just judgement (weight, Sok.), A Sok. adds: And have written them out as the Lord ordered me, and in all these I have found diversity. ⁶ B adds and one day more than another and one hour more than another.

Prov. xxii. 8; Hos. x. 13. 12. Cf. Lev. xix. 11; Eph. iv. 25; Orac. Sibyll. ii. 58 ψεύδεια μὴ βάξιν: 64 μαρτυρίην ψευδῆ φεύγειν, τὰ δίκαια ἀγορεύειν. 13. Cf. Prov. xxxi. 26. 14. By their works . . . are known. Cf. Mt. vii. 16, 20.

XLIII. 2, 3. As one year, &c. We should expect rather as one day, &c. Cf. Ecclus. xxiii. 7 διὰ τί ἡμέρα ἡμέρας ὑπερέχει; The main thought of these verses is derived from Ecclus. x. 20, 22, 24 (cf. Jer. ix. 23, 24): in fact no one is greater than he who fears God is a direct quotation from x. 24. This passage runs: 20 ἐν μέσῳ ἀδελφῶν ὁ ἡγούμενος αὐτῶν ἐντιμος, καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι κύριον ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ. 22. πλούσιος καὶ ἐνδοξος καὶ πτωχός, τὸ καύχημα αὐτῶν φόβος κυρίου. 24. μεγιστὰν καὶ κριτὴς καὶ ἐξουσίης δοξασθήσεται, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτῶν τις μείζων τοῦ φοβουμένου τὸν κύριον. . . . 30. πτωχὸς δοξάζεται δι' ἐπιστήμην αὐτοῦ, καὶ πλούσιος δοξάζεται διὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 125.

man on account of many possessions, that man on account of the wisdom¹ of the heart; this man on account of understanding, another on account of cunning; this man for the silence of the lips²; * this man on account of purity, that on account of strength; this man on account of comeliness, another on account of youth; this man on account of sharpness of mind, another on account of quicksightedness of body, and another for the perception of many things. 3. Let it be heard everywhere³; there is no one greater than he who fears God. He shall be the most glorious for ever.

[Enoch instructs his Sons that they should not revile the Persons of Men, whether they are great or small.]

XLIV. 1. God⁴ made man with His own hands, in the likeness of His countenance, both small and great the Lord created him. He who reviles the countenance of * man, reviles the countenance of the Lord⁵. 2. * He who shows wrath against another without injury, the great wrath of the Lord shall consume him. 3. If a man spits at the face of another⁶ * insultingly, he shall be consumed⁷ * in the great judgement of the Lord⁸. 4. Blessed is the man who * does not direct his heart with malice against any⁹ man, and who assists the man who is * injured, and¹⁰ under judgement, and raises up the oppressed, * and accomplishes the prayer of him who asks¹¹! 5. For in the day of the great judgement,

¹ Benevolence, B.

² Tongue and lips, B.

³ B om.

XLIV. ⁴ B adds fashioned and. ⁵ The prince, and loathes the countenance of the Lord; despises the countenance of the Lord, A. Man reviles the countenance of the prince and loathes the countenance of the Lord, Sok. ⁶ There is the anger of the Lord, and a great judgement for whoever spits in the face of a man, B. ⁷ His insolence will consume him, Sok.; B om. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Puts confidence in, B.

¹⁰ A, Sok. om. ¹¹ Performs a kindness to him who wants it, Sok.; B om.

XLIV. 1. He who reviles the countenance, &c. We may reasonably compare James iii. 9. 2. Cf.

Matt. v. 22. 4. This beatitude seems out of place here. It would come in fittingly at the close of xlii.

every measure and standard and weight, * which is for traffic, namely, that which is hung on a balance and stands for traffic¹, knows its own measure, and * shall receive its reward by measure².

[God shows that He does not wish Sacrifices from Man, nor Burnt-Offerings, but pure and contrite Hearts.]

XLV. 1. * He who hastens and brings his offering before the face of the Lord, then the Lord will hasten the accomplishment of his work, and will execute a just judgement for him³.
2. He who increases his lamp before the face of the Lord, the Lord increases greatly his treasure * in the heavenly kingdom⁴.
3. God does not require bread, nor a light, * nor an animal, nor any other sacrifice⁵, * for it is as nothing⁶. 4. * But God requires a pure heart⁴, and by means of all this, He tries the heart of man.

¹ Hang as on a balance, that is on the scale and which stands for traffic, Sok. B omits entire verse. ² Its measure shall receive its reward, Sok.

XLV. ³ If a man hastens to work folly before the Lord, the Lord furthers him in the carrying out of his work, and makes his judgement faulty. So A through a corruption of приносъ into прасно and insertion of не before сотворить; B om. ⁴ B om. ⁵ Nor food of any kind nor meat, B. Nor an animal, nor an ox, nor any other victim, Sok. ⁶ That is not so, Sok.; B om.

XLV. 3. Cf. Ps. xl. 6; li. 16; Is. i. 11; Mic. vi. 6-8; Eccl. xxxii. 1-3; Orac. Sibyll. viii. 390, 391 οὐ χρήζω θυσίας ἢ σπονδῆς ὑμετέρηφιν

οὐ κνίσσης μαρῆς, οὐχ αἵματος ἐχθίστοιο:

also ii. 82; Athenag. Supplic. pro Christo, 13. This is not Essenism: see lix. 1-3. We find the same spiritual appreciation of sacrifices in Ecclus. xxxii. 1-5 side by side with injunctions to offer them: ὁ συντηρῶν νόμον πλεονάζει προσφοράς, θυσιά-ζων σωτηρίου ὁ προσέχων ἐντολαῖς ἀνταποδίδους χάριν προσφέρων σεμίδαλιν, καὶ ὁ ποιῶν ἐλεημοσύναν θυσιάζων αἰνέσεως καὶ ἐξίλασμός ἀποστήναι ἀπὸ πονηρίας. 4. A pure heart. Ps.

li. 10. Tries the heart of man.
Deut. viii. 2; 2 Chron. xxxii. 31;
Ps. xxvi. 2.

[How an earthly Prince will not receive Gifts from Man which are contemptible and impure. How much more does God loath impure Gifts, and rejects them with Wrath, and will not receive the Gifts of such a Man.]

XLVI. 1. *Hear, my people, and pay attention to the words of my lips¹. If any one brings gifts to an earthly prince, but having unfaithfulness in his heart: if the prince knows it, will he not be angry with *him on account of that, and he will not take² his gifts, and will hand him over to condemnation? 2. Or if a man flatters another *in his language, but (plans) evil against him in his heart, will not the other understand the craft of his heart, and he himself will be condemned, so that his unrighteousness will be evident to all³? 3. But when God shall send a great light, by means of that there will be judgement⁴ to the just and unjust, and nothing will be concealed.

[Enoch instructs his Sons from the Lips of God, and gives them the Manuscripts of this Book.]

XLVII. 1. Now, my children, put my thoughts in your hearts; pay attention to the words of your father, which *have come to⁵ you from the mouth of the Lord. 2. Take these books of the writings of your father, and read them, *and in them ye shall learn all the works of the Lord. There have been many books from the beginning of creation, and shall be to the end of the world, but none shall make XLVI. ¹ Sok. om. B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER. ² Sok. om. ³ With falsehood and is good in his tongue but evil in his heart, will not his heart perceive this and he will judge by himself so that he is proved not to be right, Sok. ⁴ Just judgement that is no respecter of persons, Sok.

XLVII. ⁵ I tell, Sok. B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER.

XLVI. 2. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 120 μηδ' ἕτερον κεύθοις κραδίη νόον ἀλλ' ἀγορεύων. 3. What the great light means is not clear.

XLVII. 1. Cf. xxxix. 2. 2.
None shall make things known things known to you like my writings¹. 3. But if you shall preserve² my writings, you will not sin against God. For there is no other besides the Lord, neither in heaven nor on earth, nor the depths below, nor the solitary foundations. 4. God established the foundations upon things that are unknown, and stretched out the *visible and invisible heavens³, and made firm the earth upon the waters, and established the waters on things that are not fixed⁴. Who has created all the innumerable works of creation? 5. * Who has numbered the dust of the earth⁵, and the sand of the sea, and the drops of rain, and the dew of the morning, * and the breath of the wind⁶? Who has * bound earth and sea with bonds⁷ that cannot be broken up: * and has cut⁸ the stars out of fire, * and beautified⁹ the heavens¹⁰, and placed * the sun¹¹ in the midst of them * so that¹¹.

[Of the course of the Sun throughout the seven Circles.]

XLVIII. 1. The sun¹² goes in the seven circles of the

¹ For the books are many and in them we shall learn all the words of the Lord. Such as they are from the beginning of creation, so shall they be to the end of the world, A. ² Keep strictly, Sok. ³ Heavens over the visible things, Sok. ⁴ A reads And He considered what is the water and the foundation of things that are not steadfast and, and transposes these words to end of verse. ⁵ Sok. om. ⁶ Has filled earth and sea and the winter, A. ⁷ Emended from And I cut, A; and (who) sowed, Sok. ⁸ And I beautified, A. ⁹ Sok. adds and placed. ¹⁰ A om. XLVIII. ¹² He, Sok.

to you like my writings. Cf. Eth. En. xciii. 10. 3. But. . . not sin against God. Cf. xxxiii. 9; xlviii. 7-9. This claim is analogous to that made in the Eth. En. xxxvii. 4; xcii. 1; xciii. 10; c. 6; civ. 12, 13. With this we may contrast Ecclus. xviii. 3 οὐθενὶ ἐξεποίησεν ἐξαγγεῖλαι τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. There is no other besides the Lord. Cf. Is. xlv. 5, 14, 18, 22. This is a favourite sentiment in the Sibylline Oracles. Cf. iii. 69

αὐτὸς γὰρ μόνος ἐστὶ θεὸς οὐκ ἔστιν ἕτ' ἄλλος;

also iii. 760; viii. 377; Fragm. i. 7, 15; iii. 3; v. 1. 4. Stretched out, &c. Ps. civ. 2; Is. xl. 22; xlii. 5. Made firm the earth upon the waters, 2 Pet. iii. 5. 5. Who has numbered. . . the sand of the sea, and the drops of rain. This is drawn word for word from Ecclus. i. 2 ἄμμον θαλασσῶν καὶ σταγόνas ὑετοῦ . . . τίς ἐξαριθμήσει; Cf. Is. xl. 12, and the oracle in Herod. i. 47 οἶδα δ' ἐγὼ ψάμμον τ' ἀριθμὸν καὶ μέτρα θαλάσσης, and likewise recalls LXX Job xxxvi. 27 ἀριθμηταὶ δὲ αὐτῷ σταγόνες ὑετοῦ. Beautified the heavens. Cf. Ecclus. xvi. 27 ἐκόσμησεν εἰς αἰῶνα τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ.

XLVIII. 1. The text is corrupt heavens, *and I gave him¹ 182 thrones when he goes on a short day, and also 182 thrones when he goes on a long day. 2. And he has two great thrones on which he rests, returning hither and thither above the monthly thrones. From the month Tsivan² after³ seventeen days he descends to the month Thevan⁴, and from the seventeenth day of Thevad⁴ he ascends. 3. And so the sun goes through all the courses of the heaven³; when he goes near the earth, then the earth rejoices and produces its fruit; when he departs, then the earth is sad, and the trees and all the fruits have no development. 4. *All this by measure and minute arrangement of time He has arranged by His wisdom⁵, both in the case of things visible and invisible. 5. He has made all things visible out of invisible, Himself being invisible. 6. Thus I tell you, my children, distribute the books to your children, in all your families, and among the nations. 7. Those who are wise let them fear God, and let them receive them *and let them love them more than

¹ Which are the support of the, A. B OMTS ENTIRE CHAPTER.
² Pamorus, Sok. ³ A om. ⁴ Thibith, Sok. ⁵ Hereby he gives a complete measure and with good arrangement of the times and has fixed a measure, A.

and unintelligible. According to xi. 1; xxx. 3 the sun is in the fourth circle of the heavens and does not revolve through the seven circles. Again the twice-mentioned 182 thrones are really when added the 364 world-stations of which we have some account in the Eth. En. lxxv. 2, i.e. 'the harmony of the course of the world is brought about through its separate 364 world-stations.' These world-stations or thrones as in our text are the 364 different positions occupied by the sun on the 364 days of the year. Just as in the Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii and Jubilees iv no attempt is made here to get the complete number of days in the solar year, i.e. 365½: contrast xiv. 1. This passage therefore either belongs to or is built upon the oldest literature of Enoch. This reckoning of the year at 364 days may be due partly to opposition to heathen systems and partly to the fact that 364 is divisible by 7, and amounts to 52 weeks exactly. See Eth. En. 190-91. 2. Tsivan . . . Thevad. The text is here corrupt. As apparently the two solstices are meant, we should read either Sivan . . . Kislev or Tamuz . . . Tebet. 5. Cf. xxiv. 2 (note); xlvii. 2 (note). Has made here was no doubt ἐπλασε, not ἐποίησε. 6. See xxxiii. 9 (note). 7. Let them love them more than any kind of food.

any kind of food¹, and read them². 8. * But those who are senseless and have no thought of the Lord and do not fear God³ will not receive them but turn away, and *keep themselves from them⁴, * the terrible judgement shall await them⁵. 9. Blessed is the man who bears their yoke, and puts it on, for he shall be set free in the day of the great judgement.

[Enoch instructs his Sons not to swear either by the Heaven or the Earth; and shows the Promise of God to a Man even in the Womb of his Mother.]

XLIX. 1. For⁶ I swear to you my children⁶, but I will not swear by a single oath, neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by any other creature which God made. God⁷ said: 'There

¹ And the books will be more profitable to them than all good food on earth, Sok. A adds or earthly advantage. ² Sok. adds And let them eling to them. ³ And it shall result to them if they have no thought of God nor fear him, and if they, A. ⁴ Do not receive the books, A. ⁵ Sok. om.

XLIX. ⁶ B om. rest of verse.

⁷ For the Lord, Sok.

So Eth. En. lxxxii. 3 'this wisdom will please those that eat (thereof) better than good food.' Cf. xlvii. 2 (note). 8. Those who . . . will not receive them . . . the terrible judgement shall await them. The punishment denounced against those who refuse the disclosures of this book is more severe than anything to be found in the Eth. En. For a perfect parallel we must go to Rev. xxii. 18, 19. 9. The appeal for reception is far wider in this book than in the Eth. En. There only 'the elect of righteousness,' 'the righteous and the wise,' 'those who understand,' receive the revelations of Enoch: cf. lxxxii. 3; xciii. 10; civ. 12. Bears their yoke, cf. xxxiv. 1.

XLIX. 1. Swear . . . neither by heaven, &c. From this passage and from Philo it is clear that Mt. v. 34-35 was a Jewish commonplace. For in Philo de Special. Leg. ii. 1 we find: ὁ γὰρ τοῦ σπουδαίου, φησί, λόγος ὅρκος ἔστω βέβαιος, ἀκλήης, ἀψευδέστατος, ἐρηρυσμένος ἀληθείᾳ . . . εἰώθασι γὰρ ἀναφθεγγόμενοι τοσοῦτον μόνον 'νὴ τόν,' ἢ 'μὰ τόν,' μηδὲν παραλαβόντες, ἐμφάσει τῆς ἀποκοπῆς, τρανοῦν ὅρκον οὐ γινόμενον. Ἀλλὰ καὶ παραλαβέτω τις, εἰ βούλοιτο, μὴ μὴν τὸ ἀναπάτω καὶ πρεσβύτατον εὐθὺς αἷτιον, ἀλλὰ γῆν, ἥλιον, ἀστέρας, οὐρανόν, τὸν σύμπαντα κῖσμον: De decem Orac. 17. Κάλλιστον δὲ καὶ βιωφελέστατον καὶ ἀρμόττον λογικῇ φύσει τὸ ἀνῶμοτον, οὕτως ἀληθεύειν ἐφ' ἑκάστου δεδιδαγμένη, ὥς τοὺς λόγους ὅρκους εἶναι νομίζεσθαι. Cp. also Leg. All. iii. 72; De Sac. Abelis et Caini, 28; De Plant. Noe 19; Quod Omnis Probus Liber, 12. It was Mr. Conybeare is no swearing in me, nor injustice, but truth. If there is no truth in men, let them swear by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay. 2. * But I swear to you, yea, yea¹, that * there has not been even a man in his mother's womb, for whom a place has not been prepared for every soul²; * and a measure is fixed how long a man shall be tried in this world³. * O! my children, be not deceived¹ * there is a place prepared there for every soul of man⁴.

[How Nobody born upon the Earth can hide himself, nor are his Deeds concealed. (God) commands that he should be on the Earth a short time, endure Temptation, and Annoyance, and not injure the Widow and Orphan.]

L. 1. I have laid down in the writings the actions of every man, * and no one born on the earth can hide himself, nor can his deeds be concealed; I see all⁵. 2. Now, therefore, my children, in patience and meekness accomplish the number of your days, and ye shall inherit the endless life which is to come. 3. * Every wound, and every affliction, and every ¹ B om. ² So A Sok. but that for every A reads the rest of that. B reads Even before man was created a place of judgement was prepared for him. ³ And a measure and a standard how long a man shall live in this world, and shall be tried in it, Sok.; And it was measured out and fixed, and there man will be tried, B. ⁴ So A Sok. but that Sok. adds previously after place. B reads As before it was appointed for him.

L. ⁵ B om.; Sok. adds as in a looking-glass.

that first called my attention to these passages in Philo. On the various forms of swearing usual among the Jews and censured in Mt. v. 33-36 and indirectly in the text, see Lightfoot in loc.; Eisenmenger, ii. 490 sqq.

XLIX. 2. A place . . . prepared for every soul. So Tractat Chagiga, fol. 15, col. 1; Torath Adam, fol. 101, col. 3; Avodath hakkodesh, fol. 19, col. 1, where it is said that a place is prepared for every man either in Paradise or Hell (Eisenmenger, ii. 315).

L. 1. Nor can his deeds be concealed. Eth. En. ix. 5. 2. In patience, &c. Cp. Luke xxi. 19 'In your patience ye shall win your souls.' A blessed immortality for the righteous is taught in this book, but apparently no resurrection of the body. 3. Cp. Eccclus. ii. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 5; Heb. x. 32; 1 Pet. ii. 19; evil word, and attack¹ endure for the sake of the Lord.

4. And when you might have vengeance² do not repay, either *your neighbour or your enemy³. For God⁴ will repay as your avenger in the *day of the great judgement⁵. *Let it not be for you to take vengeance⁶. 5. Whoever of you shall spend gold or silver for the sake of a brother, shall receive abundant treasure in *the day of judgement⁷ *and stretch out your hands to⁸ the orphan, the widow, and the stranger⁹.

[Enoch instructs his Sons, not to hide their Treasures upon Earth, but bids them give Alms to the Needy.]

LI. 1. *Stretch out your hands to the poor man¹⁰ according to your powers. 2. *Do not hide your silver in the earth¹¹ :

¹ Whatever wound or disease or affliction or evil end shall light upon you, B. Put away from you every wound and every injury and every evil word. If an attack and an injury be inflicted upon you for the sake of the Lord, Sok. ² Sok. adds an hundredfold. ³ Your neighbour, B; one who is near you or afar off, Sok. ⁴ Living God, B; Lord, Sok. ⁵ Great day of, A. ⁶ Therefore be not avenged here from men but then from the Lord, Sok. B om. ⁷ That world, A Sok. ⁸ Do not oppress, A. ⁹ B om.; A adds lest the wrath of God should come upon you.

LI. ¹⁰ And assist the poor man, B; Sok. om. ¹¹ Sok. reads in your treasures after come upon you, B om.

Jam. i. 12. See li. 3. 4. Cp. Ecclus. xxviii. 1 ὁ ἐκδικῶν παρὰ Κυρίου εὐρήσει ἐκδίκησιν, καὶ τὰς ἀμαρτίας αὐτοῦ διαστηρίων διαστηρίσει. 2. ἀφες ἀδίκημα τῷ πλησίον σου, καὶ τότε δεηθέντος σου αἱ ἀμαρτίαι σου λυθήσονται. See also verses 3-6. God will repay . . . in the day of the great judgement. These words follow the LXX of Deut. xxxii. 35 ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐκδικήσεως ἀνταποδώσω. The LXX thus read לִיּוֹם נָקָם אֲשֶׁלֶם instead of the Mass. לִי נָקָם וְשֶׁלֶם. The Samaritan likewise reads לִיּוֹם. Cp. also Prov. xx. 22; xxiv. 29. In Rom. xii. 19; Heb. x. 30, the writers follow a text of Deut. xxxii. 35 agreeing partly with the Mass. and partly with that implied by the LXX. 5. Whoever, &c. Cp. Prov. xix. 17: Ecclus. xxix. 10. See LI. 2 (note). Stretch out your hands to the orphan, &c. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 75 ὀρφανικοῖς χήραις τ' ἐπιδευομένοις τε παράσχου. Cf. ix.

LI. 1. Stretch out your hands to the poor, &c. This is drawn from Ecclus. vii. 32 πτωχῷ ἐκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου, which in turn seems drawn from Prov. xxxi. 20. Cf. Joh vii. 9: Orac. Sibyll. ii. 88. According to your powers. Cf. Ecclus. xiv. 13; xxix. 20. 2. Do not hide your silver in the earth. Cf. Ecclus. xxix. 10 ἀπόλεσον ἀργύριον δι' ἀδελφόν καὶ φίλον καὶ μὴ ἰωθῆτω ὑπὸ *assist the honest man in his affliction, and affliction shall not come upon you, in the time of your labour. 3. And whatever violent and grievous yoke shall be put upon you, endure all for the Lord's sake¹, and so you will receive your reward in the day of judgement. 4. Morning, afternoon, and evening, it is good to go into the house of the Lord to glorify *the Creator of all². 5. Wherefore³ let every thing that hath breath glorify Him, and let every creature visible and invisible give forth praise.

[God instructs His faithful Servants how they are to praise His Name.]

LII. 1. Blessed is the man who opens *his lips to praise the God of Sabaoth, and praises the Lord with his heart⁴. 2. Cursed is every man who opens his *lips to abuse and to calumniate his neighbour⁵. 3. Blessed⁶ is he who opens his lips to the blessing and praise of God! 4. Cursed is he who opens his lips to swearing and blasphemy before the face of the Lord all his days. 5. Blessed is he who ¹ B om. ² Your Creator, A. ³ For, Sok.; Sok. also puts the verbs in the indicative; B omits verse.

LII. ⁴ Heart and lips to the praise of the Lord, B. ⁵ Heart to abuse, abusing the poor and calumniating his neighbour, Sok.; B supports text but that it omits and to calumniate. After neighbour A adds for him shall God rebuke. ⁶ B omits verses 3, 4.

τὸν λίθον. Assist... in his affliction. Cf. Eccclus. iv. 4 ἐκέτην θλιβόμενον μὴ ἀπανάινου. 3. Eccclus. ii. 4 πάν δ' ἐὰν ἐπαχθῇ σοι . . . μακροθύμησον. Cf. 1 Pet. ii. 19; iii. 14. Cf. L. 3. 4. Ps. lv. 17: Cf. Dan. vi. 10. These three Jewish hours of prayer—the third (that of morning sacrifice), the sixth (noon), the ninth (that of evening sacrifice)—are observed in Acts ii. 15; iii. 1; x. 9. See Lightfoot in loc. for his Talmudic references. House of the Lord. This means the temple; for though the author is a Jew living in Egypt, he is writing for Judaism as a whole, and is giving herein the ideal conduct of an inhabitant of Jerusalem. In LIX. 2, 3, he prescribes the right method of sacrifice, and sacrifices could only be offered in Jerusalem. 5. Every thing that, &c. Ps. cl. 6.

LII. With these beatitudes compare xlii. 6-14. Like the latter these are wanting in vigour. They seem to be in the main derived from Ecclesiasticus. 2. Cf. Wisdom i. 11 ἀπὸ καταλαλιᾶς φείσασθε γλώσσης. 4 Swearing and blasphemy. Cf. Eccclus. xxiii. 9-12. 5. Cf. Eccclus.

blessees all the works of the Lord. 6. Cursed is he who speaks ill of¹ the works of the Lord. 7. Blessed is he who *looks to raise his own hand for labour². 8. Cursed is he who looks to³ make use of another man's labour. 9. Blessed is he who preserves the foundations of his fathers *from the beginning⁴. 10. Cursed is he who breaks the enactments⁵ of his fathers. 11. Blessed is he who *establishes peace and love⁶. 12. Cursed is he who troubles those who *are at peace⁷. 13. Blessed is he who *does not speak peace with his tongue, but in his heart there is peace to all⁸! 14. Cursed is he who speaks peace with his tongue, but in his heart there is no peace⁹. 15. For all these things in measures and in books will be revealed in the day of the great judgement¹⁰.

[Let us not say that our Father is with God, and will plead for us at the Day of Judgement. For I know that a Father cannot help his Son, nor a Son a Father.]

LIII. 1. And now, my children, do not say; Our father

¹ Sok. adds all. ² Looks to the work of his own hands, B. Looks to raise up the fallen, A. ³ A adds and is eager to. ⁴ B om. ⁵ B adds and ordinances. ⁶ Goes to seek peace and leads others to peace, B. ⁷ Love their neighbours, A. ⁸ Speaks peace, for peace abides with him, B. ⁹ Speaks with a humble tongue and heart to all, A. ¹⁰ A adds a sword. B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. ¹⁰ B adds Therefore, my brethren, preserve your hearts from everything unjust that you may inherit an habitation of light for ever.

xxxix. 14 εὐλογήσατε κύριον ἐπὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ. 7. Cf. Eph. iv. 28. S. Seems to be derived from Ecclus. xxxi. 26 φονεύων τὸν πλησίον ὁ ἀφαιρούμενος συμβίωσιν, καὶ ἐκχέων αἷμα ὁ ἀποστερῶν μίσθον μισθίου. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 56-57:

μὴ πλουτεῖν ἀδίκως, ἀλλ' ἐξ ὁσίων βιοτεύειν.

ἀρκεῖσθαι παρעוῦσι· καὶ ἀλλοτρίων ἀπέχεσθαι.

10. Cf. Eth. En. xcix. 2, 14; Ecclus. xvii. 11. 11. Cf. Mt. v. 9. 12. This is derived from Ecclus. xxviii. 9 ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλὸς ταραξεί φίλους καὶ ἀνὰ μέσον εἰρηνευόντων ἐκβάλλει διαβολήν. Cf. also Ecclus. xxviii. 13. 14. Cf. Ps. xxviii. 3; lv. 21; lxii. 4; Orac. Sibyll. ii. 120, 122.

LIII. 1. This idea that departed saints interceded on behalf of the living has been attributed by some scholars to Is. lxiii. 16 (see Ewald, History of Israel, i. 296; Cheyne, Prophecies of Isaiah, ii. 107-108; 299-300). If, however, the doctrine of a blessed immortality or of the resurrection was a late development stands before God, and prays *for us (to be released) from sin¹; *for there is no person there to help any man who has sinned². 2. You see how I have written down all the works of every man *before his creation², *which is³ *done in the case of all men for ever². 3. And no man *can say or unsay⁴ what I have written with my hand. For God sees all things, *even the thoughts of wicked men⁵, *which lie in the storeplaces of the heart². 4. And now, LIII. ¹ Concerning our sins, A. ² B om. ³ And I shall write what things are, Sok.; B om. ⁴ Destroy, B; contradict, Sok. ⁵ The thoughts of man that they are vain, A; B om.

among the Jews, this idea must necessarily have been later still, and accordingly unless we are prepared to bring down considerably the date of Is. lxiii, we shall have some difficulty in justifying such an interpretation. It seems indeed that this idea among the Jews was comparatively late in origin. The first indubitable evidence in its favour is to be found in the Eth. En. xxii. 12; xcvi. 3, 5; xcix. 16; and thus we find that it was an accepted Pharisaic belief early in the second century B.C. The next mention of this belief is to be met with in 2 Macc. xv. 14 where Jeremiah, who appears in a vision to Judas Maccabaeus, is described as follows: ὁ φιλάδελφος οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πολλὰ προσευχόμενος περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ καὶ τῆς ἀγίας πόλεως Ἱερουσάλημ ὁ τοῦ θεοῦ προφήτης. This was also the teaching of Philo, de Exsecrat. 9: τρισὶ χρησόμενοι παρακλητοῖς τῶν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα καταλλαγῶν . . . δευτέρῳ δὲ τῇ τῶν ἀρχηγῶν τοῦ ἔθνους δούλῳ, ὅτι ταῖς ἀφαιμέναις σωμάτων ψυχαῖς ἀπλᾶστον καὶ γυμνὴν ἐπιδεικνυμένας πρὸς τὸν ἀρχοντα θεραπείαν τὰς ὑπὲρ νῦν καὶ θνητῶν ἰκετείας οὐκ ἀτελεῖς εἰσάγει ποιῆσθαι, γέρας αὐτοῖς παρέχοντος τοῦ πατρὸς τὸ ἐπήκουσεν ἐν εὐχαῖς. The same view was obviously held by Joseph. Antt. i. 13. 3, where he describes Abraham as saying to Isaac when on the point of sacrificing him: μετ' εὐχῶν δὲ καὶ ἱερουργίας ἐκείνου τὴν ψυχὴν τὴν σὴν προσδεχομένου καὶ παρ' αὐτῷ καθέοντος ἔσῃ μοι εἰς κηδεμόνα καὶ γηροκόμον. And also in Orac. Sibyll. ii. 330-333:

τοῖς καὶ ὁ παντοκράτωρ θεὸς ἀφθιτος ἄλλο παρέξει εὐσεβέεσσ', ὅπότ' ἂν θεὸν ἀφθιτον αἰτήσωνται· ἐκ μαλεροῦ πυρός τε καὶ ἀκαμάτων ἀπὸ βρυγμῶν ἀνθρώπους σώσει δώσει· καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσει.

Finally this doctrine is recognized and apparently accepted in certain parts of the N. T.: Matt. xxvii. 47, 49; Luke xvi. 24-31; John viii. 56 (?); Heb. xii. 1?; Rev. vi. 9-11. For the prevalence of this belief in later Judaism, see Eisenmenger, ii. 357-9; 361. The idea of intercession may be derived from ancestor-worship, and not from the doctrine of a future life as I have implied above; cf. Cheyne's Introd. to the Book of Isaiah, 352, 3. 2. Enoch is the universal scribe. 3. Cf. Ps. xciv. 11; Eccclus. xvii. 15. 20.

my children, pay attention to all the words * of your father which I say to you¹: * that ye may not grieve afterwards and say: Our father for some cause or other, never told them to us, in the time of this folly².

[Enoch admonishes his Sons that they should give the Books to Others.]

LIV. * Let these books which I have given you be the inheritance of your peace³: * do not conceal them⁴ but tell⁵ them to all desiring them * and admonish them⁶ that * they may know the works of the Lord which are very wonderful⁷.

[Here Enoch makes a Declaration to his Sons: and speaks to them with Tears: 'My children, my Hour draws near, that I should go to Heaven. Lo! Angels stand before me!']

LV. 1. My children, the appointed day and time⁸ have drawn near * and constrain me to depart⁹. The angels * will come and¹⁰ stand before me * on the earth awaiting what has been ordered them¹¹. 2. In the morning I shall go to the highest¹² heavens¹³ to my eternal habitation. 3. Therefore I tell you to do all that is good before the face of the Lord.

[Methusalem asks a Blessing of his Father; that he may give him Bread to eat.]

LVI. 1. Methusalem having answered his father Enoch said¹⁴: 'If it is good in thine eyes, * my father¹⁵, * let me

¹ Of the lips of your father, B.

² B om.

LIV. ³ That you may have an inheritance of peace and the books which I have given you from God, B. ⁴ A om. ⁵ Give, A. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ Words cannot make known the works of God, B.

LV. ⁸ B adds appointed by God. ⁹ A reads after stand before me. ¹⁰ Who wish to go with me, A Sok. ¹¹ So A Sok, but that before on the earth, A adds they now stand; B om. ¹² Upper, B; A om. ¹³ A adds to the highest Jerusalem.

LVI. ¹⁴ B om.

¹⁵ Enoch, Sok.

LIV. See xxxiii. 9 (note). Works . . . wonderful. Job xxxvii. 14, 16; Ps. lxxi. 17, &c. LV. 1. See xxxvi. 2. Highest heavens. Cf. lxvii. 2.

put food¹ before thy face and then, having blessed our houses and thy sons, *and all thy family², let thy people be glorified by thee; and then afterwards thou wilt depart, *as God hath said³.' 2. Enoch answered his son *Methosalem and said⁴: 'Hear, my child, since God has anointed me with the oil of his glory, there has been no² food in me, *and my soul remembers nothing of earthly pleasure⁵ nor do I desire *anything earthly⁶.

[Enoch orders his Son Methosalem to call all his Brothers.]

LVII. 1. But⁷ call all⁸ thy brothers, and all your⁹ families, and the elders of the people, that I may speak to them and depart *as is appointed for me⁸. 2. And Methosalem hastened, and called his brethren, Regim, Riman¹⁰, Ukhan¹¹, Khermion, [Gaidal⁸], and¹² the elders of¹³ the people, *and brought them all¹⁴ before the face of his father Enoch¹⁵. And having blessed them, he spake to them¹⁶.

[The Instruction of Enoch to his Sons.]

LVIII. 1. 'Listen to me, my sons. *In those days when the Lord came upon the earth for the sake of Adam, and visited¹⁷ all his creation, which He Himself had made¹⁸. 2. The¹⁹ Lord²⁰ called all the cattle of the earth²¹, and all ¹ Let me do, A: let us put food, Sok. ² A om. ³ As God wishes, Sok.; B om. ⁴ And said, Sok.; B om. ⁵ B om. ⁶ Earthly food, B.

LVII. ⁷ My son Methosalem, A. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Our, B. ¹⁰ Rim, B. ¹¹ Azukhan, B. ¹² A adds all. ¹³ Sok. adds all. ¹⁴ And called them, Sok.; A om. ¹⁵ Sok. adds and they bowed before his face, and Enoch saw them. ¹⁶ Sok. adds saying.

LVIII. ¹⁷ So A and Sok., but that Sok. adds your father after Adam; B reads in the days of our father Adam the Lord came to visit him and. ¹⁸ A adds and after all these created Adam: Sok. adds in brackets in the previous thousand years and after all these created Adam. ¹⁹ And the, A B Sok. ²⁰ Lord God, B. ²¹ B adds and all the wild beasts and all the fourfooted things.

LCI. 2. Cf. xxii. 7, 8.

Khermion are not mentioned in i. 10.

LVII. 1. Cf. xxxvi. 1; Eth. En. xci. 1. 2. Riman, Ukhan, and

On Gaidal, see i. 10 (note).

LVIII. 1. When the Lord came creeping things, and all the fowls that fly *in the air¹, and brought them all¹ before the face of our father Adam², and he gave names to all living things on the earth. 3. And the Lord made him lord over all, and put all things under his hands³, and *subdued (them) to submission and to all obedience⁴ *to man⁵. So the Lord created⁶ man as master over all His possessions. 4. The Lord will not judge any soul of beast on account of man, *but he will judge the soul of man on account of the souls of beasts in the world to come⁷. 5. *For as there is a special place for mankind for all the souls of men according to their number, so there is also of beasts. And not one upon the earth . . . and visited. See xxxii. 1 (note). 5. Special place . . . for all the souls of men. See xlix. 2 (note). So also of beasts. As the Jews believed at the beginning of the Christian era that all animals had spoken one language before the fall, and therefore in some degree possessed rationality (Jubilees iii. 28; Joseph. Antt. i. 1. 4), it was only natural that they should proceed to infer a future existence of the animal world. The O. T. indeed does not show a single trace of this belief, though it always displays a most tender solicitude for their well-being; nor do we find it in any pre-Christian Jewish writing, with the exception of the present text. Even here the future life is of a limited nature. It is ethically motived. This further term of existence is not conceded for the brute's own sake, but wholly with a view to the punishment of man. The brute creation is to live just long enough to bring an indictment for ill-treatment against man at the final judgement. Though this idea of any future life in connexion with the brute creation may move the wonder of the modern mind, it is justified by perfectly analogous ideas in the ancient world. Not to speak of the doctrine of metempsychosis in Greece and the deification of animals in Egypt, such conceptions as those in the text would not unnaturally flow from the powers and qualities frequently assigned to animals by Greek thinkers. Thus, according to Plut. Plac. v. 20, 4, the souls of brutes were rational though soul shall perish which God has made till the great judgement. 6. And every soul of beast shall bring a charge against man if he feeds them badly¹.

¹ B om. ² Sok. adds that he should give names to all fourfooted things. ³ Made subject to Adam all the newly created things, B. ⁴ Secondly he placed all things under the rule of and made them obedient, B. Made them dumb and made them deaf to obey, A. ⁵ As unto every man, Sok. ⁶ A adds every. ⁷ But the soul of man shall judge the animals in this world, A; B gives the sense of the verse; but there shall not be a judgement of every living soul but only of that of man, and (P) in the great life to come.

¹ I have followed Sok. in verses 5, 6. B partly preserves the sense there is one place and one fold for the souls of beasts. For every living soul which God has made was not reserved for the great judgement. And every soul of beasts, &c., as in text. A is transposed and corrupt; There is a special place for mankind; as there is every soul of man according to his number, so the beast also shall not perish. And every soul of beast which God has made shall bring a charge against man at (or until) the great judgement if, &c., as in text.

incapable of acting rationally on account of their bodies; according to Xenocrates they possessed a consciousness of God, καθόλου γοῦν τὴν περὶ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐννοιαν Ξενοκράτης . . . οὐκ ἀπελπίζει καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀλόγοις ζώοις (Clem. Strom. v. 590). Chrysippus ascribed reason to brutes (Chalkid in Tim. p. 148 b); while Sextus Medicus (ix. 127) maintained that the souls of brutes and of men were alike. Hence it was generally believed that the souls of men could pass into brutes, πρῶτον μὲν ἀθάνατον εἶναι φησι τὴν ψυχὴν, εἴτα μεταβάλλουσιν εἰς ἄλλα γένη ζώων (Porph. V. P. 19): while Plato indeed went further and derived the souls of all brutes ultimately from those of men, through a process of deterioration, ὥς γάρ ποτε ἐξ ἀνδρῶν γυναῖκες καὶ τᾶλλα θηρία γενήσονται, ἰπίσταντο οἱ ἐξηνιστάντες ἡμᾶς (Tim. 76 D). With regard to individual animals, some thinkers believed that bees contained a divine element (Virg. Georg. iv. 219-221), while Democritus and Pliny placed religion among the moral virtues of elephants (H. N. viii. 1). But the closest parallels are to be found in Zoroastrianism, to which indeed we should probably trace in some measure the ideas of the text. Thus in the Zend-Avesta Vendidad Fargard 13 (Darmesteter) we find an entire chapter dealing with the sacredness of the life of the domesticated dog and the crime of attempting its life—its murderer was to lose his soul to the ninth generation (1-4): with the food that was to be given to it and the penalties entailed by feeding it badly (20-28), which were to range from fifty to two hundred blows with the horse-goad. Nay more, the land, its pastures and crops were to suffer for the unatoned death of the dog, and these plagues were not to be removed till the man who had slain it was slain in turn or had offered sacrifices three days and three nights to the pious soul of the departed dog (54, 55). Finally, the soul of the dog went after death to the source of the waters (51). In the Midrash Koheleth, fol. 329, col. 1, we find the following quaint and slightly analogous thought: 'Rabbi Chama, the son of Gorion, said that wolves and unfruitful trees must give account: just as man must give account, so also must unfruitful trees.' Eisenmenger, i. 468. It is noteworthy that the ideas of the text have passed over into the creed of the Mohammedans. Thus, according to Sale's note on the sixth chapter of the Koran, irrational animals will be

[Enoch teaches all his Sons why they must not touch the Flesh of Cattle, because of what comes from it.]

LIX. 1. He, who acts lawlessly with regard to the souls of beasts, acts lawlessly with regard to his own soul. 2. For a man offers clean animals *and makes his sacrifice that he may preserve his soul¹. And if he offer as a sacrifice from clean *beasts and² birds³, he preserves his soul. 3. Everything that⁴ is given you for food, bind by the four feet: that is an atonement: he acts righteously (therein) and preserves his soul. 4. But he who kills a beast without a wound kills his own soul and sins against his restored to life at the resurrection that they may be brought to judgement and have vengeance taken on them for the injuries they had inflicted on each other in this life. Then after they have duly retaliated their several wrongs, God will turn them again to dust (Sale's Koran, Prelim. Discourse, Sect. iv), with the exception of Ezra's ass and the dog of the seven sleepers which will enjoy eternal life in Paradise (Koran iii; xviii). Are we to interpret in this manner Orac. Sibyll. viii. 415-418?—

LIX. ¹ And then he preserves his soul, B. ² B om. ³ A adds it is a salvation for man. ⁴ A om.; B OMITTS VERSES 3, 4, 5.

καὶ ὕστερον ἐς κρίσιν ἤξω κρίνων εὐσεβέων καὶ δυσσεβέων βίον ἀνδρῶν·

καὶ κρινὸν κρινῶ καὶ ποιμένι ποιμένα θήσω καὶ μόσχον μόσχῳ πέλας ἀλλήλων ἐς ἐλεγχον.

Even in Christian times animals were credited with intelligence, conscience, responsibility, as well as with the passions, vices and virtues of mankind (see Bestie delinquenti, D'Addosio, 1892, from which the following facts are taken). They were accordingly solemnly tried, and advocates were assigned at the public expense to them to plead their cause. Thus moles (824 A. D.), a sow (1324), a cock (1474), snails (1487) were duly tried and condemned. They were also occasionally subjected to torture, and their cries were regarded as a confession of guilt (l. c. p. 46). Even as late as 1531 a book was written by Chassauée to discuss the lawfulness of trying animals judicially, and the legitimate methods of procedure (l. c. p. 75).

LIX. 1. He who acts lawlessly, &c. At first sight this would seem to refer to the sin of bestiality, and such was the view of the scribe of A: see title, but the context is against this, as verses 2-4 clearly show. Hence some illegitimate method of sacrificing or slaughtering animals seems to be referred to here. 2, 3. These verses point to a date prior to the destruction of the temple, 70 A.D. 4. Against own flesh. 5. And if any one does an injury to an animal secretly, it is an evil custom and he sins against his soul.

[*How we ought not to kill a Man, neither with Weapon nor with Tongue*¹.]

LX. 1. If he does an injury to the soul of man, he does an injury to his own soul; and there is no salvation for his flesh, *nor forgiveness² for ever³. 2. He who kills the soul of a man, kills his own soul, and destroys his own body, and there is no salvation for him for ever. 3. He who prepares a net for another man *will fall into it himself and there is no salvation for him for ever⁴. 4. He, who prepares a weapon against a man, shall not escape punishment in the great judgement for ever. 5. If a man acts crookedly or speaks evil against any soul, he shall have no righteousness for himself for ever.

[Enoch admonishes his Sons to preserve themselves from Unrighteousness, and to stretch out their hands frequently to the Poor, and to give them something from their Labours.]

LXI. 1. Now therefore, my children, preserve your hearts from every unrighteousness which the Lord hates. As a man asks his soul from God, so let him do to every living soul⁵. 2. *For in the world to come², *I know all things

LX. ¹ A inserts this title after verse 1. ² B om. ³ B adds but when a man is in Paradise he is liable to judgement no more. ⁴ Shall not lose the punishment for it in the day of judgement for ever, Sok. B OMTS VERSES 2-5.

LXI. ⁵ B adds Even if it be not for eternal life.

strangling beasts. 5. Bestiality may be here referred to.

LX. 1. The sin referred to in 1 Thess. iv. 6. 3. Cf. Pss. ix. 15; xxxv. 8; lvii. 6. In this verse and the next two there is an utter want of proportion between the sin and its punishment. 5. Cf. Ps. ci. 5.

LXI. 1. Unrighteousness which the Lord hates. Cf. Jud. v. 17; Ecclus. xv. 11, 13. 2. In the world to come . . . many mansions. Cf. Eth. En. xxxix. 4, 7, 8; xli. 2; John how that¹ there are many mansions prepared for men ; * good for the good ; evil for the evil ; many and without number². 3. Blessed are those who shall go to the mansions of the blessed³ ; for in the evil ones there is no rest nor any means of return from them. 4. Listen, my children, both small and great : When a man * conceives a good thought in his heart and brings⁴ gifts before the Lord of his labours—if his hands have not wrought them⁵ then the Lord turns away His face from the labour of his hands, and * he cannot gain advantage from⁶ the work of his hand. 5. But if his hands have wrought, but his heart murmurs * and he does not make an offering of his heart, but murmurs⁷ continually, he has no success.

[How it is proper to bring one's Gifts with Faith, and how there is no Repentance after Death.]

LXII. 1. Blessed is the man who in patience shall bring ¹ I know that, Sok. ; B om. ² Numberless abodes for the good and the evil, B. ³ B OMITS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ⁴ Sets it in his heart to bring, Sok. ⁵ The labour, Sok. ⁶ It is impossible for him to find, Sok. ⁷ The sickness of his heart will not cease and making a murmur, Sok.

xiv. 2. Good for the good, evil for the evil. This is adapted from Ecclus. xxix. 25 ἀγαθὰ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἐκτίσται ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, οὕτως τοῖς ἁμαρτωλοῖς κακά. Cf. Or. Sibyll. Fragm. iii. 18–19 τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἀγαθὸν προσφέρων πολὺ πλεονα μισθόν, τοῖς δὲ κακοῖς ἀδίκους τε χόλον. 4. The text seems corrupt. The idea is : it is a good thing to offer gifts to God ; but if a man sacrifice to God that which is another man's or is gotten wrongfully, God turns away His face from him. Cf. lxvi. 2. The author appears to have had before him Ecclus. xxxi. 21 θυσιάζων ἐξ ἀδίκου, προσφορά μεμωκημένη, 22 καὶ οὐκ εἰς εὐδοκίαν μοικήματα ἀνόμων. 23 οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ δ' ὕψιστος ἐν προσφοραῖς ἀσεβῶν.

Further in ver. 24 ὁ προσάγων θυσίαν ἐκ χρημάτων πενήταν is condemned. Finally with he cannot gain advantage from, &c., compare ver. 28 τί ἀφέλησαν πλεῖον ἢ κόπου ; If his hands have not wrought them. Cf. Or. Sibyll. viii. 403, 406 :

τούτῳ μὲν καθαρὴν θῆς ἀναίμακτόν τε τράπεζαν ἐκ μόχθων ἰδίων πορίσας ἀγναῖς παλάμῃσιν.

5. Men must offer willingly : only those are blessed. Cf. Exod. xxv. 2 ; xxxv. 5 ; Prov. xi. 25. But his heart murmurs. Cp. lxiii. 2 ; Deut. xv. 10 'thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him.' Ecclus. xxxii. 10, 11 ἐν ἀγαθῷ ὀφθαλμῷ δόξασον τὸν κύριον . . . καὶ ἐν εὐφροσύνῃ ἁγιάσον δεκάτην.

his gifts¹ before the face of the Lord, for he shall avert the recompense of his sin. 2. *If he speaks words out of season² *there is no repentance for him: if he lets the appointed time³ pass and does not *perform the work, he is not blessed; for⁴ there is no repentance after death. 3. For every deed which a man does *unseasonably is⁵ an offence before men, and a sin before God.

[How one must not despise the Humble, but give to them truly, so that thou mayest not be accursed before God.]

LXIII. 1. When a man clothes the naked and feeds the hungry, he gets a recompense from God. 2. If his heart murmurs, *he works for himself a double evil: he works destruction to that which he gives and there shall be no reward for it⁶: 3. *And the poor man, when his heart is satisfied or his flesh is clothed⁷ and he acts contemptuously, he destroys the effect of *all his endurance of poverty⁸ and *shall not gain the blessing of a recompense⁹. 4. For the Lord hates every contemptuous *and proud-speaking¹⁰ man: *and likewise every lying word: and that which is covered with unrighteousness. And it is cut with the sharpness of a deadly sword, and thrown into the fire, and burns for ever¹¹.

LXII. ¹ A adds with faith. ² If he remembers the appointed time to utter his prayer, B. If before the time he recalls his word, Sok. ³ B omits, AND ALSO THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ⁴ Act righteously, A. ⁵ Before the time and after the time is altogether, Sok.

LXIII. ⁶ He works for himself a double destruction and when he gives anything to a man there shall be no reward for that which he has given, A. B reads He renders his deeds of mercy profitless. ⁷ Nay more if food fill his heart to the full or his flesh is clothed, A. If he becomes overfed. B. ⁸ His good works, B. ⁹ Does not return with gratitude the benefits he has received, A. Gains nothing, B. ¹⁰ B om. ¹¹ And every lying word is sharpened with unrighteousness, and is cut with the sharpness of a deadly sword, and that cutting has no healing for ever, Sok. B om.

LXII. 1. Forgiveness is not the message of this book. For most sins there is no pardon. 2. Words out of season. The text is hopeless here.

LXIII. 1. See ix (notes). 2. See lxi. 5 (note). 4. The Lord hates, &c. Pss. xviii. 27; ci. 5; Prov. vi. 16, 17.

[How the Lord calls Enoch: the People take Counsel to go to kiss him in the Place called Achuzan.]

LXIV. 1. When Enoch said these words to his sons, *and the princes of the people¹, all the people *far and near² heard how the Lord called Enoch. And³ they took counsel, *and they all said⁴: 'Let us go and kiss Enoch!' 2. And the men assembled to the number of 2000⁵, and came to the place Achuzan⁶, where Enoch was, and his sons. 3. And⁷ the elders of the people⁸ *came together and made obeisance and⁹ kissed Enoch, and said to him: '*Enoch, our father⁹; be thou blessed of the Lord, the eternal King!' 4. And now bless thy *sons, and all the⁹ people, that we may be glorified *before thee to-day. 5. For thou art glorified⁹ before the face of the Lord *for ever¹; since God has chosen thee *above all men upon the earth, and has appointed thee⁹ as *the scribe of His creation of visible and invisible things, and⁹ an avenger¹⁰ of the sins of men, *and a succour to thy family⁹!' And Enoch answered all his people saying⁹:

[Of the Exhortation of Enoch to his Sons.]

LXV. 1. 'Listen, my children: before that anything existed *and all creatures were made, the Lord made¹¹ all things both visible and invisible. 2. *When the times of these things

LXIV. ¹ A om. ² And all his neighbours, B. For how the Lord, B reads how the Lord God. ³ A B om. ⁴ Saying, B; A om. ⁵ 4000, B. ⁶ Asukhan, B. ⁷ A adds all the host of. ⁸ Sok. adds and all the host. ⁹ B om. ¹⁰ One who removes, A B.

XLV. ¹¹ The Lord made the world and then created, B. The Lord made, A.

LXIV. 5. Scribe of His creation. See xl. 13 (note); liii. 2. Avenger, &c. This may refer to Enoch's office at the final judgement when he recounts all the deeds of men. See quotation from Test. Abraham given in note on XL. 13. The reading, however, of A B one who removes may be right. Enoch may be conceived as a mediator. Cf. Philo's conception of the Logos i. 501.

LXV. 1. Made. This must mean had come and were passed, understand how¹ after all these things He made man in His own image *after His¹ likeness, and placed in him eyes to see; and ears to hear; and a heart to understand, and reason² to take counsel. 3. And the Lord contemplated the world for the sake of man³, and made all the creation for his sake⁴, and divided* it into times. And from the times He made years, and from the years He made months, and from the months He made days, and of the days He made seven. 4. And in these He made the hours⁵ *and divided them into small portions¹, that a man should understand *the seasons, and compute years and months, and hours; their alternations and beginnings and ends: and⁶ that he should compute *his life from the beginning till death⁷, *and should meditate upon his sin, and should write down his evil and good deeds. 5. For nothing done is concealed before the Lord. Let each man know his deeds, and not transgress the commandments and let him keep My writings securely from generation to generation¹. 6. When *all the creation of visible and invisible things⁸ comes to an end which the Lord has made; then every man shall come to the great judgement of the Lord⁹. 7. Then¹⁰ the times shall perish, *and

¹ B om. ² With his mind, A. ³ Saw all the works of man, A. B om. ⁴ A om. B transposes it into next sentence. ⁵ Time for the sake of man, and determined the times and the years, and the months and the hours, B. ⁶ The changes of the times and the end and the beginning of the years, and the end and the days and hours, B. ⁷ The death of his life, B. ⁸ The world, B. ⁹ A om. ¹⁰ And then all, A.

‘devised,’ if it is original. 2. Made man in his own image . . . understand. This agrees too closely to be accidental with Ecclus. xvii. 3 κατ’ εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ ἐποίησεν αὐτούς. 5. . . . ὁφθαλμούς, ὦτα καὶ καρδίαν ἔδωκε διαναεῖσθαι αὐτοῖς. 4. Understand the seasons . . . beginnings and ends. We have here a close resemblance to Wisdom vii. 17-18 αὐτὸς γὰρ ἔδωκε . . . εἰδέναι . . . ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος καὶ μεσότητα χρόνων, τροπῶν ἀλλαγὰς καὶ μεταβολὰς καιρῶν. 5. See xxxiii. 9 (note). 6. The judgement closes the existence of man on earth. At this judgement all men must appear, but there is nothing to suggest that there is a resurrection of the body. 7. See there shall be no year, nor month, nor day, and there shall be no hours nor shall they be reckoned¹. 8. There shall be one eternity, and all the just * who shall escape the great judgement of the Lord² shall be gathered together in eternal life * and for ever and ever the just shall be gathered together and they shall be eternal³. 9. Moreover there shall be no labour, nor sickness, nor sorrow, * nor anxiety, nor need⁴, nor night, nor darkness, but a great⁵ light. 10. * And there shall be to them a great wall that cannot be broken down²; and bright⁶ * and incorruptible² paradise * shall be their protection, and their eternal habitation⁷. * For all corruptible things shall vanish², * and there shall be eternal life⁸.

[Enoch instructs his Sons, and all the Elders of the People: how with Fear and Trembling they ought to walk before the Lord, and serve Him alone, and not to worship Idols; for God made Heaven and Earth and every Creature and its Form.]

LXVI. 1. And now, my children, preserve your souls from all unrighteousness, which the Lord hates⁹. Walk before His face with fear * and trembling¹⁰, and serve Him alone.

¹ And the years moreover shall perish and the months and days and hours shall be dispersed and moreover shall not be counted, Sok. For hours . . . counted A reads there shall be no hours nor shall there be any addition to them or calculation. ² B om. ³ And there shall be one everlasting time for the just and they shall live for ever, A. And there shall be everlasting life for the just, being eternal, Sok. After eternal B adds and incorruptible. ⁴ A adds nor violence; Sok. reads nor necessary anxiety nor constraint. ⁵ B adds unending and never disturbed. ⁶ Great, B Sok. ⁷ B om. Sok. reads and there shall be the roof of the eternal habitation, and transposes to end of Chapter. ⁸ And incorruptible things shall come, Sok.

LXVI. ⁹ B OMITTS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER.

¹⁰ Sok. om.

xxxiii. 2. 8-9. A blessed immortality. 10. Wall. This may be the wall that divides Paradise (see ix) from the place of punishment (see x). 11. Cp. Eccclus. xiv. 19 πᾶν ἔργον σηπόμενον ἐκλείπει.

LXVI. 1. Unrighteousness which the Lord hates. Cf. Deut. xii. 31; Wisdom xiv. 9. Walk before His face with fear and trembling. Cf. Phil. ii. 12 'work out your own salvation with fear and

* Worship the true God, and not dumb idols. 2. But pay attention to His command¹, and bring every just offering before the face of the Lord. But the Lord hates that which is unrighteous. 3. For the Lord sees every thing; whatever man meditates in his heart, *and what counsel he plans², and every thought is continually before the Lord. 4. *If ye look at the heavens there is the Lord, as the Lord made the heavens. If ye look at the earth then the Lord is there since the Lord made firm the earth and established every creature in it³. If ye scrutinize the depths of the sea, and every thing under the earth there also is the Lord. For the Lord created all things. 5. Do not bow down to the work of men, *nor to the work of the Lord⁴, leaving *the Lord of all creation⁵; for no deed is concealed before the face of the Lord. 6. Walk, my children, in long suffering, in humility⁶, in spite of calumny, and insult; in faith, and truth: in the promises, and sickness, in abuse, in wounds, in temptation, *in nakedness, in deprivation⁷, loving one another, till ye depart from this world of sickness. Then ye shall be heirs of eternity. 7. Blessed are the just, who shall escape the great judgement⁸! And they shall be seven times brighter than the sun, for in this age altogether the seventh part is separated. 8. (Now concerning) the light, the darkness, the food, the sweetnesses, trembling.' For fear and trembling cf. also 2 Cor. vii. 15; Eph. vi. 5. 2. Bring every just offering. See lxi. 4 (note). 3. Sees every thing whatever man meditates, &c. Cf. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; 2 Chron. vi. 30; Ps. xciv. 11; Prov. xv. 11; Dan. ii. 30. 4. Founded partly on Ps. cxxxix.

¹ Sok. om. ² Then his reason counsels, Sok. ³ So Sok. transposed and defective in A. Who made firm the earth, and established every creature in it. If ye look at the heavens there is the Lord. ⁴ A om. ⁵ The works of the Lord, A. ⁶ A adds honour. ⁷ Deprivation and nakedness, Sok. ⁸ Sok. adds of the Lord.

8-12. The author has rightly omitted all reference to Sheol as this is already included in his conception of the heavens. 5. No deed is concealed, &c. Cf. Jer. xvi. 17; Ecclus. xvii. 15. 6. Cf. Rom. viii. 35; 2 Cor. xi. 27; 2 Pet. i. 4. 7. Cf. lxxv. 8. 8. Sweetnesses, &c. Eth. En. lxxix. 8.

the bitternesses, the paradise, the tortures, *the fires, the frosts and other things¹; *I have put² all this down in writing, that ye may read and understand.

[The Lord sent a Darkness upon the Earth, and covered the People and Enoch; and he was taken up on high; and there was Light in the Heavens.]

LXVII. 1. When Enoch had discoursed with the people, the Lord sent a darkness upon the earth, and there was a gloom, and it hid those men standing³ with Enoch. 2. And *the angels hasted and took Enoch and carried him⁴ to the highest heaven where the Lord⁵ received him, and set him before *His face⁶, and the darkness departed from the earth, and there was light. 3. And the people saw and did not understand, how Enoch was taken, and they glorified God. And they *who had seen such things⁷ departed⁸ to their houses⁹.

LXVIII. 1. Enoch was born on the sixth day of the month Tsivan¹⁰! he lived 365 years. He was taken up into heaven on the first day of the month Tsivan¹¹, and he was in heaven sixty days. 2. He wrote down the descriptions of all the creation which the Lord had made, and he wrote 366 books, and gave them to his sons. 3. And he was on earth

¹ Sok. om. ² Put, A.

LXVII. ³ A adds and talking. ⁴ They took him, A. ⁵ A adds is and they. ⁶ The face of the Lord, A. ⁷ Sok. om. A reads Found the roll in which was the instruction concerning the invisible God and they. ⁸ A adds all. ⁹ B adds and concludes with to our God be glory for ever, Amen.

LXVIII. ¹⁰ Pamorus, Sok. ¹¹ Nisan, Sok.

LXVII. 2. Highest heaven. LV. 2. In Asc. Is. ix. 7 the seventh This is an exceptional privilege; for heaven is represented as the future Paradise in the third heaven is the habitation of the righteous. eternal abode of the righteous. See thirty days¹, and thus he was taken to heaven in the same² month Tsivan³ on the *same day the² sixth day; the day on which he was born, and the same hour. 4. As each man has *but a dark existence⁴ in this life, so also is his beginning *and birth⁵, and departure from this life. In what hour he began; in that he was born, and in that he departs. 5. And Methusalem hasted, and all⁵ his brethren⁶, the sons of Enoch, and built an altar in the place called Achuzan, *whence and when Enoch⁷ was taken up *to heaven⁵. 6. And they took⁸ cattle, and invited all the people and sacrificed victims⁹ before the face of the Lord. 7. *All the people came and the elders of the people; all the host of them to the festivity, and brought their gifts to the sons of Enoch, and made a great festivity, rejoicing and being merry for three days; praising God who had given such a sign by means of Enoch, who had found favour with Him. And that they should hand it down to their son's sons, from generation to generation, for ever. Amen⁵.

¹ Sok. adds having spoken with them.

² A om.

³ Pamorus, Sok.

⁴ An equal nature, Sok.

⁵ Sok. om.

⁶ Sok. adds and all.

⁷ Where, Sok.

⁸ Sok. adds animals and.

⁹ Victim, Sok.

APPENDIX.

THE following fragment of the Melchizedekian literature was found by Professor Sokolov in the chief MS. on which he has based his text. In this MS. it is given as an organic factor of the Slavonic Enoch. This is done by omitting all the words in A lxviii. 7, after 'merry for three days,' and then as we see below immediately proceeding 'And on the third day,' &c. No hint of this large addition is found in A or B, but Sokolov writes that it appears in several MSS. to which he had access. The reader will observe that in many passages it implies the Slavonic Enoch. The text is obviously corrupt in many places.

We have in this fragment a new form of the Melchizedek myth. For the other forms it took see Bible Dictionaries in loc. This fragment seems to be the work of an early Christian heretic as we may infer from iii. 34 ; iv. 8.

I. 1. And on the third day at the time of the evening the elders of the people spake to Methusalam saying : 'Stand before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all the people, and before the face of the altar of the Lord, and thou shalt be glorified among the people.' 2. And Methusalam answered his people : 'Wait, O men, until the Lord God of my father Enoch—shall himself raise up to himself, a priest over his people.' 3. And the people waited yet a night to no purpose on the place Akhuzan. 4. And Methusalam was near the altar, and prayed to the Lord and said, 'Oh ! only Lord of all the world, who hast taken my father Enoch, do thou raise up a priest for thy people, and teach their hearts to fear thy glory, and to do all according to thy will.' 5. And Methusalam slept, and the Lord appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him 'Listen, Methusalam, I am the Lord God of thy father Enoch, hear the voice of this people, and stand before My altar and I will glorify thee before the face of all the people, and thou shalt be glorified all the days of thy life.' 6. And Methusalam arose from his sleep, and blessed the Lord who had appeared to him. 7. And the elders of the people hastened to Methusalam and the Lord God inclined the heart of Methusalam to hear the voice of the people, and he said: 'The Lord God gives His blessing upon all these people before my eyes to-day. (May the Lord your God) do what is a good thing in His eyes to this people.' 8. And Sarsan and Kharmis, and Zazus, the elders of the people hastened and clothed Methusalam in beautiful garments and placed a bright crown on his head. 9. And the people hastened, and brought sheep and cattle and of birds all that was known (to be proper for) Methusalam to sacrifice before the face of the Lord, and in the name (before the face) of the people. 10. And Methusalam went out to the altar of the Lord, and his face shone like the sun, as it is rising in the day, and all the people were following after him. 11. And Methusalam stood before the altar of the Lord, and all the people stood round the altar. 12. And the elders of the people took sheep, and oxen, and bound their four feet, and laid them on the top of the altar, and said to Methusalam; 13. 'Lift the knife and kill them according to the proper way before the face of the Lord.' 14. And Methusalam stretched out his hands to the heavens and called to the Lord, saying thus: 'Woe is me, O Lord! who am I to stand at the head of Thy altar and at the head of these people. 15. Now, Lord, look down on Thy servant and on all these people. Now let all the things sought for happen and give a blessing to Thy servant before the face of all the people, that they may understand that thou hast appointed a priest over Thy people. 16. And it came to pass that when Methusalam had prayed, the altar shook, and a knife rose from the altar, and leaped into the hand of Methusalam before the face of all the people. And the people trembled, and glorified the Lord. 17. And Methusalam was honoured before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all the people from that day. 18. And Methusalam took the knife, and killed every thing that was brought by the people. And they rejoiced, and were merry before the face of the Lord and before the face of Methusalam on that day. 19. And afterwards the people departed each to his own house.

II. 1. Methusalam began to stand at the altar before the face of the Lord and all the people from that day for ten years, trusting in an eternal inheritance, and having taught well the whole land and all his people; and no man was found to turn from the Lord in vanity during all the days in which Methusalam lived. 2. And the Lord blessed Methusalam and was pleased with his sacrifices, and his gifts and all his services which he served before the face of the Lord. 3. And when the time of the days of the departure of Methusalam took place, and the Lord appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him : 'Listen, Methusalam ! I am the Lord God of thy father Enoch, I order thee to see, how the days of thy life are finished, and the day of thy rest has drawn near. 4. Call Nir, the son of thy son Lamech, the second, born after Noah, and clothe him in the robes of thy consecration, and place him by my altar, and tell him all that shall be in his days, because the time of the destruction of the whole earth draws near, and of every man and every living thing upon the earth. 5. For in his days there shall be a very great confusion upon the earth, because a man has been envious of his neighbour, and people have become inflamed against people and nation stirs up war against nation, and all the earth is filled with foulness and blood, and every kind of evil. 6. And moreover in addition they deserted their Maker, and have bowed down to vain gods, and to the firmament of heaven, and the course of the earth and the waves of the sea. And the adversary is multiplied and rejoices in his deeds to My great vexation. 7. And all the earth changes its form, and every tree and every fruit changes its seeds, expecting the time of destruction. And all peoples are changing upon the earth to My grief. 8. Then I shall command the abysses to pour themselves upon the earth, and the great treasures of the waters of heaven shall come upon the earth in their nature and according to their first nature. 9. And all the stability of the earth shall perish and all the earth shall tremble and shall be deprived of its strength from that day. 10. Then I will preserve the son of thy son Lamech, his first son Noe and from his seed I will raise up another world, and his seed shall exist for ever till the second destruction when also men shall sin before my face. 11. Methusalam leaped up from his sleep and his dream troubled him greatly. And he called all the elders of the people and told them all that the Lord had said to him, and all the vision that had appeared to him from the Lord. 12. And the people were grieved at his vision, and answered him : 'Let the Lord God do according to his will ! And now, Methusalam, accomplish thou all things which the Lord enjoined thee.' 13. And Methusalam called Nir, the son of Lamech, the younger brother of Noe, and clothed him in the robes of the priesthood before the face of all the people, and placed him at the head of the altar, and taught him all that he was to do among the people. 14. And Methusalam called to the people: 'Lo ! Nir will be before your face from to-day as a prince and a leader.' 15. And the people said to Methusalam, 'Let it be unto us according to thy word, and let the voice of the Lord be as He spoke to thee.' 16. And when Methusalam had spoken to the people before the altar, his spirit was confused, and he bent his knees, and stretched out his hands to the heavens, and prayed to God. And as he prayed his spirit went forth to the Lord. 17. And Nir and all the people made haste and made a grave for Methusalam in the place Aruzan. 18. And Nir came in glorious attire in all his priestly robes, with lights, with much pomp, and the people lifted up the body of Methusalam, and having glorified it, laid it in the grave, which they had made for him, and buried him, and said: 'Blessed was Methusalam before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all people.' 19. When they were about to depart to their own households, Nir said to the people: 'Go quickly now, and bring sheep and heifers, and turtle-doves, and pigeons, and let us offer them before the face of the Lord, and then go to your houses.' 20. And the people listened to Nir the priest, and hastened and brought the victims, and bound them to the head of the altar. 21. And Nir took the sacrificial knife, and slew all the [victims] that were brought, and offered them before the face of the Lord. 22. And all the people rejoiced before the face of the Lord, and glorified on that day the Lord of Nir, the ruler of heaven and earth. From that day there was peace and order over the whole earth in the days of Nir, during 202 years. 23. And then the people turned from God and began to be jealous one of another, and people rebelled against people, and tongue arose against tongue, in reviling. 24. And if lips were the same, hearts chose different things. 25. And then the devil began to reign for the third time, the first time before paradise, the second time in paradise, the third time outside of paradise, he continued (doing so) till the deluge. 26. And there arose a great dispute and confusion. And Nir the priest heard it, and was greatly grieved, and said in his heart, 'In truth I have understood that the time has drawn near, and the end which the Lord spake to Methusalam, the father of my father Lamech.

III. 1. And the wife of Nir, named Sopanima, being barren, brought forth no child to Nir. 2. And Sopanima was in the time of her old age, and on the day of her death she conceived in her womb, and Nir the priest did not sleep with her, nor knew her from the day that the Lord appointed him to serve before the face of the people. 3. When Sopanima knew of her conception she was ashamed, and felt humbled, and concealed herself all the days, till she brought forth, and no one of the people knew. 4. And when 282 days were accomplished and the day of birth began to draw near, Nir remembered about his wife, and called her to himself in his house, that he might talk to her. 5. And Sopanima came to Nir, her husband, being with child, and the appointed day of the birth was drawing near. 6. And Nir saw her and was very much ashamed, and said to her: 'What hast thou done, wife, and hast shamed me before the face of these people. And now depart from me, and go where thou didst commence the shame of thy womb, so that I defile not my hand upon thee, and sin before the face of the Lord!' 7. And Sopanima spake unto Nir, her husband, saying: 'My lord, lo! the time of my old age, and the day of my death has come (and there was no youth in me) and I do not know when the period of my years is past, and the unfruitfulness of my womb begin.' 8. And Nir did not believe his wife, and said to her a second time: 'Depart from me lest I do thee an injury, and sin before the face of the Lord!' 9. And it came to pass, when Nir had spoken to his wife, Sopanima fell at the feet of Nir, and died. 10. And Nir was very much grieved, and said in his heart: 'Was this from my voice, since a man by his voice and thought sins before the face of the Lord. 11. Now the Lord is merciful to me; I know in truth in my heart, that my hand was not upon her. And so I say: "Glory to thee, oh! Lord, since no one on earth knows this deed, which the Lord has wrought!"' 12. And Nir hastened and shut the doors of the house, and went to Noe, his brother, and told him all, that had happened concerning his wife. 13. And Noe hastened, and came with Nir, his brother, into the house of Nir, on account of the death of Sopanima, and they talked to themselves (and saw) how her womb was at the time of the birth. 14. And Noe said to Nir: 'Let it not be a subject of sorrow to thee, Nir, my brother, that the Lord has to-day concealed our shame because no one of the people knows this. 15. Now let us go quickly, and bring her secretly, and may the Lord hide the ignominy of our shame. 16. And they laid Sopanima on the bed, and they wrapped her with black robes, and shut her in the house ready for burial, and dug a grave in secret. 17. And then came an infant from the dead Sopanima, and sat on the bed at her right hand. And Noe, and Nir entered, and saw the infant sitting by the dead Sopanima and wiping its clothes. 18. And Noe, and Nir were tempted with a great fear, for the child was complete in its body, like one of three years old; and spake with its lips, and blessed the Lord. 19. And Noe, and Nir gazed upon it; and lo! the seal of the priesthood was on its breast, and it was glorious in countenance. 20. And Noe, and Nir said 'See the Lord renews the consecration according to our blood, as he desires (this is from the Lord, my brother, and the Lord renews the blood of consecration in us).' 21. And Noe and Nir hastened, and washed the child, and clothed it in priestly raiment, and gave it the blessed bread. And it ate. And they called its name Melchizedek. 22. And Noe and Nir took the body of Sopanima, and stripped from her the black robes, and clothed her in very bright robes, and built a church for her (another house—a beautified grave). 23. And Noe, and Nir, and Melchizedek came and buried her publicly. And Noe said to his brother Nir: 'Watch this child in secret till the time, because deceitful people shall arise over all the earth and shall begin to reject God, and having perceived nothing shall put him to death. And then Noe went out to his own place. 24. And great lawlessness began to multiply over the whole earth, in the days of Nir. 25. And Nir began to be very anxious, especially about the child, saying: 'Woe is me, eternal Lord. In my days have begun to multiply all kinds of lawlessness upon the earth, and I understand, how that the end is near unto us more (than ever), and upon all the earth for the lawlessness of the people. 26. And now, Lord, what is the vision, and what is the solution of it, and what shall I do for (the child)?—Will it also go with us to destruction?' 27. And the Lord heard Nir, and appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him: 'Nir, I do not endure the great lawlessness that has been on the earth in many things, and lo! I wish now to send a great destruction upon the earth, and every earthly creature shall perish. 28. But do not trouble thyself about the child, Nir, for in a short time I will send my chief captain Michael, and he shall take the child and place him in the paradise of Eden, in the garden where Adam was formerly during a period of seven years, having the heaven always open until the time of his sin. 29. And this child shall not perish with those who perish in this generation, as I have shown, but shall be a holy priest in all things, Melchizedek, and I will appoint him that he may be the chief of the priests who were before (alia lectio—that he may be a priest of priests for ever, and I will consecrate him, and will appoint him over the people being made greatly holy). 30. And Nir rose from his sleep, and blessed the Lord, who had appeared unto him, saying: 'Blessed is the Lord God of my fathers, who has spoken unto me, (some MSS. add—who will not allow the depreciation of my priesthood in the priesthood of my fathers, as thy word), who made a great priest in my days in the womb of my wife Sopanima. (Some MSS. add—31. Because I had no family and this child shall be to me in the place of my family, and shall be as a son to me, and thou shalt honour him with Thy servants the priests, with Seth, and Enoch, and Tharasidam, Maleleil, and Enos, and thy servant, and thus Melchizedek shall be a priest in another generation. 32. For I know that this generation shall end in confusion, and all shall perish. And Noe, my brother, shall be preserved in that day. 33. And from my race shall rise up many people, and Melchizedek shall be the chief of the priests among the people, ruling alone, serving thee O Lord!) 34. Because I had not another child in this family, who might be a great priest, but this son of mine, and thy servant; and do thou great Lord, on this account honour him with thy servants, and great priests—with Seth, and Enos, and Rusii, and Almilam, and Prasadam, and Maleleil, and Seroch, and Arusan, and Aleem, and Enoch, and Methusalam, and me, thy servant Nir, and Melchizedek shall be the head over twelve priests who lived before, and at last shall be the head over all, (being) the great high priest, the Word of God, and the power to work great and glorious marvels above all that have been. 35. He, Melchizedek, shall be a priest and king in the place Akhuzan, that is to say, in the middle of the earth where Adam was created: there shall at last be his grave. 36. And concerning that chief priest it has been written that he also shall be buried there, where there is the middle of the earth, as Adam buried his son Abel there whom his brother Cain killed, wherefore he lay three years unburied, till he saw a bird called a jackdaw, burying its fledgling. 37. I know that a great confusion has come and this generation shall end in confusion, and all shall perish except that Noe my brother shall be preserved, and afterwards there shall be a planting from his family, and there shall be other people, and another Melchizedek shall be the head of the priests among the people, ruling, and serving the Lord.'

IV. 1. And when the child had been forty days under the roof of Nir, the Lord said to Michael: 'Go down upon the earth to Nir, the priest, and take My child Melchizedek, who is with him, and place him in the paradise of Eden for preservation, because the time draws nigh, and I will discharge all the water upon the earth, and all that is upon the earth shall perish. 2. (And I will establish another race, and Melchizedek shall be the chief of the priests, in that family, just as Seth is to me in this family¹.)

3. And Michael hastened, and came by night, and Nir was sleeping in his bed. And Michael appeared to him, and said to him: 'The Lord says unto thee, Nir: "Send the child to me; I entrusted him to thee."' 4. And Nir did not know that the chief captain Michael was speaking to him, and his heart was confused, and he said: 'If the people know about the child, and take him, they will slay him. For the heart of this people is crafty before the face of the Lord. And Nir said to him who spoke to him 'The child is not with me, and I do not know who thou art, who art speaking to me.'

5. And he who was speaking to me answered: 'Be not afraid, Nir, I am the chief captain of the Lord. The Lord hath sent me, and lo! I will take thy child to-day, and will go with him, and will place him in the paradise of Eden, and there shall he be for ever. 6. And when the twelfth generation shall be, and a thousand and seventy years shall be, in that generation a just man shall be born, and the Lord shall tell him to come out upon that mountain where the ark of thy brother Noe shall stand, and he shall find there another Melchizedek who has lived there seven years, concealing himself from the people who worship idols, so that they should not slay him, and he shall lead him forth and he shall be priest, and the first king in the town of Salem after the fashion of this Melchizedek, the commencement of the priests. And 3432 years shall be fulfilled till that time from the beginning and creation of Adam. 7. And from that Melchizedek there shall be twelve priests in number till the great Igumen, that is to say leader, who shall bring forth all things visible and invisible.

8. And Nir understood his first dream, and believed it, and having answered Michael, he said: 'Blessed is the Lord, who has glorified thee to-day to me, and now bless thy servant Nir, as we are drawing near our departure from this world, and take the child, and do unto him as the Lord hath spoken unto thee. 9. And Michael took the child on that night on which he came, and took him on his wings, and placed him in the paradise of Eden. 10. And Nir having risen on the following day, went to his house, and did not find the child, and there was instead of joy very great sorrow, because he had no other son except this (alia lectio—because he looked upon this child in the place of a son). 11. So died Nir, and after him there was no priest among the people. And from that time a great confusion arose on the earth.

¹ Clearly a variant of iii. 37.

V. 1. And God called Noe on the mountain of Ararat, between Assyria, and Armenia, in the land of Arabia, by the sea, and said to him: 'Make there an ark of 300 ells in length, and in breadth 50 ells, and in height 30, and two stories in the midst, and the doors about an ell. 2. And of those 300 ells, and of ours 15,000, and so of those 50, and of ours 2000 and 500, and so of those 30, and of ours 900, and of those one ell, and of ours 50.' 3. According to this number the Jews keep this measure of the ark of Noe, as the Lord said to him, and (so) they make each measure, and each rule even up to the present time. 4. The Lord God opened the doors of the heavens, and rain came on the earth 150 days, and all flesh died. 5. Noe was in the 500th year and begat three sons: Shem, Ham, and Japhet. 6. 100 years after the birth of his three sons, he went into the ark in the month according to the Hebrew Itsars, according to the Egyptian Famenoth in eighteen days. 7. And the ark floated forty days. And altogether they were in the ark 120 days. 8. And he went into the ark, being 600 years (old), and in the sixth hundred and first year of his life he went out of the ark in the month Farmut according to the Egyptians, and according to the Hebrews Nisan about twenty-eight days. 9. Then he lived 250 years, and died; he lived altogether 950 years according [to the will of] the Lord our God, to him be glory from the beginning, and now, and to the end of the world. Amen. 10. Enoch was altogether 365 years old.

11. In another way it is written here concerning Noah's ark. Of their 300 ells, and of ours 15,000, of theirs 100, and of ours 5000: of theirs 20, and of ours 1000; of theirs 10, and of ours 500: of theirs 5, and of ours 250: of theirs 1, and of ours 50! This is the truth spoken.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE PHOENIXES.

WHEN I wrote the note on the Phoenixes in XII. 1 I was not aware that mention of a class of these birds was to be found elsewhere. I have, however, since found in Dr. Kohler's article on 'The pre-Talmudic Haggada' (Jewish Quarterly, 1893, pp. 399-419) a quotation from an old Essene Mishna—Massecheth Derech Eretz—in which it is said that 'the generation of the bird מלרם' went alive into Paradise. This bird Dr. Kohler identifies with the Phoenix. The question is discussed in the Alphabetum Siracidis edited by Steinschneider, 1858, p. 28^b.

INDEX I.

PASSAGES FROM THE SCRIPTURES AND ANCIENT WRITERS CONNECTED OR CLOSELY PARALLEL WITH THE TEXT.

GENESIS:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—
i. 4, 5 xxvii. 1, 4.
9, 10 xxviii. 1, 2.

LEVITICUS:—
xviii. 5 ii. 2.

DEUTERONOMY:—
viii. 2 xlv. 4.
19 ii. 2.
xii. 31 lxvi. 1.
xxxii. 35 (lxx) . . l. 4.

1 SAMUEL:—
xii. 20 ii. 2.

1 CHRONICLES:—
xxviii. 9 lxvi. 3.

JOB:—
xxxviii. 22 v. 1.

PSALMS:—
xxviii. 3 lii. 14.
lv. 17 li. 4.
civ. 29 xxxiii. 9.
cxvi. 9 ii. 2.
cxix. 37 ix.
cxxxix. 8-12 . . lxvi. 4.
cl. 6 li. 5.

PROVERBS:—
vi. 16, 17 lxiii. 4.
xiv. 26 ii. 3.

ISAIAH:—
vi. 2, 3 xxi. 1.

JEREMIAH:—
x. 11 ii. 2.

EZEKIEL:—
x. 12 xx. 1.
xviii. 7, 8 ix.

DANIEL:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—
v. 6, 9, 10 i. 7.
x. 6 i. 5.

ST. MATTHEW:—
v. 9 lii. 11.
22 xlii. 2.
34, 35, 37 xlix. 1.
vii. 16, 20 xlii. 14.
xiv. 27 i. 8; xx. 2.
xxv. 34 ix. 1.

ST. LUKE:—
vi. 35 xlii. 7.

ST. JOHN:—
xiv. 2 lxi. 2.

ACTS:—
xiv. 15 ii. 2.

EPHESIANS:—
i. 21 xx. 1.
iii. 10 p. xli.
iv. 10 p. xli.
iv. 25 xlii. 12.
vi. 12 p. xl.

COLOSSIANS:—
i. 16 xx. 1.
20 p. xli.

PHILIPPIANS:—
ii. 12 lxvi. 1.

HEBREWS:—
iv. 14 p. xli.
vii. 26 p. xli.
xi. 3 p. xxii; xxiv. 2;
xxv. 1.

1 PETER:—
iii. 19 p. xli.

2 PETER:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

- ii. 4 vii. 1.
iii. 5 xlvii. 4.

REVELATION:—

- i. 16 i. 5.
iv. 6 iii. 3.
ix. 1 xlii. 1.
17 i. 5.
x. 5, 6 p. xxiii; xxxiii.
2; lxv. 7.
xi. 5 i. 5.
xix. 20 x. 2.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH:—

- iv. 3 p. xxi; xxxi. 2.

APOCALYPSE OF

EZRA:—

- p. 29 (ed. Tisch.) . . . p. xlv.

APOCALYPSE OF

PAUL:—

- p. 52 (ed. Tisch.) . . . viii. 5.
p. 57 „ . . . x. 2.
p. 64 „ . . . viii. 3, 5.

APOCALYPSE OF

MOSES:—

- p. 12 (ed. Tisch.) . . . viii. 3.
p. 19 „ . . . xiv. 2-4.

APOCALYPSE OF

ZEPHANIAH:—

- Fragment in Clem. Alex.
Strom. v. 11. 77 . . . xviii. 1.

ASCENSION OF

ISAIAH:—

- viii. 16 xix. 1.

BOOK OF ADAM AND

EVE:—

- I. vi. xxix. 4, 5.
I. viii. xxxi. 2.

ECCLESIASTICUS:—

- i. 2 xlvii. 5.
ii. 4 li. 3.
vii. 3 xlii. 11.
32 li. 1.
x. 20, 22, 24 . . . xliii. 2, 3.
xiv. 19 lxv. 11.
xv. 14, 15 xxx. 15.
xvii. 3, 5 lxv. 2.
xxviii. 9 lii. 12.
xxxi. 21-24, 28 . . . lxi. 4.
26 lii. 8.
xxxix. 14 lii. 5.
25 lxi. 2.

EPISTLE OF SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

BARNABAS:—

- xv. 4, 8 p. xxi.
xviii. 1 xxx. 15.

ETHIOPIA ENOCH:—

- vi. 2-6 xviii. 4.
vii. 2 xviii. 5.
ix. 5 l. 1.
x. 8 xviii. 5.
xiii. 4 vii. 4.
xiv. 8 iii. 1.
13 x. 2.
19 x. 2.
20 xx. 3.
22 (Greek) xxxiii. 3.
23 xxi. 1.
xv. 1 i. 8.
2 vii. 5.
xxv. 4, 5 viii. 3.
xxix. 2 viii. 1.
xli. 4 xl. 11.
xliii. 1, 2 xl. 2.
lix; lx. 13-15 . . . xl. 9.
lx. 17, 18 xl. 10.
19 v. 2.
19-22 xl. 8.
20 vi. 1.
lxi. 10 xx. 1.
lxix. 8 lxvi. 7.
lxxii. 2-37 xlii. 2-4.
5 xi. 2.
37 xi. 2.
lxxiii. 2 xi. 2.
lxxiv. xl. 5.
lxxv. 3 xi. 2.
lxxxii. 1, 2 xxxiii. 9.
3 xlviii. 7.
11-14 xl. 6.
lxxxiii. 3, 5 i. 2, 3.
xciii. 10 xlvii. 2.
cvi. 2 i. 5.

4 EZRA:—

- iv. 12 xli. 2.
[vi. 71] i. 5.

GOSPEL OF

NICODEMUS:—

- ii. 3 viii. 7.

JUBILEES:—

- ii. 7 xxx. 1.

SIBYLLINE ORACLES:—

- ii. 75 l. 5.
iii. 24-26 xxx. 13.
viii. 390, 391 xlv. 3.
403, 406 lxi. 5.

TESTAMENT OF SLAVONIO ENOCH:—

ISAAC:—

pp. 146–148 (ed.

James) . . . p. xliv.

TESTAMENT OF

JACOB:—

p. 153 (ed.

James) . . . p. xliv.

TESTAMENTS OF THE XII

PATRIARCHS:—

Levi 2 (see pp.

xxiii, xxiv) . . . iii. 3.

3 . . . vii. 1.

3 . . . x. 3.

3 . . . xvii.

Dan. 5 . . . xviii. 3.

Naphth. 2 . . . xxx. 9.

4 . . . xxxiv. 2, 3.

Benj. 9 . . . „ p. xxiv.

Jud. 18 . . . „ „

WISDOM:—

vii. 17, 18 . . . lxxv. 4.

AUGUSTINE:—

De Civ. xxii.

30. 5 . . . p. xix; xxxii.

2—xxxiii. 2.

CLEMENT OF

ALEXANDRIA:—

Strom. v. 11. 77 . xviii.

CLEMENT OF SLAVONIO ENOCH:—

ALEXANDRIA:—

Eclog. Prophet.

(ed. Dind. iii.

456) . . . xl. 1.

IRENÆUS:—

Adv. Haer. v.

28. 2 . . . xxxii. 2—

xxxiii. 2.

PHILO:—

De Somn. i. 13 . xxiv. 2.

i. 22 . xxiii. 5.

De Justitia, 7 . xxv. 1.De Mundi Op.

40, 46, 51 . . . xxx. 9.

46, 51 . . . xxx. 8.

Leg. All. ii. 7 . xxx. 8.De Spec. Leg.

ii. 1 . . . xlix. 1.

PSEUDO-CYPRIAN:—

De Montibus etSion, 4 . . . xxx. 13.

ORIGEN:—

De Princip. i.

3. 2 . . . p. xx; xxiv—

xxx; xlvii.

3, 4

iv. 35 . . . xl. 1.

INDEX II.

NAMES AND SUBJECTS.

(When thick type is used in this Index, it is to indicate that the subject in question is specially dealt with under the reference so given.)

- Abyss, the, xxviii. 3.
Achuzan, lxiv. 2; lxviii. 5.
Adam, creation of, xxx. 10-12.
 ,, named from the four quarters of the world, xxx. 13.
Adam and Eve, the Book, pp. xviii; 36, 40, 41, 44, 47.
Adoil, xxv. 2.
Angels created from fire on the first day, xxix. 1, 3.
 ,, of punishment, x. 3.
 ,, ten orders of, xx. 1, 3.
Aphrodite, the planet, xxx. 3.
Ares, the planet, xxx. 3.
Ariukh, xxxiii. 11.
Arkhas, xxvi. 2.
Augustine, pp. xix; xlv; 46, 47.

Barnabas, Epistle of, pp. xxi; 42.
Baruch, the Apocalypse of, p. xxi.
Bede, 41.
Bochart, 14.
Brandt, p. xxxix.
Brugsch, 14, 32.

Callistratus, the Acts of, p. xlv.
Cedrenus, p. xviii; 46.
Chalkadri, xii. 1; xv. 1.
Cherubin, xix. 6; xx. 1.
Cheyne, p. 14, 69, 70.
Chrysostom, p. xlv.
Clement of Alexandria, pp. xx; xliii. xlv; 10, 21, 74.
Clementine Recognitions, p. 3, 32.
Conybeare, 65.
Creation of the world, the, xxv-xxx.
Cycle, the Metonic, xvi. 8.

D'Addosio, p. 75.
Death came through Eve, xxx. 18.
 ,, caused by sin, xxx. 18.
Dionysian cycle, p. 19.

Ecclesiasticus, pp. xxv; 42, 43, 47, 58, 59, 61, 63, 66, 67, 68, 69, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82.
Egg-theory of the universe, the, xxv, xxvi.
Eisenmenger quoted, pp. xxxix; 25, 36, 66, 70, 74.
Elders, the rulers of the stars, the, pp. xxxvi; iv. 1.
Enoch, the scribe of God's works, xxiii. 1-3.
 ,, of men's deeds, xl. 13; liii. 2; lxiv. 5.
Enoch, the Slavonic: its relation to the Ethiopic Enoch, pp. vii, viii; xi.
 ,, its MSS., pp. xii-xiv.
 ,, written in Greek at Alexandria, pp. xvi, xvii.

- Enoch, the Slavonic : based in part on Hebrew originals, p. xxiv.
 „ „ written circ. 1-50 A.D. by an Egyptian Jew, pp. xxv, xxvi.
 „ „ its teaching on creation, anthropology, and ethics, pp. xxvii-xxix.
 „ „ its relation to Jewish and Christian literature, pp. xxvii-xxiv.
 Ezra, fourth, pp. xxi ; xxxviii ; 7, 9, 56.
 „ the Apocalypse of, p. xlv.
 Feuchtwang, p. xxxii.
 Freewill, man's, xxx. 15.
 Gaidal, i. 10 ; lvii. 2.
 Garden of Eden, the, viii. 6 ; xxxi. 1, 2.
 Glycas, 41.
 God's first coming to the earth, lviii. 1.
 „ second coming to the earth, xxxii. 1 ; xlii. 5.
 Grigori, the (i.e. of Εγρήγοροι), the Watchers, xviii. 1, 3.
 Guardians of the gates of hell, the, xlii. 1.
 Gunkel, pp. xxxvi ; xxxviii.
 Hawkins, p. xlii.
 Heaven, the old Semitic conception of, pp. xxxiv-xxxix ; x. 1.
 „ „ „ accepted partially in New Testament, pp. xxxix-xlii.
 Heaven, the first, iii-vi.
 „ the second, p. xxxv ; vii.
 „ the third, pp. xxxvi ; xxxix ; xl ; xlv ; viii-x.
 „ the fourth, pp. xxxvii ; xlv ; xi-xvii.
 „ the fifth, pp. xxxvii ; xlii ; xviii.
 „ the sixth, p. xxxvii ; xix.
 „ the seventh, p. xxxviii ; xx, xxi.
 Heavens, the seven, pp. xxx-xlvii ; iii-xxi.
 Hell or Hades, xl. 12 ; xli. 1 ; xlii. 1.
 Hermes, the planet, xxx. 3.
 Intercession of departed saints for the living denied, liii. 1.
 Irenaeus, pp. xxx ; xlv ; xlv ; 7.
 Isaiah, the Ascension of, p. xx ; 4, 23, 28, 36, 83.
 Jensen, p. xxxii.
 Joannis, Liber Apocryphus, quoted, 28.
 Joel the Chronographer, p. xvii ; 37.
 Josephus, 30, 44, 70, 73.
 Jubilees, the Book of, pp. 3, 35, 37, 41, 55.
 Khermion, lvii. 2.
 Kohler, p. 94.
 Koran, the, pp. xlvi ; xlvii ; 8, 75.
 Kruno, the planet, xxx. 3.
 Man created from seven substances, xxx. 8.
 „ with seven natures, xxx. 9.
 „ with freewill and knowledge of good and evil, xxx. 15, 16.
 „ to be judged for his treatment of animals, lviii. 5, 6.
 Man's works ordained before his creation, lii. 2.
 „ time in this world pre-ordained, xlix. 2.
 „ final ahode prepared, xlix. 2, 3 ; lviii. 5.
 Methuselah, i. 10.
 Michael, xxii. 6, 9 ; xxxiii. 10.
 Millennium, the, pp. xxvii ; xxix ; xxx ; xxxii. 2-xxxiii. 2.
 Moon, the course of the, xvi. 5-7.
 Moses, the Apocalypse of, pp. xviii ; xlv ; 7, 16, 17, 28.

- Noah, xxxv. 1.
Oil of mercy or of glory, the, xxii. 8, 9; lvi. 2.
Orders of angels, the ten, xx. 1, 3.
Origen, pp. xx; xliii; xlv; 13, 38.
Paradise, the earthly, viii. 6.
" the heavenly, viii. 1-4; xlii. 3, 4.
Pariukh, xxxiii. 11.
Paul, the Apocalypse of, pp. xix; 7, 8, 9, 10.
Peter, the Apocalypse of, pp. 2, 9, 10, 11.
Philastrus, p. xlv.
Philo, pp. xvii; xxvi; 30, 31, 32, 37, 39, 40, 43, 44, 65, 70, 79.
Phoenixes, the, xii. 1; xv. 1.
Planets, the, xxvii. 3; xxx. 3.
Plato, pp. 38, 42, 74.
Prayer, the hours of, li. 4.
Pseudo-Lactantius, p. 13.
Regim, i. 10; lvii. 2.
Resurrection, the, xxii. 8; 1. 2; lxv. 6.
Riman, lvii. 2.
River, the river of, x. 2.
Sacrifices, directions as to, xlv. 3; lix. 2, 3; lxi. 4, 5; lxvi. 2.
Satan, xxix. 4, 5; xxxi. 4-7.
Satanail, xviii. 3; xxix. 4, 5; xxxi. 4.
Sayce, p. xxxii.
Seraphim, the, p. xxx; xii. 1; xix. 6.
Sibylline Oracles, the, p. xix; 9, 10, 11, 12, 41, 42, 47, 53, 56, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 67, 69, 70, 75, 77.
Souls created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5.
Strangling of animals forbidden, lix. 4.
Sun, the course of the, xiii; xiv; xvi.
Swearing condemned, xlix. 1, 2.
Talmud, the, pp. xxxviii; 5, 21, 22, 24, 25, 32, 40, 66.
Tertullian, pp. xlv; 36.
Testament of Abraham quoted, pp. 10, 56.
" Isaac quoted, p. 11.
" Jacob quoted, p. 9.
Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, pp. xxxiii; xxxiv; xxxv; 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 20, 21, 24, 36, 40, 49.
Theodotus, pp. xlv; 11.
Thevan or Thevad, xlviii. 2.
Tree of life, the, viii. 3.
Tree of mercy, the, viii. 7; xxi. 7.
Tsivan, xlviii. 2; lxviii. 1, 3.
Ukhan, lvii. 2.
Vretil, xxii. 11, 12; xxiii. 3, 4.
Ways, the two, xxx. 15.
Weber, pp. xxxix; 5, 6, 21, 25, 30, 32, 36, 37, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 48.
Wisdom, the Book of, pp. xxv; 30, 32, 39, 43, 45, 68, 80, 81.
Wisdom hypostatized, xxx. 8; xxxiii. 3.
Works of man ordained before the foundation of the world, the, liii. 3.
Zend-Avesta, 74.
Zodiac, the, xxx. 5.

SELECT LIST OF Standard Theological Works

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, ETC.	page 1
FATHERS OF THE CHURCH, ETC.	" 4
ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ETC.	" 5
ENGLISH THEOLOGY	" 6
LITURGIOLOGY	" 8

1. THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, ETC.

HEBREW, etc. Notes on the Text of the Book of Genesis. By G. J. Spurrell, M.A. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 12s. 6d.

— Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel. By S. R. Driver, D.D. 8vo. 14s.

— Treatise on the use of the Tenses in Hebrew. By S. R. Driver, D.D. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— The Psalms in Hebrew without points. Stiff covers, 2s.

— A Commentary on the Book of Proverbs. Attributed to Abraham Ibn Ezra. Edited from a MS. in the Bodleian Library by S. R. Driver, D.D. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 3s. 6d.

— The Book of Tobit. A Chaldee Text, from a unique MS. in the Bodleian Library; with other Rabbinical Texts, English Translations, and the Itala. Edited by Ad. Neubauer, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.

— A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, with an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic, based on the Thesaurus and Lexicon of Gesenius, by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D.

Parts I—V. Small 4to. 2s. 6d. each. Part VI, In the Press.

HEBREW, etc.—Hebrew Accentuation of Psalms, Proverbs, and Job. By William Wickes, D.D. 8vo. 5s.

— Hebrew Prose Accentuation. By the same Author. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— The Book of Hebrew Roots, by Abu 'l-Walid Marwān ibn Janāh, otherwise called Rabbi Yōnāh. Now first edited, with an appendix, by Ad. Neubauer. 4to. 2l. 7s. 6d.

ETHIOPIC. The Book of Enoch. Translated from Dillmann's Ethiopic Text (emended and revised), and edited by R. H. Charles, M.A. 8vo. 16s.

GREEK. OLD TESTAMENT. Vetus Testamentum ex Versione Septuaginta Interpretum secundum exemplar Vaticanum Romae editum. Accedit potior varietas Codicis Alexandrini. Tomi III. 18mo. 18s.

GREEK. A Concordance to the Septuagint and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament, including the Apocryphal Books. By the late Edwin Hatch, M.A., and H. A. Redpath, M.A. Parts I—V, Α-ΠΡΟΠΤΑΟΝ, 4to, 21s. each. Part VI, In the Press.

— Essays in Biblical Greek.

By Edwin Hatch, M.A., D.D. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Origenis Hexaplorum

quae supersunt; sive, Veterum Interpretum Graecorum in totum Velus Testamentum Fragmenta. Edidit Fridericus Field, A.M. 2 vols. 4to. 5l. 5s.

— NEW TESTAMENT. Novum

Testamentum Graece. Antiquissimorum Codicum Textus in ordine parallelo dispositi. Accedit collatio Codicis Sinaitici. Edidit E. H. Hantsell, S.T.B. Tomi III. 8vo. 24s.

— Novum Testamentum

Graece. Accedunt parallela S. Scripturae loca, etc. Edidit Carolus Lloyd, S.T.P.R. 18mo. 3s.

On writing paper, with wide margin, 7s. 6d.

— Appendices ad Novum

Testamentum Stephanicum, jam inde a Millii temporibus Oxoniensium manibus tritum; curante Gulmo. Sanday, A.M., S.T.P., LL.D. I. Collatio textus Westcottii-Hortiani (jure permissio) cum textu Stephanico anni mvl. II. Delectus lectionum notatu dignissimarum. III. Lectiones quaedam ex codicibus versionum Memphiticae Armeniacaе Aethiopicae fusius illustratae. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s. 6d.

— Novum Testamentum

Graece juxta Exemplar Millianum. 18mo. 2s. 6d. On writing paper, with wide margin, 7s. 6d.

GREEK. The Greek Testament, with the Readings adopted by the Revisers of the Authorised Version :—

(1) Pica type, with Marginal References. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

(2) Long Primer type, Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

(3) The same, on writing paper, with wide margin, 15s.

— The Parallel New Testa- ment, Greek and English; being the Authorised Version, 1611; the Revised Version, 1881; and the Greek Text followed in the Revised Version. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

— Outlines of Textual Criti- cism applied to the New Testament. By C. E. Hammond, M.A. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

— A Greek Testament Pri- mer. An Easy Grammar and Reading Book for the use of Students beginning Greek. By E. Miller, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

LATIN. Libri Psalmorum

Versio antiqua Latina, cum Paraphrasi Anglo-Saxonica. Edidit B. Thorpe, F.A.S. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Old-Latin Biblical

Texts: No. I. The Gospel according to St. Matthew, from the St. Germain MS. (g). Edited with Introduction and Appendices by John Wordsworth, D.D. Small 4to, stiff covers, 6s.

— Old-Latin Biblical

Texts: No. II. Portions of the Gospels according to St. Mark and St. Matthew, from the Bobbio MS. (k), etc. Edited by John Wordsworth, D.D., W. Sanday, M.A., D.D., and H. J. White, M.A. Small 4to, stiff covers, 21s.

LATIN. Old-Latin Biblical

Texts: No. III. The Four Gospels, from the Munich MS. (q), now numbered Lat. 6224 in the Royal Library at Munich. With a Fragment from St. John in the Hof-Bibliothek at Vienna (Cod. Lat. 502). Edited, with the aid of Tischendorf's transcript (under the direction of the Bishop of Salisbury), by H. J. White, M.A. Small 4to, stiff covers, 12s. 6d.

Nouum Testamentum Domini

Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi. Ad Codicum Manuscriptorum fidem recensuit Iohannes Wordsworth, S.T.P., Episcopus Sarisburiensis. In operis societatem adsumto Henrico Iuliano White, A.M. 4to.

Fasc. I. Euangelium secundum Mattheum. 12s. 6d.

Fasc. II. Euangelium secundum Marcum. 7s. 6d.

Fasc. III. Euangelium secundum Lucam. 12s. 6d.

Fasc. IV. Euangelium secundum Johannem. 10s. 6d.

OLD-FRENCH. Libri Psalmorum

Versio antiqua Gallica e Cod. ms. in Bibl. Bodleiana adseruato, una cum Versione Metrica aliisque Monumentis peruetustis. Nunc primum descripsit et edidit Franciscus Michel, Phil. Doc. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

ENGLISH. The Holy Bible

in the Earliest English Versions, made from the Latin Vulgate by John Wycliffe and his followers: edited by Forshall and Madden. 4 vols. Royal 4to. 3l. 3s.

Also reprinted from the above, with Introduction and Glossary by W. W. Skeat, Litt. D.

The Books of Job, Psalms,

Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon. 3s. 6d.

The New Testament. 6s.

ENGLISH. The Holy Bible,

Revised Version.*

Cheap Editions for School Use.

Revised Bible. Pearl 16mo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

Revised New Testament. Nonpareil 32mo, 6d.; Brevier 16mo, 1s.; Long Primer 8vo, 1s. 6d.

* The Revised Version is the joint property of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

— The Oxford Bible for Teachers, containing the Holy Scriptures, together with a new, enlarged, and illustrated edition of the Oxford Helps to the Study of the Bible, comprising Introductions to the several Books, the History and Antiquities of the Jews, the results of Modern Discoveries, and the Natural History of Palestine, with copious Tables, Concordance and Indices, and a series of Maps. Prices in various sizes and bindings from 7s. 6d. to 2l. 2s.

— Helps to the Study of the Bible, taken from the Oxford Bible for Teachers. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

— The Psalter, or Psalms

of David, and certain Canticles, with a Translation and Exposition in English, by Richard Rolle of Hampole. Edited by H. R. Bramley, M.A. With an Introduction and Glossary. Demy 8vo. 1l. 1s.

— Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica.

Essays in Biblical and Patristic Criticism, and kindred subjects. By Members of the University of Oxford.

Vol. I. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Vol. III. 8vo. 16s.

Vol. IV. 8vo. 12s. 6d.

ENGLISH. The Book of Wisdom: the Greek Text, the Latin Vulgate, and the Authorised English Version; with an Introduction, Critical Apparatus, and a Commentary. By W. J. Deane, M.A. 4to. 12s. 6d.

GOTHIC. The Gospel of St. Mark in Gothic, according to the translation made by Wulfila in the Fourth Century. Edited, with a Grammatical Introduction and Glossarial Index, by W. W. Skeat, Litt. D. Extra fcap. 8vo. 4s.

2. FATHERS OF THE CHURCH, ETC.

St. Athanasius: Orations against the Arians. With an account of his Life by William Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 9s.

— Historical Writings, according to the Benedictine Text. With an Introduction by W. Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 10s. 6d.

St. Augustine: Select Anti-Pelagian Treatises, and the Acts of the Second Council of Orange. With an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 9s.

St. Basil: The Book of St. Basil on the Holy Spirit. A Revised Text, with Notes and Introduction by C. F. H. Johnston, M.A. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Canons of the First Four General Councils of Nicaea, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon. With Notes by W. Bright, D.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Catenae Graecorum Patrum in Novum Testamentum. Edidit J. A. Cramer, S.T.P. Tomi VIII. 8vo. 2l. 4s.

Clementis Alexandrini Opera, ex recensione Guil. Dindorfii. Tomi IV. 8vo. 3l.

Cyrilli Archiepiscopi Alexandrini in XII Prophetas. Edidit P. E. Pusey, A.M. Tomi II. 8vo. 2l. 2s.

— in D. Joannis Evangelium. Accedunt Fragmenta Variarum Tractatus ad Tiberium Diaconum Duo. Edidit post Aubertum P. E. Pusey, A.M. Tomi III. 8vo. 2l. 5s.

— Commentarii in Lucae Evangelium quae supersunt Syriace. E mss. apud Mus. Britan. edidit R. Payne Smith, A.M. 4to. 1l. 2s.

— The same, translated by R. Payne Smith, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 14s.

Ephraemi Syri, Rabulae Episcopi Edesseni, Balaei, aliorumque Opera Selecta. E Codd. Syriacis mss. in Museo Britannico et Bibliotheca Bodleiana asservatis primus edidit J. J. Overbeck. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Eusebii Pamphili Evangelicae Praeparationis Libri XV. Ad Codd. mss. recensuit T. Gaisford, S.T.P. Tomi IV. 8vo. 1l. 10s.

— Evangelicae Demonstrationis Libri X. Recensuit T. Gaisford, S.T.P. Tomi II. 8vo. 15s.

— contra Hieroclem et Marcellum Libri. Recensuit T. Gaisford, S.T.P. 8vo. 7s.

Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, according to the text of Burton, with an Introduction by W. Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 8s. 6d.

Evagrii Historia Ecclesiastica, ex recensione H. Valesii. 8vo. 4s.

Irenaeus : The Third Book of St. Irenaeus, Bishop of Lyons, against Heresies. With short Notes and a Glossary by H. Deane, B.D. Crown 8vo. 5s. 6d.

Patrum Apostolicorum, S. Clementis Romani, S. Ignatii, S. Polycarpi, quae supersunt. Edidit Guil. Jacobson, S.T.P.R. Tomi II. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Philo. About the Contemporary Life ; or, the Fourth Book of the Treatise concerning Virtues. Critically edited, with a defence of its genuineness. By Fred. C. Conybeare, M.A. 8vo. 14s.

Reliquiae Sacrae secundi saeculi. Recensuit M. J. Routh, S.T.P. Tomi V. 8vo. 1l. 5s.

Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Opuscula. Recensuit M. J. Routh, S.T.P. Tomi II. 8vo. 10s.

Socrates' Ecclesiastical History, according to the Text of Hussey, with an Introduction by William Bright, D.D. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Sozomeni Historia Ecclesiastica. Edidit R. Hussey, S.T.B. Tomi III. 8vo. 15s.

Tertulliani Apologeticus adversus Gentes pro Christianis. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. Herbert Bindley, B.D. Crown 8vo. 6s.

— de Praescriptione Haereticorum : ad Martyras : ad Scapulam. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. Herbert Bindley, B.D. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Theodoreti Ecclesiasticae Historiae Libri V. Recensuit T. Gaisford, S.T.P. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

3. ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ETC.

Adamnani Vita S. Columbae. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by J. T. Fowler, M.A., D.C.L. Crown 8vo, half-bound, 8s. 6d. net.

Baedae Historia Ecclesiastica. A New Edition. Edited, with Introduction, English Notes, &c., by C. Plummer, M.A. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 21s. net.

Bigg. The Christian Platonists of Alexandria. By Charles Bigg, D.D. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Bingham's Antiquities of the Christian Church, and other Works. 10 vols. 8vo. 3l. 3s.

Bright. Chapters of Early English Church History. By W. Bright, D.D. Second Edition. 8vo. 12s.

Burnet's History of the Reformation of the Church of England. A new Edition, by N. Pocock, M.A. 7 vols. 8vo. 1l. 10s.

Cardwell's Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England ; being a Collection of Injunctions, Declarations, Orders, Articles of Inquiry, &c. from 1546 to 1716. 2 vols. 8vo. 18s.

Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents relating to Great Britain and Ireland. Edited, after Spelman and Wilkins, by A. W. Haddan, B.D., and W. Stubbs, D.D. Vols. I and III. Medium 8vo, each 1l. 1s.

Vol. II, Part I. Medium 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Vol. II, Part II. Church of Ireland ; Memorials of St. Patrick. Stiff covers, 3s. 6d.

Fuller's Church History of Britain. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A. 6 vols. 8vo. 11. 19s.

Gibson's Synodus Anglicana. Edited by E. Cardwell, D.D. 8vo. 6s.

Hamilton's (Archbishop John) Catechism, 1552. Edited, with Introduction and Glossary, by Thomas Graves Law, Librarian of the Signet Library, Edinburgh. With a Preface by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

Hussey. Rise of the Papal Power, traced in three Lectures. By Robert Hussey, B.D. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 4s. 6d.

John, Bishop of Ephesus. The Third Part of his Ecclesiastical History. [In Syriac.] Now first edited by William Cureton, M.A. 4to. 11. 12s.

— The same, translated by R. Payne Smith, M.A. 8vo. 10s.

Le Neve's Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae. Corrected and continued from 1715 to 1853 by T. Duffus Hardy. 3 vols. 8vo. 11. 1s.

Noelli (A.) Catechismus sive prima institutio disciplinae Pietatis Christianae Latine explicata. Editio nova cura Guil. Jacobson, A.M. 8vo. 5s. 6d.

Records of the Reformation.

The Divorce, 1527-1533. Mostly now for the first time printed from MSS. in the British Museum and other Libraries. Collected and arranged by N. Pocock, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 11. 16s.

Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum. The Reformation of Ecclesiastical Laws, as attempted in the reigns of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Elizabeth. Edited by E. Cardwell, D.D. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Shirley. Some Account of the Church in the Apostolic Age. By W. W. Shirley, D.D. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Stillingfleet's Origines Britannicae, with Lloyd's Historical Account of Church Government. Edited by T. P. Pantin, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 10s.

Stubbs. Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum. An attempt to exhibit the course of Episcopal Succession in England. By W. Stubbs, D.D. Small 4to. 8s. 6d.

4. ENGLISH THEOLOGY.

Bradley. Lectures on the Book of Job. By George Granville Bradley, D.D., Dean of Westminster. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— Lectures on Ecclesiastes. By the same. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

Bull's Works, with Nelson's Life. Edited by E. Burton, D.D. 8 vols. 8vo. 21. 9s.

Burnet's Exposition of the XXXIX Articles. 8vo. 7s.

Butler's Works. Divided into Sections; with Sectional Headings; an Index to each volume; and some occasional Notes; also Prefatory Matter. Edited by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. 2 vols. Medium 8vo. 11. 8s.

— 2 vols. 8vo. 11s.

Comber's Companion to the Temple; or a Help to Devotion in the use of the Common Prayer. 7 vols. 8vo. 1l. 11s. 6d.

Cranmer's Works. Collected and arranged by H. Jenkyns, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College. 4 vols. 8vo. 1l. 10s.

Enchiridion Theologicum Anti-Romanum.

Vol. I. Jeremy Taylor's Dissuasive from Popery, and Treatise on the Real Presence. 8vo. 8s.

Vol. II. Barrow on the Supremacy of the Pope, with his Discourse on the Unity of the Church. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Vol. III. Tracts selected from Wake, Patrick, Stillingfleet, Clagett, and others. 8vo. 11s.

Greswell's Harmonia Evangelica. Fifth Edition. 8vo. 9s. 6d.

Hall's Works. Edited by P. Wynter, D.D. 10 vols. 8vo. 3l. 3s.

Heurtley. Harmonia Symbolica: Creeds of the Western Church. By C. Heurtley, D.D. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Homilies appointed to be read in Churches. Edited by J. Griffiths, M.A. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Hooker's Works, with his Life by Walton, arranged by John Keble, M.A. Seventh Edition. Revised by R. W. Church, M.A., Dean of St. Paul's, and F. Paget, D.D. 3 vols. medium 8vo. 1l. 16s.

— the Text as arranged by J. Keble, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 11s.

Jackson's (Dr. Thomas) Works. 12 vols. 8vo. 3l. 6s.

Jewel's Works. Edited by R. W. Jelf, D.D. 8 vols. 8vo. 1l. 10s.

Martineau. A Study of Religion: its Sources and Contents. By James Martineau, D.D. Second Edition. 2 vols. Crown 8vo. 15s.

Patrick's Theological Works. 9 vols. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Pearson's Exposition of the Creed. Revised and corrected by E. Burton, D.D. Sixth Edition. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— Minor Theological Works. Edited with a Memoir, by Edward Churton, M.A. 2 vols. 8vo. 10s.

Sanderson's Works. Edited by W. Jacobson, D.D. 6 vols. 8vo. 1l. 10s.

Stillingfleet's Origines Sacrae. 2 vols. 8vo. 9s.

— Rational Account of the Grounds of Protestant Religion; being a vindication of Archbishop Laud's Relation of a Conference, &c. 2 vols. 8vo. 10s.

Wall's History of Infant Baptism. Edited by H. Cotton, D.C.L. 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 1s.

Waterland's Works, with Life, by Bp. Van Mildert. A new Edition, with copious Indexes. 6 vols. 8vo. 2l. 11s.

— Review of the Doctrine of the Eucharist, with a Preface by the late Bishop of London. Crown 8vo. 6s. 6d.

Wheatly's Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer. 8vo. 5s.

Wyclif. A Catalogue of the Original Works of John Wyclif. By W. W. Shirley, D.D. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Wyclif. Select English Works.
By T. Arnold, M.A. 3 vols. 8vo.
1l. 1s.

— Triologus. With the Supplement now first edited. By Gotthard Lechler. 8vo. 7s.

5. LITURGIOLOGY.

Cardwell's Two Books of Common Prayer, set forth by authority in the Reign of King Edward VI, compared with each other. Third Edition. 8vo. 7s.

— History of Conferences on the Book of Common Prayer from 1551 to 1690. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

The Gelasian Sacramentary.
Liber Sacramentorum Romanæ Ecclesiæ. Edited, with Introduction, Critical Notes, and Appendix, by H. A. Wilson, M.A. Medium 8vo.
18s.

Liturgies, Eastern and Western. Edited, with Introductions and Appendices, by F. E.
Brightman, M.A., on the Basis of the former Work by C. E. Hammond, M.A.

Vol. I. Eastern Liturgies. Demy
8vo. 1l. 1s.

Helps to the Study of the Book of Common Prayer. By the Very Rev. W. R. Stephens, B.D.
Being a Companion to Church
Worship. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Leofric Missal, The, as used in the Cathedral of Exeter during the Episcopate of its first Bishop,
A.D. 1050–1072; together with some Account of the Red Book of Derby, the Missal of Robert of Jumièges, &c. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by F. E. Warren, B.D., F.S.A.
4to, half-morocco, 1l. 15s.

Maskell. Ancient Liturgy of the Church of England, according to the uses of Sarum, York, Hereford, and Bangor, and the Roman Liturgy arranged in parallel columns, with preface and notes. By W. Maskell, M.A. Third Edition. 8vo. 15s.

— Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. The occasional Offices of the Church of England
according to the old use of Salisbury, the Prymer in English, and other prayers and forms, with dissertations and notes. Second Edition.
3 vols. 8vo. 2l. 10s.

Warren. The Liturgy and Ritual of the Celtic Church. By F. E.
Warren, B.D. 8vo. 14s.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

12-2018

The Music of Angels in Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Art

Amy Gillette
Barnes Foundation

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digital.kenyon.edu/perejournal>

Part of the Ancient, Medieval, Renaissance and Baroque Art and Architecture Commons

Recommended Citation

Gillette, Amy. "The Music of Angels in Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Art." Peregrinations: Journal of Medieval Art and Architecture 6, 4 (2018): 26-78. <https://digital.kenyon.edu/perejournal/vol6/iss4/2>

This Feature Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Kenyon: Research, Scholarship, and Creative Exchange. It has been accepted for inclusion in Peregrinations: Journal of Medieval Art and Architecture by an authorized editor of Digital Kenyon: Research, Scholarship, and Creative Exchange. For more information, please contact noltj@kenyon.edu.

PEREGRINATIONS

JOURNAL OF MEDIEVAL ART AND ARCHITECTURE
VOLUME VI, NUMBER 4 (AUTUMN 2018)

The Music of Angels in Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Art

AMY GILLETTE

Barnes Foundation, Research and Education

Many Byzantine writers who offered metaphorical interpretations of the liturgy believed that angels and humans shared the space of the church, together filling it with psalmody.¹ This belief was reified primarily in the Late and Post-Byzantine periods, in personal and communal icons, in liturgical objects employed in the service, and in monumental paintings that decorated the interiors of churches.² Even some church soundscapes were designed to help human hymns sound angelic.³ To date, however, there is no single survey of Orthodox scenes of angels' song.⁴ The absence is striking because music-making angels in contemporaneous Western art have been the subject of ¹ The Historia Monachorum (c. 410) attested this longstanding belief: "The church assembly should resemble the choirs of angels, imitating the celestial armies by endlessly singing hymns and praises of God" (PL 16, 724). Also: J. Pelikan, "The Great Chain of Images: A Cosmology of Icons," in Imago Dei: The Byzantine Apologia for Icons (Princeton, 1990), p. 173.

² For churches, most of which were newly built for monastic use: I. Stefanescu, L'Illustration des liturgies dans l'art de Byzance et de l'Orient (Brussels, 1936): 176. For the liturgy: E. Peterson, The Angels and the Liturgy (Darton, 1964) and H. Schultz, Byzantine Liturgy: Symbolic Structure and Faith Expression (New York, 1986).

³ For sonic effects: S. Gerstel, "Monastic Soundscapes in Late Byzantium: The Art and Act of Chanting," in Resounding Images: Medieval Intersections of Art, Music, and Sound, ed. S. Boynton and D. Reilly (Boston, 2015).

⁴ The following are excellent resources for the depiction of liturgical song in Byzantine churches, but do not engage specifically with angels: the chapters "Psaumes liturgiques illustres" and "Hymnes et tropaires illustres" in Stefanescu 1936, pp. 171-176 and 176-184; N. Moran, Singers and Setting in Late Byzantine and Slavonic Painting (Leiden, 1986).

Figure 1 Angel-Clergy Perform the Great Entrance, Peribleptos Church, Mystras, 1370s.
Photo: E. Bolman.

considerable art-historical and musicological scholarship, and indeed the most prominent Orthodox examples were created in places exposed in varying degrees to Western images, e.g., Serbia, Mystras, Crete, Thessaloniki, and Mount Athos. The various incidences of musical angels—Latin and Orthodox—reveal that patrons and artists purposefully negotiated angelological and idiomatic subtleties across creed, time, and space. To depict angels at all was complicated because they were thought to be incorporeal.⁵ To depict them singing was even more so, because they were technically silent as well.⁶

Yet since Late Antiquity, liturgical and theological texts had asserted that, in spite of angels' ineffability, the nine orders thereof (in varying capacities) could and often did bridge the realms of heaven and earth.⁷ The Divine (Eucharistic) Liturgy connected angelology with the physical fabric of churches, conceived as a series of performative spaces forming a microcosm of Paradise. For example, in the Little Entrance (the procession of the Book of Gospels to the altar), the priest implored God to have the angels serving in heaven to join him and the faithful on earth.⁸ Maximos the Confessor (d. 662), Germanos I of Constantinople (d. 733), Philotheos Kokkinos (d. 1379), Nicholas Kabasilas (d. c. 1392), Symeon of Thessaloniki (d. 1429), etc., described further tangent moments enacted by angels and humanity during the Divine Liturgy, notably the consecration of the Eucharistic gifts and the performance of the Trisagion (Sanctus) hymn.⁹ In the course of discussing such phenomena, these and other writers

⁵ See Pelikan 1990 and G. Peers, Subtle Bodies: Representing Angels in Byzantium (Berkeley, 2001).

⁶ Theodore the Studite, for example, described the "secret silence of their hymns of triumph, with which they praise the ineffable mystery," Orations VI.1 ("On the Holy Angels"), PG 99: 732, trans. in Pelikan 1990, p. 175.

⁷ Most Byzantine and medieval theologians accepted the nine angelic orders that the Pseudo-Dionysius (fl. c. 500) described in his Celestial Hierarchy, in descending order: seraphim, cherubim, thrones, virtues, dominations, powers, principalities, archangels, and angels. See G. Podskalsky and A. Cutler, "Angel," in The Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (Oxford, 2005). Oxford Reference Online.

⁸ M. Mudrak, "Kazimir Malevich and the Liturgical Tradition of Eastern Christianity," in Byzantium/Modernism: The Byzantine as Method in Modernity, ed. R. Betancourt and M. Taroutina (Leiden, 2015), pp. 46-7.

⁹ N.B. The later authors persistently engaged or even copied the earlier authors (e.g., the Divine Liturgy of Chrysostom remained normative through the Byzantine period, and Symeon of Thessaloniki worked in the Dionysian tradition).

examined the nature and scope of angelic liminality. Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite (fl. c. 500) proposed that “angels are heralds of the Divine silence, and project, as it were, luminous lights revealing Him Who is in secret.”¹⁰ John of Damascus (d. 749) wrote that they “take different forms at the bidding of...God, and thus reveal themselves to men and unveil the divine mysteries to them.”¹¹ On the authority of Symeon of Thessaloniki: “The souls of the saints reside above with the angels, and together with them they keep watch around us, dwelling within our churches.”¹²

One way to think about Byzantine and Post-Byzantine scenes of hymning angels is that they revealed a spiritual reality that the most-elevated could see and hear mystically, but not physically. Yet to depict their sound of silence proposed an exoteric interpretation of liturgical texts and the angelological ideas that they encompassed.¹³ The liminal capacity of angels meant that these spiritual beings mediated, rather than simply paralleled, the liturgies of heaven and earth. Further, angels, icons, and human beings were all considered (from at least the Middle Byzantine period) to be “imprints”

¹⁰ Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, On the Divine Names, IV.2 in Pseudo-Dionysius: The Complete Works, trans. Colm Luibheid (New York, 1987), p. 73.

¹¹ John of Damascus, “Concerning Angels,” Exposition on the Orthodox Faith, II.3, trans. F. C. Chase (Washington, D.C., 1958), p. 208.

¹² Symeon of Thessaloniki, Dialogue 296B, quoted in N. Constan, “Symeon of Thessaloniki and the Theology of the Icon Screen,” in Thresholds of the Sacred: Architectural, Art Historical, Liturgical, and Theological Perspectives on Religious Screens, East and West, ed. Sharon Gerstel (Washington, D.C., 2006), p. 170 n. 27.

¹³ Regarding the exoteric agency of angel images, Henry Maguire stated: “For the most part, then, Byzantine art was more circumspect [than] Byzantine literature with respect to the depiction of emotion. But there was one curious exception to this rule, in which the artists were bolder than the writers, namely in the frequent portrayals of angels displaying emotion. In Byzantine art, angels displayed both joy and grief.” In “The Asymmetry of Text and Image in Byzantium,” Perspectives Médiévales 38 (2017), p. 17.

or manifestations of God, metaphysically and existentially linked by the purpose of praising him.¹⁴ Therefore images of angels' song were not passive indices of belief, but rather active forces of engagement, which opened the door to heaven and enticed human beings into spiritually joining their liturgy.

I will first establish the set of hymns that angels were shown to sing in various types of sacred art—monumental and small, fixed and portable. Because the images date almost exclusively to the Late and Post-Byzantine periods, I will restrict my discussion thereto.¹⁵ In order to analyze the images, I will employ statements concerning angels and their hymns in angelological, mystagogical, and liturgical texts. A selection thereof, both early and late, signals that the fundamental precepts about angels' song remained consistent relative to the dramatization of their images and associated aspects of the liturgy. I will then propose some ways in which scenes featuring the Cherubikon and Trisagion hymns exerted pastoral power both mystically and ethically in their role as icons of the Divine Liturgy, for which they were often a synecdoche.¹⁶ Two ways to consider these icons' vectors of expression and consequence are a comparison to contemporaneous Western images, especially with reference to the depiction of musical instruments and angelic joy as well as the visual and verbal representation of angelic multiplicity as a sanctifying act.

¹⁴ John of Damascus, Orations on the Holy Icons, PG 94: 1337-44; trans. in Pelikan 1990, p. 175.

¹⁵ The Second Council of Nicaea (787) posed problems for depicting the purely spiritual phenomenon of the angelic liturgy by basing the validity of icons on their faithful rendition of the prototype. Still, this council did legitimize angels per se, on the basis of their scriptural appearances. Early exceptions include the Riha and Stuma rhipidia (c. 577). C. Walter, Art and Ritual of the Byzantine Church (London, 1982), pp. 218-19; W. Woodfin, "Celestial Hierarchies and Earthly Hierarchies in the Art of the Byzantine Church" in The Byzantine World, ed. P. Stephenson (New York, 2010), pp. 311-13. For Post-Byzantine art: E. Spratt, "Toward a Definition of Post-Byzantine Art," Record of the Princeton University Art Museum (2014), pp. 3-19, who wrote that it adhered to or promoted the doctrinal tenets of Orthodoxy and often witnessed East-West interactions.

Angelic Hymns in Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Art: A Survey

A survey of Late and Post-Byzantine images—selected from sites across the Orthodox world—reveals angels singing hymns designated as “angelic” by scriptural or liturgical authority, in objects and spaces involved in the performance of hymns. The two most prominently displayed, the Cherubikon and Trisagion, derived from the seraphic cry of Isaiah 6:1-3: “I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne...above it stood the seraphim... And one cried unto another, and said, ‘Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.’” The Cherubikon opened with the words “We who mystically represent the cherubim and who sing the thrice-holy hymn,” and the Trisagion, “Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of hosts. Heaven and earth are full of your glory.”¹⁷ These hymns were sung sequentially during the Divine Liturgy: the Cherubikon during the Great Entrance (the procession of the Eucharistic gifts to the altar), in which ¹⁶ The earliest known picture of the Celestial Liturgy modeled on the Great Entrance is the cupola of the Panagia Olympiotissa at Elasson, Greece (c. 1294-1304). Also: Walter 1982, pp. 217-21; Woodfin 2012, pp. 122-24; G. Millet, Monuments de l’Athos, I (Paris, 1927), plates 64, 1; 118, 2-3; 219, 3; 256, 2; 257, 2; 261, 1-2; Stefanescu 1936, pp. 71ff., 189-90, and plates XXIX, 1-2; XXX, 1-2; LV; I. Spatharakis, “Representations of the Great Entrance in Crete” in Studies in Byzantine Manuscript Illumination and Iconography (London, 2006), p. 293 n.2.

¹⁷ R. Taft, “Cheroubikon” and “Trisagion,” in the Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (ODB) (Oxford, 2005).

the clergy presented as spiritual representatives or icons of the angels; and the Trisagion during the consecration rites, proclaiming the fusion of the human and angelic communities.¹⁸

Figure 2 Great Entrance / Divine Liturgy, Peribleptos Church, Mystra, 1370s.
Photo: After No. XXVIII in J. D. Stefanescu, L'Illustration des Liturgies dans l'art de Byzance et de l'Orient (Brussels, 1936), p. 74.

A multitude of frescoes depicted the Great Entrance, and explicitly or implicitly the Cherubikon (e.g., the central dome of the Gračanica Church, after 1320; the prothesis chamber of the Peribleptos Church in Mystras, c. 1370s; the sanctuary apse of Markov Manastir, 1370-1372) demonstrating the mystical union between human and angel clergy (Figs. 1, 2, 3).¹⁹ The Mystras fresco, for example, shows angel-deacons bearing veiled patens on their heads followed by angel-priests with veiled chalices, singing ¹⁸ The Trisagion hymn is ascribed to St. Proclus (446), Archbishop of Constantinople. It calls for the joining of the angels with the community of the faithful through baptism as an invitation for participating in the greater feast days of the church. In addition to Taft 2005, see M. Mudrak, "Kazimir Malevich and the Liturgical Tradition of Eastern Christianity," in Byzantium/Modernism 2015, p. 41 n. 12.

¹⁹ M. T. Djurić, "To Picture and to Perform: The Image of the Eucharistic Liturgy at Markov Manastir," Zograf 38 (2014), p. 131 (123-140). At Markov Manastir, the images of Bishops Basil and Gregory carry scrolls inscribed with the Cherubikon.

“Holy, Holy, Holy” as they approach the priestly Christ at the canopied altar.²⁰ This hymn also figured in epitaphioi, enormous Eucharistic veils used during the Great

Figure 3 Divine Liturgy, central dome, Gračanica Church, Serbia, after 1320. Photo: http://www.srpskoblog.org/Archives/Gracanica/exhibits/digital/dome/dome-3_s.html

Entrance.²¹ Symeon of Thessaloniki explained the meaning of these veils: “The deacons [come in the Great Entrance] one after another who have the order of the angels...carrying over their head the sacred great veil which has the depiction of ²¹ See S. Ćurčić, “Late Byzantine Loca Sancta? Some Questions Regarding the Form and Function of Epitaphioi” in The Twilight of Byzantium, eds. S. Ćurčić and D. Mouriki (Princeton, 1991), pp. 251-261; H. Schilb, “Singing, Crying, Shouting, and Saying: Embroidered Epitaphioi and the Sounds of the Byzantine Liturgy” in Resounding Images: Medieval Intersections of Art, Music, and Sound, ed. S. Boynton and D. Reilly (Turnhout, 2015), pp. 167-187.

²⁰ There is an inscription from the liturgy in this space, and the angels follow liturgical directions: e.g., Symeon of Thessaloniki, Contra haereses, PG 155, 340. For frescoes: Spatharakis 2006, pp. 293-335, esp. pp. 294-299.

of Jesus naked and dead.”²² Thus the central panel of the famous Thessaloniki epitaphios (c. 1300) portrays seraphim, cherubim, and thrones singing “Holy, Holy, Holy,” while two angel-deacons wave rhipidia (liturgical fans) over Christ’s prone body (Fig. 4).²³

Figure 4 Thessaloniki epitaphios, c. 1300 (detail). Photo: ArtStor.

²² Symeon of Thessaloniki, “Explanation of the Divine Temple” in The Liturgical Commentaries, ed. and trans. by S. Hawkes-Teeple (Toronto, 2011), p. 127. The Cherubikon is translated in R. Taft, The Great Entrance: A History of the Transfer of Gifts and Other Preanaphoral Rites of the Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom (Rome, 1975), pp. 54-55.

²³ W. Woodfin, The Embodied Icon: Liturgical Vestments and Sacramental Power in Byzantium. (Oxford, 2012), p. 125; Roland Betancourt, “The Thessaloniki Epitaphios: Notes on Use and Context,” Greek, Roman, and Byzantine Studies 55:2 (2015): pp. 489-535; S. Gerstel and A. Antonaras, “Between Heaven and Earth: Views of Byzantine Thessaloniki” in Viewing Greece: Cultural and Political Agency in the Medieval and Early Modern Mediterranean (Turnhout, 2016), pp. 87-111.

Figure 5 Rhipidion, Zographou Monastery, Mount Athos, 1468. Photo: after cat. no. 69 in H. Evans, ed., Byzantium: Faith and Power 1261-1557 (New York, 2004), p. 133.

Pictures of the highest triad of angels—the seraphim, cherubim, and thrones—were portrayed in direct proximity to the Godhead and hymning the Trisagion in ornamenta related to the consecration of the Eucharistic Host. Among these were rhipidia such as a pair given in 1468 to the Zographou Monastery on Mount Athos by Stephen the Great of Moldavia, d. 1504). The liturgist Nicholas of Andida (fl. late 1000s) remarked that “the rhipidia...are as a type of the Cherubim” because deacons would imitate the beating wings of the endlessly chanting angels by waving them over the exposed Host; scenes of the Divine Liturgy frequently show angel-deacons wielding (rhipidia decorated with cherubim or seraphim (e.g., the Thessaloniki epitaphios, the central dome of the Gračanica Church, and the bema of the Studenica Church, 1314).²⁴ The Studenica fresco and another at St. Neophytos in Paphos (15th century) further highlighted the liturgical convergence of the Trisagion, ministering angels, rhipidia, and deacons by inscribing the words “Holy, Holy, Holy” on the angel-deacons’ oraiai (Fig. 7).²⁵ Images of angels chanting the Trisagion were, indeed, also deployed on the superstructures (symbolizing heaven) of sacred architecture, both monumental and miniature. Examples include the central dome of Gračanica Church, and the roof of the sixteenth-century ciborium of St. Mamas in Morphou, Cyprus (Figs. 3, 5, 6).²⁶ On the Morphou ciborium, Christ as “king of kings and priest of priests” is framed by a barbed quatrefoil and wreathed by seraphim, cherubim, and thrones on the ceiling plus a further band of seraphim in the cornice. The latter are accompanied by two inscriptions, ²⁴ Nicholas of Andida, Protheoria, PG, 140, 426, 440, and 442. Also see Walter 1982, p. 220 and Woodfin 2012, p. 7.

Figure 6 Angel-Deacons / Divine Liturgy, ciborium of St. Mamas, Morphou, Cyprus, c. 1500. Photo: E. Bolman.

²⁵ There are illustrations of angel-deacons wearing oraia with the Trisagion inscribed? at, e.g., the Studenica monastery in Serbia (1314) and the Dochiariou Monastery of Mount Athos (sixteenth century). The depiction of angel-priests was legitimized by Psalm 103, “Bless the Lord, you his angels...you ministers of his, that do his pleasure.” Yet angel-priests did not join angel-deacons until the Late Byzantine period, a relatively late development apparently because the ancient mystagogical tradition and, from the twelfth century, frescoes and vestments made it clear that the celebrant was Christ’s icon on earth. For celebrant ministers acting in persona Christi: Symeon of Thessaloniki, Expositio de divinotemplo, PG 155, 709. Woodfin 2012, p. 313.

²⁶ For the rhipidia: A. Ballian, “Liturgical Implements,” in Byzantium: Faith and Power (1261-1557), ed. H. C. Evans (New York, 2004), pp. 132-133. For Gračanica: S. Ćurčić, Architecture in the Balkans from Diocletian to Suleyman the Magnificent (New Haven, 2010), p. 666. For the Morphou ciborium: E. Bolman, “Painting Heaven: The Art of the Liturgy” in The Canopy of Heaven: The Ciborium in the Church of St. Mamas, Morphou, ed. M. Jones and A. M. Jones (Nicosia, 2010), pp. 135-165.

Figure 7 Angel-deacons with the Trisagion on their oraia: Studenica Monastery, Serbia, 1314 (left); St. Neophytos, Paphos, Cyprus, 15th century (right). Photo: <https://kb.osu.edu/handle/1811/40937?show=full> (left); E. Bolman (right).

the Trisagion plus the exclamation: “The incorporeal nature, the cherubim, glorify you with ceaseless hymns! The six-winged creatures, the seraphim, exalt you with endless voices!”²⁷ Facing outward from its spandrels, four sweet-looking angel-deacons ²⁷ Bolman 2010, p. 143. It seems to me that the lower angelic orders were presented as actively engaging with the upper ones as remote, because the nine orders conventionally mapped human spiritual ascent via a ladder of purification, illumination, and theosis. Pseudo-Dionysius established the persistent analogy of this process to the clergy’s roles in the liturgy: “The holy sacraments bring about purification, illumination, and perfection. The deacons perform the order which purifies. The priests constitute the order which gives illumination. And the promote decorous angelic behavior—as a means of ensuring sacramental efficacy—by arresting the viewer’s attention, pointing to the Host, and modeling a gesture of veneration.²⁸

Other angelic hymns included the doxology Glory to God in the Heavens, by which angels are shown proclaiming the Nativity as described in Luke 2:14; Marian hymns including parts of the Akathistos and John of Damascus’s In Thee, Rejoiceth; and the Psalms of Praise.²⁹ Byzantine Christmas hymns centered on the angelic doxology of Luke’s Nativity story. The Athonite monk Dionysius of Fournia (d. after 1744), in his painter’s manual of traditional iconographies for sacred art, instructed for scenes of the Nativity: “Above the cave [of Christ’s birth] a crowd of angels...hold a scroll with [the angelic doxology].”³⁰ A sixteenth-century icon of the Nativity at the Barnes Foundation (BF362), made on Crete for personal devotion, presents in the upper portion of the scene “a multitude of the heavenly host praising God” (Luke 2:13) (Fig. 8). The banderoles held by the angels peering over the clouds record their hymn of praise (Luke 2:14):

hierarchs, living in conformity with God, make up the order which perfects” Pseudo-Dionysius 1987, p. 248; see N. Costans, “Symeon of Thessaloniki and the Theology of the Icon Screen,” in Thresholds of the Sacred: Architectural, Art Historical, Liturgical, and Theological Perspectives on Religious Screens, East and West, ed. Sharon Gerstel (Washington, D.C., 2006), pp. 166-168, for Late Byzantine reiterations of this analogy. That is, depictions of the “minister” or messenger angels were bound to be more demonstrative than the “assistants” whose cosmological locus was singing endlessly around the heavenly altar.

²⁸ The angels, archangels, and principalities “preside, through each other, over the Hierarchies amongst men, in order that the elevation, and conversion, and communion, and union with God may be in due order. [...] The first rank of the Heavenly Beings [seraphim, cherubim, and thrones]...encircle and stand immediately around God; and without interruption, dances round His eternal knowledge in the most exalted ever-moving stability.” Pseudo-Dionysius, Celestial Hierarchy, III.1-2 and IX.2.

²⁹ See F. E. Brightman, ed., Liturgies Eastern and Western (Oxford, 1896), p. 385.

³⁰ Dionysius of Fournia, The Painter’s Manual of Dionysius of Fournia, trans. Paul Hetherington (London, 1974), p. 32 (Nativity).

Figure 8 Icon of the Nativity, 16th Century, The Barnes Foundation (BF362).
Photo: collection.barnesfoundation.org.

“Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men” (“Δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις θεῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς / εἰρήνη, ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας”).³¹ Slight variations on this iconography are the frescoed Nativity scenes on the vaults of the Holy Apostles Church in Thessaloniki (early- to mid-1300s) and the Dochiariou Monastery of Mount Athos (1568), both of which bear inscriptions stating that the angels sing (Fig. 9).³²

The Marian hymns Akathistos (sung in full on the fifth Saturday of Lent) and In Thee, Rejoiceth (Epi soichairei, sung after the transubstantiation of the Mass of St. Basil) honored Mary as Mother of God. Images of the seventh stanza of the Akathistos (which announced, “Rejoice, for the things of Heaven rejoice with the earth. Rejoice, the things of earth join chorus with the Heavens”) and of the In Thee, Rejoiceth (sung by “all creation, the assemblies of angels, and the race of man”) accordingly reiterated or mutated the iconography of the Nativity, including the incorporation of armies of angels to celebrate the Incarnation.³³ For the seventh Akathistos stanza, Dionysius of ³¹ The icon’s setting and figures derived from a Nativity fresco of c. 1370-1380 in the Peribleptos Church in Mystras, via its copies in earlier Cretan icons such as the “Volpi Nativity” in the Andreadis collection (c. 1400-1425). The Barnes icon differs from these in depicting the Virgin as kneeling instead of reclining, a posture that Cretan painters (e.g., Nikolaos Tzafouris, fl. 1487-1501) adapted after c. 1450 from Italian images.

³² For inscriptions: the following can be deciphered at the Dochiariou: “hoi angeloi...ton ouranon hymnon”; for the Holy Apostles: S. Gerstel, “Monastic Soundscapes in Late Byzantium” in Resounding Images, ed. S. Boynton and D. Reilly. Turnhout, 2015), p. 143. G. Galvaris mentioned that the angel choirs in a twelfth-century Nativity icon from Sinai “express the joy which fills the Christmas liturgy” in the kontakion “Rejoice, universe, when you hear it heralded: with the angels and shepherds, glorify him,” in “Icons from the 12th to the 15th Century,” in Sinai: Treasures of the Monastery, ed. K. Manifis (Athens, 1990), p. 101.

³³ For the Akathistos: Moran 1986, pp. 93-94; E. Wellesz, “The Akathistos Hymn,” Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae Transcripta 9 (Copenhagen, 1957), xx-xxxiii, with an edition of the text, pp. lxviii-lxxx. This hymn was composed in the fifth century, but not portrayed in fresco until the late thirteenth. For In Thee, Rejoiceth: Moran 1986, p. 100, 135. This hymn is attributed to John of Damascus. Also see Stefanescu 1936, pp. 177-180, specifying, “Les anges chantant l’hymne.”

Fournas instructed simply, “Everything as for the Nativity of Christ.”³⁴ One example of many is a fresco in the bema of Markov Manastir, c. 1380.³⁵ Icons and frescoes of the In Thee, Rejoiceth (e.g., by the Cretan artist Giorgios Klontzas in the 1500s) visualized said angels and men rejoicing in the Virgin by enthroning her and the Christ Child within concentric rings or simply swarms of the nine angelic orders plus members of the human faithful, including John of Damascus, to whom the hymn is attributed (Fig. 10).³⁶

Figure 9 Doxology (Nativity), Dochiariou Monastery, Mt. Athos, 1500s. Photo: Millet, no. 210.

Figure 10 Giorgios Klontzas, In Thee, Rejoiceth (detail), 1500s. Photo: <http://art-in-space.blogspot.com/2018/06/georgios-klontzas-all-creation-rejoices.html>.

³⁴ Dionysius of Fournas, The Painter's Manual of Dionysius of Fournas, trans. P. Hetherington (London, 1974), p. 51 (Akathistos).

³⁵ N. Ševčenko, “Icons in the Liturgy,” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 45 (1991), p. 48; A. Patzold, Der Akathistos-Hymnos: Die Bilderzyklen in der byzantinischen Wandmalerei des 14. Jahrhunderts (Stuttgart, 1989).

³⁶ Moran 1986, p. 135.

The Psalms of Praise (Ps. 148-50), too, were sung for the Divine Office with the same doxology, and were sometimes graced by Alleluias and the Trisagion as exultant refrains.³⁷ A fourteenth-century cycle in the Lesnovo Church in Macedonia shows this ceremony initiated by Christ in a vault amidst angels (Fig. 11).³⁸ Although they do not physically appear to be singing, Dionysius of Fournas' manual again affirmed this act by prescribing Christ and the nine choirs of angels, with the top triad saying "Holy,

Figure 11 Psalms of Praise (148-50), Lesnovo Church, Macedonia, 1300s.
Photo: Wikimedia Commons

³⁷ R. Taft, "Trisagion" in The Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium, edited by A. Kazhdan (Oxford, 1991).

³⁸ Moran 1986, p. 89, 119. The complete unit came to be known as the Pasa pnoe ("Let everything that has breath praise the Lord").

Holy, Holy” and the rest making pronouncements of glory.³⁹

The Divine Liturgy

The images just noted concretized the performance of angelic hymns in objects and spaces that promoted their mystical concelebration. In so doing, these works of art deputized the liminal role of real angels in the liturgy. And liturgy — so often a bridge between form and meaning — was a direct and vital artery to gaining the bliss promised by depictions of angels’ song. From here, I will focus on scenes featuring the Cherubikon and Trisagion (again, sung successively during the procession of the Eucharistic gifts to the altar and then their consecration) because they visually embodied the doctrine by which the liturgies of heaven and earth coincided, i.e., they functioned explicitly as icons of the Divine Liturgy. The pictures imaged forth the themes of concelebration leading to theosis that were vocalized by these hymns.⁴⁰ Both hymns had melodic components suggesting the sonic quality of angels’ song, to the extent that human voices could evoke their “secret sounds” by means of continuities layered with silences.⁴¹

³⁹ Dionysius of Fournia 1974, p. 45.

⁴⁰ For the Great Entrance, I rely on Taft’s translation of the Cherubikon and the general course of events, crafted from a series of liturgical manuscripts (both Basil and Chrysostom) and mystagogical treatises. Taft listed his sources on pages xxvii-xxxix of The Great Entrance, 1975.

⁴¹ See L. Steenbridge, “We Who Musically Represent the Cherubim” in Acoustic Architecture: Music, Acoustics, and Ritual, ed. B. Pentcheva (New York, 2018), pp. 143-162.

The entire Divine Liturgy, likewise, transpired as a sequence of veiling and unveiling, shifting between spiritual and physical realms while moving through spaces of greater or lesser sanctity. For the Great Entrance, priests and deacons sang the Cherubikon to themselves as they prepared the Eucharistic gifts and commemorated the angels and saints in the prothesis (the northeast chamber of the sanctuary), while a deacon swung his censer.⁴² This liturgical event constituted a shift of mode and tone within the celebration, transfiguring the clergy as surrogates of the angelic orders while delivering the angels into the physical world.⁴³ The hymn intoned:

We who mystically represent the cherubim and sing the thrice-holy hymn...let us lay aside all worldly care to receive the King of All escorted unseen by the angelic hierarchy. Alleluia. [...]
Let all mortal flesh be silent, and stand in fear and trembling...for the King of Kings and Lord of Lords comes forth to be slain and given as food to the faithful. The choirs of angels go before him, with all the principalities and powers, the many-eyed cherubim and six-winged seraphim, faces covered, and proclaiming the hymn: Alleluia!
Now the powers of heaven worship with us unseen, for behold the King of Glory enters... In faith and love let us approach in order to become sharers in eternal life. Alleluia.⁴⁴

Then these clergy members processed the gifts through the nave, still singing. They met the celebrant at the doors of the iconostasis, from where he took the gifts to the altar, and said the silent consecration prayer invoking “thousands of archangels and myriads of angels, with the cherubim and six-winged seraphim, many-eyed, sublime, ⁴² Taft 1975, pp. 3-10, for the general order of events.

⁴³ Mudrak in Byzantium/Modernism, p. 45 n. 18.

⁴⁴ Translated in Taft 1975, pp. 54-55.

winged...singing, crying, exclaiming the hymn of victory."⁴⁵ At this point, the human faithful proclaimed this hymn of victory, the Trisagion, with the angels:⁴⁶

It is very meet, right and befitting...that we should...sing unto you...O Lord...of all creation, visible and invisible...to serve you and pour forth an unceasing hymn of glory: angels and archangels, thrones, dominions, principalities, powers and virtues, and the many-eyed cherubim praise you; about you stand the seraphim...crying one unto another, with continuing voice unstilled songs of praise...exclaiming: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts: heaven and earth are full of your glory."⁴⁷

The singers' voices seemed to mingle in the dome as a point of connectivity between earth and heaven, intimating future bliss. Maximos the Confessor commented on this human-angelic harmony: "The unceasing and sanctifying doxology by the holy angels in the Trisagion signifies...the equality in the way of life and conduct and the harmony in the divine praising which will take place in the age to come by both heavenly and earthly powers."⁴⁸ Kabasilas reiterated this doctrine in the present tense:

Angels and men form one Church, a single choir because of the coming of Christ who is both of heaven and earth. That is why we sing [the Trisagion] after the procession of the Gospel, thus proclaiming that by coming among us, Christ has placed us with the angels and established us ⁴⁵ Stefanescu 1936, pp. 82-83 (Anaphora Prayer of St. Basil); Laurent, Le rituel de la proskomide, p. 129 (commemoration of angels).

⁴⁶ Taft 1975, pp. 79-80.

⁴⁷ Taft, "Trisagion," in the Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (Oxford, 2005). Oxford Reference Online.

⁴⁸ Maximos the Confessor, Maximos Confessor: Selected Writings, ed. George C. Berthold (New York, 1985), p. 207. Cf. Kabasilas, "The Thrice-holy Hymn has been taken in part from the angels, and in part from Book of Psalms by the Prophet David; it was made into one hymn by the Church of Christ and dedicated to the Holy Trinity...in order to show both the harmony of the Old Testament with the New, and that angels and men form one Church and one choir." In Nicholas Cabasilas: A Commentary on the Divine Liturgy, trans. J.M. Hussey and P.A. McNulty (London, 1960), p. 60.

amid the angelic choirs.⁴⁹

Throughout the ceremony—as noted above—images of angels following these liturgical rubrics could be seen in frescoes and on other objects, performing the requisite hymns. Such images revealed their status of sublime versions of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, the power of communion to elevate the faithful to their ranks, and their actual presence. Consecration converted their Eucharistic gifts into the body and blood of Christ to sanctify the faithful, who (according to Nicholas Kabasilas) “gain...the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven, and similar good things.”⁵⁰ Late Antique theologians like Chrysostom determined that, when the priest presented the sacrifice, the angels physically entered the church: “Angels surround the priest; the whole sanctuary and the space around the altar are filled with the heavenly hosts, worshipping him who lies upon the altar.”⁵¹ Symeon of Thessaloniki, also described the sanctuary as a space for angels and officiating priests.⁵² Hence the dome of Gračnica portrays “myriads” of angels, presided over by a seraph holding rhypidia, flocking the ⁴⁹ Kabasilas, Divinae liturgiae interpretatio, PG 20, 412-413A, quoted. in C. N. Tsirpanlis, The Ecclesiastical Theology of Nicholas Cabasilas (New York, 1979), p. 183.

⁵⁰ Nicholas Kabasilas, Divine Liturgy, I, qtd. In Bolman 2010, p. 138. Communion was the normative locus of theosis, transforming the person into a member of Christ’s body.

⁵¹ Chrysostom, Treatise on the Priesthood, VI, 4, from Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, First Series, Vol. 9, ed. Philip Schaff (Buffalo, 1889), Documenta Catholica Omnia; Peterson 1964, p. 34.

⁵² M. Djurić, “To Picture and to Perform: The Image of the Eucharistic Liturgy at Markov Manastir,” Zograf 38 (2014), p. 125 (angel-deacons) and p. 134 (angel-priests). Angels as priests in the Heavenly Liturgy first appeared in monumental painting in Dečani. The same idea is highlighted in the concept of the liturgical space in the doctrine of Symeon of Thessalonike, according to which the sanctuary was a space for angels and officiating priests: see X. Werner, “L’ espace liturgique d’ après S. Siméon de Thessalonique (1416–1429),” in: L’espaceliturgique: ses elements constitutifs et leurs sens (Conférences Saint Serge. LIIe semaine d’études liturgiques, Paris 27–30 Juin 2005), ed. C. Braga, Roma 2006, p. 113.

consecrated Host (Fig. 12).

Figure 12 Divine Liturgy, Gračanica, detail of the consecration.

Photo: <https://blog.obitel-minsk.com/2017/12/chalice-of-eternity-look-at-orthodox.html>.

Thus, imaging forth angelic action in liturgy and icons each contributed to mystical assimilation of human participants with the angels. Returning to the notion that the angels themselves cooperated in this process as links in an essentially liturgical chain of images emanating from God, it is important to understand that images of the Cherubikon and Trisagion dramatized the traditional doctrine that the liturgy itself was not just an index, but a mimetic “icon” of the heavenly one.⁵³ These pictures of angel-clergy were distinct from icons of individual angels like Gabriel and Michael insofar as what they really showed were offices rather than persons: angels representing the human clergy representing the orders of angels. Pseudo-Dionysius expressed that the material representation of the heavenly liturgy made its mystical observation possible:

[It] is not possible for our mind to be raised to that immaterial representation and contemplation of the Heavenly Hierarchies, without using material guidance, accounting the visible splendors as reflections of the invisible splendor...of the feast of contemplation within the mind; and the ranks of the orders [of angels], of the harmonious and regulated habit, with regard to Divine things; and the reception of the most Divine Eucharist...and whatever other things were transmitted to Heavenly Beings supermundanely, but to us symbolically.⁵⁴

Kabasilas concurred that images and their mental equivalents prepared the mind to celebrate and receive the Eucharist, and to bring the faithful to theosis.⁵⁵ Last, the patriarch Germanos had specified the concept of liturgy as icon to the Great Entrance, assimilating its material and mystical facets as membranes connecting the celestial and sublunary:

By means of the procession of the deacons and the representation of the fans, which are in the likeness of the seraphim, the Cherubikon signifies the entrance of all the...righteous ahead of the cherubic powers and the ⁵³ Djurić 2014, pp. 125-26. See W. Tronzo, “Mimesis in Byzantium: Notes toward a History of the Function of the Image” in RES: Anthropology and Aesthetics 25 (1994): 61-76; C. Barber, “Mimesis and Memory in the Narthex Mosaics of the Nea Moni, Chios,” Art History 21.3 (2001): 323-337.

⁵⁴ Pseudo-Dionysius, Celestial Hierarchy I.3, 121C-124A.

⁵⁵ Nicholas Kabasilas, Explication 66, trans. in Woodfin 2012, pp. 115-119.

angelic hosts, who run invisibly in advance of...Christ, who is proceeding to the mystical sacrifice, borne aloft by material hands. [...] In addition...the choirs of angels, who have seen...the victory over death...with us exclaim Alleluia.⁵⁶

Hence images of angels enacting the Cherubikon and Trisagion were tools of theosis, suspended between the immanent and transcendent, and inseparable from their performative contexts. The formulation seems simple—and yet representations of music-making angels from the Gothic West complicate the proposition. They serve as a reminder that there was no determinate way of conveying angels' song in image or action.

Gothic Angel-Musicians

In the West, portrayals of angel-musicians joined secular musical practice with an exegetic synthesis of the seraphic hymn in Isaiah, the instruments populating the Psalms of Praise, and the harps played by the apocalyptic Elders for the celestial liturgy of Revelation.⁵⁷ Their apparitions in image and performance were meant to entice the faithful to mystical participation in their liturgy by cognitive, aesthetic, and mimetic means. For example, in Spinello Aretino's Coronation of the Virgin altarpiece (c. 1400) for the Church of S. Felicità, Florence, angel-musicians energetically celebrate this event as ⁵⁶ St. Germanos of Constantinople on the Divine Liturgy, trans. John Meyendorff (Crestwood, NY, 1984), pp. 86-87.

⁵⁷ For the argument and bibliography: Amy E. Gillette, Depicting the Sound of Silence: Angel-Musicians in Trecento Sacred Art, unpublished Ph.D. diss. (Temple University, 2016).

a rough analogue of the Byzantine Divine Liturgy; or in a reliquary shrine made in Paris for Elisabeth of Hungary (c. 1320-1340), play a sweet tune to honor the sacramental reality of the Eucharist symbolized by the Nursing Virgin; or rejoicing and praising Mary as an intercessor to Christ, as stated by their scroll in a window from the Beauchamp Chapel at St. Mary's in Warwick (Gaudeamus omnes in domino diem festum celebrantes sub honore Marie virginis de cuius Assumptione gaudent angeli et collaudant filium Dei) (Figs. 13, 14, 15).⁵⁸ In each case, the angels' convincingly rendered instrumental and choral performances emphasized their liturgy as a source of comfort and joy in divine love, within a devotional ecosystem in which images offered an interactive channel through which the song of angels could touch and move the "bodily imagination" as articulated by the Cambridge friar Walter Hilton (d. 1396):

Our Lord comforts a soul by angel's song. This song cannot be described by any bodily likeness, for it is spiritual, and above all imagination and reason. (...) For just as a soul, in understanding spiritual things, is often touched and moved through bodily imagination by the work of angels, as when Ezekiel the prophet saw in bodily imagination the truth of God's hidden mysteries, just so, in the love of God, a soul by the presence of angels is ravished out of mind of all earthly and fleshly things and filled ⁵⁸ "Let us all rejoice in God, celebrating the feast of the Virgin Mary for whose Assumption the angels rejoice and praise with the Son of God." For the Beauchamp Chapel: A. Buckle, "'Fit for a King': Music and Iconography in Richard Beauchamp's Chantry Chapel," Early Music 38.1 (2010), pp. 3-19. For the reliquary: Z. Falvy, "Angel Musicians on a Fourteenth-Century Reliquary," Imago Musicae 4 (1987), pp. 229-238.

N.B. The Mass was depicted only rarely in art of the Latin West: M. McNamee, "The Origin of the Vested Angel as a Eucharistic Symbol in Flemish Painting," The Art Bulletin 54 (1972), p. 264; J. McKinnon, "Representations of the Mass in Medieval and Renaissance Art," Journal of the American Musicological Society 31.1 (1981), pp. 21-52.

with a heavenly joy, to hear angel's song and heavenly sound, according to the measure of its love.⁵⁹

Figure 13 Spinello Aretino, Coronation of the Virgin, S. Trinità, Florence, c. 1400 (detail). Photo: ArtStor.

⁵⁹ Walter Hilton, "Of Angel's Song," in The Cell of Self-Knowledge: Seven Early English Mystical Treatises Printed by Henry Pepwell in 1521, ed. E. Gardner (New York, 1910), pp. 43-44.

Figure 14 Jean de Touyl(?), Reliquary Shrine, Paris, 1320s-1340s.
Photo: Metropolitan Museum of Art

Figure 15 Gaudeamus omnes, Beauchamp Chapel, St. Mary's, Warwick, 1440s.

Photo: https://vidimus.org/wp-content/uploads/2011/01/issue_46_2010_feat4.jpg.

Sometimes, crowds of mechanized angels further enlivened the “actual” angels’ incursions into the liturgy — as well as paraliturgical performances, courtly and civic spectacles, and celestial-themed devices, such as clocks.⁶⁰ Conceptually reminiscent of the angels adorning the Gračanica dome (Figs. 4, 12) were a set of wooden statues, now lost, at St. Margaret’s in Kings Lynn, England. According to an early sixteenth-century description of these automata, the angels appeared to plummet from the roof to the high altar at the elevation of the Host and retracted “at the end of the chant.”⁶¹ Akin in execution and apparently rampant were the “Paradise machines” built for the paraliturgical mystery plays held in churches and public spaces throughout Latin Christendom. An Orthodox bishop from Russia, Abramo of Souzdal, was deeply moved by a few such spectacles when visiting Florence in 1439 for the Ecumenical Council. He enthusiastically chronicled the “inexpressibly beautiful” Annunciation play in S. Felice, staged from a tall scaffold “meant to represent the heavenly spheres” erected over the entrance of this church.⁶² Following some preliminaries, an actor playing a Prophet announced, “Thence shall God come to seek the lost sheep,” and then:

⁶⁰ See, e.g., J. Gimpel, The Medieval Machine (New York, 1977); P. Meredith and J. Taliby, eds., The Staging of Religious Drama in Europe in the Later Middle Ages (Kalamazoo, 1983); S. Lightsey, Manmade Marvels in Medieval Culture and Literature (New York, 2007); E. Truitt, Medieval Robots (Philadelphia, 2015); P. Butterworth and K. Normington, eds., Medieval Theatre Performance: Actors, Dancers, Automata, and Their Audiences (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 2017).

The curtains of the upper scaffold open and from there comes a volley of shots imitating Heaven’s thunder... Up on the scaffold is God the Father surrounded by more than five hundred burning lamps which revolve continually, going up and down. Children dressed in white, representing the angels, surround him, one striking the cymbals, other playing flutes or citterns in a scene of joyful and inexpressible beauty. After some time, the ⁶¹ “Oct. 20, 1502. Thomas Goisman, aldermannus de Villa Begia super Hull. Sep. in capella S. Trin., parteboriali, juxta meumpatrem et matrem, coram S. Virgine Katerina. Lego eidemcapellae xli., in honore Sacramenti, ad faciendum ad summumaltare descendente et ascendente (sic) ad tectum capellae inter levationem corporis Christi et sanguinis Domini, sicutest apud Lynne in eccL cath. [=St. Margaret’s]; scilicet angelisascendatur et descendeturisque ad finem cantationis, et Ne nosinducas in temptationem. Resid. Aliciseuxorimeae.” (“October 20, 1502. Thomas Goisman, alderman of Hull. I leave to [Trinity Chapel, Hull] 10 pounds, in honor of the Sacrament, for descending to the high altar and ascend to the roof of the chapel between the elevation of the Host, as it is done in Lynn Cathedral; that is, angels ascend and descend at the end of the chant.”) Will #102 of Thomas Goisman of Kingston upon Hull, in Testamentaeboracensia, a selection of wills from the registry at York, vol. 4 (London, 1869). Also see Miri Rubin on late-medieval Eucharistic culture: Corpus Christi: The Eucharist in Late Medieval Culture (Cambridge, 1991); and for more about automata, Margaret Aston, Faith and Fire: Popular and Unpopular Religion, 1350-1600 (London, 1993).

⁶² Meredith and Tailby 1983, pp. 242-245. For more about the construction history of the S. Felice Paradise machine; N. Newbigin, “Greasing the Wheels of Heaven: Recycling, Innovation, and the Question of ‘Brunelleschi’s’ Stage Machinery,” I Tatti Studies in the Italian Renaissance 11 (2007): 201-241.

angel sent by God descends on two ropes...to announce the conception of the Son. The angel [looks] exactly as celestial angels are to be seen in paintings. While he descends he sings in a low voice, holding a branch in his hand. [Mary assents to the Incarnation.] The angel hands over to her the beautiful branch and ascends... A fire comes from God and with a noise of uninterrupted thunder passes down three ropes...rising up again in flames and rebounding down once more, so that the whole church was filled with sparks. The angel sang jubilantly as he ascended, and moved his hands about and beat his wings as if he were really flying. The fire poured forth and spread with increasing intensity and noise from the high scaffold, lighting the lamps in the church... When the angel arrives back at his point of departure the flames subside and the curtains close again.⁶³

The Gothic portrayals of angel-musicians, like angelic music itself, were meant to enchant, edify, and comfort souls, restoring them to an angelic habitus; angel machines especially were a late, but consummate expression of applied angelology.⁶⁴ All of these images could also be considered as Dionysian theology in its negative sense, revealing what Byzantine angels overwhelmingly were not: that is, instrumentalists or active singers, shaped by secular musical practice, and manifestly happy. The Gothic angel-musicians therefore generate questions concerning the metaphysical and existential positions of their Byzantine peers.

⁶³ Meredith and Tailby, eds., pp. 244-245; G. Wickham, The Medieval Theatre (Cambridge, 1987); Tydeman, ed., The Medieval European Stage, 500-1500 (Cambridge, 2001).

⁶⁴ For angels' song and especially angel-harpists to comfort the soul — a topic that needs investigation! — see e.g., St. Francis, Bartholomeus Anglicus, Grosseteste, mystics such as Julian of Norwich, and the Wycliffite homilies.

Questions about Byzantine Angels

The most interesting questions strike me as these: were there any Byzantine or Post-Byzantine depictions of music-making angels? And why did the angels of these traditions appear so gloomy relative to Western ones?

With respect to musical performance, I have found no Byzantine images of angels playing instruments. Some Byzantine churches displayed monumental images of choristers (psaltai) that referred to actual choral practice, such as those singing the fourteenth strophe of the Akathistos on the south choir wall of the Dečani Monastery church in Kosovo (c. 1350). Yet these images showed human rather than angelic performers and had a simply prescriptive relation to the liturgy, unlike the iconic one asserted by the depiction of angel-clergy enacting the Divine Liturgy in the dome of Gračanica (Figs. 3, 12).⁶⁵ Also, scenes of David playing a harp or indeed the full instrumentarium of Psalm 150, as shown in the Hamilton Psalter (c. 1300), confirm that Byzantine artists did depict musical instruments. Nevertheless, the instruments in the Hamilton Psalter are striking for being inert, and the angelized David leaves them behind when a bigger angel whisks him away following his final Psalm of Praise (Fig. 16).⁶⁶

⁶⁵ See Moran 1986, pp. 5-6. Post-Byzantine artists in Russia and Romania eventually replaced the human choristers with angelic ones, in response to campaigns against depicting non-holy figures in icons. See B. Uspensky, Semiotics of the Russian Icon (Ghent, 1976), for the question of “how to deal with those figures who are not themselves objects of reverence, but which are present in icons being worshipped” (p. 68).

Figure 16 Psalm 150/1, Hamilton Psalter, Cyprus, c. 1300. Photo: Index of Christian Art.

The status of the Hamilton Psalter as a bilingual Greek-and-Latin book made on Lusignan Cyprus engenders a sequent question: did angel-musicians emerge at all in the art of the Latin East– Latin or Orthodox, medieval or post-medieval? Musical angels did accompany images in the mendicant churches of Venetian Dalmatia. (There are, to the best of my knowledge, no extant medieval examples from Cyprus, Venetian Crete, or the Frankish Morea. However, the extensive circulation of patrons, artists, and small-scale objects suggest the affirmative.) Examples include Nicolò di Pietro's altarpiece of the Virgin and Child Enthroned (1394), commissioned by Vučina Belgarzone for the church of St. Dominic in Zadar; and the high altarpiece of the same subject for the Franciscan church of St. Jerome in Ugljan by Giovanni di Pietro or his collaborator Dujam Vučković (mid-fifteenth century), in which angels playing vielles are visible around the throne in the central panel (Fig. 17).⁶⁷

⁶⁶ J. Braun, “Musical Instruments in Byzantine Illuminated Manuscripts,” Early Music 8.3 (1980), pp. 312-327. Cf. the winged, harp-playing David in the Lincoln Cathedral Angel Choir, 1256-1280. Representing King David with angels’ wings seems to have been justified by Psalm 139:8-10: “If I ascend up to heaven, you are there; if I make my bed in hell, you are there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall your hand lead me, and your right hand shall hold me.” See P. Binski, Becket’s Crown: Art and Imagination in Gothic England, 1170-1300 (New Haven, 2004), p. 280.

Figure 17 Giovanni di Pietro or Dujam Vučković, altarpiece of the Virgin and Child Enthroned, St. Jerome, Ugljan, Croatia, mid-1400s (detail).

Photo: <http://djelatnici.unizd.hr/~ehilje/Gsz-Html/Gsz-p14.htm>.

In addition, beginning in the 1500s, the presence of Venetian art and artists on Crete evidently inspired their Orthodox Cretan peers to depict angel-musicians celebrating the celestial liturgy of Revelation (the same subject that had originally vindicated angel-musicians in Western art). Georgios Klontzas (d. 1608) painted a triptych for use on Sinai that portrays the iconography of In Thee, Rejoiceth on the exterior and the Last Judgment on the interior. He incorporated a scene of heaven in which music-making angels surround the heavenly Christ above and accept the souls of the blessed from a priestly Christ below.⁶⁸ Another Cretan painter—further invigorated by the circulation of German engravings—created a fresco around 1600 in which angel-harpists celebrate the “new song” of Revelation 14:1-3, in the Apocalypse cycle ⁶⁷ D. Cooper, “Gothic Art & the Friars in Late Medieval Croatia, 1213-1460” in J. Beresford-Peirse, ed., Croatia: aspects of art, architecture and cultural heritage (London, 2009), pp. 80-83 (76-97), with further bibliography in his notes 38 and 44-46.

⁶⁸ See cat. no. 32 by Maria Kazanaki-Lappa in A. Drandaki, ed., Origins of El Greco: Icon Painting in Venetian Crete (New York, 2009), pp. 90-91.

decorating the portico between the trapeza and katholikon of the Dionysiou Monastery on Mount Athos (Fig. 18).⁶⁹ Even later, and perhaps in response to this cycle, Dionysius of Fournia recommended “a crowd of angels holding harps” to illustrate the “new song,” and for the Second Coming, Christ and Mary on a throne of Cherubim “accompanied by psalms and hymns and many organs with the great glory of angels.”⁷⁰

In brief, it seems that angel-musicians did not feature in Orthodox art until painters on Venetian Crete adopted them in the sixteenth century to illustrate the celestial liturgy of Revelation. Angel-musicians never joined the ranks of angel-clergy performing the Divine Liturgy in monumental church cycles. Their delayed and limited appearance probably concerned some level of resistance to Western innovations plus perhaps the tighter parallelism (versus the West) between the liturgy and sacred images of the “participatory mode.”⁷¹ For one, the Byzantine liturgy excluded readings from Revelation and did not accept this book as canonical until the fourteenth century.⁷² Moreover, while the heightened theatricality of the Great Entrance and other liturgical events encouraged the mimetic commemoration of Christ’s Passion, the tradition of ⁶⁹ “I heard a voice from heaven, as the noise of many waters and as the voice of great thunder. And the voice which I heard was as the voice of harpers, harping on their harps. And they sung as it were a new canticle, before the throne and before the four living creatures.” The monks would read the Apocalypse during meals, but not during the service. Millet, Monuments de l’Athos, vol. 1 (Paris, 1927); also P. L. Vocotopoulos, “Monumental Painting” in Treasures of Mount Athos, ed. A. A. Karakatsanis (Thessaloniki, 1997), p. 37.

⁷⁰ Dionysius of Fournia 1974, pp. 48-49.

⁷¹ See H. Maguire, “Two Modes of Narration in Byzantine Art,” in Byzantine East, Latin West, ed. D. Mouriki (Princeton, 1995), pp. 385-395.

⁷² See J. Irmscher and A. W. Carr, “Apocalypse,” in the Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (Oxford, 2005). Oxford Reference Online.

Figure 18 Angel-harpists (Apoc. 14:1-3), Dionysiou Monastery--Mount Athos, c. 1600. Photo: Wikimedia

paraliturgical theater to which Byzantine sacred images could or would make reference remained extremely spare, especially in comparison to the abundance of Western productions.⁷³ Symeon of Thessaloniki, like Abramo of Souzdal, had evidently seen a Latin mystery play of the Assumption, but reacted with categorical contempt. The use of actors to play the parts of holy figures struck him as obscuring the distinction between image and substance (“And this man represents the Virgin, and they call him ‘Mary’”) and, altogether, as “contrary to reason, and foreign to the tradition of the Church, and [things that] do violence to the mysteries and to Christian piety.”⁷⁴

⁷³ A. White, The Artifice of Eternity: A Study of Liturgical and Theatrical Practices in Byzantium, Ph.D. diss. (College Park, MD, 2006); A. Karpozilos and A. Kazhdan, “Theater” in the Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (Oxford, 2005), Oxford Reference Online; R. Ousterhout, “Women at Tombs: Narrative, Theatricality, and the Contemplative Mode” in Wonderful Things: Byzantium through its Art, eds. A. Eastmond and L. James (Burlington, 2013), p. 233.

⁷⁴ Symeon of Thessaloniki, Contra haereses, PG 155, 112C-113A. Quoted. by Ousterhout 2013, p. 232.

As for the emotional life of Byzantine angels, John of Damascus remarked paradigmatically, “[The angels] are above us for they are incorporeal, and are free of all bodily passion, yet are not passionless: for the Deity alone is passionless.”⁷⁵ Evidence from art (not texts) does give the impression that angelic misery was prominent. They suffered storms of weeping from the 1100s, a passion that flourished particularly amongst the non-clerical angels represented in epitaphioi, where they transposed the experience of those present for the ceremony.⁷⁶ One given by the nun Jefimija (1398/1399), now at the Putna monastery in Romania, even embroidered a troparion for Holy Saturday Orthros below the lamenting angels: “Seeing the strange sight, the host of angels uttered an unaccustomed cry of anguish, O Son of God, Word.”⁷⁷ The point was a living expression of Byzantine theology in which the display of human emotion at the events of Christ’s life and death—perhaps especially by angels, who were simultaneously exemplary and supposed to be exempt from sorrow—underscored the marvelous reality of his Incarnation.⁷⁸

But did angels in the Byzantine tradition experience joy? They did, even to an unspeakable degree, and (as in the West) it was their natural state and always had to do ⁷⁵ John of Damascus, “Concerning Angels,” Exposition on the Orthodox Faith, II.3, pp. 207-208.

⁷⁶ H. Maguire, “The Depiction of Sorrow in Middle Byzantine Art,” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 31 (1977), p. 145.

⁷⁷ Email correspondence 12/13/2016 with Henry Schilb regarding the Jefimija epitaphios; also Byzantium: Faith and Power, p. 320.

⁷⁸ Maguire 1977, p. 173. Also, according to mystagogical interpretations, “every liturgical gesture is interpreted as a symbolic repetition of Christ’s earthly life, death, and Resurrection.” Djurić 2014, p. 129, citing R. Bornert, Les commentaires byzantins de la Divine Liturgie du VI^e au X^e siècle (Paris, 1966) in its entirety.

with the process of regaining Paradise for humanity. Joy as an angelic attribute traced to a statement by Christ in Luke 15: “Even so, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repents.”⁷⁹ The Pseudo-Dionysius commented on this passage in his Celestial Hierarchy:

I must explain [...] what Scripture intends in the reference to the joy of the heavenly ranks. Now, these ranks could never experience the pleasures we draw from the passions. The reference, therefore, is to the way they participate in the divine joy by the finding of the lost... They are unspeakably happy in the way that, occasionally, sacred men are happy when God arranges for divine enlightenments to visit them.⁸⁰

The liturgy offered numerous, recurrent opportunities for venting angelic happiness to counterpoise their “unaccustomed anguish” at Christ’s death. Their delight in the process of salvation surfaced in the words and melodies of various hymns that I quoted above, such as calls to rejoice with the angels for Christ’s Nativity (e.g., “Rejoice, for the things of Heaven rejoice with the earth” in the Akathistos). Chrysostom propounded moreover of the Trisagion:

Above, the hosts of angels sing praise; below, men form choirs in the churches and imitate them by singing the same doxology. [...] The ⁷⁹ Also Psalm 98, when psalmody was understood as an angelic act: “Make a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise. Sing unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.” Also see Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, Celestial Hierarchy VII.4, in Luibheid 1997, pp. 165-166: “Theology has transmitted to the men of earth those hymns sung by the first rank of angels whose gloriously transcendent enlightenment is thereby made manifest... In my book Divine Hymns [a lost or fictitious treatise] I have already explicated, to the best of my ability, the supreme praises sung by those holy intelligences which dwell beyond in heaven.”

⁸⁰ Celestial Hierarchy, 15.9, in Migne, Patrologiae cursus completus, Series graeca, ed. cit., 3, col. 340; C. Luibheid, trans, Pseudo-Dionysius, the Complete Works (New York, 1987), p. 190.

inhabitants of heaven and earth are brought together in a common assembly...one shout of delight, one joyful chorus.⁸¹

Figure 19 Annunciation, Homilies of James of Kokkinobaphos, c. 1130-1150. Photo: Index of Medieval Art.

Byzantine and Post-Byzantine artists rarely actually fashioned happy angels, like the eight exulting by holding up their arms in the Annunciation miniature in the Homilies of James of Kokkinobaphos (c. 1130-50) (Fig. 19).⁸² Their motivation is the homily's statement that when Mary consented to the will of God, "all the intellectual ⁸¹ Chrysostom, PG 56, col. 97. In discussing the Trisagion's place in the Divine Liturgy, Nicholas Kabasilas also established chant in the choir of the angels, but this comment refers to the Little Entrance (Sacrae liturgiae interpretatio, PG, 150).

⁸² Paris, Bibl. Nat., gr. 1208, folio 173v. Maguire 1977:, p.160.

powers exulted” and “heaven on high rejoiced exceedingly.”⁸³ One angel in the aforementioned Dionysiou fresco also raises its arms in delight; several in the Barnes Nativity icon even smile gently, in the manner of angels in Italian art (Figs. 19, 8). Yet these are rare exceptions amidst images of hymning angels that register as passionless, beyond joy or sorrow, a trait most marked in the theologically happiest first triad. Even noting that the angels’ essential joy could break out in musical tones, in sermons, and so on, there must have been something purposeful to their dispassion as depicted, in light of the animation of angels or singers in other contexts. In part, the condition of God’s apatheia compounded with the persistence of classical ethics and a general suspicion of laughter valorized a habitus of tranquility.⁸⁴ Relatedly, I believe this portrayal of angel choristers concerned their position in the liturgical chain of images, and would add moreover that the sociability of Gothic images tended to be a way to compensate for their essential exclusion from transcendental realities, while Byzantine ones could act as direct conduits to mystical concelebration. On this topic, John of Damascus explained that “figures...of invisible and immaterial things in bodily form [lead to] a clearer apprehension of God and the angels,” and elaborated that “an image is expressive of something in the future, mystically shadowing forth what is to happen” as well as “a hymn of praise, a manifestation.”⁸⁵

⁸³ Maguire 1977, p. 159, quoting James of Kokkinobaphos, Homilies, PG, 127, col. 653A.

⁸⁴ A. Cutler, “Emotion” in the Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium (Oxford, 2005). Oxford Reference Online.

Conclusion

As a coda, I would like to consider the extent to which assemblages of Byzantine or Post-Byzantine images of angel choirs in portable, wearable, and architectural imagery adhered to any programmatic unity.⁸⁶ Here are some ways to think about the “program” formed from several fixed and moveable image types that were activated by angelic concelebration in quasi-serial, functional settings: multitude as evidence of angelic blessedness and eschatological hope; hierarchy as emulative and transcendent; and theosis as the goal of sequence.

The multiplication of scenes of angels’ song in these heterotopic spaces emphasized one of the most characteristic angelic traits: their multitude.⁸⁷ The idea that there were great numbers of angels came out of Biblical passages that announced, “Thousands of thousands [of angels] ministered to [God]” (Daniel 7:10) and “You are to come unto...the Heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels” (Hebrews 12:22). The idea was taken up by the consecration prayer’s “thousands” and ⁸⁵ John of Damascus, Apologia I-III, in Three Treatises on the Divine Images, trans. Andrew Louth (Crestwood, NY, 2003).

⁸⁶ It is common for scholars to note that images overlapped and colored each other through the liturgical year, but less common to spell out what this meant for given sets of images. See, e.g., N. Ševčenko, “Icons in the Liturgy,” Dumbarton Oaks Papers 45 (1991), 45-57.

⁸⁷ Cf. S. Burge, Angels in Islam: Jalal al-Din al-Suyuti’s al-Haba’ik fi akhbar al-mala’ik (London, 2015), for great many angels in Islamic thought and art.

“myriads” of angels, the “multitude of the heavenly host praising God” in the Christmas doxology of Luke 2:14, the full orders named in the Cherubikon and Trisagion, and indeed in sacred art. It signaled the angels’ perfection—for the upper, assistant orders more than the lower, ministering ones, because theologians figured that the closer something was to God, the more it proliferated.⁸⁸ Thus, in general, the multiplication of portrayals of hymning angels propounded their immanence in the Divine Liturgy, properly performed; and amounted to a promise to “come unto the Heavenly Jerusalem.”

With respect to sequence, art and architecture mapped the liturgy as it unfolded simultaneously in heaven.⁸⁹ The permeability between architecture, liturgy, image, and imagination meant that types and settings nuanced, but also conspired in the motion from precept to mysticism.⁹⁰ The three major architectural divisions (narthex, nave, and sanctuary) could evoke the three angelic triads, the tripartite structure of the cosmos, and—because they formed one entity—the multiplicity within the unity of the Trinity.⁹¹

Epitaphioi were symbolic burial shrouds whose removal from the Host meant the ⁸⁸ “I think we also ought to reflect on the tradition in scripture that the angels number a thousand times a thousand and ten thousand times ten thousand. Those numbers, enormous to us, square and multiply themselves and thereby indicate clearly that the ranks of the heavenly beings are innumerable. So numerous indeed are the blessed armies of transcendent intelligent beings that they surpass the fragile and limited realm of our physical numbers.” Pseudo-Dionysius, Celestial Hierarchy, XIV, in Luibheid 1987, p. 181.

⁸⁹ Representations of the Great Entrance in the central dome constituted “a direct expression of Byzantine liturgists’ interpretations of the unity between the two churches and the simultaneous occurrence of the liturgy in heaven and earth.” Djurić 2014, p. 135, citing Bornert 1966, pp. 78, 80-81, 122, 176-178.

⁹⁰ Constans 2006, p. 166; Ousterhout, “The Holy Space: Architecture and Liturgy” in: Heaven on Earth, ed. L. Safran, pp. 81-120.

⁹¹ Constas 2006, p. 167.

Resurrection and the rending of the Temple veil, to show the church of the angels.⁹² The iconostasis both demarcated and mediated the sensible and supersensible, providing the terms in which Symeon of Thessaloniki explained the arrangement of icons on its entablature:

And thus [the icon] of the Savior is placed...in the middle of the sacred icons of [his] Mother, and of the Baptist; and of the angels, and the apostles... These icons teach us that Christ is in this way in heaven among his saints, and also [here] with us now, and will come again.⁹³

The ciborium was the tomb of Christ as well as the heavenly altar and throne of God. To assess the distribution of the angel orders portrayed in successive liturgical spaces suggests that they were “gestalts” that cooperated to forge holistic inner worlds in clergy and laity.⁹⁴ Spiritual unification was indeed the purpose of the celestial hierarchy: “Every procession of illuminating light, proceeding from the Father...restores us again gradually as a unifying power, and turns us to the oneness of our conducting Father, and to a deifying simplicity.”⁹⁵

To sum up: Byzantine and Post-Byzantine sacred images showed angels performing the hymns attributed to them in the Bible and liturgy, including the ⁹² Woodfin 2012, p. 125.

⁹³ Constanas 2006, p. 170, quoting Symeon of Thessaloniki, Dialogue 345CD.

⁹⁴ E.g., P. Crossley, “Medieval Architecture and Meaning: The Limits of Iconography,” The Burlington Magazine 130 (1988), pp. 116-121; Willibald Sauerländer, “Integration: a Closed or Open Proposal?” in Artistic Integration in Gothic Buildings, eds. Virginia Raguin, Kathryn Brush, and Peter Draper (Toronto, 1995); P. Binski, “The English Parish Church and its Art in the Later Middle Ages: a Review of the Problem,” Studies in Iconography 20 (1999), pp. 1-20.

⁹⁵ Pseudo-Dionysius, Celestial Hierarchy, I.1.

Cherubikon, Trisagion, Gloria, Akathistos, In Thee, Rejoiceth, Psalms of Praise, and, in the Post-Byzantine period, the “New Song” of Revelations. Except for the last of these, which was the only one to admit Western-style angel-musicians, the pictures reified the celestial liturgy as it was performed in the church. This process depended on the mediating status of angels, icons, and hymns, as well as by angelic multiplicity. Concepts of hierarchy and sequence generated the thought that angels’ liminality premised their ability to sublimate, expressed by their display on liturgical implements, veils, screens, and high places. Their images multiplied to indicate events when they were supposed to physically manifest in their church, and the exalted status of the seraphim, cherubim, and thrones was conveyed by their lack of ministerial vesture and tendency to congregate in higher architectural zones. Each point underlines that images of angels’ song were integrative forces in achieving the joy of Paradise regained in the real presence of Christ and the angels. 🙏

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

List of Abbreviations

PG Patrologiae Cursus Completus, Series Graeca. Edited by Jacques Paul Migne. 165 vols. Paris: Imprimerie Catholique, 1857-58.

PL Patrologiae Cursus Completus, Series Latina. Edited by Jacques Paul Migne. 221 vols. Paris: Imprimerie Catholique, 1844-55.

Primary Texts

Brightman, F.E., ed. Liturgies Eastern and Western. Oxford, 1896.

Dionysius of Fournia. The Painter's Manual of Dionysius of Fournia. Trans. Paul Hetherington. London, 1974.

Germanos of Constantinople. St. Germanos of Constantinople on the Divine Liturgy. Trans. John Meyendorff. Crestwood, NY, 1984.

Hilton, Walter. "Of Angels' Song." The Cell of Self-Knowledge: Seven Early English Mystical Treatises Printed by Henry Pepwell in 1521. Ed. Edmund Gardner. New York, 1966.

John Chrysostom. Old Testament Homilies. Trans. Robert C. Hill. Brookline, Mass., 2003.

John of Damascus. "Exposition of the Orthodox Faith." The Fathers of the Church, vol. 37. Trans. Frederic H. Chase. Washington, D.C., 1958. 165-406.

-----, Three Treatises on the Divine Images. Trans. Andrew Louth. Crestwood, NY, 2003.

Kabasilas, Nicholas. Sacrae liturgiae interpretatio. PG 150. 367-492.

-----, Nicholas Cabasilas: A Commentary on the Divine Liturgy. Trans. J.M. Hussey and P.A. McNulty. London, 1960.

Maximos the Confessor. Maximus Confessor: Selected Writings. Ed. George C. Berthold. New York, 1985.

Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite. Pseudo-Dionysius: The Complete Works. Trans. Colm

Luibheid. New York, 1987.

Symeon of Thessalonike. "Explanation of the Divine Temple" and "On the Sacred Liturgy." The Liturgical Commentaries. Ed. and trans. by Steven Hawkes-Teeple. Toronto, 2011.

Secondary Texts

Albani, Jenny. "Icons and the Divine Liturgy: A Reciprocal Relationship." Ceremony and Faith: Byzantine Art and the Divine Liturgy. Ed. Georgia Livieratou. Athens, 1999. 57-62.

Aston, Margaret. Faith and Fire: Popular and Unpopular Religion, 1350-1600. London, 1993.

Barber, Charles. "Mimesis and Memory in the Narthex Mosaics of the Nea Moni, Chios." Art History 21.3 (2001): pp. 323-337.

Barnet, Peter and Nancy Y. Wu, eds. The Cloisters: Medieval Art and Architecture. New York, 2005.

Binski, Paul. "The English Parish Church and its Art in the Later Middle Ages: A Review of the Problem." Studies in Iconography 20 (1999): 1-20.

-----, Becket's Crown: Art and Imagination in Gothic England, 1170-1300. New Haven, 2004.

Betancourt, Roland. "The Thessaloniki Epitaphios: Notes on Use and Context." Greek, Roman, and Byzantine Studies 55:2 (2015): pp. 489-535.

Bolman, Elizabeth. "Painting Heaven: The Art of the Liturgy." The Canopy of Heaven: The Ciborium in the Church of St. Mamas, Morphou. Eds. M. Jones and A.M. Jones. Nicosia, 2010. 135-165.

Bornert, René. Les commentaires byzantins de la Divine Liturgie du VIIe au XVe siècle. Paris, 1966.

Boynton, Susan, and Diane Reilly, eds. Resounding Images: Medieval Intersections of Art, Music, and Sound. Turnhout, 2015.

- Braun, Joachim. "Musical Instruments in Byzantine Illuminated Manuscripts." Early Music 8.3 (1980): 312-327.
- Brooks, Sarah T., ed. Byzantium: Faith and Power (1261-1557): Perspectives on Late Byzantine Art and Culture. New York, 2006.
- Brown, Howard Mayer. "Trecento Angels and the Instruments They Play." Modern Musical Scholarship. Ed. Edmund Olleson. Oxford, 1980. 112-140.
- , "A Corpus of Trecento Pictures with Musical Subject Matter." Imago Musicae 1-5 (1984-1988).
- Buckle, Alexandra. "'Fit for a King': Music and Iconography in Richard Beauchamp's Chantry Chapel." Early Music 38.1 (2010): 3-19.
- Burge, S. R. Angels in Islam: Jalal al-Din al-Suyuti's al-Haba'ik fi akhbar al-mala'ik. London, 2015.
- Chatzidakis, Manolis. Mystras: The Medieval City and the Castle. Athens, 1985.
- Constantinides, Efthalia. "Monumental Painting in Cyprus during the Venetian Period, 1489-1570." Medieval Cyprus: Studies in Art, Architecture, and History in Memory of Doula Mouriki. Eds. Nancy P. Ševčenko and Christopher Moss. Princeton, 1999. 263-300.
- Constas, Nicholas. "Symeon of Thessaloniki and the Theology of the Icon Screen." Thresholds of the Sacred: Architectural, Art Historical, Liturgical, and Theological Perspectives on Religious Screens, East and West. Ed. Sharon Gerstel. Washington, D.C., 2006. 162-183.
- Cooper, Donal. "Gothic Art & the Friars in Late Medieval Croatia, 1213-1460." Croatia: aspects of art, architecture and cultural heritage. Ed. J. Beresford-Peirse. London, 2009. 76-97.
- Crossley, Paul. "Medieval Architecture and Meaning: The Limits of Iconography." The Burlington Magazine 130 (1988): 116-121.
- Curčić, Slobodan. "Late Byzantine Loca Sancta? Some Questions Regarding the Form

- and Function of Epitaphioi." The Twilight of Byzantium. Eds. Slobodan Curčić and Doula Mouriki. Princeton, 1999. 251-261.
- , Architecture in the Balkans: From Diocletian to Suleyman the Magnificent, c. 300-1550. New Haven, 2010.
- Drandaki, Anastasia. "Greek Religious Painting after the Fall of Constantinople: Tradition and Renewal." From Byzantium to Modern Greece: Hellenic Art in Adversity, 1453-1830. Eds. Angelos Delivorrias and Electra Georgoula. New York, 2005. 42-47.
- , ed. Origins of El Greco: Icon Painting in Venetian Crete. New York, 2009.
- Djurić, Marka Tomic. "To Picture and to Perform: The Image of the Eucharistic Liturgy at Markov Manastir." Zograf 38 (2014): 123-140.
- Evans, Helen C., ed. Byzantium: Faith and Power (1261-1557). Exhibition catalogue. New York, 2004.
- Falvy, Zoltan. "Angel Musicians on a Fourteenth-Century Reliquary." Imago Musicae 4 (1987): 229-238.
- Gerstel, Sharon. Beholding the Sacred Mysteries: Programs of the Byzantine Sanctuary. Seattle, 1999.
- , "Monastic Soundscapes in Late Byzantium: The Art and Act of Chanting." Resounding Images: Medieval Intersections of Art, Music, and Sound. Eds. Susan Boynton and Diane Reilly. Turnhout, 2015.
- and Anastassios Antonaras, "Between Heaven and Earth: Views of Byzantine Thessaloniki," in Viewing Greece: Cultural and Political Agency in the Medieval and Early Modern Mediterranean (Turnhout, 2016), pp. 87-111.
- Gill, Meredith. Angels and the Order of Heaven in Medieval and Renaissance Italy. Cambridge, 2014.
- Grossman, Heather E., and Alicia Walker, eds. Mechanisms of Exchange: Transmission in the Medieval Art and Architecture of the Mediterranean, 1000-1500. Leiden, 2013.

Heiser, L. Die Engel im Glauben der Orthodoxie. Trier, 1976.

Karakatsanis, Athanasios A., ed. Treasures of Mount Athos. Thessaloniki, 1997.

Keck, David. Angels & Angelology in the Middle Ages. Oxford, 1998.

Livieratou, Georgia, ed. Ceremony and Faith: Byzantine Art and the Divine Liturgy. Athens, 1999.

Lovejoy, Arthur O. The Great Chain of Being: A Study of the History of an Idea. Cambridge, Mass., 1936.

Maguire, Henry. "The Depiction of Sorrow in Middle Byzantine Art." Dumbarton Oaks Papers 31 (1977): 123-174.

----- "The Self-Conscious Angel: Character Study in Byzantine Paintings of the Annunciation." Harvard Ukrainian Studies 7 (1983): 377-392.

----- "Two Modes of Narration in Byzantine Art." Byzantine East, Latin West. Ed. D. Mouriki. Princeton, 1995. 385-95.

----- "The Heavenly Court." Byzantine Court Culture from 829 to 1204. Ed. Henry Maguire. Washington, D.C., 1997. 247-258.

----- "The Asymmetry of Text and Image in Byzantium." Perspectives Médiévales 38 (2017). (Digital journal.)

Manifis, K., ed. Sinai: Treasures of the Monastery of Saint Catherine. Athens, 1990.

Mann, U. Ikone und Engel als Gestalten geistlicher Mittlerschaft, Eranos-Jahrbuch 52 (1983): 1-53.

McKinnon, James. "Representations of the Mass in Medieval and Renaissance Art." Journal of the American Musicological Society 31.1 (1978): 21-52.

McNamee, Maurice. Vested Angels: Eucharistic Allusions in Early Netherlandish Paintings. Leuven, 1988.

- Meredith, Peter, and John Tailby, eds., The Staging of Religious Drama in Europe in the Later Middle Ages. Kalamazoo, 1983.
- Millet, Gabriel. Monuments de l'Athos. Vol. 1. Paris, 1987.
- Moran, Neil K. Singers in Late Byzantine and Slavonic Painting. Leiden, 1986.
- Muehlberger, Ellen. Angels in the Religious Imagination of Late Antiquity. Ph.D. Diss. Indiana, 2008.
- , Angels in Late Ancient Christianity. Oxford, 2013.
- Ousterhout, Robert. "Women at Tombs: Narrative, Theatricality, and the Contemplative Mode." Wonderful Things: Byzantium through its Art. Eds. Antony Eastmond and Liz James. Burlington, 2013. 229-46.
- Maria Parani, Reconstructing the Reality of Images: Byzantine Material Culture and Religious Iconography (11th-15th Centuries). Leiden, 2003.
- Peers, Glenn. Subtle Bodies: Representing Angels in Byzantium. Berkeley, 2001.
- Pelikan, Jaroslav. Imago Dei: The Byzantine Apologia for Icons. Princeton, 1990.
- Peterson, Eric. The Angels and the Liturgy. New York, 1964.
- Rubin, Miri. Corpus Christi: The Eucharist in Late Medieval Culture. Cambridge, 1991.
- Sauerländer, Williabald. "Integration: a Closed or Open Proposal?" Artistic Integration in Gothic Buildings. Eds. Virginia Raguin, Kathryn Brush, and Peter Draper. Toronto, 1995. 1-18.
- Schilb, Henry. "Singing, Crying, Shouting, and Saying: Embroidered Epitaphioi and the Sounds of the Byzantine Liturgy." Resounding Images: Medieval Intersections of Art, Music, and Sound. Eds. Susan Boynton and Diane Reilly. Turnhout, 2015. 167-187.
- Ševčenko, Nancy Patterson. "Icons in the Liturgy." Dumbarton Oaks Papers 45 (1991): 45-57.

- Schultz, Hans-Joachim. Byzantine Liturgy: Symbolic Structure and Faith Expression. New York, 1986.
- Spatharakis, Iohannes. "Representations of the Great Entrance in Crete." Studies in Byzantine Manuscript Illumination and Iconography. London, 1996.
- Spratt, Emily. "Toward a Definition of Post-Byzantine Art." Record of the Princeton University Art Museum (2014).
- Steenbridge, Laura. "We Who Musically Represent the Cherubim." Acoustic Architecture: Music, Acoustics, and Ritual. Ed. Bissera Pentcheva. New York, 2018. 143-162.
- Stefanesçu, Ioan. L'illustration des liturgies dans l'art de Byzance et de l'Orient. Brussels, 1936.
- Stylianou, Andreas and Judith. The Painted Churches of Cyprus: Treasures of Byzantine Art. 2nd edition. Nicosia, 1997.
- Taft, Robert F. The Great Entrance: a History of the Transfer of Gifts and Other Preanaphoral Rites of the Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom. Rome, 1975.
- , "Trisagion." The Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium. Ed. Alexander Kazhdan. Oxford, 1991.
- Tronzo, William. "Mimesis in Byzantium: Notes toward a History of the Function of the Image." RES: Anthropology and Aesthetics 25 (1994): pp. 61-76.
- Walter, Christopher. Art and Ritual of the Byzantine Church. London, 1982.
- White, Andrew. The Artifice of Eternity: A Study of Liturgical and Theatrical Practices in Byzantium. Ph.D. diss. College Park, MD, 2006.
- Wickham, Glynn. The Medieval Theatre. Cambridge, 1987.
- Woodfin, Warren. "Liturgical Textiles." Byzantium: Faith and Power (1261-1557). Ed. Helen C. Evans. New York, 2004. 295-323.

- , "Celestial Hierarchies and Earthly Hierarchies in the Art of the Byzantine Church."
The Byzantine World. Edited by Paul Stephenson. New York, 2010. 303-319.
- , The Embodied Icon: Liturgical Vestments and Sacramental Power in Byzantium. Oxford, 2012.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

Table of Contents

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve	1
CHAP. I.	3
CHAP. II.	4
CHAP. III.	5
CHAP. IV.	6
CHAP. V.	7
CHAP. VI.	8
CHAP. VII.	9
CHAP. IX.	11
CHAP. X.	12
CHAP. XI.	13
CHAP. XII.	14
CHAP. XIII.	15
CHAP. XIV.	16
CHAP. XV.	17
CHAP. XVI.	18
CHAP. XVII.	19
CHAP. XVIII.	22
CHAP. XIX.	23
CHAP. XX.	24
CHAP. XXI.	27
CHAP. XXII.	28

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

This page copyright © 2001 Blackmask Online.
<http://www.blackmask.com>

- CHAP. I.
 - CHAP. II.
 - CHAP. III.
 - CHAP. IV.
 - CHAP. V.
 - CHAP. VI.
 - CHAP. VII.
 - CHAP. IX.
 - CHAP. X.
 - CHAP. XI.
 - CHAP. XII.
 - CHAP. XIII.
 - CHAP. XIV.
 - CHAP. XV.
 - CHAP. XVI.
 - CHAP. XVII.
 - CHAP. XVIII.
 - CHAP. XIX.
 - CHAP. XX.
 - CHAP. XXI.
 - CHAP. XXII.
-

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

CHAP. I.

The grief stricken family. Cain marries Luluwa and they move away.

WHEN Luluwa heard Cain's words, she wept and went to call her father and mother, and told them how that Cain had killed his brother Abel.

2 Then they all cried aloud and lifted up their voices, and slapped their faces, and threw dust upon their heads, and rent asunder their garments, and went out and came to the place where Abel was killed.

3 And they found him lying on the earth, killed, and beasts around him; while they wept and cried because of this just one. From his body, by reason of its purity, went forth a smell of sweet spices.

4 And Adam carried him, his tears streaming down his face; and went to the Cave of Treasures, where he laid him, and wound him up with sweet spices and myrrh.

5 And Adam and Eve continued by the burial of him in great grief a hundred and forty days. Abel was fifteen and a half years old, and Cain seventeen years and a half.

6 As for Cain, when the mourning for his brother was ended, he took his sister Luluwa and married her, without leave from his father and mother; for they could not keep him from her, by reason of their heavy heart.

7 He then went down to the bottom of the mountain, away from the garden, near to the place where he had killed his brother.

8 And in that place were many fruit trees and forest trees. His sister bare him children, who in their turn began to multiply by degrees until they filled that place.

9 But as for Adam and Eve, they came not together after Abel's funeral, for seven years. After this, however, Eve conceived; and while she was with child, Adam said to her, "Come, let us take an offering and offer it up unto God, and ask Him to give us a fair child, in whom we may find comfort, and whom we may join in marriage to Abel's sister."

10 Then they prepared an offering and brought it up to the altar, and offered it before the Lord, and began to entreat Him to accept their offering, and to give them a good offspring.

11 And God heard Adam and accepted his offering. Then, they worshipped, Adam, Eve, and their daughter, and came down to the Cave of Treasures and placed a lamp in it, to burn by night and by day, before the body of Abel.

12 Then Adam and Eve continued fasting and praying until Eve's time came that she should be delivered, when she said to Adam, "I wish to go to the cave in the rock, to bring forth in it."

13 And he said, "Go, and take with thee thy daughter to wait on thee; but I will remain in this Cave of Treasures before the body of my son Abel."

14 Then Eve hearkened to Adam, and went, she and her daughter. But Adam remained by himself in the Cave of Treasures.

CHAP. II.

A third son is born to Adam and Eve.

AND Eve brought forth a son perfectly beautiful in figure and in countenance. His beauty was like that of his father Adam, yet more beautiful.

2 Then Eve was comforted when she saw him, and remained eight days in the cave; then she sent her daughter unto Adam to tell him to come and see the child and name him. But the daughter stayed in his place by the body of her brother, until Adam returned. So did she.

3 But when Adam came and saw the child's good looks, his beauty, and his perfect figure, he rejoiced over him, and was comforted for Abel. Then he named the child Seth, that means, "that God has heard my prayer, and has delivered me out of my affliction." But it means also "power and strength."

4 Then after Adam had named the child, he returned to the Cave of Treasures; and his daughter went back to her mother.

5 But Eve continued in her cave, until forty days were fulfilled, when she came to Adam, and brought with her the child and her daughter.

6 And they came to a river of water, where Adam and his daughter washed themselves, because of their sorrow for Abel; but Eve and the babe washed for purification.

7 Then they returned, and took an offering, and went to the mountain and offered it up, for the babe; and God accepted their offering, and sent His blessing upon them, and upon their son Seth; and they came back to the Cave of Treasures.

8 As for Adam, he knew not again his wife Eve, all the days of his life; neither was any more offspring born of them; but only those five, Cain, Luluwa, Abel, Akia, and Seth alone.

9 But Seth waxed in stature and in strength; and began to fast and pray, fervently.

CHAP. III

Satan appears as a beautiful woman tempting Adam, telling him he is still a youth. "Spend thy youth in mirth and pleasured." (12) The different forms which Satan takes (15).

A S for our father Adam, at the end of seven years from the day he had been severed from his wife Eve, Satan envied him, when he saw him thus separated from her; and strove to make him live with her again.

2 Then Adam arose and went up above the Cave of Treasures; and continued to sleep there night by night. But as soon as it was light every day he came down to the cave, to pray there and to receive a blessing from it.

3 But when it was evening he went up on the roof of the cave, where he slept by himself, fearing lest Satan should overcome him. And he continued thus apart thirty-nine days.

4 Then Satan, the hater of all good, when he saw Adam thus alone, fasting and praying, appeared unto him in the form of a beautiful woman, who came and stood before him in the night of the fortieth day, and said unto him:—

5 "O Adam, from the time ye have dwelt in this cave, we have experienced great peace from you, and your prayers have reached us, and we have been comforted about you.

6 "But now, O Adam, that thou hast gone up over the roof of the cave to sleep, we have had doubts about thee, and a great sorrow has come upon us because of thy separation from Eve. Then again, when thou art on the roof of this cave, thy prayer is poured out, and thy heart wanders from side to side.

7 "But when thou wast in the cave thy prayer was like fire gathered together; it came down to us, and thou didst find rest.

8 "Then I also grieved over thy children who are severed from thee; and my sorrow is great about the murder of thy son Abel; for he was righteous; and over a righteous man every one will grieve.

9 "But I rejoiced over the birth of thy son Seth; yet after a little while I sorrowed greatly over Eve, because she is my sister. For when God sent a deep sleep over thee, and drew her out of thy side, He brought me out also with her. But HE raised her by placing her with thee, while He lowered me.

10 "I rejoiced over my sister for her being with thee. But God had made me a promise before, and said, 'Grieve not; when Adam has gone up on the roof of the Cave of Treasures, and is separated from Eve his wife, I will send thee to him, thou shalt join thyself to him in marriage, and bear him five children, as Eve did bear him five.'

11 "And now, lo! God's promise to me is fulfilled; for it is He who has sent me to thee for the wedding; because if thou wed me, I shall bear thee finer and better children than those of Eve.

12 "Then again, thou art as yet but a youth; end not thy youth in this world in sorrow; but spend the days of thy youth in mirth and pleasure. For thy days are few and thy trial is great. Be strong; end thy days in this world in rejoicing. I shall take pleasure in thee, and thou shall rejoice with me in this wise, and without fear.

13 "Up, then, and fulfil the command of thy God," she then drew near to Adam, and embraced him.

14 But when Adam saw that he should be overcome by her, he prayed to God with a fervent heart to deliver him from her.

15 Then God sent His Word unto Adam, saying, "O Adam, that figure is the one that promised thee the Godhead, and majesty; he is not favourably disposed towards thee; but shows himself to thee at one time in the form of a woman; another moment, in the likeness of an angel; on another occasions, in the similitude of a serpent; and at another time, in the semblance of a god; but he does all that only to destroy thy soul.

16 "Now, therefore, O Adam, understanding thy heart, I have delivered thee many a time from his hands; in order to show thee that I am a merciful God; and that I wish thy good, and that I do not wish thy ruin."

CHAP. IV.

Adam sees the Devil in his true colors .

THEN God ordered Satan to show himself to Adam plainly, in his own hideous form.

2 But when Adam saw him, he feared, and trembled at the sight of him.

3 And God said to Adam, 'Look at this devil, and at his hideous look, and know that he it is who made thee fall from brightness into darkness, from peace and rest to toil and misery.

4 And look, O Adam, at him, who said of himself that he is God! Can God be black? Would God take the form of a woman? Is there any one stronger than God? And can He be overpowered?

5 "See, then, O Adam, and behold him bound in thy presence, in the air, unable to flee away! Therefore, I say unto thee, be not afraid of him; henceforth take care, and beware of him, in whatever he may do to thee."

6 Then God drove Satan away from before Adam, whom He strengthened, and whose heart He comforted, saying to him, "Go down to the Cave of Treasures, and separate not thyself from Eve; I will quell in you all animal lust."

7 From that hour it left Adam and Eve, and they enjoyed rest by the commandment of God. But God did not the like to any one of Adam's seed; but only to Adam and Eve.

8 Then Adam worshipped before the Lord, for having delivered him, and for having layed his passions. And he came down from above the cave, and dwelt with Eve as aforetime.

9 This ended the forty days of his separation from Eve.

CHAP. V.

The devil paints a brilliant picture for Seth to feast his thoughts upon.

AS for Seth, when he was seven years old, he knew good and evil, and was consistent in fasting and praying, and spent all his nights in entreating God for mercy and forgiveness.

2 He also fasted when bringing up his offering every day, more than his father did; for he was of a fair countenance, like unto an angel of God. He also had a good heart, preserved the finest qualities of his soul; and for this reason he brought up his offering every day.

3 And God was pleased with his offering; but He was also pleased with his purity. And he continued thus in doing the will of God, and of his father and mother, until he was seven years old.

4 After that, as he was coming down from the altar, having ended his offering, Satan appeared unto him in the form of a beautiful angel, brilliant with light; with a staff of light in his hand, himself girt about with a girdle of light.

5 He greeted Seth with a beautiful smile, and began to beguile him with fair words, saying to him, "O Seth, why abidest thou in this mountain? For it is rough, full of stones and of sand, and of trees with no good fruit on them; a wilderness without habitations and without towns; no good place to dwell in. But all is heat, weariness, and trouble."

6 He said further, 'But we dwell in beautiful places, in another world than this earth. Our world is one of light and our condition is of the best; our women are handsomer than any others; and I wish thee, O Seth, to wed one of them; because I see that thou art fair to look upon, and in this land there is not one woman good enough for thee. Besides, all those who live in this world, are only five souls.

7 "But in our world there are very many men and many maidens, all more beautiful one than another. I wish, therefore, to remove thee hence, that thou mayest see my relations and be wedded to which ever thou likest.

8 "Thou shalt then abide by me and be at peace; thou shalt be filled with splendour and light, as we are.

9 "Thou shalt remain in our world. and rest from this world and the misery of it; thou shalt never again feel faint and weary; thou shalt never bring up an offering, nor sue for mercy; for thou shalt commit no more sin nor be swayed by passions.

10 "And if thou wilt hearken to what I say, thou shalt wed one of my daughters; for with us it is no sin so to do; neither is it reckoned animal lust.

11 "For in our world we have no God; but we all are gods; we all are of the light, heavenly, powerful, strong and glorious."

CHAP. VI.

Seth's conscience helps him. He returns to Adam and Eve.

When Seth heard these words he was amazed, and inclined his heart to Satan's treacherous speech, and said to him, "Saidst thou there is an-other world created than this; and other creatures more beautiful than the creatures that are in this world?"

2 And Satan said "Yes; behold thou hast heard me; but I will yet praise them and their ways, in thy hearing."

3 But Seth said to him, "Thy speech has amazed me; and thy beautiful description of it all."

4 "Yet I cannot go with thee to-day; not until I have gone to my father Adam and to my mother Eve, and told them all thou hast said to me. Then if they give me leave to go with thee, I will come."

5 Again Seth said, "I am afraid of doing any thing without my father's and mother's leave, lest I perish like my brother Cain, and like my father Adam, who transgressed the commandment of God. But, behold, thou knowest this place; come, and meet me here to-morrow."

6 When Satan heard this, he said to Seth, "If thou tellest thy father Adam what I have told thee, he will not let thee come with me.

7 But hearken to me; do not tell thy father and mother what I have said to thee; but come with me to-day, to our world; where thou shalt see beautiful things and enjoy thyself there, and revel this day among my children, beholding them and taking thy fill of mirth; and rejoice ever more. Then I shall bring thee back to this place to-morrow; but if thou wouldest rather abide with me, so be it."

8 Then Seth answered, "The spirit of my father and of my mother, hangs on me; and if I hide from them one day, they will die, and God will hold me guilty of sinning against them.

9 "And except that they know I am come to this place to bring up to it my offering, they would not be separated from me one hour; neither should I go to any other place, unless they let me. But they treat me most kindly, because I come back to them quickly."

10 Then Satan said to him, "What will happen to thee if thou hide thyself from them one night, and return to them at break of day?"

11 But Seth, when he saw how he kept on talking, and that he would not leave him-ran, and went up to the altar, and spread his hands unto God, and sought deliverance from Him.

12 Then God sent His Word, and cursed Satan, who fled from Him.

13 But as for Seth, he had gone up to the altar, saying thus in his heart. "The altar is the place of offering, and God is there; a divine fire shall consume it; so shall Satan be unable to hurt me, and shall not take me away thence."

14 Then Seth came down from the altar and went to his father and mother, whom he found in the way, longing to hear his voice; for he had tarried a while.

15 He then began to tell them what had befallen him from Satan, under the form of an angel.

16 But when Adam heard his account, he kissed his face, and warned him against that angel, telling him it was Satan who thus appeared to him. Then Adam took Seth, and they went to the Cave of Treasures, and rejoiced therein.

17 But from that day forth Adam and Eve never parted from him, to whatever place he might go, whether for his offering or for any thing else.

18 This sign happened to Seth, when he was nine years old.

CHAP. VII.

Seth marries Aklia. Adam lives to see grand children and great— grand children .

WHEN our father Adam saw that Seth was of a perfect heart, he wished him to marry; lest the enemy should appear to him another time, and overcome him.

2 So Adam said to his son Seth, "I wish, O my son, that thou wed thy sister Aklia, Abel's sister, that she may bear thee children, who shall replenish the earth, according to God's promise to us.

3 "Be not afraid, O my son; there is no disgrace in it. I wish thee to marry, from fear lest the enemy overcome thee.'

4 Seth, however, did not wish to marry; but in obedience to his father and mother, he said not a word.

5 So Adam married him to Aklia. And he was fifteen years old.

6 But when he was twenty years of age, he begat a son, whom he called Enos; and then begat other children than him,

7 Then Enos grew up, married, and begat Cainan.

8 Cainan also grew up, married, and begat Mahalaleel.

9 Those fathers were born during Adam's lifetime, and dwelt by the Cave of Treasures.

10 Then were the days of Adam nine hundred and thirty years, and those of Mahalaleel one hundred. But Mahalaleel, when he was grown up, loved fasting, praying, and with hard labours, until the end of our father Adam's days drew near.

CHAP, VIII,

Adam's remarkable last words. He predicts the Flood. He exhorts his offspring to good. He reveals certain mysteries of life.

WHEN our father Adam saw that his end was near, he called his son Seth, who came to him in the Cave of Treasures, and he said unto him: –

2 "O Seth, my son bring me thy children and thy children's children, that I may shed my blessing on them ere I die."

3 When Seth heard these words from his father Adam, he went from him, shed a flood of tears over his face, and gathered together his children and his children's children, and brought them to his father Adam.

4 But when our father Adam saw them around him, he wept at having to be separated from them.

5 And when they saw him weeping, they all wept together, and fell upon his face saying, "How shalt thou be severed from us, O our father? And how shall the earth receive thee and hide thee from our eyes?" Thus did they lament much, and in like words.

6 Then our father Adam blessed them all, and said to Seth, after he had blessed them:–

7 "O Seth, my son, thou knowest this world—that it is full of sorrow, and of weariness; and thou knowest all that has come upon us, from our trials in it I therefore flow command thee in these words: to keep innocency, to be pure and just, and trusting in God; and lean not to the discourses of Satan, nor to the apparitions in which he will show himself to thee.

8 But keep the commandments that I give thee this day; then give the same to thy son Enos; and let Enos give it to his son Cainan; and Cainan to his son Mahalaleel; so that this commandment abide firm among all your children.

9 "O Seth, my son, the moment I am dead take ye my body and wind it up with myrrh, aloes, and cassia, and leave me here in this Cave of Treasures in which are all these tokens which God gave us from the garden.

10 "O my son, hereafter shall a flood come and overwhelm all creatures, and leave out only eight souls.

11 "But, O my son, let those whom it will leave out from among your children at that time, take my body with them out of this cave; and when they have taken it with them, let the oldest among them command his children to lay my body in a ship until the flood has been assuaged, and they come out of the ship.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

12 Then they shall take my body and lay it in the middle of the earth, shortly after they have been saved from the waters of the flood.

13 "For the place where my body shall be laid, is the middle of the earth; God shall come from thence and shall save all our kindred.

14 "But now, O Seth, my son, place thyself at the head of thy people; tend them and watch over them in the fear of God; and lead them in the good way. Command them to fast unto God; and make them understand they ought not to hearken to Satan, lest he destroy them.

15 "Then, again, sever thy children and thy children's children from Cain's children; do not let them ever mix with those, nor come near them either in their words or in their deeds."

16 Then Adam let his blessing descend upon Seth, and upon his children, and upon all his children's children.

17 He then turned to his son Seth, and to Eve his wife, and said to them, "Preserve this gold, this incense, and this myrrh, that God has given us for a sign; for in days that are coming, a flood will overwhelm the whole creation. But those who shall go into the ark shall take with them the gold, the incense, and the myrrh, together with my body; and will lay the gold, the incense, and the myrrh, with my body in the midst of the earth.

18 "Then, after a long time, the city in which the gold, the incense, and the myrrh are found with my body, shall be plundered. But when it is spoiled, the gold the incense, and the myrrh shall be taken care of with the spoil that is kept; and naught of them shall perish, until the Word of God, made man shall come; when kings shall take them, and shall offer to Him, gold in token of His being King; incense, in token of His being God of heaven and earth; and myrrh, in token of His passion.

19 "Gold also, as a token of His overcoming Satan, and all our foes; incense as a token that He will rise from the dead, and be exalted above things in heaven and things in the earth; and myrrh, in token that He will drink bitter gall; and feel the pains of hell from Satan.

20 "And now, O Seth, my son, behold I have revealed unto thee hidden mysteries, which God had revealed unto me. Keep my commandment, for thyself, and for thy people."

CHAP. IX.

The death of Adam.

WHEN Adam had ended his commandment to Seth, his limbs were loosened, his hands and feet lost all power, his mouth became dumb, and his tongue ceased altogether to speak. He closed his eyes and gave up the ghost.

2 But when his children saw that he was dead, they threw themselves over him, men and women, old and young, weeping.

3 The death of Adam took place at the end of nine hundred and thirty years that he lived upon the earth; on the fifteenth day of Barmudeh, after the reckoning of an epact of the sun, at the ninth hour.

4 It was on a Friday, the very day on which he was created, and on which he rested; and the hour at which he died, was the same as that at which he came out of the garden.

5 Then Seth wound him up well, and embalmed him with plenty of sweet spices, from sacred trees and from the Holy Mountain; and he laid his body on the eastern side of the inside of the cave, the side of the incense; and placed in front of him a lamp—stand kept burning.

6 Then his children stood before him weeping and wailing over him the whole night until break of day.

7 Then Seth and his son Enos, and Cainan, the son of Enos, went out and took good offerings to present unto the Lord, and they came to the altar upon which Adam offered gifts to God, when he did offer.

8 But Eve said to them, "Wait until we have first asked God to accept our offering, and to keep by Him the soul of Adam His servant, and to take it up to rest."

9 And they all stood up and prayed.

CHAP. X.

"Adam was the first. . ."

AND when they had ended their prayer, the Word of God came and comforted them concerning their father Adam.

2 After this, they offered their gifts for themselves and for their father.

3 And when they had ended their offering, the Word of God came to Seth, the eldest among them, saying unto him, "O Seth, Seth, Seth, three times. As I was with thy father, so also shall I be with thee, until the fulfilment of the promise I made him—thy father saying, I will send My Word and save thee and thy seed.

4 "But as to thy father Adam, keep thou the commandment he gave thee; and sever thy seed from that of Cain thy brother."

5 And God withdrew His Word from Seth.

6 Then Seth, Eve, and their children, came down from the mountain to the Cave of Treasures.

7 But Adam was the first whose soul died in the land of Eden, in the Cave of Treasures; for no one died before him, but his son Abel, who died murdered.

8 Then all the children of Adam rose up, and wept over their father Adam, and made offerings to him, one hundred and forty days.

CHAP. XI.

Seth becomes head of the most happy and just tribe of people who ever lived.

AFTER the death of Adam and of Eve, Seth severed his children, and his children's children, from Cain's children. Cain and his seed went down and dwelt westward, below the place where he had killed his brother Abel.

2 But Seth and his children, dwelt northwards upon the mountain of the Cave of Treasures, in order to be near to their father Adam.

3 And Seth the elder, tall and good, with a fine soul, and of a strong mind, stood at the head of his people; and tended them in innocence, penitence, and meekness, and did not allow one of them to go down to Cain's children.

4 But because of their own purity, they were named "Children of God," and they were with God, instead of the hosts of angels who fell; for they continued in praises to God, and in singing psalms unto Him, in their cave—the Cave of Treasures.

5 Then Seth stood before the body of his father Adam, and of his mother Eve, and prayed night and day, and asked for mercy towards himself and his children; and that when he had some difficult dealing with a child, He would give him counsel.

6 But Seth and his children did not like earthly work, but gave themselves to heavenly things; for they had no other thought than praises, doxologies, and psalms unto God.

7 Therefore did they at all times hear the voices of angels, praising and glorifying God; from within the garden, or when they were sent by God on an errand, or when they were going up to heaven.

8 For Seth and his children, by reason of their own purity, heard and saw those angels. Then, again, the garden was not far above them, but only some fifteen spiritual cubits.

9 Now one spiritual cubit answers to three cubits of man, altogether forty-five cubits.

10 Seth and his children dwelt on the mountain below the garden; they sowed not, neither did they reap; they wrought no food for the body. not even wheat; but only offerings. They ate of the fruit and of trees well flavoured that grew on the mountain where they dwelt.

11 Then Seth often fasted every forty days, as did also his eldest children. For the family of Seth smelled the smell of the trees in the garden, when the wind blew that way.

12 They were happy, innocent, without sudden fear, there was no jealousy, no evil action, no hatred among them. There was no animal passion; from no mouth among them went forth either foul words or curse; neither evil counsel nor fraud. For the men of that time never swore, but under hard circumstances, when men must swear, they swore by the blood of Abel the just.

13 But they constrained their children and their women every day in the cave to fast and pray, and to worship the most High God. They blessed themselves in the body of their father Adam, and anointed themselves with it.

14 And they did so until the end of Seth drew near.

CHAP. XII.

Seth's family affairs. His death. The headship of Enos. How the outcast branch of Adam's family fared.

THEN Seth, the just, called his son Enos, and Cainan, son of Enos, and Mahalaleel, son of Cainan, and said unto them:—

2 "As my end is near, I wish to build a roof over the altar on which gifts are offered."

3 They hearkened to his commandment and went out, all of them, both old and young, and worked hard at it, and built a beautiful roof over the altar.

4 And Seth's thought, in so doing, was that a blessing should come upon his children on the mountain; and that he should present an offering for them before his death.

5 Then when the building of the roof was completed, he commanded them to make offerings. They worked diligently at these, and brought them to Seth their father who took them and offered them upon the altar; and prayed God to accept their offerings, to have mercy on the souls of his children, and to keep them from the hand of Satan.

6 And God accepted his offering, and sent His blessing upon him and upon his children. And then God made a promise to Seth, saying, "At the end of the great five days and a half, concerning which I have made a promise to thee and to thy father, I will send My Word and save thee and thy seed."

7 Then Seth and his children, and his children's children, met together, and came down from the altar, and went to the Cave of Treasures—where they prayed, and blessed themselves in the body of our father Adam, and anointed themselves with it.

8 But Seth abode in the Cave of Treasures, a few days, and then suffered—sufferings unto death.

9 Then Enos, his first—born son, came to him, with Cainan, his son, and Mahalaleel, Cainan's son, and Jared, the son of Mahalaleel, and Enoch, Jared's son, with their wives and children to receive a blessing from Seth.

10 Then Seth prayed over them, and blessed them, and adjured them by the blood of Abel the just, saying, "I beg of you my children, not to let one of you go down from this Holy and pure Mountain.

11 Make no fellowship with the children of Cain the murderer and the sinner, who killed his brother; for ye know, O my children, that we flee from him, and from all his sin with all our might because he killed his brother Abel."

12 After having said this, Seth blessed Enos, his first—born son, and commanded him habitually to minister in purity before the body of our father Adam, all the days of his life; then, also, to go at times to the altar which he Seth had built. And he commanded him to feed his people in righteousness, in judgment and purity all the days of his life.

13 Then the limbs of Seth were loosened; his hands and feet lost all power; his mouth became dumb and unable to speak; and he gave up the ghost and died the day after his nine hundred and twelfth year; on the twenty—seventh day of the month Abib; Enoch being then twenty years old.

14 Then they wound up carefull the body of Seth, and embalmed him with sweet spices, and laid him in the Cave Treasures, on the right side of our father Adam's body, and they mourned for him forty days. They offered gifts for him, as they had done for our father Adam.

15 After the death of Seth, Enos rose at the head of his people, whom he fed in righteousness, and judgment, as his father had commanded him.

16 But by the time Enos was eight hundred and twenty years old, Cain had a large progeny; for they married frequently, being given to animal lusts; until the land below the mountain, was filled with them.

CHAP. XIII.

"Among the children of Cain there was much robbery, murder and Sin."

IN those days lived Lamech the blind, who was of the sons of Cain. He had a son whose name was Atun, and they two had much cattle.

2 But Lamech was in the habit of sending them to feed with a young shepherd, who tended them; and who, when coming home in the evening wept before his grandfather, and before his father Atun and his mother Hazina, and said to them, "As for me, I cannot feed those cattle alone, lest one rob me of some of them, or kill me for the sake of them." For among the children of Cain, there was much robbery, murder and sin.

3 Then Lamech pitied him, and he said, "Truly, he when alone, might be overpowered by the men of this place."

4 So Lamech arose, took a bow he had kept ever since he was a youth, ere he became blind, and he took large arrows, and smooth stones, and a sling which he had, and went to the field with the young shepherd, and placed himself behind the cattle; while the young shepherd watched the cattle. Thus did Lamech many days.

5 Meanwhile Cain, ever since God had cast him off, and had cursed him with trembling and terror, could neither settle nor find rest in any one place; but wandered from place to place.

6 In his wanderings he came to Lamech's wives, and asked them about him. They said to him, "He is in the field with the cattle."

7 Then Cain went to look for him; and as he came into the field, the young shepherd heard the noise he made, and the cattle herding together from before him,

8 Then said he to Lamech, "O my lord, is that a wild beast or a robber?"

9 And Lamech said to him, "Make me understand which way he looks, when he comes up.

10 Then Lamech bent his bow, placed an arrow on it, and fitted a stone in the sling, and when Cain came out from the open country, the shepherd said to Lamech, "Shoot, behold, he is coming."

11 Then Lamech shot at Cain with his arrow and hit him in his side. And Lamech struck him with a stone from his sling, that fell upon his face, and knocked out both his eyes; then Cain fell at once and died.

12 Then Lamech and the young shepherd came up to him, and found him lying on the ground. And the young shepherd said to him, "It is Cain our grandfather, whom thou hast killed, O my lord!"

18 Then was Lamech sorry for it, and from the bitterness of his regret, he clapped his hands together, and struck with his flat palm the head of the youth, who fell as if dead; but Lamech thought it was a feint; so he took up a stone and smote him, and smashed his head until he died.

CHAP. XIV.

Time, like an ever rolling stream, bears away another generation of men.

WHEN Enos was nine hundred years old, all the children of Seth, and of Cainan, and his first-born, with their wives and children, gathered around him, asking for a blessing from him.

2 He then prayed over them and blessed them, and adjured them by the blood of Abel the just saying to them, "Let not one of your children go down from this Holy Mountain, and let them make no fellowship with the children of Cain the murderer."

3 Then Enos called his son Cainan and said to him, "See, O my son, and set thy heart on thy people, and establish them in righteousness, and in innocence; and stand ministering before the body of our father Adam, all the days of thy life."

4 After this Enos entered into rest, aged nine hundred and eighty— five years; and Cainan wound him up, and laid him in the Cave of Treasures on the left of his father Adam; and made offerings for him, after the custom of his fathers.

CHAP. XV.

The offspring of Adam continue to keep the Cave of Treasures as a family shrine.

AFTER the death of Enos, Cainan stood at the head of his people in righteousness and innocence, as his father had commanded him; he also continued to minister before the body of Adam, inside the Cave of Treasures.

2 Then when he had lived nine hundred and ten years, suffering and affliction came upon him. And when he was about to enter into rest, all the fathers with their wives and children came to him, and he blessed them, and adjured them by the blood of Abel, the just, saying to them, "Let not one among you go down from this Holy Mountain; and make no fellowship with the children of Cain the murderer."

3 Mahalaleel, his first—born son, received this commandment from his father, who blessed him and died.

4 Then Mahalaleel embalmed him with sweet spices, and laid him in the Cave of Treasures, with his fathers; and they made offerings for him, after the custom of their fathers.

CHAP. XVI.

The good branch of the family is still afraid of the children of Cain.

THEN Mahalaleel stood over his people, and fed them in righteousness and innocence, and watched them to see they held no intercourse with the children of Cain.

2 He also continued in the Cave of Treasures praying and ministering before the body of our father Adam, asking God for mercy on himself and on his people; until he was eight hundred and seventy years old, when he fell sick.

3 Then all his children gathered unto him, to see him, and to ask for his blessing on them all, ere he left this world.

4 Then Mahalaleel arose and sat on his bed, his tears streaming down his face, and he called his eldest son Jared, who came to him.

5 He then kissed his face, and said to him, "O Jared, my son, I adjure thee by Him who made heaven and earth, to watch over thy people, and to feed them in righteousness and in innocence; and not to let one of them go down from this Holy Mountain to the children of Cain, lest he perish with them.

6 "Hear, O my son, hereafter there shall come a great destruction upon this earth on account of them; God will be angry with the world, and will destroy them with waters.

7 "But I also know that thy children will not hearken to thee, and that they will go down from this mountain and hold intercourse with the children of Cain, and that they shall perish with them.

8 "O my son! teach them, and watch over them, that no guilt attach to thee on their account."

9 Mahalaleel said, moreover, to his son Jared, "When I die, embalm my body and lay it in the Cave of Treasures, by the bodies of my fathers; then stand thou by my body and pray to God; and take care of them, and fulfil thy ministry before them, until thou enterest into rest thyself."

10 Mahalaleel then blessed all his children; and then lay down on his bed, and entered into rest like his fathers.

11 But when Jared saw that his father Mahalaleel was dead, he wept, and sorrowed, and embraced and kissed his hands and his feet; and so did all his children.

12 And his children embalmed him carefully, and laid him by the bodies of his fathers. Then they arose, and mourned for him forty days.

CHAP. XVII.

Jared turns martinet. He is lured away to the land of Cain where he sees many voluptuous sights. Jared barely escapes with a clean heart.

THEN Jared kept his father's commandment, and arose like a lion over his people. He fed them in righteousness and innocence, and commanded them to do nothing without his counsel. For he was afraid concerning them, lest they should go to the children of Cain.

2 Wherefore did he give them orders repeatedly; and continued to do so until the end of the four hundred and eighty-fifth year of his life.

3 At the end of these said years, there came unto him this sign. As Jared was standing like a lion before the bodies of his fathers, praying and warning his people, Satan envied him, and wrought a beautiful apparition, because Jared would not let his children do aught without his counsel.

4 Satan then appeared to him with thirty men of his hosts, in the form of handsome men; Satan himself being the elder and tallest among them, with a fine beard.

5 They stood at the mouth of the cave, and called out Jared, from within it.

6 He came out to them, and found them looking like fine men, full of light, and of great beauty. He wondered at their beauty and at their looks; and thought within himself whether they might not be of the children of Cain.

7 He said also in his heart, "As the children of Cain cannot come up to the height of this mountain, and none of them is so handsome as these appear to be; and among these men there is not one of my kindred – they must be strangers."

8 Then Jared and they exchanged a greeting and he said to the elder among them, "O my father, explain to me the wonder that is in thee, and tell me who these are, with thee; for they look to me like strange men."

9 Then the elder began to weep, and the rest wept with him; and he said to Jared, "I am Adam whom God made first; and this is Abel my son, who was killed by his brother Cain, into whose heart Satan put to murder him.

10 "Then this is my son Seth, whom I asked of the Lord, who gave him to me, to comfort me instead of Abel.

11 "Then this one is my son Enos, son of Seth, and that other one is Cainan, son of Enos, and that other one is Mahalaleel, son of Cainan, thy father."

12 But Jared remained wondering at their appearance, and at the speech of the elder to him.

13 Then the elder said to him, "Marvel not, O my son; we live in the land north of the garden, which God created before the world. He would not let us live there, but placed us inside the garden, below which ye are now dwelling.

14 "But after that I transgressed, He made me come out of it, and I was left to dwell in this cave; great and sore troubles came upon me; and when my death drew near, I commanded my son Seth to tend his people well; and this my commandment is to be handed from one to another, unto the end of the generations to come.

15 "But, O Jared, my son, we live in beautiful regions, while you live here in misery, as this thy father Mahalaleel informed me; telling me that a great flood will come and overwhelm the whole earth.

16 "Therefore, O my son, fearing for your sakes, I rose and took my children with me, and came hither for us to visit thee and thy children; but I found thee standing in this cave weeping, and thy children scattered about this mountain, in the heat and in misery.

17 "But, O my son, as we missed our way, and came as far as this, we found other men below this mountain; who inhabit a beautiful country, full of trees and of fruits, and of all manner of verdure; it is like a garden; so that when we found them we thought they were you; until thy father Mahalaleel told me they were no such thing.

18 "Now, therefore, O my son, hearken to my counsel, and go down to them, thou and thy children. Ye will rest from all this suffering in which ye are. But if thou wilt not go down to them, then, arise, take thy children, and come with us to our garden; ye shall live in our beautiful land, and ye shall rest from all this trouble, which thou and thy children are now bearing."

19 But Jared when he heard this discourse from the elder, wondered; and went hither and thither, but at that moment he found not one of his children.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

20 Then he answered and said to the elder, "Why have you hidden yourselves until this day?"

21 And the elder replied, "If thy father had not told us, we should not have known it."

22 Then Jared believed his words were true.

23 So that elder said to Jared, "Wherefore didst thou turn about, so and so?" And he said, "I was seeking one of my children, to tell him about my going with you, and about their coming down to those about whom thou hast spoken to me."

24 When the elder heard Jared's intention, he said to him, "Let alone that purpose at present, and come with us; thou shalt see our country; if the land in which we dwell pleases thee, we and thou shall return hither and take thy family with us. But if our country does not please thee, thou shalt come back to thine own place."

25 And the elder urged Jared, to go before one of his children came to counsel him otherwise.

26 Jared, then, came out of the cave and went with them, and among them. And they comforted him, until they came to the top of the mountain of the sons of Cain.

27 Then said the elder to one of his companions, "We have forgotten something by the mouth of the cave, and that is the chosen garment we had brought to clothe Jared withal."

28 He then said to one of them, "Go back, thou, some one; and we will wait for thee here, until thou come back. Then will we clothe Jared and he shall be like us, good, handsome, and fit to come with us into our country."

29 Then that one went back.

30 But when he was a short distance off, the elder called to him and said to him, "Tarry thou, until I come up and speak to thee."

31 Then he stood still, and the elder went up to him and said to him, "One thing we forgot at the cave, it is this—to put out the lamp that burns inside it, above the bodies that are therein. Then come back to us, quick."

32 That one went, and the elder came back to his fellows and to Jared. And they came down from the mountain, and Jared with them; and they stayed by a fountain of water, near the houses of the children of Cain and waited for their companion until he brought the garment for Jared.

33 He, then, who went back to the cave, put out the lamp, and came to them and brought a phantom with him and showed it them. And when Jared saw it he wondered at the beauty and grace thereof, and rejoiced in his heart believing it was all true.

34 But while they were staying there, three of them went into houses of the sons of Cain and said to them, "Bring us to—day some food by the fountain of water, for us and our companions to eat."

35 But when the sons of Cain saw them, they wondered at them and thought: "These are beautiful to look at, and such as we never saw before." So they rose and came with them to the fountain of water, to see their companions.

36 They found them so very handsome, that they cried aloud about their places for others to gather together and come and look at these beautiful beings. Then they gathered around them both men and women.

37 Then the elder said to them, "We are strangers in your land, bring us some good food and drink, you and your women, to refresh ourselves with you."

38 When those men heard these words of the elder, every one of Cain's sons brought his wife, and another brought his daughter, and so, many women came to them; every one addressing Jared either for himself or for his wife; all alike.

39 But when Jared saw what they did, his very soul wrenched itself from them; neither would he taste of their food or of their drink.

40 The elder saw him as he wrenched himself from them, and said to him, "Be not sad; I am the great elder, as thou shalt see me do, do thyself in like manner."

41 Then he spread his hands and took one of the women, and five of his companions did the same before Jared, that he should do as they did.

42 But when Jared saw them working infamy he wept, and said in his mind,—My fathers never did the like.

43 He then spread his hands and prayed with a fervent heart, and with much weeping, and entreated God to deliver him from their hands.

44 No sooner did Jared begin to pray than the elder fled with his companions; for they could not abide in a place of prayer.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

45 Then Jared turned round but could not see them, but found himself standing in the midst of the children of Cain.

46 He then wept and said, "O God, destroy me not with this race, concerning which my fathers have warned me; for now, O my Lord God, I was thinking that those who appeared unto me were my fathers; but I have found them out to be devils, who allured me by this beautiful apparition, until I believed them.

47 "But now I ask Thee, O God, to deliver me from this race, among whom I am now staying, as Thou didst deliver me from those devils. Send Thy angel to draw me out of the midst of them; for I have not myself power to escape from among them."

48 When Jared had ended his prayer, God sent His angel in the midst of them, who took Jared and set him upon the mountain, and showed him the way, gave him counsel, and then departed from him.

CHAP. XVIII.

Confusion in the Cave of Treasures. Miraculous speech of the dead Adam.

THE children of Jared were in the habit of visiting him hour after hour, to receive his blessing and to ask his advice for every thing they did; and when he had a work to do, they did it for him.

2 But this time when they went into the cave they found not Jared, but they found the lamp put out, and the bodies of the fathers thrown about, and voices came from them by the power of God, that said, "Satan in an apparition has deceived our son, wishing to destroy him, as he destroyed our son Cain."

3 They said also, "Lord God of heaven and earth, deliver our son from the hand of Satan, who wrought a great and false apparition before him." They also spake of other matters, by the power of God.

4 But when the children of Jared heard these voices they feared, and stood weeping for their father; for they knew not what had befallen him.

5 And they wept for him that day until the setting of the sun.

6 Then came Jared with a woeful countenance, wretched in mind and body, and sorrowful at having been separated from the bodies of his fathers.

7 But as he was drawing near to the cave, his children saw him, and hastened to the cave, and hung upon his neck, crying, and saying to him, "O father, where hast thou been, and why hast thou left us, as thou wast not wont to do?" And again, "O father, when thou didst disappear, the lamp over the bodies of our fathers went out, the bodies were thrown about, and voices came from them"

8 When Jared heard this he was sorry, and went into the cave; and there found the bodies thrown about, the lamp put out, and the fathers themselves praying for his deliverance from the hand of Satan.

9 Then Jared fell upon the bodies and embraced them, and said, "O my fathers, through your intercession, let God deliver me from the hand of Satan! And I beg you will ask God to keep me and to hide me from him unto the day of my death."

10 Then all the voices ceased save the voice of our father Adam, who spake to Jared by the power of God, just as one would speak to his fellow, saying, "O Jared, my son, offer gifts to God for having delivered thee from the hand of Satan; and when thou bringest those offerings, so be it that thou offerest them on the altar on which I did offer. Then also, beware of Satan; for he deluded me many a time with his apparitions, wishing to destroy me, but God delivered me out of his hand.

11 "Command thy people that they be on their guard against him; and never cease to offer up gifts to God."

12 Then the voice of Adam also became silent; and Jared and his children wondered at this. Then they laid the bodies as they were at first; and Jared and his children stood praying the whole of that night, until break of day.

13 Then Jared made an offering and offered it up on the altar, as Adam had commanded him. And as he went up to the altar, he prayed to God for mercy and for forgiveness of his sin, concerning the lamp going out.

14 Then God appeared unto Jared on the altar and blessed him and his children, and accepted their offerings; and commanded Jared to take of the sacred fire from the altar, and with it to light the lamp that shed light on the body of Adam.

CHAP. XIX.

The children of Jared are led astray.

THEN God revealed to him again the promise He had made to Adam; He explained to him the 5500 years, and revealed unto him the mystery of His coming upon the earth.

2 And God said to Jared, "As to that fire which thou hast taken from the altar to light the lamp withal, let it abide with you to give light to the bodies; and let it not come out of the cave, until the body of Adam comes out of it.

3 But, O Jared, take care of the fire, that it burn bright in the lamp; neither go thou again out of the cave until thou receivest an order through a vision, and not in an apparition, when seen by thee.

4 "Then command again thy people not to hold intercourse with the children of Cain, and not to learn their ways; for I am God who loves not hatred and works of iniquity."

5 God gave also many other commandments to Jared, and blessed him. And then withdrew His Word from him.

6 Then Jared drew near with his children, took some fire, and came down to the cave, and lighted the lamp before the body of Adam; and he gave his people commandments as God had told him to do.

7 This sign happened to Jared at the end of his four hundred and fiftieth year; as did also many other wonders, we do not record. But we record only this one for shortness sake, and in order not to lengthen our narrative.

8 And Jared continued to teach his children eighty years; but after that they began to transgress the commandments he had given them, and to do many things without his counsel. They began to go down from the Holy Mountain one after another, and to mix with the children of Cain, in foul fellowships.

9 Now the reason for which the children of Jared went down the Holy Mountain, is this, that we will now reveal unto you.

CHAP. XX.

Ravishing music; strong drink loosed among the sons of Cain. They don colorful clothing. The children of Seth look on with longing eyes. They revolt from wise counsel; they descend the mountain into the valley of iniquity. They can not ascend the mountain again.

AFTER Cain had gone down to the land of dark soil, and his children had multiplied therein, there was one of them, whose name was Genun, son of Lamech the blind who slew Cain.

2 But as to this Genun, Satan came into him in his childhood; and he made sundry trumpets and horns, and string instruments, cymbals and psalteries, and lyres and harps, and flutes; and he played on them at all times and at every hour.

3 And when he played on them, Satan came into them, so that from among them were heard beautiful and sweet sounds, that ravished the heart.

4 Then he gathered companies upon companies to play on them; and when they played, it pleased well the children of Cain, who inflamed themselves with sin among themselves, and burnt as with fire; while Satan inflamed their hearts, one with another, and increased lust among them.

5 Satan also taught Genun to bring strong drink out of corn; and this Genun used to bring together companies upon companies in drink-houses; and brought into their hands all manner of fruits and flowers; and they drank together.

6 Thus did this Genun multiply sin exceedingly; he also acted with pride, and taught the children of Cain to commit all manner of the grossest wickedness, which they knew not; and put them up to manifold doings which they knew not before.

7 Then Satan, when he saw that they yielded to Genun and hearkened to him in every thing he told them, rejoiced greatly, increased Genun's understanding until he took iron and with it made weapons of war.

8 Then when they were drunk, hatred and murder increased among them; one man used violence against another to teach him evil taking his children and defiling them before him.

9 And when men saw they were overcome, and saw others that were not overpowered, those who were beaten came to Genun, took refuge with him, and he made them his confederates.

10 Then sin increased among them greatly; until a man married his own sister, or daughter, or mother, and others; or the daughter of his father's sister, so that there was no more distinction of relationship, and they no longer knew what is iniquity; but did wickedly, and the earth was defiled with sin; and they angered God the Judge, who had created them.

11 But Genun gathered together companies upon companies, that played on horns and on all the other instruments we have already mentioned, at the foot of the Holy Mountain; and they did so in order that the children of Seth who were on the Holy Mountain should hear it.

12 But when the children of Seth heard the noise, they wondered, and came by companies, and stood on the top of the mountain to look at those below; and they did thus a whole year.

13 When, at the end of that year, Genun saw that they were being won over to him little by little, Satan entered into him, and taught him to make dyeing—stuffs for garments of divers patterns, and made him understand how to dye crimson and purple and what not.

14 And the sons of Cain who wrought all this, and shone in beauty and gorgeous apparel, gathered together at the foot of the mountain in splendour, with horns and gorgeous dresses, and horse races, committing all manner of abominations.

15 Meanwhile the children of Seth, who were on the Holy Mountain, prayed and praised God, in the place of the hosts of angels who had fallen; wherefore God had called them 'angels,' because He rejoiced over them greatly.

16 But after this, they no longer kept His commandment, nor held by the promise He had made to their fathers; but they relaxed from their fasting and praying, and from the counsel of Jared their father. And they kept on gathering together on the top of the mountain, to look upon the children of Cain, from morning until evening, and upon what they did, upon their beautiful dresses and ornaments.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

17 Then the children of Cain looked up from below, and saw the children of Seth, standing in troops on the top of the mountain; and they called to them to come down to them.

18 But the children of Seth said to them from above, "We don't know the way." Then Genun, the son of Lamech, heard them say they did not know the way, and he bethought himself how he might bring them down.

19 Then Satan appeared to him by night, saying, "There is no way for them to come down from the mountain on which they dwell; but when they come to-morrow, say to them, 'Come ye to the western side of the mountain; there you will find the way of a stream of water, that comes down to the foot of the mountain, between two hills; come down that way to us.'"

20 Then when it was day, Genun blew the horns and beat the drums below the mountain, as he was wont. The children of Seth heard it, and came as they used to do.

21 Then Genun said to them from down below, "Go to the western side of the mountain, there you will find the way to come down."

22 But when the children of Seth heard these words from him, they went back into the cave to Jared, to tell him all they had heard.

23 Then when Jared heard it, he was grieved; for he knew that they would transgress his counsel.

24 After this a hundred men of the children of Seth gathered together, and said among themselves, "Come, let us go down to the children of Cain, and see what they do, and enjoy ourselves with them."

25 But when Jared heard this of the hundred men, his very soul was moved, and his heart was grieved. He then arose with great fervour, and stood in the midst of them, and adjured them by the blood of Abel the just, "Let not one of you go down from this holy and pure mountain, in which our fathers have ordered us to dwell."

26 But when Jared saw that they did not receive his words, he said unto them, "O my good and innocent and holy children, know that when once you go down from this holy mountain, God will not allow you to return again to it."

27 He again adjured them, saying, "I adjure by the death of our father Adam, and by the blood of Abel, of Seth, of Enos, of Cainan, and of Mahalaleel, to hearken to me, and not to go down from this holy mountain; for the moment you leave it, you will be reft of life and of mercy; and you shall no longer be called 'children of God,' but 'children of the devil.'"

28 But they would not hearken to his words.

29 Enoch at that time was already grown up, and in his zeal for God, he arose and said, "Hear me, O ye sons of Seth, small and great—when ye transgress the commandment of our fathers, and go down from this holy mountain—ye shall not come up hither again for ever."

30 But they rose up against Enoch, and would not hearken to his words, but went down from the Holy Mountain.

31 And when they looked at the daughters of Cain, at their beautiful figures, and at their hands and feet dyed with colour, and tattooed in ornaments on their faces, the fire of sin was kindled in them.

32 Then Satan made them look most beautiful before the sons of Seth, as he also made the sons of Seth appear of the fairest in the eyes of the daughters of Cain, so that the daughters of Cain lusted after the sons of Seth like ravenous beasts, and the sons of Seth after the daughters of Cain, until they committed abomination with them.

33 But after they had thus fallen into this defilement, they returned by the way they had come, and tried to ascend the Holy Mountain. But they could not, because the stones of that holy mountain were of fire flashing before them, by reason of which they could not go up again.

34 And God was angry with them, and repented of them because they had come down from glory, and had thereby lost or forsaken their own purity or innocence, and were fallen into the defilement of sin.

35 Then God sent His Word to Jared, saying, "These thy children, whom thou didst call 'My children,'—behold they have transgressed My commandment, and have gone down to the abode of perdition, and of sin. Send a messenger to those that are left, that they may not go down, and be lost."

36 Then Jared wept before the Lord, and asked of Him mercy and forgiveness. But he wished that his soul might depart from his body, rather than hear these words from God about the going down of his children from the Holy Mountain.

37 But he followed God's order, and preached unto them not to go down from that holy mountain, and not to hold intercourse with the children of Cain.

THE SECOND BOOK OF Adam and Eve

38 But they heeded not his message, and would not obey his counsel.

CHAP. XXI.

Jared dies in sorrow for his sons who had gone astray. A prediction of the Flood.

AFTER this another company gathered together, and they went to look after their brethren; but they perished as well as they. And so it was, company after company, until only a few of them were left.

2 Then Jared sickened from grief, and his sickness was such that the day of his death drew near.

3 Then he called Enoch his eldest son, and Methuselah Enoch's son, and Lamech the son of Methuselah, and Noah the son of Lamech.

4 And when they were come to him he prayed over them and blessed them, and said to them, "Ye are righteous, innocent sons; go ye not down from this holy mountain; for behold, your children and your children's children have gone down from this holy mountain, and have estranged themselves from this holy mountain, through their abominable lust and transgression of God's commandment.

5 "But I know, through the power of God, that He will not leave you on this holy mountain, because your children have transgressed His commandment and that of our fathers, which we had received from them.

6 "But, O my sons, God will take you to a strange land, and ye never shall again return to behold with your eyes this garden and this holy mountain.

7 "Therefore, O my sons, set your hearts on your own selves, and keep the commandment of God which is with you. And when you go from this holy mountain, into a strange land which ye know not, take with you the body of our father Adam, and with it these three precious gifts and offerings, namely, the gold, the incense, and the myrrh; and let them be in the place where the body of our father Adam shall lay.

8 "And unto him of you who shall be left, O my sons, shall the Word of God come, and when he goes out of this land he shall take with him the body of our father Adam, and shall lay it in the middle of the earth, the place in which salvation shall be wrought."

9 Then Noah said unto him, "Who is he of us that shall be left?"

10 And Jared answered, "Thou art he that shall be left. And thou shalt take the body of our father Adam from the cave, and place it with thee in the ark when the flood comes.

11 "And thy son Shem, who shall come out of thy loins, he it is who shall lay the body of our father Adam in the middle of the earth, in the place whence salvation shall come."

12 Then Jared turned to his son Enoch, and said unto him "Thou, my son, abide in this cave, and minister diligently before the body of our father Adam all the days of thy life; and feed thy people in righteousness and innocence."

13 And Jared said no more. His hands were loosened, his eyes closed, and he entered into rest like his fathers. His death took place in the three hundred and sixtieth year of Noah, and in the nine hundred and eighty-ninth year of his own life; on the twelfth of Takhsas on a Friday.

14 But as Jared died, tears streamed down his face by reason of his great sorrow, for the children of Seth, who had fallen in his days.

15 Then Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah, these four, wept over him; embalmed him carefully, and then laid him in the Cave of Treasures. Then they rose and mourned for him forty days.

16 And when these days of mourning were ended, Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah remained in sorrow of heart, because their father had departed from them, and they saw him no more.

CHAP. XXII.

Only three righteous men left in the world. The evil conditions of men prior to the Flood.

BUT Enoch kept the commandment of Jared his father, and continued to minister in the cave.

2 It is this Enoch to whom many wonders happened, and who also wrote a celebrated book; but those wonders may not be told in this place.

3 Then after this, the children of Seth went astray and fell, they, their children and their wives. And when Enoch, Methuselah, Lamech and Noah saw them, their hearts suffered by reason of their fall into doubt full of unbelief; and they wept and sought of God mercy, to preserve them, and to bring them out of that wicked generation.

4 Enoch continued in his ministry before the Lord three hundred and eighty-five years, and at the end of that time he became aware through the grace of God, that God intended to remove him from the earth.

5 He then said to his son, "O my son, I know that God intends to bring the waters of the Flood upon the earth, and to destroy our creation.

6 "And ye are the last rulers over this people on this mountain; for I know that not one will be left you to beget children on this holy mountain; neither shall any one of you rule over the children of his people; neither shall any great company be left of you, on this mountain."

7 Enoch said also to them, "Watch over your souls, and hold fast by your fear of God and by your service of Him, and worship Him in upright faith, and serve Him in righteousness, innocence and judgment, in repentance and also in purity."

8 When Enoch had ended his commandments to them, God transported him from that mountain to the land of life, to the mansions of the righteous and of the chosen, the abode of Paradise of joy, in light that reaches up to heaven; light that is outside the light of this world; for it is the light of God, that fills the whole world, but which no place can contain.

9 Thus, because Enoch was in the light of God, he found himself out of the reach of death; until God would have him die.

10 Altogether, not one of our fathers or of their children, remained on that holy mountain, except those three, Methuselah, Lamech, and Noah. For all the rest went down from the mountain and fell into sin with the children of Cain. Therefore were they forbidden that mountain, and none remained on it but those three men.

THE SACRED BOOKS AND EARLY LITERATURE OF THE EAST

VOLUME XIV

THE GREAT REJECTED BOOKS OF THE BIBLICAL APOCRYPHA

In Translations by

REV. R. H. CHARLES, D.D., Fellow of the British Academy; REV.
F. C. CONYBEARE, D.D., Officier de l'Académie Française; B. HARRIS
COWPER, editor of the "Journal of Sacred Literature"; J. RENDEL HARRIS, LL.D.; L. S. A. WELLS, M.A., of Ripon Theological College; REV. H. MALDWYN HUGHES, D.D., and other authorities.

With a Brief Bibliography by PROF. EDWARD H. JOHNS, Ph.D.

With an Historical Survey and Descriptions by PROF. CHARLES F. HORNE, Ph.D.

PARKE, AUSTIN, AND LIPSCOMB, INC.
NEW YORK LONDON

Copyright, 1917,
Parke, Austin, and Lipscomb, Inc.

OLD TESTAMENT APOCRYPHA

THE BOOKS OF ADAM AND EVE

“ And I, Eve, cried with a loud voice: ‘ Pity me, O Lord, my creator! For my sake Adam suffereth thus.’ ”

—THE BOOK OF EVE.

“ And Michael himself worshiped first; then he called me [the devil] and said: ‘ Worship the image of God the Lord.’ And I answered, ‘ I have no need to worship Adam.’ ”

—THE LIVES OF ADAM AND EVE.

THE BOOKS OF ADAM AND EVE

(INTRODUCTION)

THE books of Adam and Eve belong to the third class of apocrypha described in the general introduction. That is, they must originally have been Jewish works, and were told probably with no intention to deceive. Jewish legends about Adam were numerous and very old, and the Jewish literary custom was well established of writing ethical works in the form of a survey of history which was presented as the prophecy of some early patriarch. Then during the Christian ages these old legends and prophecies of Adam were gathered into one book, a Latin "Lives of Adam and Eve." During the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries this was translated into almost every European tongue, and was immensely popular. The Jewish originals of this work are no longer known, but the date of their composition must have been somewhere during the very earliest Christian centuries, for the tone of the "Lives" echoes the Jewish religious views of that date, with occasional Christian additions.

Our second book, the Apocalypse of Moses, is a similar medieval work, which in many places parallels the "Lives" so closely, that both must have a common source. The name is, however, a medieval blunder. An apocalypse of Moses would mean Moses's vision of the future of the world, whereas the vision here is only of the past and of the glory of God, and is in no way definitely connected with Moses. These two books, then, are really the final depository of all the oldest legends of Adam and Eve, combined with the visions of some religious enthusiast who rises to a true poetic rapture in his thoughts of God.

It is to be noticed that the Apocalypse of Moses consists largely of Eve's own narrative of what she had seen and done. This is still further expanded in our third brief book, which is really but a fragment drawn from a Slavonic version of the story. This Slavonic tale touches chiefly on the human and tragic side of the events and brings us keenly into touch with the sorrow of earth's first "mother thoughts" for the protection of men.

OLD TESTAMENT APOCRYPHA

THE LIVES OF ADAM AND EVE¹

CHAPTER I

When they were driven out from paradise, they made themselves a booth, and spent seven days mourning and lamenting in great grief.

CHAPTER II

But after seven days, they began to be hungry and started to look for victual to eat, and they found it not. Then Eve said to Adam: "My lord, I am hungry. Go, look for something for us to eat. Perchance the Lord God will look back and pity us and recall us to the place in which we were before."

CHAPTER III

And Adam arose and walked seven days over all that land, and found no victual such as they used to have in paradise. And Eve said to Adam: "Wilt thou slay me? that I may die, and perchance God the Lord will bring thee into paradise, for on my account hast thou been driven thence." Adam answered: "Forbear, Eve, from such words, that peradventure God bring not some other curse upon us. How is it possible that I should stretch forth my hand against my own flesh? Nay, let us arise and look for something for us to live on, that we fail not."

CHAPTER IV

And they walked about and searched for nine days, and they found none such as they were used to have in paradise,

¹ The best and most recent translations of most of the Old Testament apocrypha are those in the great scholarly work of Rev. R. H. Charles, "Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament," published in England by Oxford University. The translations of Old Testament apocrypha in the present volume are largely from the work of Dr. Charles and his fellow laborers, simplified for public use.

but found only animals' food. And Adam said to Eve: "This hath the Lord provided for animals and brutes to eat; but we used to have angels' food. But it is just and right that we lament before the sight of God who made us. Let us repent with a great penitence: perchance the Lord will be gracious to us and will pity us and give us a share of something for our living."

CHAPTER V

And Eve said to Adam: "What is penitence? Tell me, what sort of penitence am I to do? Let us not put too great a labor on ourselves, which we can not endure, so that the Lord will not harken to our prayers: and will turn away His countenance from us, because we have not fulfilled what we promised. My lord, how much penitence hast thou thought to do, for I have brought trouble and anguish upon thee?"

CHAPTER VI

And Adam said to Eve: "Thou canst not do so much as I, but do only so much as thou hast strength for. For I will spend forty days fasting, but do thou arise and go to the River Tigris and lift up a stone and stand on it in the water up to thy neck in the deep of the river. And let no speech proceed out of thy mouth, since we are unworthy to address the Lord, for our lips are unclean from the unlawful and forbidden tree. And do thou stand in the water of the river thirty-seven days. But I will spend forty days in the water of Jordan,² perchance the Lord God will take pity upon us."

CHAPTER VII

And Eve walked to the River Tigris and did as Adam had told her. Likewise, Adam walked to the River Jordan and stood on a stone up to his neck in water.

² "Jordan." Probably changed by Christian editor from "Gihon," where Jews placed Adam's penitence, for we expect another river of Paradise.

CHAPTER VIII

And Adam said: "I tell thee, water of Jordan, grieve with me, and assemble to me all swimming creatures, which are in thee, and let them surround me and mourn in company with me. Not for themselves let them lament, but for me; for it is not they that have sinned, but I."

Forthwith, all living things came and surrounded him, and, from that hour the water of the Jordan stood still and its current was stayed."

CHAPTER IX

And eighteen days passed by; then Satan was wroth and transformed himself into the brightness of angels, and went away to the River Tigris to Eve, and found her weeping, and the devil himself pretended to grieve with her, and he began to weep and said to her: "Come out of the river and lament no more. Cease now from sorrow and moans. Why art thou anxious and thy husband Adam? The Lord God hath heard your groaning and hath accepted your penitence, and all we angels have entreated on your behalf, and made supplication to the Lord; and he hath sent me to bring you out of the water and give you the nourishment which you had in paradise, and for which you are crying out. Now come out of the water and I will conduct you to the place where your victual hath been made ready."

CHAPTER X

But Eve heard and believed and went out of the water of the river, and her flesh was trembling like grass, from the chill of the water. And when she had gone out, she fell on the earth and the devil raised her up and led her to Adam. But when Adam had seen her and the devil with her, he wept and cried aloud and said: "O Eve, Eve, where is the labor of thy penitence? How hast thou been again ensnared by our adversary, by whose means we have been estranged from our abode in paradise and spiritual joy?"

CHAPTER XI

And when she heard this, Eve understood that it was the devil who had persuaded her to go out of the river; and she fell on her face on the earth, and her sorrow and groaning and wailing were redoubled. And she cried out and said: "Woe unto thee, thou devil. Why dost thou attack us for no cause? What hast thou to do with us? What have we done to thee? for thou pursuest us with craft. Or why doth thy malice assail us? Have we taken away thy glory and caused thee to be without honor? Why dost thou harry us, thou enemy, and persecute us to the death in wickedness and envy?"

The Fall of the Devil

CHAPTER XII

And with a heavy sigh, the devil spake: "O Adam! all my hostility, envy, and sorrow is for thee, since it is for thee that I have been expelled from my glory, which I possessed in the heavens in the midst of the angels, and for thee was I cast out in the earth." Adam answered, "What dost thou tell me? What have I done to thee or what is my fault against thee? Seeing that thou hast received no harm or injury from us, why dost thou pursue us?"

CHAPTER XIII

The devil replied, "Adam, what dost thou tell me? It is for thy sake that I have been hurled from that place. When thou wast formed, I was hurled out of the presence of God and banished from the company of the angels. When God blew into thee the breath of life and thy face and likeness was made in the image of God, Michael also brought thee and made us worship thee in the sight of God; and God the Lord spake: Here is Adam. I have made thee in our image and likeness."

CHAPTER XIV

And Michael went out and called all the angels saying: "Worship the image of God as the Lord God hath commanded."

And Michael himself worshiped first; then he called me and said: "Worship the image of God the Lord." And I answered, "I have no need to worship Adam." And since Michael kept urging me to worship, I said to him, "Why dost thou urge me? I will not worship an inferior and younger being than I. I am his senior in the Creation, before he was made was I already made. It is his duty to worship me."

CHAPTER XV

When the angels, who were under me, heard this, they refused to worship him. And Michael saith, "Worship the image of God, but if thou wilt not worship him the Lord God will be wroth with thee." And I said, "If He be wroth with me, I will set my seat above the stars of heaven and will be like the Highest."

CHAPTER XVI

"And God the Lord was wroth with me and banished me and my angels from our glory; and on thy account were we expelled from our abodes into this world and hurled on the earth. And straightway we were overcome with grief, since we had been spoiled of so great glory. And we were grieved when we saw thee in such joy and luxury. And with guile I cheated thy wife and caused thee to be expelled through her doing from thy joy and luxury, as I have been driven out of my glory."

CHAPTER XVII

When Adam heard the devil say this, he cried out and wept, and spake: "O Lord my God, my life is in thy hands. Banish this Adversary far from me, who seeketh to destroy my soul, and give me his glory which he himself hath lost." And at that moment the devil vanished before him. But Adam endured in his penance, standing for forty days on end in the water of Jordan.

Cain and Abel

CHAPTER XVIII

And Eve said to Adam: "Live thou, my lord, to thee life is granted, since thou hast committed neither the first nor the second error. But I have erred and been led astray, for I have not kept the commandment of God; and now banish me from the light of thy life and I will go to the sunsetting, and there will I be, until I die." And she began to walk toward the western parts and to mourn and to weep bitterly and groan aloud. And she made there a booth, while she had in her womb offspring of three months old.

CHAPTER XIX

And when the time of her bearing approached, she began to be distressed with pains, and she cried aloud to the Lord and said: "Pity me, O Lord; assist me." And she was not heard, and the mercy of God did not encircle her. And she said to herself: "Who shall tell my lord Adam? I implore you, ye luminaries of heaven, what time ye return to the east, bear a message to my lord Adam."

CHAPTER XX

But in that hour Adam said: "The complaint of Eve hath come to me. Perchance, once more hath the serpent fought with her."

And he went and found her in great distress. And Eve said: "From the moment I saw thee, my lord, my grief-laden soul was refreshed. And now entreat the Lord God on my behalf to harken unto thee and look upon me and free me from my awful pains." And Adam entreated the Lord for Eve.

CHAPTER XXI

And behold, there came twelve angels and two "virtues," standing on the right and on the left of Eve; and Michael was standing on the right; and he stroked her on the face as far as to the breast, and said to Eve: "Blessed art thou, Eve, for Adam's sake. Since his prayers and intercessions are great, I have been sent that thou mayst receive our help. Rise up now, and prepare thee to bear." And she bore a son and he was shining; and at once the babe rose up and ran and bore a blade of grass in his hands, and gave it to his mother, and his name was called Cain.

CHAPTER XXII

And Adam carried Eve and the boy and led them to the East. And the Lord God sent divers seeds by Michael the archangel and gave to Adam and showed him how to work and till the ground, that they might have fruit by which they and all their generations might live.

For thereafter Eve conceived and bare a son, whose name was Abel; and Cain and Abel used to stay together.

And Eve said to Adam: "My lord, while I slept, I saw a vision, as it were the blood of our son Abel in the hand of Cain, who was gulping it down in his mouth. Therefore I have sorrow."

And Adam said, "Alas if Cain slew Abel. Yet let us separate them from each other mutually, and let us make for each of them separate dwellings."

CHAPTER XXIII

And they made Cain an husbandman, but Abel they made a shepherd; in order that in this wise they might be mutually separated. And thereafter, Cain slew Abel, but Adam was then one hundred and thirty years old, but Abel was slain when he was one hundred and twenty-two years.

And thereafter Adam knew his wife and he begat a son and called his name Seth.

CHAPTER XXIV

And Adam said to Eve, "Behold, I have begotten a son, in place of Abel, whom Cain slew." And after Adam had begotten Seth, he lived eight hundred years and begat thirty sons and thirty daughters; in all sixty-three children. And they were increased over the face of the earth in their nations.

The Vision of Adam

CHAPTER XXV

And Adam said to Seth, "Hear, my son, Seth, that I may relate to thee what I heard and saw after your mother and I had been driven out of paradise. When we were at prayer, there came to me Michael the archangel, a messenger of God. And I saw a chariot like the wind, and its wheels were fiery, and I was caught up into the paradise of righteousness, and I saw the Lord sitting and his face was flaming fire that could not be endured. And many thousands of angels were on the right and left of that chariot.

CHAPTER XXVI

When I saw this I was confounded, and terror seized me, and I bowed myself down before God with my face to the earth. And God said to me, "Behold thou diest, since thou hast transgressed the commandment of God, for thou didst harken rather to the voice of thy wife, whom I gave into thy power, that thou mightest hold her to thy will. Yet thou didst listen to her and didst pass by My words."

CHAPTER XXVII

And when I heard these words of God, I fell prone on the earth and worshiped the Lord and said, "My Lord, All powerful and merciful God, Holy and Righteous One, let not the name that is mindful of Thy majesty be blotted out, but convert my soul, for I die and my breath will go out of my mouth. Cast me not out from Thy presence, me whom Thou didst form of the clay of the earth. Do not banish from Thy favor him whom Thou didst nourish."

And lo! a word concerning thee came upon me, and the Lord said to me, "Since thy days were fashioned, thou hast been created with a love of knowledge; therefore there shall not be taken from thy seed forever the right to serve Me."

CHAPTER XXVIII

And when I heard these words, I threw myself on the earth and adored the Lord God, and said, "Thou art the eternal and supreme God; and all creatures give Thee honor and praise.

"Thou art the true Light gleaming above all lights, the Living Life, infinite mighty Power. To Thee, the spiritual powers give honor and praise. Thou workest on the race of men the abundance of Thy mercy."

After I had worshiped the Lord, straightway Michael, God's archangel, seized my hand and cast me out of the paradise of "vision" and of God's command. And Michael held a rod in his hand, and he touched the waters, which were round about paradise, and they froze hard.

CHAPTER XXIX

And I went across, and Michael the archangel went across with me, and he led me back to the place whence he had caught me up. Harken, my son Seth, even to the rest of the secrets and sacraments that shall be, which were revealed to me, when I had eaten of the tree of knowledge, and knew and perceived what will come to pass in this age; what God intends to do to His creation of the race of men. The Lord will appear in a flame of fire, and from the mouth of His majesty He will give commandments and statutes; from His mouth will proceed a two-edged sword; and they will sanctify Him in the house of the habitation of His majesty. And He will show them the marvelous place of His majesty. And then they will build a house to the Lord their God in the land which He shall prepare for them, and there they will transgress His statutes and their sanctuary will be burnt up, and their land will be deserted, and they themselves will be dispersed; because they have kindled the wrath of God. And once more he will cause them to come back from their dispersion; and again they will build the house of God; and in the last time the house of God will be exalted greater than of old. And once more iniquity will exceed righteousness. And thereafter God will dwell with men on earth in visible form; and then righteousness will begin to shine. And the house of God will be honored in the age, and their enemies will no more be able to hurt the men, who are believing in God; and God will stir up for Himself a faithful people, whom He shall save for eternity, and the impious shall be punished by God their king, the men who refused to love His law. Heaven and earth, nights and days, and all creatures shall obey Him, and not overstep His commandment. Men shall not change their works, but they shall be changed from forsaking the law of the Lord. Therefore the Lord shall repel from Himself the wicked, and the just shall shine like the sun, in the sight of God. And in that time shall men be purified by water from their sins. But those who are unwilling to be purified by water shall be condemned. And happy shall the man be who hath ruled his soul, when the Judgment shall come to pass and the greatness of God be seen among men and their deeds be inquired into by God, the just judge.

The Death of Adam

CHAPTER XXX

After Adam was nine hundred and thirty years old, since he knew that his days were coming to an end, he said: "Let all my sons assemble themselves to me, that I may bless them before I die, and speak with them."

And they were assembled in three parts, before his sight, in the house of prayer, where they used to worship the Lord God. And they asked him, saying: "What concerns thee, father, that thou shouldst assemble us, and why dost thou lie on thy bed?" Then Adam answered and said: "My sons, I am sick and in pain." And all his sons said to him: "What does it mean, father, this illness and pain?"

CHAPTER XXXI

Then said Seth, his son: "O my lord, perchance thou hast longed after the fruit of paradise, which thou wast wont to eat, and therefore thou liest in sadness? Tell me and I will go to the nearest gates of paradise and put dust on my head and throw myself down on the earth before the gates of paradise and lament and make entreaty to God with loud lamentation; perchance he will harken to me and send his angel to bring me the fruit, for which thou hast longed."

Adam answered and said: "No, my son, I do not long for this, but I feel weakness and great pain in my body." Seth answered, "What is pain, my lord father? I am ignorant; but hide it not from us, but tell us about it."

CHAPTER XXXII

And Adam answered and said: "Hear me, my sons. When God made us, me and your mother, and placed us in paradise and gave us every tree bearing fruit to eat, he laid a prohibition on us concerning the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which is in the midst of paradise; saying, 'Do not eat of it.' But God gave a part of paradise to me and a part to your mother: the trees of the eastern part and north, which is over against Aquilo, he gave to me, and to your mother he gave the part of the south and the western part.

CHAPTER XXXIII

Moreover God the Lord gave us two angels to guard us. The hour came when the angels had ascended to worship in the sight of God; forthwith the adversary (the devil) found an opportunity while the angels were absent and the devil led your mother astray to eat of the unlawful and forbidden tree. And she did eat and gave to me.

CHAPTER XXXIV

And immediately, the Lord God was wroth with us, and the Lord said to me: "In that thou hast left behind my commandment and hast not kept my word, which I confirmed to thee; behold, I will bring upon thy body seventy blows; with divers griefs shalt thou be tormented, beginning at thy head and thine eyes and thine ears down to thy nails on thy toes, and in every separate limb." These hath God appointed for chastisement. All these things hath the Lord sent to me and to all our race.

CHAPTER XXXV

Thus spake Adam to his sons, and he was seized with violent pains, and he cried out with a loud voice, "What shall I do? I am in distress. So cruel are the pains with which I am beset." And when Eve had seen him weeping, she also began to weep herself, and said: "O Lord my God, hand over to me his pain, for it is I who sinned."

And Eve said to Adam: "My lord, give me a part of thy pains, for this hath come to thee from fault of mine."

CHAPTER XXXVI

And Adam said to Eve: "Rise up and go with my son Seth to the neighborhood of paradise, and put dust on your heads and throw yourselves on the ground and lament in the sight of God. Perchance He will have pity upon you and send His angel across to the tree of His mercy, whence floweth the oil of life, and will give you a drop of it, to anoint me with it, that I may have rest from these pains, by which I am being consumed."

CHAPTER XXXVII

Then Seth and his mother went off toward the gates of paradise. And while they were walking, lo! suddenly there came a beast (a serpent)³ and attacked and bit Seth. And as soon as Eve saw it, she wept and said: "Alas, wretched woman that I am. I am accursed since I have not kept the commandment of God." And Eve said to the serpent in a loud voice: "Accursed beast! how is it that thou hast not feared to let thyself loose against the image of God, but hast dared to fight with it?"

CHAPTER XXXVIII

The beast answered in the language of men: "Is it not against you, Eve, that our malice is directed? Are not ye ³ The "serpent" is clearly a later interpolation to connect with the tale of the Fall. Originally this passage was to explain the beasts' revolt.

the objects of our rage? Tell me, Eve, how was thy mouth opened to eat of the fruit? But now if I shall begin to reprove thee thou canst not bear it."

CHAPTER XXXIX

Then said Seth to the beast: "God the Lord revile thee. Be silent, be dumb, shut thy mouth, accursed enemy of Truth, confounder and destroyer. Avaunt from the image of God till the day when the Lord God shall order thee to be brought to the ordeal." And the beast said to Seth: "See, I leave the presence of the image of God, as thou hast said." Forthwith he left Seth, wounded by his teeth.

CHAPTER XL

But Seth and his mother walked to the regions of paradise for the oil of mercy to anoint the sick Adam: and they arrived at the gates of paradise, and they took dust from the earth and placed it on their heads, and bowed themselves with their faces to the earth, and began to lament and make loud moaning, imploring the Lord God to pity Adam in his pains and to send His angel to give them the oil from the "tree of His mercy."

CHAPTER XLI

But when they had been praying and imploring for many hours, behold, the angel Michael appeared to them and said: "I have been sent to you from the Lord — I am set by God over the bodies of men — I tell thee, Seth, thou man of God, weep not nor pray and entreat on account of the oil of the tree of mercy to anoint thy father Adam for the pains of his body.

CHAPTER XLII

"For I tell thee that in no wise wilt thou be able to receive thereof save in the last days."

[When five thousand five hundred years have been fulfilled, then will come upon earth the most beloved king Christ, the son of God, to revive the body of Adam and with him to revive the bodies of the dead. He Himself, the Son of God, when He comes will be baptized in the river of Jordan, and when He hath come out of the water of Jordan, then He will anoint from the oil of mercy all that believe in Him. And the oil of mercy shall be for generation to generation for those who are ready to be born again of water and the Holy Spirit to life eternal. Then the most beloved Son of God, Christ, descending on earth, shall lead thy father Adam to Paradise to the tree of mercy.]⁴

CHAPTER XLIII

"But do thou, Seth, go to thy father Adam, since the time of his life is fulfilled. Six days hence his soul shall go off his body, and when it shall have gone out thou shalt see great marvels in the heaven and in the earth and the luminaries of heaven." With these words, straightway Michael departed from Seth.

And Eve and Seth returned bearing with them herbs of fragrance, i.e., nard and crocus and calamus and cinnamon.

CHAPTER XLIV

And when Seth and his mother had reached Adam, they told him, how the beast (the serpent) bit Seth. And Adam said to Eve: "What hast thou done? A great plague hast thou brought upon us, transgression and sin for all our generations: and this which thou hast done, tell thy children after my death, for those who arise from us shall toil and fail but they shall be wanting and curse us and say, All evils have our parents brought upon us, who were at the beginning." When Eve heard these words, she began to weep and moan.

CHAPTER XLV

And just as Michael the archangel had foretold, after six days came Adam's death. When Adam perceived that the hour of his death was at hand, he said to all his sons: "Behold, I am nine hundred and thirty years old, and if I die, bury me toward the sunrising in the field of yonder dwelling." And it came to pass that when he had finished all his discourse, he gave up the ghost.

⁴ This whole passage in brackets is a Christian interpolation from the Gospel of Nicodemus.

CHAPTER XLVI

Then was the sun darkened and the moon and the stars for seven days, and Seth in his mourning embraced from above the body of his father, and Eve was looking on the ground with hands folded over her head, and all her children wept most bitterly. And behold, there appeared Michael the angel and stood at the head of Adam, and said to Seth: "Rise up from the body of thy father and come to me and see what is the doom of the Lord God concerning him. His creature is he, and God hath pitied him."

CHAPTER XLVII

And all the angels blew their trumpets, and cried: "Blessed art thou, O Lord, for thou hast had pity on Thy creature."

CHAPTER XLVIII

Then Seth saw the hand of God stretched out holding Adam, and he handed him over to Michael, saying: "Let him be in thy charge till the day of Judgment in punishment, till the last years when I will convert his sorrow into joy. Then shall he sit on the throne of him who hath been his supplanter."

And the Lord said again to the angels Michael and Uriel: "Bring me three linen clothes of byssus, and spread them out over Adam, and other linen clothes over Abel his son, and bury Adam and Abel his son."

And all the "powers" of angels marched before Adam, and the sleep of the dead was consecrated. And the angels Michael and Uriel buried Adam and Abel in the parts of paradise, before the eyes of Seth and his mother and no one else, and Michael and Uriel said: "Just as ye have seen, in like manner, bury your dead."

CHAPTER XLIX

Six days after, Adam died; and Eve perceived that she would die, so she assembled all her sons and daughters, Seth with thirty brothers and thirty sisters, and Eve said to all: "Hear me, my children, and I will tell you what the archangel Michael said to us when I and your father transgressed the command of God.

"On account of your transgression, our Lord will bring upon your race the anger of his judgment, first by water, the second time by fire; by these two, will the Lord judge the whole human race.

CHAPTER L

"But harken unto me, my children. Make ye then tables of stone and others of clay, and write on them all my life and your father's, all that ye have heard and seen from us. If by water the Lord judge our race, the tables of clay will be dissolved and the tables of stone will remain; but if by fire, the tables of stone will be broken up and the tables of clay will be baked hard."⁵

When Eve had said all this to her children, she spread out her hands to heaven in prayer, and bent her knees to the earth, and while she worshiped the Lord and gave him thanks, she gave up the ghost. Thereafter, all her children buried her with loud lamentation.

CHAPTER LI

When they had been mourning four days, then Michael the archangel appeared and said to Seth: "Man of God, mourn not for thy dead more than six days, for on the seventh day is the sign of the resurrection and the rest of the age to come; on the seventh day the Lord rested from all His works."

Thereupon Seth made the tables.

⁵ In some MSS. is added the story of Solomon finding "the tables," with a conclusion announcing the coming of Christ to judge the world.

THE APOCALYPSE OF MOSES¹

CHAPTER I

This is the story of Adam and Eve after they had gone out of paradise. And Adam knew his wife Eve, and went upward to the sunrising and abode there eighteen years and two months. And Eve conceived and bare two sons; Adiaphotos, who is called Cain, and Amilabes, who is called Abel.²

CHAPTER II

And after this, Adam and Eve were with one another, and while they were sleeping Eve said to Adam, her lord: "My lord, Adam, behold, I have seen in a dream this night the blood of my son Amilabes, who is styled Abel, being poured into the mouth of Cain, his brother, and he went on drinking it without pity. But he begged him to leave him a little of it. Yet he harkened not to him, but gulped down the whole; nor did it stay in his stomach, but came out of his mouth." And Adam said, "Let us arise and go and see what has happened to them. I fear lest the adversary may be assailing them somewhere."

CHAPTER III

And they both went and found Abel murdered by the hand of Cain his brother. And God saith to Michael the archangel: "Say to Adam: 'Reveal not the secret that thou knowest to Cain thy son, for he is a son of wrath. But grieve not, for I will give thee another son in his stead; he shall show to thee all that thou shalt do. Do thou tell him nothing.'” Thus spake the archangel to Adam. But he kept the word in his heart, and with him also Eve, though they grieved concerning Abel and their son.

¹ All MSS. give preface describing book as taught to Moses by Michael the archangel. Like the title, this is a later addition.

² The translator in the Ante-Nicene Christian Library, xvi, 1870, suggests "a planter," for Adiaphotos, and "a keeper of sheep" for Amilabes.

CHAPTER IV

And after this, Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Seth.

And Adam said to Eve: “See! we have begotten a son in place of Abel, whom Cain slew, let us give glory and sacrifice to God.”

CHAPTER V

And Adam begat thirty sons and thirty daughters, and Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years; and he fell sick, and cried with a loud voice and said: “Let all my sons come to me that I may see them before I die.”

And all assembled, for the earth was divided into three parts. And Seth, his son, said to him: “Father Adam, what is thy complaint?”

And he saith, “My children, I am crushed by the burden of trouble.” And they say to him, “What is trouble?”

CHAPTER VI

And Seth answered and said to him: “Hast thou called to mind, father, the fruit of paradise of which thou usedst to eat, and hast been grieved in yearning for it?”

“If this be so, tell me, and I will go and bring thee fruit from paradise. For I will set dung upon my head and will weep and pray that the Lord will harken to me and send his angel and bring me a plant from paradise, and I will bring it thee that thy trouble may cease from thee.”

Adam saith to him: “Nay, my son Seth, but I have much sickness and trouble!” Seth saith to him: “And how hath this come upon thee?”

CHAPTER VII

And Adam said to him: “When God made us, me and your mother, through whom also I die, He gave us power to eat of every tree which is in paradise, but, concerning that one only, he charged us not to eat of it, and through this one we are to die. And the hour drew nigh for the angels who were guarding your mother to go up and worship the Lord, and I was far from her, and the enemy knew that she was alone and gave to her, and she ate of the tree of which she had been told not to eat. Then she gave also to me to eat.

CHAPTER VIII

“And God was wroth with us, and the Lord came into paradise and called me in a terrible voice and said: ‘Adam, where art thou? And why hidest thou from my face? Shall the house be able to hide itself from its builder?’ And he saith to me: ‘Since thou hast abandoned my covenant, I have brought upon thy body seventy-two strokes; the trouble of the first stroke is a pain of the eyes, the second stroke an affection of the hearing, and likewise in turn all the strokes shall befall thee.’”

CHAPTER IX

As he said this to his sons, Adam groaned sore and said: “What shall I do? I am in great distress.”

And Eve wept and said: “My lord Adam, rise up and give me half of thy trouble and I will endure it; for it is on my account that this hath happened to thee, on my account thou art beset with toils and troubles.” But Adam said to Eve, “Arise and go with my son Seth near to paradise, and put earth upon your heads and weep and pray God to have mercy upon me and send his angel to paradise, and give me of the tree out of which the oil floweth, and bring it me, and I shall anoint myself and shall have rest from my complaint.”

CHAPTER X

Then Seth and Eve went toward paradise, and Eve saw her son, and a wild beast assailing him, and Eve wept and said: “Woe is me; if I come to the day of the Resurrection, all those who have sinned will curse me, saying: Eve hath not kept the commandment of God.” And she spake to the beast: “Thou wicked beast, fearest thou not to fight with the image of God? How was thy mouth opened? How were thy teeth made strong? How didst thou not call to mind thy subjection? For long ago wast thou made subject to the image of God." Then the beast cried out and said:

CHAPTER XI

"It is not our concern, Eve, thy greed and thy wailing, but thine own; for it is from thee that the rule of the beasts hath arisen. How was thy mouth opened to eat of the tree concerning which God enjoined thee not to eat of it? On this account, our nature also hath been transformed. Now therefore thou canst not endure it, if I begin to reprove thee."

CHAPTER XII

Then Seth speaketh to the beast, "Close thy mouth and be silent, and stand off from the image of God until the day of Judgment." Then saith the beast to Seth: "Behold, I stand off from the image of God." And he went to his lair.

CHAPTER XIII

And Seth went with Eve near paradise, and they wept there, and prayed God to send his angel and give them the oil of mercy.

And God sent the archangel Michael and he spoke to Seth: "Seth, man of God, weary not thyself with prayers and entreaties concerning the tree which floweth with oil to anoint thy father Adam. For it shall not be thine now, but in the end of the times. Then shall all flesh be raised up from Adam till that great day — all that shall be of the holy people. Then shall the delights of paradise be given to them, and God shall be in their midst. And they shall no longer sin before his face, for the evil heart shall be taken from them, and there shall be given them a heart understanding the good and to serve God only.

But do thou go back to thy father. For the term of his life hath been fulfilled, and he will live three days from to-day and will die. But when his soul is departing, thou shalt behold the awful scene of his passing."

CHAPTER XIV

Thus spake the angel and departed from them. And Seth and Eve came to the hut where Adam was laid. And Adam saith to Eve: "Eve, what hast thou wrought in us? Thou hast brought upon us great wrath which is death, lording it over all our race." And he saith to her, "Call all our children and our children's children and tell them the manner of our transgression."

Eve's Account of her Fall

CHAPTER XV

Then saith Eve to them: "Hear, all my children and children's children, and I will relate to you how the enemy deceived us. It befell that we were guarding paradise, each of us the portion allotted to us from God. Now I guarded in my lot the west and the south. But the devil went to Adam's lot, where the male creatures were. For God divided the creatures; all the males he gave to your father, and all the females he gave to me.

CHAPTER XVI

"And the devil spake to the serpent, saying, 'Rise up, come to me and I will tell thee a word whereby thou mayst have profit.' And he rose and came to him. And the devil saith to him: 'I hear that thou art wiser than all the beasts, and I have come to counsel thee. Why dost thou eat of Adam's tares and not of paradise? Rise up and we will cause him to be cast out of paradise, even as we were cast out through him.' The serpent saith to him, 'I fear lest the Lord be wroth with me.' The devil saith to him: 'Fear not, only be my vessel and I will speak through thy mouth words to deceive him.'

CHAPTER XVII

"And instantly he hung himself from the wall of paradise, and when the angels ascended to worship God, then Satan appeared in the form of an angel and sang hymns like the angels. And I bent over the wall and saw him, like an angel. But he saith to me: 'Art thou Eve?' And I said to him, 'I am.' 'What art thou doing in paradise?' And I said to him, 'God set us to guard and to eat of it.' The devil answered through the mouth of the serpent: 'Ye do well but ye do not eat of every plant.' And I said: 'Yea, we eat of all, save one only, which is in the midst of paradise, concerning which, God charged us not to eat of it: for, He said to us, on the day on which ye eat of it, ye shall die the death.'

CHAPTER XVIII

"Then the serpent saith to me, 'May God live! but I am grieved on your account, for I would not have you ignorant. But arise, come hither, harken to me and eat and mind the value of that tree.' But I said to him, 'I fear lest God be wroth with me as he told us.' And he saith to me: 'Fear not, for as soon as thou eatest of it ye too shall be as God, in that ye shall know good and evil. But God perceived this that ye would be like Him, so he envied you and said, Ye shall not eat of it. Nay, do thou give heed to the plant and thou wilt see its great glory.' Yet I feared to take of the fruit. And he saith to me: 'Come hither, and I will give it thee. Follow me.'

CHAPTER XIX

"And I opened to him and he walked a little way, then turned and said to me: 'I have changed my mind, and I will not give thee to eat until thou swear to me to give also to thy husband.' And I said, 'What sort of oath shall I swear to thee? Yet what I know, I say to thee: By the throne of the Master, and by the Cherubim and the Tree of Life, I will give also to my husband to eat.' And when he had received the oath from me, he went and poured upon the fruit the poison of his wickedness, which is lust, the root and beginning of every sin, and he bent the branch on the earth and I took of the fruit and I ate.

CHAPTER XX

"And in that very hour my eyes were opened, and forthwith I knew that I was bare of the righteousness with which I had been clothed upon, and I wept and said to him: 'Why hast thou done this to me in that thou hast deprived me of the glory with which I was clothed?' But I wept also about the oath, which I had sworn. But he descended from the tree and vanished. And I began to seek, in my nakedness, in my part for leaves to hide my shame, but I found none, for as soon as I had eaten, the leaves showered down from all the trees in my part, except the fig-tree only. But I took leaves from it and made for myself a girdle and it was from the very same plant of which I had eaten.

CHAPTER XXI

"And I cried out in that very hour, 'Adam, Adam, where art thou? Rise up, come to me and I will show thee a great secret.' But when your father came, I spake to him words of transgression which have brought us down from our great glory. For, when he came, I opened my mouth and the devil was speaking, and I began to exhort him and said, 'Come hither, my lord Adam, harken to me and eat of the fruit of the tree of which God told us not to eat of it, and thou shalt be as a God.' And your father answered and said, 'I fear lest God be wroth with me.' And I said to him, 'Fear not, for as soon as thou hast eaten thou shalt know good and evil.' And speedily I persuaded him, and he ate, and straightway his eyes were opened and he, too, knew his nakedness. And to me he saith, 'O wicked woman! what have I done to thee that thou hast deprived me of the glory of God?'

CHAPTER XXII

"And in that same hour, we heard the archangel Michael blowing his trumpet and calling to the angels and saying: 'Thus saith the Lord, Come with me to paradise and hear the judgment with which I shall judge Adam.'

"And when God appeared in paradise, mounted on the chariot of his cherubim with the angels proceeding before him and singing hymns of praises, all the plants of paradise, both of your father's lot and mine, broke out into flowers. And the throne of God was fixed where the Tree of Life was.

CHAPTER XXIII

"And God called Adam saying, 'Adam, where art thou? Can the house be hidden from the presence of its builder?' Then your father answered: 'It is not because we think not to be found by thee, Lord, that we hide, but I was afraid, because I am naked, and I was ashamed before thy might, my Master.' God saith to him, 'who showed thee that thou art naked, unless thou hast forsaken my commandment, which I delivered thee to keep it?' Then Adam called to mind the word which I spake to him, saying, 'I will make thee secure before God'; and he turned and said to me: 'Why hast thou done this?' And I said, 'The serpent deceived me.'

CHAPTER XXIV

"God saith to Adam: 'Since thou hast disregarded my commandment and hast harkened to thy wife, cursed is the earth in thy labors.

"'Thou shalt work it and it shall not give its strength: thorns and thistles shall spring up for thee, and in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread. Thou shalt be in manifold toils; thou shalt be crushed by bitterness, but of sweetness shalt thou not taste.

"'Weary shalt thou be and shalt not rest; by heat shalt thou be tired, by cold shalt thou be straitened: abundantly shalt thou busy thyself, but thou shalt not be rich; and thou shalt grow fat, but come to no end.

"'The beasts, over whom thou didst rule, shall rise up in rebellion against thee, for thou hast not kept my commandment.'

CHAPTER XXV

"And the Lord turned to me and said: 'Since thou hast harkened to the serpent, and turned a deaf ear to my commandment, thou shalt be in throes of travail and intolerable agonies; thou shalt bear children in much trembling, and in one hour thou shalt come to the birth, and lose thy life, from thy sore trouble and anguish. But thou shalt confess and say: "Lord, Lord, save me, and I will turn no more to the sin of the flesh." And on this account, from thine own words I will judge thee, by reason of the enmity which the enemy has planted in thee.'

CHAPTER XXVI

"But he turned to the serpent in great wrath and said: 'Since thou hast done this, and become a thankless vessel until thou hast deceived the innocent hearts, accursed art thou among all beasts. Thou shalt be deprived of the victual of which thou didst eat, and shalt feed on dust all the days of thy life; on thy breast and thy belly shalt thou walk, and be robbed of hands and feet. There shall not be left thee ear nor wing, nor one limb of all that which thou didst ensnare them in thy malice and causedst them to be cast out of paradise; and I will put enmity between thee and his seed; he shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel until the day of Judgment.'

CHAPTER XXVII

"Thus he spake and bade the angels have us cast out of paradise: and as we were being driven out amid our loud lamentations, your Father Adam besought the angels and said: 'Leave me a little space that I may entreat the Lord that he have compassion on me and pity me, for I only have sinned.' And they left off driving him, and Adam cried aloud and wept, saying: 'Pardon me, O Lord, my deed.' Then the Lord saith to the angels, 'Why have ye ceased from driving Adam from paradise? Why do ye not cast him out? Is it I who have done wrong? Or is my judgment badly judged?' Then the angels fell down on the ground and worshiped the Lord, saying, 'Thou art just, O Lord, and thou judgest righteous judgment.'

CHAPTER XXVIII

"But the Lord turned to Adam and said: 'I will not suffer thee henceforward to be in paradise.' And Adam answered and said, 'Grant me, O Lord, of the Tree of Life that I may eat of it, before I be cast out.' Then the Lord spake to Adam, 'Thou shalt not take of it now, for I have commanded the cherubim with the flaming sword that turneth every way to guard it from thee that thou taste not of it; but thou hast the war which the adversary hath put into thee; yet when thou art gone out of paradise, if thou shouldst keep thyself from all evil, as one about to die, when again the Resurrection hath come to pass, I will raise thee up and then there shall be given to thee the Tree of Life.'

CHAPTER XXIX

"Thus spake the Lord, and ordered us to be cast out of paradise. But your father Adam wept before the angels opposite paradise and the angels said to him: 'What wouldst thou have us to do, Adam?' And your father saith to them, 'Behold, ye cast me out. I pray you, allow me to take away fragrant herbs from paradise, so that I may offer an offering to God after I have gone out of paradise that he hear me.' And the angels approached God and said: 'Jael, Eternal King, command, my Lord, that there be given to Adam incense of sweet odor from paradise and seeds for his food.' And God bade Adam go in and take sweet spices and fragrant herbs from paradise and seeds for his food. And the angels let him go in, and he took four kinds: crocus and nard and calamus and cinnamon and the other seeds for his food: and, after taking these, he went out of paradise. And we were on the earth.

CHAPTER XXX

"Now then, my children, I have shown you the way in which we were deceived; and do ye guard yourselves from transgressing against the good."

CHAPTER XXXI

And when Eve had said this in the midst of her sons, while Adam was lying ill and bound to die after a single day from the sickness which had fastened upon him, she saith to him: "How is it that thou diest and I live, or how long have I to live after thou art dead? Tell me." And Adam saith to her: "Reck not of this, for thou tarriest not after me, but even both of us are to die together. And she shall lie in my place. But when I die, anoint me and let no man touch me till the angel of the Lord shall speak somewhat concerning me. For God will not forget me, but will seek His own creature; and now arise rather and pray to God till I give up my spirit into His hands who gave it to me. For we know not how we are to meet our Maker, whether He be wroth with us, or be merciful and intend to pity and receive us."

The Vision of Eve

CHAPTER XXXII

And Eve rose up and went outside and fell on the ground, and began to say: "I have sinned, O God, I have sinned, O God of All, I have sinned against Thee. I have sinned against the elect angels. I have sinned against the Cherubim. I have sinned against Thy fearful and unshakable Throne. I have sinned before Thee, and all sin hath begun through my doing in the creation." Even thus prayed Eve on her knees; and behold, the angel of humanity came to her, and raised her up and said: "Rise up, Eve, from thy penitence, for behold, Adam thy husband hath gone out of his body. Rise up and behold his spirit borne aloft to his Maker."

CHAPTER XXXIII

And Eve rose up and wiped off her tears with her hand, and the angel saith to her, "Lift up thyself from the earth." And she gazed steadfastly into heaven, and beheld a chariot of light, borne by four bright eagles, and it were impossible for any man born of woman to tell the glory of them or behold their face — and angels going before the chariot — and when they came to the place where your father Adam was, the chariot halted and the Seraphim. And I beheld golden censers, between your father and the chariot, and all the angels with censers and frankincense came in haste to the incense-offering and blew upon it and the smoke of the incense veiled the firmaments. And the angels fell down and worshiped God, crying aloud and saying, "Jael, Holy One, have pardon, for he is Thy image, and the work of Thy holy hands."

CHAPTER XXXIV

"And I, Eve, beheld two great and fearful wonders standing in the presence of God and I wept for fear, and I cried aloud to my son Seth and said, 'Rise up, Seth, from the body of thy father Adam, and come to me, and thou shalt see a spectacle which no man's eye hath yet beheld.'"

CHAPTER XXXV

Then Seth arose and came to his mother and to her he saith: "What is thy trouble? Why weepest thou?" And she saith to him: "Look up and see with thine eyes the seven heavens opened, and see how the soul of thy father lies on its face and all the holy angels are praying on his behalf and saying: 'Pardon him, Father of All, for he is Thine image.' Pray, my child Seth, what shall this mean? And will he one day be delivered into the hands of the Invisible Father, even our God? But who are the two negroes who stand by at the prayers for thy father Adam?"

CHAPTER XXXVI

And Seth telleth his mother, that they are the sun and moon and themselves fall down and pray on behalf of my father Adam. Eve saith to him: "And where is their light and why have they taken on such a black appearance?" And Seth answereth her, "The light hath not left them, but they can not shine before the Light of the Universe, the Father of Light; and on this account their light hath been hidden from them."

The Burial Services

CHAPTER XXXVII

Now while Seth was saying this to his mother, lo, an angel blew the trumpet, and there stood up all the angels and they were lying on their faces, and they cried aloud in an awful voice and said: "Blessed be the glory of the Lord from the works of His making, for He hath pitied Adam the creature of His hands." But when the angels had said these words, lo, there came one of the seraphim with six wings and snatched up Adam and carried him off to the Acherusian lake, and washed him thrice, in the presence of God.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

And God saith to him: "Adam, what hast thou done? If thou hadst kept my commandment, there would now be no rejoicing among those who are bringing thee down to this place. Yet, I tell thee that I will turn their joy to grief and thy grief will I turn to joy, and I will transform thee to thy former glory, and set thee on the throne of thy deceiver. But he shall be cast into this place to see thee sitting above him, then he shall be condemned and they that heard him, and he shall be grieved sore when he seeth thee sitting on his honorable throne."

CHAPTER XXXIX

And he stayed there three hours, lying down, and thereafter the Father of all, sitting on his holy throne, stretched out his hand, and took Adam and handed him over to the archangel Michael, saying: "Lift him up into paradise unto the third Heaven, and leave him there until that fearful day of my reckoning, which I will make in the world." Then Michael took Adam and left him where God told him.

CHAPTER XL

But after all this, the archangel asked concerning the laying out of the remains. And God commanded that all the angels should assemble in His presence, each in his order, and all the angels assembled, some having censers in their hands, and others trumpets. And lo! the "Lord of Hosts" came on, and four winds drew Him, and cherubim mounted on the winds and the angels from heaven escorting Him, and they came on the earth, where was the body of Adam. And they came to paradise, and all the leaves of paradise were stirred so that all men begotten of Adam slept from the fragrance save Seth alone, because he was born "according to the appointment of God." Then Adam's body lay there in paradise on the earth, and Seth grieved exceedingly over him.

CHAPTER XLI

Then God spake to the archangels Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael: "Go away to paradise in the third heaven, and strew linen clothes, and cover the body of Adam, and bring oil of the 'oil of fragrance' and pour it over him." And they acted thus, did the three great angels, and they prepared him for burial. And God said: "Let the body of Abel also be brought." And they brought other linen clothes and prepared his body also. For he was unburied since the day when Cain his brother slew him; for wicked Cain took great pains to conceal him, but could not, for the earth would not receive him, for the body sprang up from the earth, and a voice went out of the earth, saying: "I will not receive a companion body till the earth which was taken and fashioned in me cometh to me." At that time the angels took it and placed it on a rock till Adam his father was buried. And both were buried, according to the commandment of God, in the spot where God found the dust, and He caused the place to be dug for two. And God sent seven angels to paradise and they brought many fragrant spices and placed them in the earth, and they took the two bodies and placed them in the spot which they had digged and builded.

CHAPTER XLII

And God called and said, "Adam, Adam." And the body answered from the earth and said: "Here am I, Lord." And God saith to him: "I told thee that earth thou art and to earth shalt thou return. Again I promise to thee the Resurrection; I will raise thee up in the Resurrection with every man, who is of thy seed."

CHAPTER XLIII

After these words, God made a seal and sealed the tomb, that no one might do anything to him for six days till his rib should return to him. Then the Lord and his angels went to their place. And Eve also, when the six days were fulfilled, fell asleep. But while she was living, she wept bitterly about Adam's falling on sleep, for she knew not where he was laid. For when the Lord came to paradise to bury Adam she was asleep, and her sons too, except Seth, till He bade Adam be prepared for burial; and no man knew on earth, except her son Seth. And Eve prayed (in the hour of her death) that she might be buried in the place where her husband Adam was. And after she had finished her prayer, she saith: "Lord, Master, God of all rule, estrange not me thy handmaid from the body of Adam, for from his members didst thou make me. But deem me worthy, even me unworthy that I am and a sinner, to enter into his tabernacle, even as I was with him in paradise, both without separation from each other; just as in our transgressions we were both led astray and transgressed thy command, but were not separated. Even so, Lord, do not separate us now."

But after she had prayed she gazed heavenward and groaned aloud and smote her breast and said: "God of All, receive my spirit," and straightway she delivered up her spirit to God.

CHAPTER XLIV

And Michael came and taught Seth how to prepare Eve for burial. And there came three angels and they buried her body where Adam's body was and Abel's. And thereafter Michael spake to Seth and saith: "Lay out in this wise every man that dieth till the day of Resurrection." And after giving him this rule; he saith to him: "Mourn not beyond six days, but on the seventh day rest and rejoice on it, because on that very day God rejoiceth, yea, and we angels too with the righteous soul, who hath passed away from the earth." Even thus spake the angel, and ascended into heaven, glorifying God and saying: "Allelujah."

Holy, holy, holy is the Lord, in the glory of God the Father, for to Him it is meet to give glory, honor, and worship, with the eternal life-giving spirit now and always and forever. Amen.

Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts. To whom be glory and power forever and forever. Amen.

Then the archangel Joel glorified God; saying, "Holy, Holy, Holy Lord, heaven and earth are full of thy glory."

THE SLAVONIC BOOK OF EVE

[The opening is like the opening of the Apocalypse of Moses, so is omitted here.]

And we sat together before the gate of paradise, Adam weeping with his face bent down to the earth, lay on the ground lamenting. And seven days passed by and we had nothing to eat and were consumed with great hunger, and I, Eve, cried with a loud voice: "Pity me, O Lord, my Creator! For my sake Adam suffereth thus!"

And I said to Adam: "Rise up! my lord, that we may seek us food; for now my spirit faileth me and my heart within me is brought low." Then Adam spake to me: "I have thoughts of killing thee, but I fear since God created thine image and thou showest penitence and criest to God; hence my heart hath not departed from thee."

And Adam arose and we roamed through all lands and found nothing to eat save nettles and grass of the field. And we returned again to the gates of paradise and cried aloud and entreated: "Have compassion on thy creature. O Lord Creator, allow us food."

And for fifteen days continuously we entreated. Then we heard Michael the archangel and Joel¹ praying for us, and Joel the archangel was commanded by the Lord, and he took a seventh part of paradise and gave it to us. Then the Lord said: "Thorns and thistles shall spring up from under thy hands; and from thy sweat shalt thou eat bread, and thy wife shall tremble when she looketh upon thee."

The archangel Joel said to Adam: "Thus saith the Lord; I did not create thy wife to command thee, but to obey; why art thou obedient to thy wife?" Again Joel the archangel bade Adam separate the cattle and all kinds of flying and creeping things and animals, both wild and tame; and to give names to all things. Then indeed he took the oxen and began to plow.²

¹ "Joel." Confusion with Jah-El.

Then the devil approached and stood before the oxen, and hindered Adam in tilling the field, and said to Adam: "Mine are the things of earth, the things of Heaven are God's; but if thou wilt be mine, thou shalt labor on the earth; but if thou wilt be God's, pray go away to paradise." Adam said: "The things of Heaven are the Lord's, and the things of earth and paradise³ and the whole universe."

The devil said: "I do not suffer thee to till the field, except thou write the bond that thou art mine." Adam replied: "Whosoever is lord of the earth, to the same do I belong and my children." Then the devil was overcome with joy. But Adam was not ignorant that the Lord would descend on earth and tread the devil under foot. The devil said: "Write me thy bond." And Adam wrote: "Who is lord of the earth, to the same do I belong and my children."

Eve said to Adam, "Rise up, my lord, let us pray to God in this cause that He set us free from that devil, for thou art in this strait on my account."

But Adam said: "Eve, since thou repentest of thy misdeed, my heart will harken to thee, for the Lord created thee out of my ribs. Let us fast forty days; perchance the Lord will have pity on us and will leave us understanding and life." I, for my part, said: "Do thou, my lord, fast forty days, but I will fast forty-four."

And Adam said to me: "Haste thee to the river named Tigris, and take a great stone and place it under thy feet, and enter into the stream and clothe thyself with water, as with a cloak, up to the neck, and pray to God in thy heart and let no word proceed out of thy mouth." And I said:

² "Plow." No extreme asceticism—corn regarded as a blessing—just as there is no disparagement of marriage.

³ Hcretical interpolation by Bogomilian dualist (Jagic). "Paradise" here is the heavenly one, widely separated from the earth. For this whole section compare Pauline phrase "bond servants of sin." It occurs in all Slavonic MSS. of "Solfenus" and Polish and Bohemian Adam tales.

"O my lord, with my whole heart will I call upon God." And Adam said to me: "Take great care of thyself. Except thou seest me and all my tokens, depart not out of the water, nor trust in the words, which are said to thee, lest thou fall again into the snare." And Adam came to Jordan and he entered into the water and he plunged himself altogether into the flood, even to the hairs of his head, while he made supplication to God and sent up prayers to Him.

And there, the angels came together and all living creatures, wild and tame, and all birds that fly, and they surrounded Adam, like a wall, praying to God for Adam.

The devil came to me, wearing the form and brightness of an angel, and shedding big tear-drops, and said to me: "Come out of the water, Eve; God hath heard thy prayers and heard us angels. God hath fulfilled the prayers of those who intercede on thy behalf. God hath sent me to thee, that thou mayst come out of the water."

But I perceived that he was the devil and answered him nothing. But Adam, when he returned from Jordan, saw the devil's footprints, and feared lest perchance he had deceived me; but when he had remarked me standing in the water he was overcome with joy and he took me and led me out of the water.

Then Adam cried out with a loud voice: "Be silent, Eve, for already is my spirit straitened in my body; arise, go forth, utter prayers to God, till I deliver up my spirit to God."

[From here the book parallels the Apocalypse of Moses, chapter xxxii, and is like it almost to the end.]

THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH
R. H. CHARLES

3 1761 02093419 6

830
33A3

MANUEL

The Library of Victoria University.

Source Purchase

Accession No. 11,766

Class No.

Book No.

9.5.99

THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

OTHER WORKS BY THE SAME EDITOR

The Book of Enoch.—Translated from Dillmann's Ethiopic Text (emended and revised in accordance with hitherto uncolated Ethiopic MSS. and with the Gizeh and other Greek and Latin Fragments), with Introduction, Notes, and Indices. 8vo. 16s.

The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees.—Edited from four MSS. and critically revised, emended, and restored in accordance with the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, and Latin Fragments of this Book. 4to. 12s. 6d.

The Book of the Secrets of Enoch.—Translated from the Slavonic by W. R. Morfill, M.A., and edited with Introduction, Notes, and Indices by R. H. Charles, M.A. 8vo. 7s. 6d.

THE CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

THE
APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

TRANSLATED FROM THE SYRIAC

CHAPTERS I.-LXXVII. FROM THE SIXTH CENT. MS. IN THE AMBROSIAN LIBRARY OF MILAN

AND

CHAPTERS LXXVIII.-LXXXVII.—THE EPISTLE OF BARUCH
FROM A NEW AND CRITICAL TEXT BASED ON TEN MSS. AND PUBLISHED HEREWITH

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND INDICES

BY

R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN, AND EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD

LONDON
ADAM AND CHARLES BLACK

1896

1830

B3

A3

EMMANUEL

11,766

TO

MY WIFE

PREFACE

THE Apocalypse of Baruch is a composite work written in the latter half of the first century of the Christian era. It is thus contemporaneous with the chief writings of the New Testament. Its authors were orthodox Jews, and it is a good representative of the Judaism against which the Pauline dialectic was directed.

In this Apocalypse we have almost the last noble utterance of Judaism before it plunged into the dark and oppressive years that followed the destruction of Jerusalem. For ages after that epoch its people seem to have been bereft of their immemorial gifts of song and eloquence, and to have had thought and energy only for the study and expansion of the traditions of the Fathers. But when our book was written, that evil and barren era had not yet set in; breathing thought and burning word had still their home in Palestine, and the hand of the Jewish artist was still master of its ancient cunning.

And yet the intrinsic beauty of this book must to a great degree fail to strike the casual reader. Indeed, it could hardly be otherwise. For the present English version is a translation of the Syriac; the Syriac was a translation of the Greek, and the Greek in turn a translation from the Hebrew original. In each translation we may feel assured the original work was shorn in large and growing measure of its ancient vigour, and this is certainly the case in the version now before the reader. For the translator, having the interests of scholars before his eyes, has made it his aim to give a literal reproduction of the Syriac. And yet, even so, much of its native eloquence has survived, so that to be prized it needs only to be known, and our appreciation of its beauty, its tragic power and worth, must grow in the measure of our acquaintance with it.

The Apocalypse of Baruch has had a strange history. Written by Pharisaic Jews as an apology for Judaism, and in part an implicit polemic against Christianity, it gained nevertheless a larger circulation amongst Christians than amongst Jews, and owed its very preservation to the scholarly cares of the Church it assailed. But in the struggle for life its secret animus against Christianity begat an instinctive opposition in Christian circles, and so proved a bar to its popularity. Thus the place it would naturally have filled was taken by the sister work, 4 Ezra. This latter work having been written in some degree under Christian influences, and forming, in fact, an unconscious confession of the failure of Judaism to redeem the world, was naturally more acceptable to Christian readers, and thus, in due course, the Apocalypse of Baruch was elbowed out of recognition by its fitter and sturdier rival.

In this edition of Baruch—which is also the editio princeps—no pains have been spared as regards the criticism and emendation of the text, its interpretation, and the determination of its various sources.

As regards the text, the facts are briefly as follows: The first seventy-seven chapters, as appears on the title-page, are found only in one MS., namely, c. For the concluding nine chapters—the Epistle of Baruch—I have made use of c and nine other MSS. Of these I have collated eight—several of these for the first time. Through the kindness of the publishers I have been enabled to print on pp. 125-167 a critical text of this Epistle based on those MSS. As Ceriani and Lagarde contented themselves each with reproducing a single unamended MS., scholars will, I think, be grateful for this attempt to grapple with all the Syriac MSS. available. By this comparative study of c and the remaining nine MSS. in the chapters common to both, I have been able to ascertain the value of c in the chapters in which c stands alone. The trustworthiness of the MS. c, which we have thus established, is further confirmed by a Greek work, which borrows largely from our Apocalypse, the Rest of the Words of Baruch.

There are, of course, corruptions in the text. Some of these that are native to the Syriac have been removed by Ceriani, others by the editor; others are provisionally emended, or else reproduced in the English translation. But many still remain. Of these some are manifestly peculiar to the Greek, and have been dealt with accordingly. But the rest are not so, and are, in fact, incapable of explanation save on the hypothesis of a Hebrew original. To this hypothesis, which marks a new departure in the criticism of this book, I have been irresistibly led in the course of my study. In many passages I have by its means been able to reduce chaos to order. For details the reader should consult the Introduction, pp. xlv.-liii.

The interpretation of this book has been the severest task as yet undertaken by the editor. Insuperable difficulties confronted on every side, till at last he awoke to the fact that these were due to plurality of authorship. When once this fact was recognised and the various sources determined, the task of interpretation was materially lightened, and the value of the work for New Testament and Jewish scholars became every day more manifest. As my studies in this direction began in 1891, my conclusions are, save in a few cases, the result of long study and slowly matured conviction.

A special study of the relations subsisting between this Apocalypse and 4 Ezra will be found on pp. lxxvii.-lxxvi., where it is shown that whereas 4 Ezra is in many respects non-Jewish, our Apocalypse is a faithful exponent of the orthodox Judaism of the time. To this subject I may return in an edition of the former work.

Scholars are at last coming to recognise that the study of the literature to which this book belongs is indispensable for the interpretation of the New Testament. Thus Dr. Sanday and Mr. Headlam write in their recent work on the Epistle to the Romans (p. vii.): "It is by a continuous and careful study of such works that any advance in the exegesis of the New Testament will be possible."

My knowledge of Talmudic literature, so far as it appears in this book, is derived from Weber's Lehren des Talmuds, Edersheim's Life and Times, etc., Wunsche's translations of the various treatises of the Babylonian Talmud, Schwab's French translation of the Jerusalem Talmud, and in passages where translations were wanting, I had the ready help of Dr. Neubauer.

My thanks are also due to Mr. Buchanan Gray, for his revision of my proofs of the Hebrew original of Baruch.

17 BRADMORE ROAD, OXFORD,

September 1896.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xv-lxxxiv
§ 1. Short Account of the Book (pp. xv.-xvi.)—§ 2. Other Books of Baruch (pp. xvi.-xxii.)—§ 3. The Syriac MSS.—only one MS. c for chapters i.-lxxvii., but nine other MSS. for lxxviii.-lxxxvi. A comparative study of these MSS. in relation to c (pp. xxii.-xxx.)—§ 4. Previous Literature on the Apocalypse of Baruch. Reprint of MS. c —Ceriani; of b —Lagarde. Edition of lxxviii.-lxxxvi.—Walton and Paris Polyglots. Translation—Ceriani, Fritzsche (pp. xxx.-xxxiii.) Critical Inquiries—Langen, Ewald, Hilgenfeld, Wieseler, Fritzsche, Stähelin, Hausrath, Renan, Drummond, Kneucker, Dillmann, Edersheim, Rosenthal, Stanton, Schürer, Thomson, Kabisch, De Faye, Ryle (pp. xxxiii.-xliii.)—§ 5. The Syriac—a Translation from the Greek (pp. xliii.-xliv.)—§ 6. The Greek—a Translation from a Hebrew Original; for (1) The Quotations from the Old Testament are from the Massoretic text. (2) Hebrew Idioms survive in the Syriac. (3) Unintelligible expressions in the Syriac can be explained and the Text restored by Re-translation into Hebrew. (4) Many Paronomasiae discover themselves by such Re-translation (pp. xlv.-liii.)—§ 7. The different Elements in the Apocalypse of Baruch with their respective Characteristics and Dates. Of these elements A^1 =xxvii.-xxx.1, A^2 =xxxvi.-xl., A^3 =liii.-lxxiv. are Messiah Apocalypses written by different Authors before 70 A.D. (pp. liii.-lviii.) B^1 , B^2 , B^3 were written after 70 A.D. These are derived from different authors. They agree in expecting no Messiah, but are severally differentiated from each other by many characteristics. B¹ is the earliest—soon after 70 A.D., and B³ is probably the latest. B¹=i.-ix. 1 ; xliii.-xliv. 7 ; xlv.-xlvi. 6 ; lxxvii.-lxxxii. ; lxxxiv. ; lxxxvi.-lxxxvii. B²=xiii.-xxv. ; xxx. 2-xxxv. ; xli.-xlii. ; xlv. 8-15 ; xlvii.-lii. ; lxxv.-lxxvi. ; lxxxiii. B³=lxxxv. x. 6-xii. 4, which I have called S, is probably from a source distinct from the rest (pp. lviii.-lxv.)—§ 8. The lost Epistle to the two and a half Tribes, on many grounds is probably identical with, or is the source of the Greek Baruch iii. 9-iv. 29 (pp. lxv.-lxvii.)—§ 9. The Relations of our Apocalypse with 4 Ezra. (a) The composite nature of 4 Ezra. (b) Conflicting characteristics of 4 Ezra and Baruch, the former to some extent non-Jewish in its teaching on the Law, Works, Justification, Original Sin and Freewill. (c) 4 Ezra from a Hebrew Original. (d) Relations of the respective Constituents of our Apocalypse and 4 Ezra. A¹ is older than E of 4 Ezra, and both A¹ and A² than M. B¹ older than E², and both B¹ and B² than S (pp. lxvii.-lxxvi.)—§ 10. Relation of this Apocalypse to the New Testament. Bulk of parallels in these books can be explained as being drawn independently from pre-existing literature, or as being commonplaces of the time ; but others may point to dependence of Baruch on the New Testament (pp. lxxvi.-lxxix.)—§ 11. Value of our Apocalypse in the Attestation of the Jewish Theology of 50-100 A.D., and in the Interpretation of Christian Theology for the same Period : The Resurrection, Original Sin and Freewill, Works and Justification, Forgiveness (pp. lxxix.-lxxxiv.)

THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH. TRANSLATION AND CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL NOTES	1-167
APPENDIX	168
INDEX I.—PASSAGES FROM THE SCRIPTURES AND ANCIENT WRITERS	169
INDEX II.—NAMES AND SUBJECTS	173

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK

THIS beautiful Apocalypse, with the exception of nine chapters towards its close,¹ was lost sight of for quite 1200 years.

Written originally in Hebrew, it was early translated into Greek, and from Greek into Syriac. Of the Hebrew original every line has perished save a few still surviving in rabbinic writings. Of the Greek Version nothing has come down to us directly, though portions of it are preserved in the Rest of the Words of Baruch, a Greek work of the second century, and in a late Apocalypse of Baruch recently discovered in Greek and in Slavonic. Happily, the Syriac has been preserved almost in its entirety in a sixth century MS., the discovery of which we owe to the distinguished Italian scholar Ceriani. Of this MS., Ceriani published a Latin translation in 1866, the Syriac text in 1871, and the photo-lithographic facsimile in 1883. Though there are no adequate grounds for assuming a Latin Version, it is demonstrable that our Apocalypse was the foundation of a Latin Apocalypse of Baruch, a fragment of which is preserved in Cyprian.

¹ These chapters under the title "The Epistle of Baruch," or a similar one, were incorporated in the later Syriac Bible.

The Apocalypse of Baruch belongs to the first century of our era. It is a composite work put together about the close of the century, from at least five or six independent writings. These writings belong to various dates between 50 and 90 A.D., and are thus contemporaneous with the chief New Testament writings. It is this fact that constitutes the chief value of the work. We have here contemporaneous records of the Jewish doctrines and beliefs, and of the arguments which prevailed in Judaism in the latter half of the first century, and with which its leaders sought to uphold its declining faith and confront the attacks of a growing and aggressive Christianity.

Over against many of the Pauline solutions of the religious problems of the day, Jewish answers are here propounded which are frequently antagonistic in the extreme. It was this hidden hostility to Christianity that no doubt brought it into discredit. As early as the sixth century it seems to have passed out of circulation.

§ 2. OTHER BOOKS OF BARUCH

In addition to our Apocalypse, a considerable literature arose and circulated under Baruch's name, sometime before and after the Christian era. It will be sufficient for our present purpose to touch briefly on the different books belonging to it.

1. The Apocryphal Baruch in the LXX.—This book falls clearly into two parts—i.-iii. 8 being the first part, and iii. 9-v. constituting the second. The first part was originally written in Hebrew, the second is generally held to be of Greek origin, but this is doubtful. The first part of the book is said by Ewald and Marshall to have been composed three centuries before the Christian era, by Fritzsche and Schrader in the Maccabean period, by Kneucker and Schürer after 70 A.D. Most writers agree in assigning the second half of the book to the last-mentioned date. The second half, however, may also be composite. Thus Professor Marshall differentiates iii. 9-iv. 4 from iv. 5-v. 9, and regards the former as originally written in Aramaic, and the latter in Greek. The chief authorities on this book are Fritzsche, Exeget. Handbuch zu den Apocryphen, part i., pp. 165-202, 1851; Kneucker, Das Buch Baruch, 1879; Gifford, Speaker's Commentary, Apocrypha, ii. 241-286, 1888. On the probability that i. 1-3; iii. 9-iv. 29 of this book are a recast of a lost portion of our Apocalypse, i.e. "the Letter to the two and a half Tribes," see § 8, pp. lxv.-lxvii. There is no verbal borrowing between our Apocalypse and the Greek Baruch, but in the following passages there is a similarity of diction or of thought or of both. This list could be enlarged.

Apoc. of Baruch.	Book of Baruch.
i. 1 (mention of Jeconiah).	i. 3.
x. 16.	iv. 10, 14.
lix. 7.	iii. 12.
lxxvii. 10.	ii. 26.
lxxviii. 7.	iv. 36, 37 (v. 5, 6).
lxxix. 2.	i. 17, 18.
lxxx. 5.	ii. 13.
lxxxiv. 2-5.	i. 19 ; ii. 2.
lxxxvi. 1, 2.	i. 14.

2. The Rest of the Words of Baruch.—This book was written in Greek in the second century of our era. It seems in parts to be a Jewish work recast. The Greek text was first printed at Venice in 1609, next by Ceriani in 1868 under the title “Paralipomena Jeremiae” in his Monumenta Sacra, v. 11-18, and recently it has been critically edited by Rendel Harris in 1889. This book exists also in the Ethiopic Bible. The Ethiopic Version was edited from three MSS. by Dillmann in his Chrestomathia aethiopica in 1866. As these MSS. are inferior, and as no attempt was made by Dillmann to revise his text by means of the Greek, the present writer hopes in due time to edit a critical text from eleven Ethiopic MSS., accompanied with translation and notes. In this edition account will be taken of all the important variations of the Greek text.

This book is deeply indebted to our Apocalypse and attests the accuracy of the Syriac text in the following passages :—

Apoc. Bar.	Rest of the Words.
ii. 1.	i. 1, 3, 7.
ii. 2.	ii. 2.
v. 1.	i. 5 ; ii. 7 ; iii. 6 ; iv. 7.
vi. 1.	iv. 1.
vi. 4, 5, 6, 8, 10.	iii. 2, 5, 8, 14.
viii. 2, 5.	iv. 1, 2, 3, 4.
x. 2, 5, 6, 7, 18.	iv. 3, 4, 6, 9.
xi. 4, 5.	iv. 9.
xxxv. 2.	ii. 4.
lxxvii. 21, 23, 26.	vii. 3, 10, 12.
lxxx. 3.	i. 5 ; iv. 7.
lxxxv. 2.	ii. 3.
lxxxv. 11.	vi. 3.
lxxxvii.	vii. 8, 30.

3. The Gnostic book of Baruch.—Of this book large fragments are found in the Philosophumena of Hippolytus, v. 24-27. But these fragments are wholly out of relation with the remaining literature of Baruch.

4. A Latin book of Baruch is quoted in one MS. of Cyprian's Testimonia, iii. 29. As this book is clearly based on our Apocalypse, I will give the passage in full. Item in Baruch: "Veniet enim tempus, et quaeretis me et vos et qui post vos venerint, audire verbum sapientiae et intellectus, et non inuenietis" (cf. Apoc. Bar. xlvi. 36). "Nationes autem cupient videre sapientem praedicantem, et non obtinget eis: non quia deerit aut deficiet sapientia hujus saeculi terrae, sed neque deerit sermo legis saeculo. Erit enim sapientia in paucis vigilantibus et taciturnis et quietis" (cf. Apoc. Bar. xlvi. 33), "sibi confabulantes et in cordibus suis meditantes quoniam quidam eos horrebunt et timebunt ut malos. Alii autem nec credunt verbo legis Altissimi: alii autem ore stupentes non credent et credentibus erunt contrarii et impediētes spiritum veritatis. Alii autem erunt sapientes ad spiritum erroris et pronuntiantes sicut Altissimi et Fortis edicta" (cf. Apoc. Bar. xlviii. 34; lxx. 5; observe also that the titles of God here are characteristic of our Apoc., see vii. 1, note; xxi. 3, note). "Alii autem personales fidei. Alii capaces et fortes in fide Altissimi et odibiles alieno."

In 5 Ezra xvi. 64, 65 (which James ascribes to the third century) we have a clear use of our text. Thus: "Certe Hic novit . . . quae cogitatis in cordibus vestris. Vae peccantibus et volentibus occultare peccata sua: propter quod Dominus scrutinando scrutinabit omnia opera eorum et traducet vos omnes," is based on lxxxiii. 3, which = "Et scrutinando scrutinabit cogitationes arcanas et quidquid in penetralibus omnium hominis membrorum positum est et in apertum coram omnibus cum increpatione educet." We should observe that not only is the thought of the two passages the same, but that the actual diction is borrowed, i.e. the Hebraism "scrutinando scrutinabit" and "traducet," which = "in apertum cum increpatione educet" (cf. also "quae cogitatis in cordibus" with "cogitationes arcanas").

5. The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch, or, as Mr. James names it, Apocalypsis Baruch Tertia.—This book belongs to the second century, for, on the one hand, it is based largely on the Slavonic Enoch, and on the other, it is mentioned by Origen, de Princip. ii. 3. 6: "Denique etiam Baruch prophetae librum in assertionis hujus testimonium vocant, quod ibi de septem mundis vel caelis evidentius indicatur." This Greek Apocalypse of Baruch was discovered some years ago by Mr. James in a British Museum MS. Through his kindness I have been permitted to examine his copy of this MS. His edition of the text will, we believe, shortly appear. The Slavonic Version of this book has been known for some time, and was published in the Starine, vol. xviii. pp. 205-209, 1886, by Novakovic. A German translation, preceded by a helpful introduction by Professor Bonwetsch, appeared this year in the Nachrichten der K. Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 1886, Heft i. An English translation will shortly appear by Mr. Morfill in Mr. James's Cambridge edition. The Slavonic is less trustworthy and full than the Greek. This Greek is dependent in certain respects on the Rest of the Words of Baruch, and is thus of service in determining the date of the latter. With our Apocalypse it has only one or two points of contact. Thus with vi. 2, "I was grieving over Zion and lamenting over the captivity which had come upon the people," compare the opening words of the Greek Apocalypse, Ἀποκάλυψις Βαρούχ, ὃς ἔσθη . . . κλαίων ὑπὲρ τῆς αἰχμαλωσίας Ἱερουσαλήμ: and with x. 5, "I, Baruch, . . . sat before the gates of the temple and I lamented with that lamentation over Zion," and xxxv. 1, "And I, Baruch, went to the holy place, and sat down upon the ruins and wept," compare the words already quoted together with καὶ οὕτως ἐκάθητο ἐπὶ τὰς ὡραίαις πόλεις, ὅπου ἔκειτο τὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἄγια. Perhaps liv. 8-9, "Even so I could not give Thee the meed of praise, or laud Thee as is befitting. . . . For what am I amongst men . . . that I should have heard all those marvellous things from the Most High?" may be the source of the following words towards the close of the Greek Apocalypse—δόξαν ἔφερον τῷ θεῷ τῷ ἀξιόσαντί με τοιούτου ἀξιώματος.

6. Finally, another book of Baruch, distinct from the above, and belonging to the fourth or fifth century of our era, is mentioned in the Altercatio Simonis Judaei et Theophili Christiani, published by Harnack (Texte und Untersuchungen, Bd. 1, Heft 3, 1883). In this work Theophilus makes the following quotation from the book of Baruch: "Quomodo ergo prope finem libri sui de nativitate ejus et de habitu vestis et de passione ejus et de resurrectione ejus prophetavit dicens: Hic unctus meus, electus meus, vulvae incontaminatae jaculatus, natus et passus dicitur."

Above all the foregoing works which circulated under Baruch's name, the Apocalypse of Baruch stands head and shoulders alike in respect of form or matter or real worth to the student of Judaism and Christianity.

§ 3. THE SYRIAC MSS.

For chapters i.-lxxvii. of this book we have only one MS., the famous sixth-century Peshitto MS. which was found by Ceriani in the library in Milan. For convenience we shall call this MS. c. In 1871 Ceriani edited the Syriac text from this MS. in his Monumenta Sacra et Profana, vol. v. Fasc. 2, pp. 113-180. Of chapters lxxviii.-lxxxvi., which constitute the Epistle of Baruch, many MSS. were known to exist, and of three of them (i.e. a, b, d) Ceriani made collations and inserted these in their appropriate place below the printed text of c. He made no attempt, however, to correct the text of c by their means. This task was attempted in a haphazard fashion by Fritzsche (Libri Apocryphi Vet. Test. Graece, 1871, pp. 690-699) in an emended edition of Ceriani's Latin translation of these chapters.

It is manifest that, if we wish to ascertain the value of c in those chapters in which it stands alone, i.e. i.-lxxvii., we can do so only by an exhaustive examination of its text in those chapters which it attests in common with a, b, d, e, f, g, h, i, k, i.e. lxxviii.-lxxxvi., and by a determination of its critical value in respect to them. When we have discharged this task we shall know the real worth of c in i.-lxxvii., and familiar with its strength and its weakness shall approach with some confidence the critical problems it presents. With this end in view I have made use of all the Syriac MSS. of lxxviii.-lxxxvi. attainable. These are ten, and are as follows:—

a called A in Ceriani.

b Add. 17,105 in the Brit. Mus., Fol. 116^a-121^a. Sixth century.

c The Milan MS., Fol. 265^b-267^b. Sixth century.

d called d in Ceriani.

e No. 1 Syr. MSS., Bodley, Fol. 430-432. 1627.

f Egerton 704 Brit. Mus., Fol. 373^a-374^a. Seventeenth century.

g Add. 12,172 Brit. Mus., Fol. 192^b-195^b. Tenth or eleventh century.

h Add. 18,715 Brit. Mus., Fol. 242^b-244^a. Twelfth century.

i No. 2 Syr. MSS., Bodley, Fol. 492-493. 1614.

k No. 20 Syr. MSS., Bodley, Fol. 37-38.

All these MSS. with the exception of k contain the complete Epistle of Baruch. k has only lxxxiii. 7-lxxxiv. 1. Of the ten MSS. I have collated directly b, e, f, g, h, i, k. b had already been collated and published by Lagarde. I did it, however, afresh, and found only one important error in his work. For a knowledge of a, d I am indebted to Ceriani's collations. Of c my knowledge is derived directly from the photolithographic reproduction of that MS. In addition to the above MSS., I have found excerpts from the Epistle of Baruch in the three following MSS., from which I have drawn various readings.

l Add. 12,178 Brit. Mus., Fol. 111^b. Ninth or tenth century.

m 14,482 Brit. Mus., Fol. 47^b-48^a. Eleventh or twelfth century.

n 14,684 Brit. Mus., Fol. 24. Twelfth century.

W and P stand for the Walton and Paris Polyglots.

Of the foregoing MSS. a, b, d, e, f, g, h, i, k, l, m, n represent one type of text as c represents another. But although the former belong to one family they are of very different values. To the more ancient and trustworthy belong a, b, g, h, k to the latter and less trustworthy d, e, f, i. For convenience' sake we shall denote the parent of a, b, g, h, k by the symbol β , that of d, e, f, i by γ , and the ancestor of both by a. First of all we shall study the general relations of c to a and to the sub-groups β and γ .

c stands frequently alone alike when it is right and when it is wrong. In lxxviii. 1 ; lxxxi. 4 ; lxxxii. 7 ; lxxxv. 1, 7 ; lxxxvi. 3 ; lxxxvii., it is right against a, i.e. a, b, d, e, f, g, h, i ; and most probably also in lxxix. 2, 3 ; lxxxiii. 3, 7, 8 ; lxxxiv. 1, 9 ; lxxxv. 15. On the other hand, it is frequently wrong. Thus it attests a corrupt text against a in lxxviii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7 (?) ; lxxx. 1, 2, 3 ; lxxxi. 3 ; lxxxii. 2 (twice), 3, 4, 5 ; lxxxiii. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 13, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21 ; lxxxiv. 1, 2, 8, 10 ; lxxxv. 7, 8, 12, 13 ; lxxxvi. 1. Thus we see that whereas c independently preserves the true text in many passages, a preserves it in thrice as many.

Again, as we have already remarked, the MSS. a, b, d, e, f, g, h, i, k are of very different values. Thus a, b, g, h agree with c in attesting the true text against d, e, f, i in lxxviii. 3, 5 ; lxxix. 1 ; lxxx. 3 ; lxxxi. 4 ; lxxxiv. 4, 6, 7, 10 ; lxxxv. 6, 11. In lxxxii. 1 a, b, g, h agree alike against c and d, e, f, i. Only in lxxxiii. 17 do d, e, f, i agree with c against a, b, g, h. In the above passages k is wanting, but where it exists it belongs as a rule to β , and agrees with a more than with any other member of this group. Thus if we represent a, b, d, e, f, g, h, i, k by α , and a, b, g, h, k by β , and d, e, f, i by γ , as we have already arranged, we arrive at the following genealogy:—

ORIGINAL SYRIAC TRANSLATION

We have also seen from what precedes that c often agrees with β in giving the true text against γ , but c and γ never agree in attesting the true text against β , except perhaps in lxxxiii. 17.

l, m, n , so far as they exist, support a as against c , and where the attestation of a is divided they generally agree with γ against β , i.e. with d, e, f, i against a, b, g, h, k .

Having now learnt in some measure the relations of the various groups of MSS. to each other, we have still to study those of the individual MSS., so far as our materials admit. The special study of c we reserve till later.

Amongst a, b, g, h, b and g are closely related. They agree against all else in lxxx. 4; lxxxi. 3; lxxxii. 2, 3; lxxxiii. 2, 9, 11; lxxxv. 12; but this combination is generally wrong. b is never right when it stands alone. a and h are excellent authorities when supported by c . Thus a, c are right in lxxxiii. 4; lxxxiv. 6; lxxxv. 9. They agree in the wrong in lxxix. 2; lxxx. 7; lxxxv. 9. a agrees also with b, c, g against all else in lxxxv. 14, and with c, h against all in lxxxiv. 3. h stands alone with c in lxxx. 4 ; lxxxiv. 4 ; lxxxv. 13 ; but the combination is untrustworthy. From these facts we infer that amongst a, b, g, h, b and g are very closely related, but that no such close relations exist between a and h or between either of these with b, g. Thus the relations of the sub-group to each other might be represented as follows :—

As regards the γ group, we have learnt above that it is quite untrustworthy when it stands alone against c. Yet it is upon two of the members of this group that the text of the Walton and Paris Polyglots is based.

The text of these Polyglots may be shortly described as follows. In all cases where it stands in opposition to c, WP follow a except in lxxxii. 8, lxxxv. 10, where their text is most probably due to conjecture as they here stand alone. Secondly, in cases where γ is opposed to c β , WP agree with γ . Thirdly, within the group γ , WP are most closely associated with, and in all probability are based upon, e, f. For they agree with e against all other MSS. in lxxx. i., lxxxii. 9 in omitting "and," in lxxx. 2 in giving an impossible form, and in lxxxiii. 14 in omitting half the verse. But WP are not based on e alone; for though e omits a word in lxxxv. 5, it is given in WP. This defect of e was made good from f; for we find that *f*WP stand alone in lxxx. 7. It is of no little interest to have traced the sources of the text in the Polyglots; for, as their editors have given no information on the subject, scholars have hitherto been quite in the dark in this respect. We are now in a position to give the genealogy of the MSS. dealt with above. This is as follows:—

ORIGINAL SYRIAC TRANSLATION

Special Study of c.—It is now time to study the special characteristics of c. We have already seen that c has independently preserved the true text in many passages against corruptions in a. (A list of these passages will be found above, where also it is shown that a has preserved the true text much more frequently than c.) I have found c trustworthy when supported by a in lxxxiii. 4; lxxxiv. 6; lxxxv. 9; but not so in lxxix. 2; lxxx. 7; lxxxv. 9; or by a, b, g in lxxxv. 14; or by a, h in lxxxiv. 3; or by b, g in lxxxv. 1. But the character of c appears more clearly in its errors. Thus it is wrong (1) through omission in lxxx. 1, 2 (omission due here to an attempted emendition); lxxxii. 2, 3 ; lxxxiii. 4, 5, 16, 18 ; lxxxiv. 1, 10 ; lxxxv. 4 (through homoioteleuton), 12. Cf. li. 16 and lvi. 14 for omissions of the negative. (2) Through additions to the text in lxxviii. 2 ; lxxxiii. 5 ; lxxxv. 8, 9, 15. (3) Through transposition of words or letters whereby the sense is generally destroyed. Transposition of letters in lxxxii. 4 whereby "drop" becomes "pollution"; lxxxiii. 21 where "by truth" becomes "in silence." For similar transpositions in the earlier chapters see xiv. 6 ; lxx. 8. Transposition of words in lxxx. 3 ; lxxxii. 2, 3 ; lxxxiii. 5 ; lxxxiv. 8. For similar transpositions see xiv. 11 ; xxi. 16. (4) Through clerical errors in lxxviii. 3 (for a similar error see xxiv. 4), 4 ; lxxx. 3 ; lxxxii. 5 ; lxxxiii. 2, 3, 13, 15, 16, 19 ; lxxxiv. 1 (observe that there is the same erroneous pointing in lxx. 5), 3, 8 ; lxxxv. 12, 13. In lxxxiv. 2 we have an intentional variation. Cf. in earlier chapters li. 1.

We have now completed our study of the MSS. The knowledge which we have thus gained from our comparative criticism of c and the other MSS. helps to secure us against the characteristic errors of the former in the chapters where the friendly aid of the latter cannot be invoked. We can thus address ourselves with a certain degree of confidence and skill to the obscurities and corruptions that arise in these chapters. As a further result of this examination, we have come to feel that so long as we follow its guidance, we can nowhere greatly err from the sense of the Hebrew original.

Date of the Common Ancestor of c and a.—Since c and b are both of the sixth century, we find that already at that date there existed two distinctly developed types of text, both of which must have been for no brief period in existence, owing to the variety of readings already evolved. Further, though b belongs to the sixth century, many of its readings are decidedly later than c and even than a and h. In fact, a, h represent the text at an earlier period than b. The common parent, therefore, of a, h, and b was probably not later than the fifth century. Such a variety of related yet different MSS. as a, b, g, h, k could not well have arisen from an MS. of a later date. This being so, the common progenitor of c and a can hardly be sought later than the fourth century.

§ 4. PREVIOUS LITERATURE ON THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

The Syriac Text.—As we have seen in the foregoing section, we have only one MS., i.e. c, for chapters i.-lxxvii. For Ceriani's edition of this MS. see pp. xxii.-xxiii. Of the text of the remaining chapters, which form the Epistle of Baruch, many editions have appeared:—
 (1) That which is published in the Walton and Paris Polyglots. This text is, as we have shown above (pp. xxvii.-xxviii.), founded on two indifferent MSS., e and f.
 (2) Lagarde's edition of b, pp. 88-93 of his Libri Vet. Test. Apocryphi Syriace, 1861. This is merely b in a printed form, and not an edition of the Syriac text based on the Nitrian MSS. in the British Museum, as is everywhere wrongly stated both by German and English writers. Though b is a very old and valuable MS., we have now several MSS. at our disposal containing a more ancient text (see pp. xxvi.-xxvii.) (3) Ceriani's published text of c, to which he has appended collations of a, b, d in his Monumenta Sacra et Profana, vol. v. Fasc. 2, pp. 167-180. As we have already remarked, Ceriani has contented himself with printing the text of c, and has not sought to correct it by means of a, b, d.

Translations.—Only one translation of our Apocalypse has hitherto appeared, i.e. the Latin translation of Ceriani in the Monumenta Sacra et Profana, vol. i. Fasc. 2, pp. 73-98, 1866. This is certainly a model translation in point of style, and considering the fact that Ceriani was not a specialist in Apocalyptic literature, it is also very accurate. Not quite accurate, indeed, as Ceriani himself was aware in 1871 when he wrote—“Omisi tamen plenam revisionem meae versionis Latinae . . . quia omnino in meis occupationibus tempus me deficit, et quidquid corrigere opus erit, alii ex textu per se poterunt.” Some of the errors are as follows:—In xiii. 8 we must expunge “enim est.” In verses 4-5 of the same chapter we find the peculiar construction “ut . . . dic.” In xv. 6 read “transgressus est” for “fecit.” In xix. 1 for “te” read “vos.” In xxv. 4 for “terrae” read “terram.” In xxxii. 4 for “coronabitur” read “perficietur.” In xl. 1 for “qui tunc” read “illius temporis.” In xlix. 3 for “vestient” read “induent.” In lv. 1 expunge “ejus.” In lx. 1 add “eorum” after “magiarum.” In lxii. 2 add “et” before “idololatria.” In lxxii. 2 for “vivificabit” read “parcet.” In lxxxv. 9 for “veritatem cujuspiam” read “veritas quodpiam.” In lxxxvi. 12 for “viae” read “recreationis” (= ἀνέσσεως); “viae” is a rendering of d but not of c, Ceriani’s text. Although Ceriani made no critical study of the text of c, he has nevertheless made some most felicitous emendations in x. 14; xiv. 6; li. 1; lvi. 4, 14; lx. 2; lxix. 1, 4; lxx. 8. A critical study of the text and matter would have helped him to deal with the corruptions of the Syriac in xxiv. 4; xlviii. 32; li. 16; lxvii. 2; lxx. 5; lxxii. 1, etc.

As Ceriani did not believe in a Semitic original of our Apocalypse, he was naturally unable to deal with corruptions that were not native to the Syriac Version, but had already appeared in the Hebrew text or had arisen through the misconceptions of the Greek translator.

Ceriani’s Latin translation was republished by Fritzsche in his Libri Apocryphi Vet. Test. Graece, 1871, pp. 654-679. Though Fritzsche introduces several changes into Ceriani’s translation, hardly any of these can be justified. Sometimes he makes the change because he has failed to understand the text; thus in xx. 4; xxi. 9, 10, he has emended Ceriani’s “investigabiles” into “ininvestigabiles”; but “investigabilis” in the Vulgate frequently means “unsearchable.” The change of “omne” into “vanum” in xix. 8 is quite wanton. The Latin text also is carelessly edited;

thus for "ego" there is "ergo" in lxxxiv. 1; for "ibi" there is "tibi" in lxxxv. 13; and "opulus" for "populus" in xlviii. 24. In the critical notes on pp. 690-699 there are many confusions and mis-statements of authorities. It is needless to add that none of Ceriani's actual errors were corrected by Fritzsche, for the Syriac text had not yet been published.

Notwithstanding all these defects, every scholar who has used Fritzsche's book is rightly grateful to him for making Ceriani's translation so generally accessible.

Critical Inquiries.—Langen, De Apocalypsi Baruch anno superiori primum edita commentatio, Friburgi in Brisgovia, 1867. This treatise, which consists of twenty-four quarto pages, maintains that our Apocalypse was written in Greek in the reign of Trajan. Although no grounds worthy of consideration are advanced in support of a Greek original, Langen's view has been universally accepted. Only two scholars have expressed a doubt on the subject, Mr. Thomson and Professor Ryle of Cambridge. This fact in itself serves to show how inadequately hitherto this Apocalypse has been studied. In other respects, Langen's work is admirable.

Ewald, Göttinger Gel. Anzeigen, 1867, pp. 1706-1717, 1720; Gesch. des Volkes Israel, vii. 83-87 (English trans. vol. viii. 57-61). In a short but interesting article Ewald assigns the date of our author to the reign of Domitian. He regards 4 Ezra and this Apocalypse as the work of one and the same author.

Hilgenfeld, Zeitschrift für wissensch. Theologie, 1869, pp. 437-440; Messias Judaeorum, pp. 63-64. Hilgenfeld ascribes our Apocalypse to the earlier years of Vespasian, possibly to 72 A.D. Vespasian is the leader mentioned in xl. The Baruch Apocalypse is subsequent to 4 Ezra.

Wieseler, "Das Vierte Buch Ezra," Theol. Stud. und Kritiken, 1870, p. 288. This writer criticises Hilgenfeld's date. The seven weeks (xxviii. 2) are to be reckoned from the fall of Jerusalem to 119 A.D. The two weeks in that verse point to the years 105-119, i.e. to the time of Trajan.

Fritzsche, Libri Apocryphi Vet. Test. 1871, pp. xxx.-xxxii. On Fritzsche's reprint of Ceriani's Latin translation see pp. xxxii.-xxxiii.

Stähelin, "Zur paulinischen Eschatologie," Jahrbücher für Deutsche Theologie, 1874, pp. 211-214.

Hausrath, Neutestamentl. Zeitgesch. 2nd ed. iv. 88-90, 1877.

Renan, "L'Apocalypse de Baruch," Journal des Savants, 1877, pp. 223-231; Les Évangiles, 1877, pp. 517-530. Renan regards this Apocalypse as an imitation of 4 Ezra and in part designed as a correction of it, as, for instance, on the question of original sin (cf. also Langen). The latter was written in Nerva's reign, the former in the last year of Trajan's. The sombre clouds which obscured the last months of Trajan roused the hopes of the Jews and gave birth to the furious revolt of 117, of which this book is a monument. The fact that this book was accepted amongst the Christians excludes a later date. No Jewish product later than Hadrian gained currency in Christian circles.

Drummond, The Jewish Messiah, 1877, pp. 117-132. Dr. Drummond is of opinion that, "notwithstanding the Hebraic colouring of its thoughts and language, this book may very well have been written in Greek." Its author was a Jew: there is "not a single expression which betrays a Christian hand." It is probably subsequent in date to 4 Ezra, and is divided into the following groups of chapters—i.-ix.; x.-xii.; xiii.-xx.; xxi.-xxx.; xxxi.-xliii.; xliv.-xlvi.; xlviii.-lxxvi.; lxxvii.-lxxxvii.

Kneucker, Das Buch Baruch, 1879, pp. 190-196. Kneucker believes that the Apocryphal Book of Baruch is the letter which Baruch undertakes in ch. lxxvii. to send by "three men" to the brethren in Babylon. This view needs to be greatly modified; as it stands, he has found none to follow it. The present book, he holds, is defective.

Dillmann, art. "Pseudepigraphen" in Herzog's Real-Enc. 2nd ed. xii. 356-358. Baruch, according to Dillmann, was undoubtedly later than 4 Ezra, and was written under Trajan. The writer was an orthodox Jew and wrote in Greek. Dillmann rightly thinks that parts of the book are lost, but he is wrong in supposing it to be not more truly Jewish than 4 Ezra. He falls also into the same mistake as so many other scholars in supposing Lagarde's edition of MS. b to be an edition of the Syriac text, based on the Nitrian MSS.

Edersheim, The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, 2nd ed. 1884, ii. p. 658.

Rosenthal, Vier Apocryphische Bücher, 1885, pp. 72-103. This writer has made a painstaking study of Ceriani's Latin translation. He has likewise given no little thought to the subject matter, and discovered many connections between our book and Talmudic literature. It cannot, however, be said that he has thrown much light on the difficult problems of this book. In most respects Rosenthal follows the traditional lines of interpretation. The work is from the hand of one author. It was written in Greek in the reign of Trajan. Like previous writers Rosenthal regards our Apocalypse as subsequent to 4 Ezra, and as designed in some respects to correct its statements. He accepts Wieseler's interpretation of xxviii., and reckons the seven weeks there mentioned as dating from 70 A.D. Hence $70 + 49 = 119$ and the two last weeks point to the years 105-119, the period of the last woes. 119 is the year of the Messiah's advent. But Rosenthal thinks he can determine the exact year of the book's publication. Thus the letter to the Jews in Babylon shows that it was written before the rebellion of the Jews in Cyrene, Egypt, Cyprus, Babylon, and their extermination by Quietus in 116. On the other hand, he believes that the great earthquake in Syria, which did not affect Palestine in December 115, is referred to in lxx. 8-lxxi. 1. Thus the book was written in the beginning of 116. With many of Dr. Rosenthal's statements, in which he departs from the traditional interpretation of this book, the present writer dissents strongly. Some of these statements are as follows:—The Messiah, he says, has a less active rôle in 4 Ezra than in Baruch. The real facts are that a passive rôle is assigned to the Messiah in xxix. 3 of this Apocalypse and in vii. 28-29 of 4 Ezra, and a highly active rôle in xxxix.-xl. and lxx.-lxxii. of this Apocalypse and xii. 32-34 and xiii. 32-50 of 4 Ezra. Rosenthal charges our author with being an ignorant man and unacquainted with Scripture. This is strange, seeing that in every instance save one the quotations from the Old Testament are made from the Hebrew and not from the LXX., and that a large and accurate knowledge of Jewish history is shown throughout the work. Again, he says our author makes the resurrection from the dead depend on faith therein, and then quotes as a proof xxx. 1, which says nothing of the kind, and further adduces lxxv. 1, where he alleges Manasseh is reproved for not believing in the future, “dass er an keinen Zukunft glaubte!” This last assertion rests on a strange misconception of the Latin translation—“cogitabat tempore suo quasi ac futurum non esset ut Fortis inquireret ista.” This is, of course, “he thought that in his time the Mighty One would not inquire into these things!” “Futurum” cannot mean “the future.”

Stanton, The Jewish and Christian Messiah, 1886, pp. 72-75. This writer ascribes our Apocalypse to the years immediately subsequent to 70 A.D. He divides the book as follows—i.-ix; x.-xii.; xiii.-xx.; xxi.-xxx.; xxxi.-xliii.; xliv.-lxxvi.; lxxvii.-lxxxvii.

Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ (translated from the second and revised edition of the German), 1886, vol. iii. Div. ii. pp. 83-93. We have here an admirable account of our Apocalypse. Schürer regards it as written shortly after 70 A.D., and argues strongly for its priority to 4 Ezra. After citing passages on the question of original sin from both books, he proceeds: "Here, then, we have not even an actual difference of view, far less a correction of the one writer on the part of the other. Further, such other reasons as have been advanced in favour of the priority of Ezra and the dependent character of Baruch are merely considerations of an extremely general kind which may be met with considerations equally well calculated to prove quite the reverse." "My own opinion is that . . . it is precisely in the case of Baruch that this problem is uppermost, i.e. How is the calamity of Israel and the impunity of its oppressors possible and conceivable? while in the case of Ezra, though this problem concerns him too, still there is a question that lies almost yet nearer his heart, i.e. Why is it that so many perish and so few are saved? The subordination of the former of these questions to the other, which is a purely theological one, appears to me rather to indicate that Ezra is of a later date than Baruch." It must be admitted that these arguments are as conclusive as are the counter-arguments of Ewald, Langen, Hilgenfeld, Hausrath, Stähelin, Renan, Drummond, and Dillmann for the priority of 4 Ezra. And beyond this impasse it is impossible for criticism to advance until it recognises the composite nature of both books. Schürer appends a valuable bibliography.

Baldensperger, Das Selbstbewusstsein Jesu, 1888, pp. 23-24, 32-35. The composition of Baruch is here assigned to a Jew living in Palestine in the reign of Trajan.

Thomson, Books which Influenced our Lord and His Apostles, 1891, 253-267, 414-422. This writer believes with Schürer in the priority of Baruch, but his hardihood goes still farther: he assigns the date of its composition to 59 B.C. Such a date of necessity argued a Semitic original, and this Mr. Thomson contends for, and we hold rightly, though his reason may be wrong. This his sole reason is that in v. 5 we find the proper name Jabish יַבִּישׁ. "This," he says, "almost certainly represents 'Ιαβήης of the Septuagint, 1 Chron. iv. 9, 10 (Heb. יַבֶּנֶץ, Syriac ܝܒܒܥܝ)." There is no ground for this identification; in fact, everything is against it; and even if the identification were right, it would not necessarily prove a Hebrew original. Jabish or Jabesh, for the Syriac is unpunctuated, implies a Greek form Iabys or Iabys, and this in turn יַבֶּשׁ. Here, as elsewhere, I have had occasion to regret that Mr. Thomson acquainted himself inadequately with the facts before he gave loose rein to his vigorous imagination.

Kabisch, "Die Quellen der Apocalypse Baruchs," Jahrbücher f. Protest. Theol. 1891, pp. 66-107. With this writer the criticism of Baruch enters on a new stage. So long, indeed, as it pursued the old lines, finality on the question of the chronological relations of our Apocalypse and 4 Ezra was impossible, and the champions of the one book with excellent reasons demolished their rivals, and with reasons just as excellent were demolished in turn. The explanation is obvious: both books are composite, and if some parts of 4 Ezra are older than certain parts of Baruch, no less certainly are some parts of Baruch older than some of 4 Ezra.

Kabisch emphasises at the outset certain facts which point to a plurality of authorship. Thus he shows that we find in Baruch side by side, on the one hand, a measureless pessimism and world-despair which look for neither peace nor happiness in this world; and, on the other hand, in the same work, a vigorous optimism and world-joy which look to a future of sensuous happiness and delight, of perfect satisfaction and peace.

Kabisch further points out that the same subjects are treated several times, and often without any fresh contribution to the subject at issue. Thus the Messianic Kingdom is twice delineated, the advent of the Messiah twice foretold, and the Messianic woes just as often depicted. Yet the latter are neither so identical as to point to the same author, nor are the novelties so great as to justify the repetition of the whole complex statement already once given.

On these grounds he shows that the book is derived from at least three or four authors. Thus he distinguishes i.-xxiii.; xxxi.-xxxiv.; lxxv.-lxxxvii. as the groundwork written subsequently to 70 A.D., since the destruction of the temple is implied throughout these chapters. Further, these sections are marked by a boundless despair of this world of corruption, which fixes its regards on the afterworld of incorruption. In the remaining sections of the book, however, there is a faith in Israel's ultimate triumph here, and an optimism which looks to an earthly Messianic Kingdom of sensuous delights. In these sections, moreover, the integrity of Jerusalem is throughout assumed. Kabisch, therefore, rightly takes these constituents of the book to be prior to 70 A.D. These sections, however, are not the work of one writer, but of three, two of them being unmutilated productions, i.e. the Vine and the Cedar Vision, xxxvi.-xl., and the Cloud Vision, liii.-lxxiv., but the third a fragmentary Apocalypse, xxiv. 3-xxix. Finally, these different writings were incorporated in one book by a Christian contemporary of Papias, and to this editor are probably due xxviii. 5 ; xxx. 1 ; xxxii. 2-4 ; xxxv. ; lxxvi. 1. With the bulk of this criticism I have no reason for variance, as by independent study, and frequently on different grounds, I have arrived at several of these conclusions. But taken as it stands, Kabisch's criticism is only an additional stage on the way. It is far from being final, as a more prolonged study would have convinced this writer. Thus, as we shall presently learn (see pp. liii.-lxiv.), the so-called groundwork of Kabisch is as undoubtedly composite as the whole work is composite, and edited from at least two or three distinct writings. In this and in other respects the criticism of our book is indefinitely more difficult than Kabisch conceives it. But we must not anticipate our conclusions here. Kabisch's work is based on the Latin translation of Ceriani. He follows the traditional views of a Greek original. The possibility of a Semitic original does not seem to have occurred to him.

De Faye, Les Apocalypses juives, 1892, pp. 25-28, 76-103, 192-204. It is interesting to find that some of Kabisch's conclusions were reached by this French scholar independently. Thus De Faye, like Kabisch, distinguishes xxxvi.-xl. and liii.-lxxv. as distinct works written before 70 A.D. The rest of his analysis is not likely to gain acceptance. His main conclusions are as follows:—i.-xxxii. 7 constitute an Apocalypse of Baruch written after 70 A.D.; i.-v. and vi.-xxxii. 7, however, were originally derived from two hands (pp. 193-196). Another quite distinct work was the Assumption of Baruch, which consists of xlviii.-lii.; xli.-xliii. 2; lxxvi. 1-4 (p. 97 note). The date of this work is also after 70 A.D. xliii. 3-xlvii. is for the most part the work of the final editor. They are much later in date than the Apocalypse or the Assumption. Thus the following chapters and verses are derived from the final editor: xxxii. 7-xxxv.; xliii. 3-xlvii.; lxxvi. 5-lxxxvii. (pp. 201-202). Much praise is due to M. de Faye for the abundant scholarship and pains he has expended on this book; but his work is unconvincing: a profounder study would have led him to abandon many of the positions which are maintained by him.

Ryle, "The Book of Baruch," Dictionary of the Bible, ed. Smith, 1893, vol. i. pp. 361-362. Professor Ryle regards our Apocalypse as written shortly after the destruction of Jerusalem, and possibly in Hebrew. He reverts to Ewald's idea of the common authorship of this book and 4 Ezra as a means of explaining their manifold points of identity and similarity. He divides it into the following sections: i.-xii.; xiii.-xx.; xxi.-xxxiv.; xxxv.-xlvi.; xlvii.-lii.; liii.-lxxvi.; lxxvii.-lxxxv.

§ 5. THE SYRIAC—A TRANSLATION FROM THE GREEK

That the Syriac text is a translation from the Greek is to be concluded on several grounds. 1. It is so stated in the sixth-century MS. c. 2. There are certain corruptions in the text which are explicable only on the hypothesis that the translator misinterpreted the Greek, or else found the corruption already existing there. Thus in iii. 7 (see note) the Syrian translator renders "ornament" where the text requires "world." It is obvious here that he followed the wrong sense of κόσμος. The corrupt readings in xxi. 9, 11, 12; xxiv. 1, 2; lxii. 7 are to be explained on this principle (see notes in loc.). 3. Imitations of Greek constructions are found. In lxv. 1 we have hau = the Greek article in connection with a proper name. 4. We have frequent transliterations of Greek words, as in vi. 4, 7; x. 17; xvii. 4; xxi. 7, etc. It is possible, of course, that these borrowed Greek words may have been part of the current language when the translation was made. In lxxvii. 14, however, we have a Greek word transliterated which gives no sense in its context. Hence this word was not written first-hand by a Syriac writer, but was taken by the Syriac translator from the Greek text before him. 5. The Rest of the Words of Baruch is largely based on our Apocalypse, and frequently reproduces it word for word. This book was written in Greek by a Christian Palestinian Jew in the second century. It implies, therefore, the existence of our Apocalypse in a Greek form, and preserves important fragments of the Greek Version.

§ 6. THE GREEK—A TRANSLATION FROM A HEBREW ORIGINAL

It is hard to understand how such an unbroken unanimity has prevailed amongst scholars on the question of a Greek original. Indeed, it is impossible to explain it, save on the hypothesis that they gave the subject the most cursory notice, or more probably none at all. In fact, since the discovery of the book not a single serious attempt has been made to grapple with this problem, and yet, in nearly every instance, scholars have spoken with an assurance on this subject that only a personal and thorough study of the subject could justify. To this strong and unanimous tradition of the learned world I bowed without hesitation at the outset of my studies, but with an awakening distrust and an ever-growing reluctance during the subsequent years in which the present Translation and Notes were completed. In fact, the feeling grew steadily stronger that only a Hebrew original could account for many of the phenomena of the text. And yet my gathering certainty on this head did not lead to action till the MSS. of the Translation and Notes were partially in type. I then felt that I could no longer stay my hand, and with the kind permission of my publishers I have been enabled to introduce the necessary changes into the Translation and Notes. The facts which have obliged me to maintain a Hebrew original may be summarised as follows:—1. The quotations from the Old Testament agree in all cases but one with the Massoretic text against the LXX. 2. Hebrew idioms survive in the Syriac text. 3. Unintelligible expressions in the Syriac can be explained and the text restored by retranslation into Hebrew. 4. There are many paronomasiae which discover themselves on retranslation into Hebrew. 5. One or two passages of the book have been preserved in Rabbinic writings.

1. The quotations from the Old Testament agree in all cases but one with the Mass. text against the LXX.—See vi. 8; xxxviii. 2; xli. 4; li. 4; lviii. 1, with notes in loc. In two other passages our text departs alike from the Mass. and LXX.: thus in iv. 2 it agrees with the Syriac Version of Is. xlix. 16 against the Mass., LXX., and Vulg.; and in xxxv. 2 it reproduces Jer. ix. 1, freely and independently. Finally, in lxxxii. 5 only does it agree with the LXX. of Is. xl. 15. It is to be observed, however, that neither does the Vulgate in that passage agree with the Mass. The Mass.= יִשְׁרֹף; the LXX.= ὡς σίελος λογισθήσονται= נִרְשָׁב; Vulg.=“quasi pulvis exiguus.” Here the Vulg. omits יִשְׁרֹף and the LXX. replaces it by repeating a previous verb. Hence this passage is inconclusive, as the text of Isa. xl. 15 seems to have been uncertain.

2. Hebrew idioms survive in the Syriac text.—We shall treat this section under four heads.

(a) Survival of the familiar Hebrew idiom of the infinitive absolute combined with the finite verb.—The Syriac equivalent of this Hebraism is frequently found in this Apocalypse: cf. xiii. 3 (note); xxii. 7; xli. 6; xlviii. 30; l. 2; lvi. 2; lxxv. 6; lxxvi. 2; lxxxii. 2; lxxxiii. 1, 2, 3, 6; lxxxiv. 2. In this circumstance alone we have sufficient evidence to establish a Hebrew original. This idiom is, it is true, also found in original Syriac, but is comparatively rare. It is not, however, with original Syriac that we have here to do, but with a Syriac translation. We shall now proceed to show that in a Syriac translation of a Hebrew or a Greek text this idiom does not appear except as a rendering of the corresponding idiom in the Hebrew or Greek before it.

In order to prove this statement we shall examine the Peshitto Version of Genesis and Exodus. In these two books I have found fifty-seven instances of the occurrence of the infinitive absolute with the finite verb in the Massoretic text.

As we shall require presently to know the usage of the LXX. in this matter, we shall now give a table furnishing the facts we are in search of from both versions.

Syriac-Peshitto.	Genesis-Massoretic Text.	LXX.
Noun and verb.	ii. 17.	Noun and verb.
Infinitive and verb.	iii. 4.	„
„	iii. 16.	Participle and verb.
„	xvii. 12.	Noun and verb.
„	xviii. 18.	Participle and verb.
Finite verb only.	xix. 9.	Noun and verb.
Infinitive and verb.	xxii. 17 (twice).	Participle and verb.
„	xxvi. 11.	Finite verb only.
„	xxvi. 13.	Different text followed.
„	xxvi. 28.	Participle and verb.
Finite verb only.	xxvii. 30.	Finite verb only.
Infinitive and verb.	xxviii. 22.	Noun and verb.
„	xxx. 16.	Finite verb only.
Finite verb only.	xxxi. 15.	Noun and verb.
Infinitive and verb.	xxxi. 30.	„
„	„	Finite verb only.
„	xxxii. 12.	Adverb and verb.
„	xxxvii. 8 (twice).	Participle and verb.
„	xxxvii. 10.	„
Different text followed.	xxxvii. 33.	Different text followed.
Infinitive and verb.	xl. 15.	Noun and verb.
„	xlili. 2.	„
„	xlili. 6.	Participle and verb.
„	„	Finite verb only.
Finite verb only.	xlvi. 4.	Different text followed.
Infinitive and verb.	l. 24 (twice).	Noun and verb.

Thus in Genesis there are twenty-nine instances of this idiom. These are rendered by the Peshitto as follows: twenty-three by the infinitive and verb; one by cognate noun and verb; four by finite verb only; and in one case a different text is followed. In the case of the LXX., eleven by cognate noun and verb; nine by participle and verb; five by finite verb only; while in four a different text is followed.

An examination of Exodus supplies the following evidence :—

Syriac-Peshitto.	Exodus-Massoretic Text.	LXX.
Infinitive and verb.	iii. 7.	Participle and verb.
„	iii. 16.	Noun and verb.
Different text followed.	xi. 1.	„
Infinitive and verb.	xiii. 19.	„
„	xviii. 18.	„
Finite verb only.	xix. 12.	„
Infinitive and verb.	xxi. 12, 15, 16, 17.	„
Different text followed.	xxi. 19.	Finite verb only.
Infinitive and verb.	xxi. 20, 22, 28.	Noun and verb.
Finite verb only.	xxi. 36.	Finite verb only.
Infinitive and verb.	xxii. 6, 14.	„
„	xxii. 16, 19.	Noun and verb.
Finite verb only (twice) } Infinitive and verb }	xxii. 23 (thrice).	{ Noun and verb (twice). Participle and verb.
Infinitive and verb.	xxiii. 4.	Participle and verb.
„	xxiii. 5.	Finite verb only.
„	xxiii. 22, 24.	Noun and verb.
„	xxxi. 14.	„
„	xxxi. 15.	Finite verb only.

Thus in Exodus there are twenty-eight instances of this idiom. These are rendered in the Peshitto: twenty-two by the infinitive and verb; four by finite verb only; in two cases a different text is followed. In the LXX., nineteen by cognate noun and verb; three by participle and verb; and six by the finite verb only. By combining the facts on both books, we arrive at the following results. The Hebrew idiom occurs fifty-seven times. In the Peshitto forty-five are rendered by infinitive and verb; one by cognate noun and verb; eight by finite verb only; in three cases a different text is followed. In the LXX., thirty are rendered by cognate noun and verb; twelve by participle and verb;

eleven by finite verb only; in four cases a different text is followed. Finally, we should mention here that in no case have we found this idiom in the Syriac Version where the same idiom was not also present in the Hebrew from which it was derived, and the same holds true of the LXX. save in one case, i.e. Exod. xxiii. 26.

From the above results obtained from the Peshitto Version of Genesis and Exodus we learn that whereas the Syriac translator on the one hand never inserts this idiom unless as an equivalent of the corresponding Hebrew idiom before him, on the other he has failed to render it in eight cases out of fifty-seven. In these he gives the finite verb only. Thus the irresistible conclusion is: if we find this idiom occurring at all in a Syriac translation, it is a presumption that it existed in the language from which the translation was made; whereas if we find it frequently (as in our Apocalypse) the presumption changes to a certainty.

The above conclusions drawn from a study of the Peshitto Version of the Hebrew text of Genesis and Exodus may be further confirmed and extended in their application by a short consideration of the corresponding phenomena in the New Testament. So far as I can discover, the Peshitto Version of the New Testament in no case inserts this idiom where it does not already exist in the Greek. This idiom occurs, as we know, at least six times: see Matt. xiii. 14; xv. 4; Luke vii. 34; xxii. 15; Acts vii. 34; Hebrews vi. 14. Five of these passages are quotations from the LXX., and thus the idiom goes back to the Hebrew. In the remaining one, Luke xxii. 15, it implies undoubtedly an Aramaic or Hebrew original. The Peshitto renders these instances by the infinitive and verb except in Matt. xiii. 14, where it misses the point, and in Luke xxii. 15, where it gives the noun and verb. In both these verses the Sinaitic MS. gives the infinitive and verb.

The Syriac translator therefore is so far from inserting this idiom, unless it exists already in the Hebrew or Greek text before him, that, as we found above, he occasionally fails to do so when he ought. The bearing of this conclusion on our present investigation is obvious. This idiom is found fifteen times in our Apocalypse; we can therefore conclude with confidence that it occurred at least fifteen times in the Greek, and in all likelihood oftener.

Having now found that this idiom occurred frequently in the Greek, we have now to ask, could it have appeared there for the first time, i.e. in an original Greek writing?

The answer does not require a long investigation. The idiom is thoroughly Semitic, and is only once found in all Greek literature, and that in Lucian. In the New Testament there is no instance of it unless in a quotation from the Old Testament; in the Old Testament only once, Exod. xxiii. 26, without a Semitic background.

Hence we conclude that its frequent occurrence in our Apocalypse is in itself demonstrable evidence of a Hebrew original. Further, it is probable that it occurred in the Hebrew original more frequently than in the Greek translation; for we found above that out of fifty-seven instances of this idiom in Genesis and Exodus, the LXX. failed to render eleven.

(b) The survival of various Hebraisms.—In xx. 2 (see note); xxiv. 2, where Syriac for “throughout all generations” = ἐν πάσῃ γενεᾷ καὶ γενεᾷ = בכל־דור ודור; cf. Ps. cxlv. 13; the same idiom is found in xxix. 7, where I render “every morning”; xxxviii. 4, where “from my (earliest) days” is the Hebrew idiom found in 1 Kings i. 6.

(c) Probable survival of Hebrew order against Syriac idiom.—In xiii. 12 (see notes); lxiii. 8. In connection with the notes on xiii. 12 it is worth observing that, in Western Aramaic, unlike Syriac, the order of the participle and the substantive verb in the compound past imperfect indicative is indifferent. Thus in Dan. v. 19; vi. 4, 5, 11, 15, etc., the substantive verb precedes, whereas in Dan. ii. 31; iv. 7, 10, 26; vii. 2, 6, 8, etc., the participle.

(d) Probable survival of syntactical idioms against Syriac idiom.—For omission of relative see xx. 3, note; imperative used as jussive, xi. 6, note; Hebrew perfect with strong vav in xxi. 21, and the voluntative with weak vav in xlvi. 6, reproduced literally but not idiomatically.

3. Unintelligible expressions in the Syriac can be explained and the text restored by retranslation into Hebrew.—In xxi. 9, 11, 12; xxiv. 2; lxii. 7, I have been able to explain and restore an unintelligible text by retranslation first into Greek and thence into Hebrew. The Syriac in these verses is the stock rendering of δικαιοῦσθαι, and this in turn of צדק. But צדק also = δίκαιος εἶναι, and this is the meaning required in the above passages (see notes in loc.), but the Greek translator erroneously adopted the more usual rendering.

Again in xlv. 12 we have another interesting restoration through the same means. There we find in the Syriac "on its beginning" set over anti-thetically against "to torment." Here the context requires "to its blessedness." Now the corrupt text = בראשו, which by the transposition of the single letter ר gives us the text באשרו = "to its blessedness." Again in lxxxv. 12 we have another instance of the Greek translator following the wrong of two alternative meanings.

Again in xi. 6; xx. 3; xxi. 21; xxix. 5; xlviii. 6, we are obliged by the context to translate not the Syriac text but the Hebrew text presupposed by the Syriac, but mistranslated by the Greek translator, and, therefore, of necessity by the Syriac. See notes in loc.; also 2 (d) above, p. xlvii. For other restorations the reader should consult the notes on x. 13; lxx. 6; lxxx. 2. Finally in lxxvii. 14 we have a transliteration of the Greek word ἔλγ. ἔλγ is either a corruption or a mistranslation of some Hebrew word. It could not have been written for the first time in Greek. I have hazarded a conjecture in the note on the passage.

4. Many paronomasiae discover themselves on re-translation into Hebrew.—We have in xv. 8 (see note) one that is already familiar to us in Isaiah and Ezekiel. As many as three spring into notice in xlviii. 35 (see note), and probably two in lxxxiv. 2. The most interesting perhaps are those on the proper names, Hezekiah and Sennacherib, in lxiii. 3, 4 (see notes). In the case of the former, I had the good fortune to conjecture the existence of the same paronomasia in Ecclus. xlviii. 22, and to restore the Hebrew there as it actually stood before Dr. Neubauer's discovery of the Hebrew MS. of Ecclus. xl. 1.

5. One or two passages of this book have been preserved in rabbinic writings (see notes on x. 18; xxxii. 2-4; lxiv. 3). ✓

§ 7. THE DIFFERENT ELEMENTS IN THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH WITH THEIR RESPECTIVE CHARACTERISTICS AND DATES.

As we have seen above, the composite nature of this book has already been recognised independently by Kabisch and De Faye. And the more thoroughly we study it, the more conscious we become of the impassable gulf which sunders the world-views which underlie the different parts. In one class of the passages there is everywhere manifest a vigorous optimism as to Israel's ultimate well-being on earth; there is sketched in glowing and sensuous colours the blessedness which awaits the chosen people in the kingdom of the Messiah which is at hand (xxix.; xxxix.-xl.; lxxiii.-lxxiv.), when healing will descend in dew, and disease and anguish and lamentation will flee away; when strife and revenge and hatred will go into condemnation; when gladness will march throughout the earth, the reapers not grow weary, nor they that build toil-worn; when child-birth will entail no pangs, and none shall die untimely (lxxiii.-lxxiv. 1); when Israel's enemies shall be destroyed (xxxix.-xl.; lxx. 7-lxxii.), and to God's chosen people will be given a world-wide empire with its centre at Jerusalem (xl. 2; lxxiii.-lxxiv.). Over against these passages which ring with such assurance of coming victory and untold blessedness stand others wherein, alike to Israel's present and its future destiny on earth, there is written nothing save "lamentation and mourning and woe." These veritable cries from the depths give utterance to a hopeless pessimism—a bottomless despair touching all the things of earth. This world is a scene of corruption, its evils are irremediable; it is a never-ceasing toil and strife, but its end is at hand; its youth is past; its strength exhausted; the pitcher is near to the cistern, the ship to the port, the course of the journey to the city, and life to its consummation (lxxxv.). The advent of the times is nigh, the corruptible will pass away, the mortal depart, that that which abides for ever may come, and the new world which does not turn to corruption those who depart to its blessedness (cf. xxi. 19; xliv. 9-15; lxxxv.).

Thus we discover that whereas (1) optimism as to Israel's future on earth is a characteristic of some sections of the book, pessimism in this respect characterises others. The former are the Messiah Apocalypses, xxvii.-xxx. 1 ; xxxvi.-xl. ; liii.-lxxiv. (which for convenience I designate respectively as A¹, A², A³), and a short original Apocalypse of Baruch, B¹. The remaining sections are B², B³. The contents of these we shall determine presently. Again (2), A¹, A², A³, B¹, agree in teaching the advent of the Messianic kingdom, but this doctrine is absolutely relinquished in B², B³.

Thus, A¹, A², A³, B¹, agree in presenting an optimistic view of Israel's future on earth, and in inculcating the hope of a Messianic kingdom ; whereas in B², B³, such expectations are absolutely abandoned, and the hopes of the righteous are directed to the immediate advent of the final judgment and to the spiritual world alone. But at this point a difference between A¹, A², A³, and B¹, emerges. The former look for a Messiah and a Messianic kingdom, the latter for a Messianic kingdom without a Messiah.

As we pursue our study, other features, one by one, disclose themselves which belong to A¹, A², A³, but not to B¹, B², B³, and thus differentiate them from the latter. Some of these are: (1) In A¹, A², A³, Jerusalem is still standing — hence they were written before 70 A.D. ; whereas in B¹, B², B³, it is already destroyed (for details see pp. 49, 61, 87, 101, 111). In B¹, Jerusalem is to be restored ; (2) in A¹, A², A³, the advent of the Messiah is looked for, but not in B¹, B², B³; (3) in A¹, A², A³, it is only to the actual inhabitants of Palestine that the promise of protection is given in the time of the Messianic woes (see xxix. 2; xl. 2; lxxi. 1)—thus the Jews are still in Palestine; but in B¹, B², B³, the Jews are already carried into exile. In B¹ they are to be ultimately restored.

These conclusions as to the different authorship of A¹, A², A³, and B¹, B², B³, are confirmed by the following facts:—

(1) According to the scheme of the final editor of this book (see v. 7; ix. 2; pp. 36, 61), events proceed in each section in a certain order: first a fast, then a divine disclosure, then an announcement or address to the people based on this disclosure. This being so, it is significant that in the various addresses in v. 5; x. 4; xxxi. 2-xxxiv.; xliv.-xlvi.; lxxvii. 1-17, there is not a single reference to these Messianic Apocalypses, A¹, A², A³. (2) From (1) it follows that A¹, A², A³, have no real organic connection with the rest of the book, B¹, B², B³. And a detailed examination of their immediate contents shows that the removal of A¹ (= xxvii.-xxx. 1), A² (= xxxvi.-xl.), A³ (= liii.-lxxiv.) serves to restore some cohesion to the text (see xxx. 2, note; xli. 1, note; lxxv.-lxxvi., note).

Having thus seen that A¹, A², A³, were written prior to 70 A.D., and are of different authorship to B¹, B², B³, which were written subsequent to that date, we have next to deal with the relations in which A^1 , A^2 , A^3 stand to each other.

A^1 , A^2 , A^3 ; their relations to each other and dates.
—On pp. 61, 87, we have shown that A^1 is of distinct authorship to A^2 and A^3 , on the ground that in A^1 the Messiah pursues an entirely passive rôle, and does not appear till the enemies of Israel are destroyed and the kingdom established; whereas, in A^2 and A^3 , it is the Messiah that destroys the enemies of Israel and establishes the Messianic kingdom. As regards the date of A^1 , all that can be said with safety is that it was composed before 70 A.D.

It is hard to determine with certainty the relation of A^2 and A^3 . In many points they are at one: their differences are few. Some of these are: A^2 has more affinities in matter and character with the older Jewish Apocalyptic, i.e. that of Daniel; A^3 is more nearly related in form and spirit to later Judaism, to the rabbinic type of thought. Further, whereas in xl. 2, it is the Messiah that defends the inhabitants of the Holy Land, in lxxi. 1, it is the Holy Land itself; and whereas in A^2 (= xxxvi.-xl.) the law is only passingly alluded to, in A^3 (= liii.-lxxiv.) its importance is frequently dwelt upon. The latter difference may partly be due to their diversity in subject and method as well as to the brevity of A^2 . On the whole, we are inclined to regard A^2 and A^3 as springing from different authors; but the evidence is not decisive.

As to the date of A^2 we are unable to say anything more definite than that it was composed before 70 A.D. The case of A³ is different. Like A¹ and A², it was written before 70 A.D., as we have seen above (see also p. 87 and lxviii. 6, note). The earlier limit of composition is fixed by lix. 5-11. In the notes on that passage we have shown that in our Apocalypse there is a transference of Enoch's functions to Moses, and an attribution to Moses of revelations hitherto ascribed to Enoch (see also xiii. 3, note). This glorification of Moses at Enoch's expense is a clear sign of Jewish hostility to Christianity, and a tribute to Enoch's influence in the Christian Church of the first century. This acceptance of Enoch as a prophet in Christian circles became the ground of his rejection by the Jews, and of a hostility which was unswervingly pursued for several centuries. This aggressive attitude of Judaism could not have originated before the open breach of Christianity with the Synagogue, which was brought about by the Pauline controversy. Hence A³ cannot be earlier than 50 A.D. Thus the limits of its composition are 50-70 A.D.

B¹, B², B³, the later constituents of Baruch, their characteristics and dates.—We have seen above the grounds on which we are obliged to ascribe B¹, B², B³, to a different authorship and later date than A¹, A², A³. We have now to study the relations which subsist between B¹, B², B³. We shall consider B³ first, as it consists of a single chapter.

B³ = lxxxv. This chapter agrees with B¹, B², in being written after 70 A.D.; but differs from B¹ and agrees with B² in despairing of a national restoration, and in looking only for spiritual blessedness in the world of incorruption. But, again, it differs from B³ also, in that B² was written in Jerusalem or Judæa, whereas B³ was written in Babylon or some other land of the Dispersion—in the former most probably ; for it was written in Hebrew (cf. lxxxv. 2, 3, 12, notes). Again, whereas, according to B², Jeremiah was with the captivity in Babylon, it is here definitely stated that the righteous and the prophets are dead, and that the exiles have none to intercede for them (see notes on pp. 154, 156). B³ was thus written after 70 A.D. in Hebrew, and most probably in Babylon.

B¹, B².—After the removal of A¹, A², A³, and B³, the remaining chapters, when submitted to a searching scrutiny, betray underlying suppositions, statements, and facts which are mutually irreconcilable.

Thus certain sections, i.-ix. 1 ; xliii.-xliv. 7 ; xlv.-xlvi. 6 ; lxxvii.-lxxxii. ; lxxxiv. ; lxxxvi.-lxxxvii., are optimistic and hopeful as to this world, whereas certain others, ix.-xii. (?) ; xiii.-xxv. ; xxx. 2-xxxv. ; xli.-xlii. ; xliv. 8-15 ; xlvii.-lii. ; lxxv.-lxxvi. ; lxxxiii., are decidedly of an opposite character. The former sections we have named B¹, and the latter B². That B¹ and B² are derived from different authors will be clear from the following considerations :—

(1) In B¹ the earthly Jerusalem is to be rebuilt (i. 4, note ; vi. 9, note ; lxxviii. 7, note), but not so in B², where it is said that Jerusalem is removed with a view to usher in the judgment (see xx. 1, 2).

(2) In B¹ the exiles are to be restored, but not in B²; see notes cited in (1).

(3) In B¹ an earthly felicity or a Messianic kingdom is expected (i. 5; xlv. 6; lxxvii. 12), whereas in B² no earthly consolation of any kind is looked for (xlv. 8-15), and the judgment is close at hand (xlviii. 39; lxxxiii.).

(4) In B² there is a strongly ascetic tone (see xv. 8, note); but this is wholly absent from B¹.

(5) In B¹, Baruch is to die an ordinary death, whereas in B² he is to be taken up or translated and preserved till the last day, to testify against the Gentile oppressors of Israel (see xiii. 3, note).

(6) In B¹, Jeremiah is not sent to Babylon, but in B² he is (see x. 2, note; xxxiii. 2, note; lxxvii. 12, note).

(7) In B¹, Jerusalem is destroyed by angels lest the enemy should boast; this idea seems foreign to B² (see lxvii. 6, note).

(8) In B¹ the main interest of the writer is engaged in dealing with the recent destruction of Jerusalem; in tracing this calamity to the nation's sins; in exhorting to renewed faithfulness; and in inculcating the sure and certain hope of Israel's restoration. In B² the writer has relinquished all hopes of national restoration, and is mainly concerned with theological problems and questions of the schools.

In x. 6-xii. 4 it is not improbable, as we have shown in the notes on the passage, that we have a fragment of a Sadducean writing, which I have marked by the symbol S. It may possibly belong to B²; it cannot to B¹. Having now recognised that the groundwork is in the main derived from the two sources B¹ and B², and having already acquainted ourselves with the leading characteristics of each, it is next incumbent on us to consider the use made of these sources.

B¹, its extent in this book.—It is not difficult to ascertain the extent to which B¹ has been put in requisition by the final editor. Thus i.-ix. 1, with the exception of the interpolation iv. 2-7, clearly belongs to it, as it discovers most of the characteristics which belong to B¹ as over against their contraries in B². B² begins clearly with x. 1.-5, for these verses give the account of Jeremiah's departure to Babylon, which is peculiar to B²; ix. 2 and other references to fasts of seven days are probably due in their present positions to the final editor. The next fragments of B¹ are xliii.-xliv. 7; xlv.-xlvi. 6 (see pp. 68, 69, for detailed criticism), and the rest that are drawn from this source are lxxvii.-lxxxvii., with the exception of lxxxiii. = B² and lxxxv. = B³ (see pp. 119, 140, 154, 156).

B², its extent in this book.—Criticism encounters its chief difficulty in dealing with the source B², and with the use to which it has been put by the final editor. From B¹ the editor borrowed materials and used them in a straightforward fashion, but those from B² he mutilated and transposed in every imaginable way. This will be manifest to every serious student of xiii.-xxv. It was my sheer inability to write any connected or reasonable commentary on these chapters in their present order, that led me at last to recognise the true nature of the case. Then I came to see that these chapters could not have been written originally as they stand at present, and further study made it clear that we had here a most complete but instructive example of the perverse ingenuity of a redactor, by which the original text was dislocated and transposed, the original development of thought arrested and inverted, questions frequently recorded after their specific answers had already been given in full, and passages torn from their original setting in Baruch's address to the people and inserted in Baruch's prayers to God, where they are bereft of all conceivable meaning.

The reader will find a list of these logical anacoloutha and inversions on pp. 20, 21, and likewise an attempt to restore these chapters to their original order in B². With the paucity of materials at our disposal, this can only be partially satisfactory. The original order was probably xiii. 1-3*a*; xx.; xxiv. 2-4; xiii. 3*b*-12; xxv.; xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1.

The next fragment from B² is xxx. 2-5, which forms a good sequel to xxiv. 1. Of the intervening chapters xxvii.-xxx. 1 is an independent Apocalypse, as we have already found, i.e. A¹ and xxvi. is an addition of the editor; xxxi.-xxxv.; xli.-lii., with the exception of xliii.-xliv. 7; xlv.-xlvi. 6, which belong to B¹ and xxxii. 2-4; xlv. 7, which are due to the editor, are also fragments of B² (see pp. 57, 58, 66, 68, 69, 74). These chapters from B² have met with no better treatment at the hands of the editor than those already mentioned. Thus we find that xxxi.-xxxii. 6, which contains an address of Baruch to the people, presupposes xlii.; xlviii.; lii. to be already in the background; for the subject of each address is founded on a previous revelation (see p. 57). Thus xxxi.-xxxv. was read originally after xlviii.-lii., but not immediately, for lxxv. intervened (see p. 117), forming the natural sequel to lii. when A³, i.e. liii.-lxxiv. is removed; xli.-xlii. appear to have followed close on xxx. (see p. 66). Thus so far the order roughly was: xxx. 2-5; xli.-xlii.; xlviii.-lii.; lxxv.; xxxi.-xxxv. But there are grounds for regarding xlv. 8-15; lxxxiii. as intervening after xxxii. 6. Finally, the last fragment of B² is found in lxxvi., but this cannot have formed the end of B². It was probably closed with an account of the Assumption of Baruch.

For further disarrangements of the text by which words used originally by Baruch in addressing the people, are used in their present context in an address to God, though quite impossible in that connection, and the probable restoration of these fragments, see xlviii. 48-50; lii. 5-7; liv. 16-18, notes. The surviving fragments of B², which we have just dealt with, may be restored as follows to what seems to have been their original order in their source: xiii. 1-3a; xx.; xxiv. 2-4; xiii. 3b-12; xxv.; xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1; xxx. 2-5; xli.-xlii.; xlviii. 1-47; xlix.-lii. 3; lxxv.; xxxi.-xxxii. 6; liv. 17, 18; xlviii. 48-50; lii. 5-7; liv. 16; xlv. 8-15; lxxxiii.; xxxii. 7-xxxv.; lxxvi.

S, its relation to B¹ and B².—We have adjourned to the present the treatment of x. 6-xii. 4, which in the notes on this passage we have assigned to a Sadducean author, S. However this may be, I cannot but regard it as of different authorship to B¹ and B². Several grounds for this conclusion will be found in pp. 14-19. We might further observe that although, in vividness of grief and the still overwhelming consciousness of national calamity, S has features in common with B¹, it is sundered from it as resigning all hope of the restoration of the temple and its sacrifices, and as presenting the most hopeless pessimism in the book. And again, whereas S is related to B² in its world despair, it is no less certainly sundered from it in its complete absorption in the present wreck of the nation's material interests. Of this subject as now far distant B² recks little, and gives its chief energies and affections to religious problems and the conservation of Israel's spiritual interests.

Dates of S, B¹, B², B³.—In respect of date, S seems to have been written immediately after the fall of Jerusalem, in 70 A.D.; B¹ soon after this date, when the destruction of Israel and its hoped-for restoration were still the supreme subject of interest and speculation. B² is much later; its interests have passed from the material to the spiritual world; patriotic aims have ceased to affect it. B³ is probably still later than B².

Date of editing entire book.—Since the author of the Rest of the Words of Baruch has used portions of ii., v., vi., viii., x., xi., xxxv. 2 (?), lxxvii., lxxx., lxxxv., lxxxvii. of our Apocalypse, it is clear that he had the present form of our book before him in Greek. Thus, as this Christian Apocalypse was written between 130 and 140 A.D., the date of the Greek translation of our Apocalypse may be taken as not later than 130. The editing of the Hebrew may have been one or more decades earlier.

§ 8. THE LOST EPISTLE TO THE TWO AND A HALF TRIBES

A portion of this letter is probably to be found in the Apocryphal Book of Baruch, i.e. in i. 1-3 ; iii. 9-iv. 29. This section corresponds in many respects with the writings we are in search of. Thus (1) the lost Epistle was addressed to Judah and Benjamin in exile (lxxvii. 12, 17). Now it is clear that iii. 9-iv. 29 was also addressed to Judah and Benjamin in exile. It is Judah and Benjamin that are addressed ; for throughout iv. 5-29 it is Jerusalem that is represented as being deprived of her children. Further, it is Judah and Benjamin in exile, for they are said to be "sold to the nations and delivered to their enemies" (iv. 6), and Jerusalem describes herself as robbed of her sons and daughters (iv. 16), and the writer asks in iii. 10 : "Why is it, Israel, that thou art in thine enemies' land, and that thou art waxen feeble (so Kneucker) in a strange country ?"

(2) The lost Epistle was "an epistle of doctrine and a scroll of good tidings" (lxxvii. 12). This forms an admirable description of iii. 9-iv. 29, which is essentially a writing of consolation and encouragement.

(3) The lost Epistle was to hold out the promise of return (lxxvii. 6); this is done in iv. 22-24.

(4) The lost Epistle was written by Baruch to Babylon (lxxvii. 12, 17).

Now i. 1-3; iii. 9-iv. 29, which purport to have been written by Baruch in Babylon and addressed to the exiles there, appear rather to have been written by Baruch in Jerusalem and addressed to the exiles in Babylon; for (a) the speaker does not identify himself with those who are in exile. Cf. iii. 10: "Why is it, Israel, that thou art in thine enemies' land"; and iv. 5, 6, where he calls them the remnant dispersed among the nations; (b) the speaker rather identifies himself with Jerusalem; at all events, in iv. 9-29 he personifies Jerusalem, and represents her as addressing the neighbouring peoples, and then her own children as they are being led into captivity, and promising them a safe return to her.

(5) Finally, in B¹, to which the lost Epistle belongs, the blamelessness of Jerusalem over against her children is insisted on (cf. lxxvii. 8). The same thought would naturally recur in some form in the lost Epistle. And so, in fact, we find it underlying iv. 8-29. And as in B¹ it is taught that Israel is punished only as a chastisement (cf. i. 5; lxxix. 2), the same idea would most probably appear in the lost Epistle as an encouragement to the exiles. Now this is emphatically declared to be so in iv. 6.

On the above grounds to which others could be added, I am inclined to regard iii. 9-iv. 29 as a recast of, or, at all events, as based upon the lost Epistle. This Epistle was probably introduced by some form of i. 1-3. These verses are, as Kneucker has shown, corrupt in their present form.

iv. 39-v. 9, which consists of a direct address to Jerusalem, is derived by the final editor from a different source, mainly from the eleventh of the Psalms of Solomon.

§ 9. THE RELATIONS OF THIS APOCALYPSE WITH 4 EZRA

In this section we shall deal with the following questions:—

- (a) The composite nature of 4 Ezra.
- (b) Conflicting characteristics of 4 Ezra and Baruch, the former to some extent non-Jewish.
- (c) 4 Ezra from a Hebrew original.
- (d) Relations of the respective constituents of our Apocalypse and 4 Ezra.

(a) The composite nature of Ezra.—Into this question this is not the place to enter. I shall content myself with expressing my acceptance in the main of Kabisch's masterly criticism¹ of this work. Though many of his positions cannot be maintained, the greater number of them will, I believe, be ultimately accepted as final. The work is very unequal.

¹ Kabisch, Das vierte Buch Esra, 1889, Göttingen.

In it there stand side by side numerous instances of extremely fine insight and not a few gross misapprehensions and bizarre conclusions. His analysis is as follows :—

S = an Apocalypse of Salathiel written circ. 100 A.D. at Rome, preserved in a fragmentary condition : iii. 1-31 ; iv. 1-51 ; v. 13*b*-vi. 10 ; vi. 30-vii. 25 ; vii. 45-viii. 62 ; ix. 13-x. 57 ; xii. 40-48 ; xiv. 28-35.

E = an Ezra Apocalypse, circ. 31 B.C., written in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem : iv. 52-v. 13*a* ; vi. 13-25, 28 ; vii. 26-44 ; viii. 63-ix. 12.

A = Adlergesicht—an Eagle Vision, written 90 A.D. by a Zealot : x. 60-xii. 40.

M = Menschensohn—a Son-of-Man Vision, written in Jerusalem about the time of Pompey : xiii., but much interpolated by R.

E² = an Ezra fragment, circ. 100 : xiv. 1-17*a*, 18-27, 36-47.

R = the Editor—a Zealot, circ. 120 : iii. 1. (qui et Ezras), 32-36 ; vi. 11, 12, 26, 27, 29 ; x. 58, 59 ; xii. 9, 34, 37-39, 49-51 ; xiii. 13*b*-15, 16-24, 26*b*, 29-32, 54-58 ; xiv. 8, 17*b*, 48-50, as well as parts of iv. 52 ; vi. 20, etc.

The above analysis may be taken as a good working hypothesis. Among other grounds which Kabisch might have pressed to show that the book as it stands has been edited from various independent sources and edited most ignorantly, I will adduce only one. The title, Dominator Domine, which in the Apocalypse of Baruch is used only of God, and rightly so, in 4 Ezra is a designation of God in five instances—iii. 4 ; v. 23 ; vi. 38 (in Syr., Eth., and Arm. Versions) ; xii. 7 ; xiii. 51 ; but of an angel in six—iv. 38 ; v. 38 ; vi. 11 ;

vii. 17, 58, 75. The attribution of this divine title to an angel can only be due to gross confusions or interpolations in the text (see note on iii. 1 of our text). It is to be observed that this phenomenon is found only in the late source S and R.

(b) Conflicting characteristics of 4 Ezra and Baruch, the former to some extent non-Jewish.—On the following doctrines the teaching of our Apocalypse represents faithfully the ordinary Judaism of the first century, whereas that of 4 Ezra holds an isolated position or is closely related to Christianity.

1. The Law.—From an exhaustive comparison of the passages dealing with this subject in the two books (see xv. 5, note) it is clear that the possession of the law by Israel is less a subject of self-gratulation in 4 Ezra than in Baruch. In the latter, especially in B², it protects the righteous (xxxii. 1), justifies them (li. 3), is their hope (li. 7) and never-failing stay (xlvi. 22, 24). This is decidedly orthodox Judaism. In 4 Ezra, on the other hand, man trembles before the law; he needs mercy, not the award of the law, for all have sinned (viii. 35); it has served rather unto condemnation; for only a very few are saved through good works (vii. 77) or the divine compassion (vii. 139). It is hardly necessary to point out that this conception of the law approximates to the Pauline view. p. 20

2. Works.—In my note on xiv. 7 I have contrasted the teaching of the two books on this subject, and arrived at the conclusion that in 4 Ezra the Paul doctrine of works as it is found in Baruch can hardly be said to exist. Here again Baruch represents traditional Jewish orthodoxy, but 4 Ezra not. We should observe also that the latter guards carefully against the doctrine of salvation by works by making salvation depend on works and faith combined (cf. ix. 7; xiii. 23; cf. St. James ii. 14-26).

3. Justification, i.e. by the law or by works.—This subject might have more logically been treated under the preceding head. For my own convenience I have given it separately. On p. 39 I have shown that justification by the law, though taught in Baruch, is absent from 4 Ezra. In this respect again the latter is non-Jewish.

4. Original Sin and Freewill.—On pp. 92-93, from a study of the passages in 4 Ezra bearing on these subjects, we have found that there was in man to begin with a wicked element (“granum seminis mali,” iv. 30); and that through Adam’s yielding to this evil impulse a hereditary tendency to sin was created, and the cor malignum developed (iii. 21-22). The evil element having thus gained the mastery over man, only a very few are saved through mercy (vii. 139; viii. 3); hence the writer of vii. 118 naturally charges Adam with being the cause of the final perdition of man.

In the face of such a hopeless view of man’s condition, human freewill cannot be maintained: practically man has none, for only a handful out of the whole human race are saved (vii. 51-61; ix. 16); theoretically he is said to have it, but this is to justify his final condemnation (see p. 93).

This teaching is practically unique in Judaism between 1-300 A.D.—in fact it is not Jewish but Christian doctrine. In Baruch, on the other hand, conformably to early Rabbinic teaching, it is declared that Adam is not the cause of man's perdition, but that each man is the Adam of his own soul (liv. 19). There is not, moreover, a trace of Ezra's elaborate theory, and the doctrine of original sin is stoutly denied in liv. 15, 19—not a trace save only in xlviii. 42, where spiritual death is traced to Adam. Elsewhere—xvii. 3; xxiii. 4; liv. 15—it is only physical death that is ascribed to Adam's transgression. But in Ezra, as we might expect from what precedes, both spiritual and physical death are always traced to Adam—iii. 21, 22; iv. 30; vii. 118-121.

Thus on various grounds we see that whereas Baruch is a pure product of the Judaism of the time, 4 Ezra is the result of two influences at work, first and mainly a Jewish, and secondly a Christian. It was no doubt owing to this Christian element in the latter that it won and preserved a high position in the Christian Church. It constitutes, in fact, a confession of the failure of Judaism.

The above peculiarities of doctrine in 4 Ezra discover themselves almost universally in S. The author of S was undoubtedly a Jew, but a Jew who had been impressed and imbued to some extent by Christian teaching, probably by Pauline.

(c) 4 Ezra from a Hebrew Original.—Though this question could only be settled by an exhaustive study of the text presupposed by the Versions, I am convinced that a Hebrew groundwork underlies at all events the greater part of this book. I might call attention here to the frequent occurrence of the Hebraism—the finite verb combined with the cognate infinitive—as evidence in this direction. Thus in iii. 33 we have “pertransiens pertransivi”; iv. 13, “festinans festinavit”; iv. 26, “proficiscens profectus sum”; v. 30, “odians odisti”; v. 45, “videntes vivent”; vi. 32, “auditu audita est”; vii. 5 “volens voluerit,” and so on in vii. 14, 21, 67, 70, 75; viii. 8, 15, 58; ix. 1; x. 32; xi. 45; xiv. 3, 29. All these appear in the Syriac Version, save five—iv. 26; vii. 5, 14; x. 32; xiv. 29. Still more are omitted in the Ethiopic Version. On the weight to be assigned to this feature of the text as evidence of a Hebrew background, see pp. xliv.-li. I may add that in the late work 5 Ezra xv. 9; xvi. 65, this idiom is found; but in the latter passage it is a quotation from our Apocalypse (see p. xx.), and in the former it is apparently a quotation also.

(d) Relations of the respective constituents of our Apocalypse and 4 Ezra.—My present purpose does not call for an exhaustive list of the passages common to the two books. This will be given elsewhere. It will be sufficient to indicate the direction such an inquiry should pursue, and to mention some of the chief grounds for determining the relations in which the various constituents of Baruch stand to those of 4 Ezra. These determinations must, however, pending further investigation, be regarded as provisional.

Of the multitude of thoughts, phrases, and commonplaces that are common to both books, a large number already occur in previously existing literature ; and as these may possibly be drawn independently from such sources by both books, they are not helpful at the outset in determining the priority of either book or of their respective constituents. Again, of many other common passages, the sources, it is true, are no longer found ; yet that such did exist in certain cases we have ample grounds for believing ; see the note on xxix. 4 for the common original of 4 Ezra vi. 49-52 and of our Baruch xxix. 4. Thus we must be on our guard against tracing relations of dependence where both books have been borrowing independently from the same lost source.

We shall now point out the relations in which A¹, A², A³, B¹, B² stand to Ezra. I shall refer to the following constituents of the latter, S, E, E², M (according to Kabisch's analysis on p. lxviii.).

A¹.—A¹ and S are apparently related in only one passage : Bar. xxix. 4 and 4 Ezra vi. 49-52. But this relation is not of dependence on either side, but of common derivation from the same lost source ; see xxix. 4, note. As regards A¹ and the E constituent of Ezra, xxix. 3b-6 of the former, "The Messiah will then begin to be revealed . . . and those who hungered will rejoice ; moreover also they will behold marvels," and vii. 27b-28 of the latter, "Videbit mirabilia mea ; revelabitur enim filius meus . . . et jocundabit qui relictus sunt," are certainly connected. If we add to these connections in thought and diction the fact that only in A¹ and E in the Baruch and Ezra literature is the passive rôle assigned to the Messiah, we may reasonably conclude that there is a direct relation of dependence between them. A¹, I think, is earlier than E; both are prior to 70 A.D. Finally, A¹ and M may be connected in xxix. 3 and xiii. 16-20. The thought seems earlier and more vigorous in A¹. In M it is threshed out; but such considerations are indecisive. If there is a relation of dependence between them, A¹ is probably earlier than M, for in A¹ the Messiah has a passive rôle, in M an active one. The idea of a passive Messiah conceived as early as 160 B.C. was not likely to hold its ground in later times when the needs of the people called for an active leader and combatant in the Messiah.

A².—A² and M, i.e. xiii. of 4 Ezra, are related. Cf. xl. 2, "My Messiah will convict him of all his impieties . . . and set before him all the works of his hosts," with 4 Ezra xiii. 37, "Ipse autem filius meus arguet quae advenerunt gentes impietates eorum . . . et improperebit" ("improperebit" is a mistaken rendering; read "ordinabit" with Syr. and Eth.) "coram eis mala cogitamenta eorum." The connection is manifest.

The first halves of these sentences agree verbally, so likewise do the second; for "set before him" = παραστήσει κατὰ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ = יערך לעיניו; and “improperabit” (or “ordinabit,” Syr. and Eth.) “coram eis” = ἐπιστοιβάσει κατὰ πρόσωπον αὐτῶν = יַעֲרֶךְ לְעֵינֵיהֶם; for παριστάναι and ἐπιστοιβάζειν are both LXX. renderings of עָרַךְ. The phrase is derived from Psalm xlix. 22 (cf. also Leviticus i. 1, 7, 8, 12; vi. 12).

A number of features into which I cannot enter here show that it is M that is dependent on A², and not vice versa.

The verse just dealt with reappears in xii. 32, in the Eagle Vision designated A by Kabisch, in a form which shows it dependent on M. A² is thus earlier than M and A in 4 Ezra.

A³.—Although there are many points of contact between A³ and 4 Ezra, there are none that necessitate the theory of dependence on either side save in liv. 15, 19. These verses which represent the teaching of orthodox Judaism circ. 50-70, were before the writer of the S element in 4 Ezra (cf. iii. 21-22; iv. 30; vii. 48), where a non-Jewish turn is given to the borrowed thoughts and phrases.

B¹.—Although there are many similar and identical thoughts and phrases in B¹ and 4 Ezra, these are not sufficiently characteristic or definite to furnish grounds for determining the dependence of either. This question must be settled on other grounds, i.e. chronological. From the use of like thought or diction, one might argue, on the one hand, that B¹ is dependent on the E element of 4 Ezra; compare iii. 7 with vii. 30; on the other, that B¹ is a source of E² of 4 Ezra; compare lxxvii. 3-6 with xiv. 30-33, and lxxvii. 14 with xiv.

20; that it is likewise a source of S; compare lxxxiv. 10 with x. 24. In these latter passages a different turn is given to the phrases found first in Baruch.

B².—Between B² and 4 Ezra there are almost innumerable points of contact, but the bulk of them are indecisive for our purposes. With the older elements of 4 Ezra its points of similarity are few and unimportant; but the relations between B² and S are very close. The fact of man's sinning consciously is frequently emphasised in B² and S (cf. Bar. xv. 6; xix. 3; xlviii. 40; and 4 Ezra viii. 56, 58-60; vii. 72). The doctrine that the world was made for man is confined to B² and S; see notes on xiv. 18; xv. 7. Their teaching on the law and on works and justification is allied—in some particulars identical but as a whole at variance, owing to Christian influences at work in S; see pp. lxix.-lxx. In B² we have an exposition of the views of orthodox Judaism 70-100 A.D.; in S we find much of the actual teaching in B² recast under Christian influences. S seems to us in every respect to be later than B².

§ 10. RELATION OF THIS APOCALYPSE WITH THE NEW TESTAMENT

The points of contact between this Apocalypse and the New Testament are many in number. The most of these, however, are insufficient to establish a relation of dependence on either side; for the thoughts and expressions in question could be explained from pre-existing literature, or were commonplaces of the time.

Of these a list will be given immediately, followed by another list of passages which seem to show that our text may in a few instances be derived from the New Testament.

New Testament.	Parallels in our Apocalypse.	Probable source of both.
Mt. iii. 16.—Lo, the heavens were opened.	xxii. 1. — Lo, the heavens were opened.	Ezek. i. 1.
Mt. iii. 17 (xvii. 5; John xii. 28). — A voice from heaven.	xiii. 1; xxii. 1.— A voice from the height.	Dan. iv. 31.
Mt. iv. 8.	lxxvi. 3.	Deut. xxxiv. 1-4.
Mt. xxiv. 7 (Mk. xiii. 8; Luke xxi. 11).—Famines . . . and earthquakes.	xxvii. 6, 7.	Commonplaces of Jewish Apocalyptic.
Mt. xxiv. 11, 24. — Many false prophets.	xlvi. 34 (see note).	...
Mt. xxiv. 19 (Luke xxiii. 29).	x. 13, 14 (resemblance slight).	Isa. liv. 1.
Mt. xxvi. 24.— It had been good for that man, etc.	x. 6.—Blessed is he who was not born, etc.	A Jewish Commonplace.
Mt. xxiv. 27.— For as the lightning . . . so shall be the coming of the Son of Man.	liii. 9. — Now that lightning shone exceedingly so as to illuminate the whole earth. (The lightning here symbolises the Messiah.)	A coincidence (?).
Luke xx. 36.— Equal unto the angels.	li. 10.	Eth. En. civ. 4, 6.
Luke xxi. 28 (1 Pet. iv. 7).—Your redemption draweth nigh.	xxiii. 7.—My redemption has drawn nigh.	Eth. En. li. 2.— The day of their redemption has drawn nigh.

New Testament.	Parallels in our Apocalypse.	Probable source of both.
Acts xv. 10 (where the law is spoken of as a "yoke"; cf. Gal. v. 1).	xli. 3.—The yoke of Thy law.	A current expres- sion.
Rom. ii. 14, 15.	xlvi. 40 (see note).	A Jewish Com- monplace.
Rom. viii. 18 (2 Cor. iv. 17).—The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be com- pared with the glory, etc.	xv. 8.—This world is to them a trouble and a wear- iness . . . and that which is to come, a crown with great glory.	A Jewish Com- monplace (?).
1 Cor. iv. 5 (Heb. iv. 13).	lxxxiii. 3.	(Cf. Eth. En. ix. 5).
2 Cor. iv. 17 (Rom. viii. 18).	xv. 8.	A Jewish Com- monplace.
1 Tim. i. 2.— Mercy and peace.	lxxviii. 2.— Mercy and peace.	A coincidence.
2 Peter iii. 9.	xxi. 20.	A coincidence.
2 Peter iii. 13 (Mt. xix. 28 ; Rev. xxi. 1).—New heavens and a new earth.	xxxii. 6.—Re- newed His creation.	Isa. lxxv. 17, etc.
Rev. xx. 12.— The books were opened.	xxiv. 1.—The books will be opened.	Dan. vii. 10.

In the following passages our text is dependent on the New Testament, or on some lost common source :—

Mt. xvi. 26.—For what shall a man be profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and forfeit his soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

Luke i. 42.—Blessed art thou among women, etc.

li. 15.—For what then have men lost their life or for what have those who were on the earth exchanged their soul?

liv. 10.—Blessed be my mother among those that bear, etc. (probably interpolated).

1 Cor. xv. 19.—If in this life only we have hoped in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

1 Cor. xv. 35.—How are the dead raised? and with what manner of body do they come?

James i. 2.—Count it all joy when ye fall into manifold temptations.

Rev. iv. 6.—In the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, four living creatures.

xxi. 13.—For if there were this life only . . . nothing could be more bitter than this.

xlix. 2.—In what shape will those live who live in that day?

lii. 6.—Rejoice ye in the suffering which ye now suffer.

li. 11.—The living creatures which are beneath the throne.

§ 11. VALUE OF OUR APOCALYPSE IN THE ATTESTATION OF THE JEWISH THEOLOGY OF 50-100 A.D., AND IN THE INTERPRETATION OF CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY FOR THE SAME PERIOD.

This book presents us with a vivid picture of the hopes and beliefs of Judaism during the years 50-100 A.D. As it was written at different dates during this period and by different authors, its composition was thus contemporaneous with that of the New Testament. It is, therefore, of very great value to the New Testament student, as it furnishes him with the historical setting and background of many of the New Testament problems. We are thereby enabled to estimate the contributions made in these respects by Christian thought, as well as to appreciate the world's need of the Pauline dialectic. For the purpose of illustrating our meaning we shall first of all draw attention to the doctrine of the Resurrection in our Apocalypse. Of the Jewish doctrine here set forth, St. Paul's teaching on this subject will be seen to be in some respects a development. Secondly, we shall briefly advert to the doctrines of Original Sin and Freewill, Works and Justification, Forgiveness, in which the Jewish teaching and the Christian stand in strong antagonism.

(a) The Resurrection.—In xlix. 2-li. a view of the resurrection is expounded, which sets forth first the raising of the dead with their bodies in exactly the same form in which they had been committed to the earth with a view to their recognition by those who knew them, and next their subsequent transformation with a view to a spiritual existence of unending duration. In my notes on pp. 83, 84, I have shown that the Pauline teaching in 1 Cor. xv. 35-50 is in many respects not an innovation, but a developed and more spiritual exposition of ideas already current in Judaism.

(b) Original Sin and Freewill.—According to our Apocalypse,¹ the penalties which man has incurred through Adam's sin affect only his physical existence. He still preserves his freewill; whether he is saved or lost, it is his own doing. Adam's sin is limited in spiritual consequences to himself; every man is the Adam of his own soul (see pp. 44-45, 93).

¹ Only in B², xlviii. 42, is spiritual death traced to Adam. This passage may be interpolated; for (1) in all other passages in B² it is only physical death that is so traced. (2) It conflicts with the presupposition underlying B² that man can work righteousness and acquire merit as against God (see xiv. 7, note). (3) In A³ (see liv. 15, 19) original sin is denied and freewill asserted in the clearest terms. (4) The doctrine of original sin is unknown to the Talmud (see Weber, 217, 240; Edersheim, Life and Times, etc., i. 165). We have shown elsewhere (pp. lxix.-lxxi.) that the teaching of 4 Ezra on this subject is largely non-Jewish.

St. Paul's doctrine is strongly antagonistic. Both physical and spiritual death are due to Adam's sin. Owing to that sin man is henceforth dominated by a power (= original sin) which makes his fulfilment of law and therefore his realisation of righteousness impossible. He is not, however, robbed wholly thereby of freewill, but retains it in a degree only sufficient to justify his condemnation.

Works and Justification.—In our Apocalypse the righteous are saved by their works (li. 7), and their righteousness is of the law (lxvii. 6). In the consciousness of their justification by the law (li. 3) they can with confidence approach God and look to Him for the fulfilment of their prayers because of their works wherein they trust (lxiii. 3, 5; lxxxv. 2), and owing to the same ground of confidence they depart from this world full of hope (xiv. 12). But their works are not limited to themselves in their saving influences. So long as the righteous live, their righteousness is a tower of strength to their people (ii. 2), and after their death it remains to their country a lasting ground of merit (xiv. 7; lxxxiv. 10); see notes on xiv. 7; xxi. 9.

With every position here maintained Christianity is at variance, and rabbinic teaching in full accord.

Forgiveness.—How far did this doctrine exist in Pharisaic Judaism, and in what relation does it stand to the Christian doctrine of forgiveness? In Phari-saic Judaism forgiveness was a wholly subordinate conception, and can only be considered in conjunction with its views on merit and demerit. If we wish to discover the Pharisaic doctrine of forgiveness we must have recourse to the Talmud; for that the Pharisaic views of the first century on this subject were those which later prevailed in the Talmud, is to be inferred on these grounds:—(1) In Matt. iii. 9 the words “Think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our father,” show that the doctrine of the vicarious righteousness of Abraham was a popular belief. Now this latter doctrine at once presupposes and forms an organic part of the Talmudic doctrine. (2) The teaching on works in our Apocalypse and partially also in 4 Ezra, as well as that of St. Paul’s Jewish antagonists, belong also organically to the Talmudic doctrine of works and forgiveness.

The Talmudic doctrine of works may (see Weber, pp. 267-300) be shortly summarised as follows:—Every good work—whether the fulfilment of a command or an act of mercy—established a certain degree of merit with God, while every evil work entailed a corresponding demerit. A man’s position with God depended on the relation existing between his merits and demerits, and his salvation on the preponderance of the former over the latter. The relation between his merits and demerits was determined daily by the weighing of his deeds (see Eth. En. xli. 1; lxi. 8; Weber, 272). But as the results of such judgments were necessarily unknown, there could not fail to be much uneasiness, and to allay this the doctrine of the vicarious righteousness of the patriarchs and saints of Israel was developed, not later than the beginning of the Christian era (cf. Matt. iii. 9). A man could thereby summon to his aid the merits of the fathers, and so counterbalance his demerits.

It is obvious that such a system does not admit of forgiveness in any spiritual sense of the term. It can only mean in such a connection a remission of penalty to the offender, on the ground that compensation is furnished, either through his own merit or through that of the righteous fathers. Thus, as Weber vigorously puts it: "Vergebung ohne Bezahlung gibt es nicht."¹ Thus, according to popular Pharisaism, God never remitted a debt until He was paid in full, and so long as it was paid it mattered not by whom.

It will be observed that with the Pharisees forgiveness was an external thing; it was concerned not with the man himself but with his works—with these indeed as affecting him, but yet as existing independently without him. This was not the view taken by the best thought in the Old Testament. There forgiveness dealt first and chiefly with the direct relation between man's spirit and God; it was essentially a restoration of man to communion with God. When, therefore, Christianity had to deal with these problems, it could not accept the Pharisaic solutions, but had in some measure to return to the Old Testament to authenticate and develop the highest therein taught, and in the person and life of Christ to give it a world-wide power and comprehensiveness.

¹ In certain extraordinary cases, the divine forgiveness was conceived possible where no merit was at hand, see 4 Ezra viii. 36; Weber, 292, 300.

We thus see that forgiveness was conceived as (1) the restoration of man to communion with God; (2) the remission of penalty on the receipt of certain equivalents. Of these two the former alone is taught in the Gospels. In the Pauline Epistles, however, the writer maintains indeed the former as the essential element in forgiveness, but he also incorporates in some degree the latter conception, and not unnaturally as having been originally a Pharisee of the Pharisees. Thus in his doctrine of the Atonement, he introduces the Pharisaic conception by representing the penalty due to man's sin as endured by Christ. This is undoubtedly a more spiritual form of the Pharisaic doctrine, and rightly interpreted it preserves the element of truth which underlies the Pharisaic teaching. It needs, however, to be kept in complete subordination to the former. But that it has not been so kept is obvious from every page of the history of this doctrine since the Christian era. In every age this Pharisaic error has won an evil eminence in the Church—before the eleventh century in representing Christ's death as a debt paid to the devil in lieu of the latter's claim on man, and in the subsequent centuries as a sacrifice to the alleged unforgiveness of God. Wherever or whenever this evil leaven has appeared, it has been followed by shallowness, unreality, and every vice of the unspiritual life.

THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

[TRANSLATED FROM THE GREEK INTO SYRIAC]

I. AND it came to pass in the twenty-fifth year of I.-IV. 1=B¹.

THE FIRST SECTION

I.-V. 6. These chapters constitute the first of the seven sections into which, according to the scheme of the final editor, the book was originally divided by fasts. These sections were divided by fasts which generally lasted seven days (see v. 7, note; ix., note). In each section there is a definite movement or order of events observed. This order briefly is: first a fast, then a divine command or revelation, and finally the publication of the command or matter so revealed. In some cases a prayer follows the fast, and a lamentation the publication of the divine disclosure (see notes already referred to).

It will be observed that iv. 2-7 is interpolated probably from B².

In this section the word of the Lord comes to Baruch announcing the coming, though temporary, destruction of Jerusalem on account of the wickedness of the two tribes (i.); with a view to this destruction Baruch is to bid Jeremiah and the remaining righteous to withdraw (ii.); Baruch then in his alarm asks, will this destruction be final? will chaos return and the number of souls be completed (iii.)? God replies that the punishment is only temporary (iv. 1). Yet, rejoins Baruch, even so, the enemy will, by the pollution and fall of Zion, glory before their idols over the nation loved of God (v. 1). Not so, answers God; judgment must be executed on Judah, yet the heathen will have no cause to glory, for it is not they that will destroy Zion (v. 2, 3). Baruch thereupon assembled the people in the Cedron valley, and delivered the divine message; and the people wept (v. 5, 6).

I. [Translated from Greek into Syriac.] These words are found in their above position in the Syriac MS. As they were placed there either by the Syriac translator or a subsequent scribe, I have bracketed them. The statement they convey, however, is borne out by all other evidence. Thus we find (1) transliterations of Greek words; (2) renderings explicable only on the hypothesis that the translator followed the wrong meaning of the Greek word before him.

I. 1. In the twenty-fifth year of Jeconiah. Jeconiah was eighteen years when he began to reign in 599 (2 Kings xxiv. 8). After reigning three months he was carried into Jeconiah king of Judah, that the word of the Lord came to Baruch the son of Neriah, and said to him: 2. "Hast thou seen all that this people are doing to Me; that the evils which these two tribes which remained have done are greater than (those of) the ten tribes which were carried away captive? 3. For the former tribes were forced by their kings to commit sin, but these two of themselves have been forcing and compelling their kings to commit sin. 4. For this reason, behold I bring evil upon this city, and upon its inhabitants, and it will be removed from before Me for a time, and captivity. Yet during his captivity he is still called king (2 Kings xxv. 27; Jer. xxix. 2; Ezek. i. 2). Thus his twenty-fifth year would be 592, or two years before the approach of Nebuchadrezzar. It is no objection to this that, according to vi. 1, only one day and not two years should elapse between the prediction and its fulfilment; for in like manner the siege of Jerusalem, which lasted two years, is represented as lasting one day. The unities of time are sacrificed to suit the dramatic purposes of the writer. Why the writer spoke of Jeconiah and not of Zedekiah here, I cannot say. It was not from ignorance of the latter (cf. viii. 5).

The Lord. This title of God is found in iii. 1, 4; iv. 1; v. 2; x. 4, 18; xi. 3; xv. 1; xvii. 1; xxiv. 3; xxviii. 6; xlviii. 2; liv. 1, 20; lxxv. 1; lxxvii. 3. It is, therefore, not peculiar to any of the different elements of the book. This, however, may be due in part to the final editor. See note on iii. 1.

Baruch the son of Neriah. Cf. Jer. xxxii. 12; xxxvi. 4; Bar. i. 1.

2. The ten tribes. Elsewhere in this Apocalypse called "the nine and a half tribes." See lxxviii. 1, note.

3. Forced by their kings. I.e. by Jeroboam and others of the kings of Israel.

These two . . . compelling their kings to commit sin. It was in some instances the princes of Judah, and not Zedekiah, that resisted the teaching and prophecy of Jeremiah: cf. Jer. xxxviii.; and Josephus, Ant. x. 7. 2, ὁ δὲ Σεδεκίας ἐφ' ὅσον μὲν ἤκουε τοῦ προφήτου ταῦτα λέγοντος, ἐπέιθετο αὐτῷ, καὶ συνήδει πᾶσιν ὡς ἀληθεύουσι . . . διέφθειραν δὲ πάλιν αὐτὸν οἱ φίλοι, καὶ διήγον ἀπὸ τῶν τοῦ προφήτου πρὸς ἅπερ ἤθελον.

4. I bring evil upon this city, and upon its inhabitants (2 Kings xxii. 16; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 28; Jer. vi. 19; xix. 3, etc.)

Will be removed from before Me (2 Kings xxiii. 27; xxiv. 3; Jer. xxxii. 31).

For a time. This phrase recurs in iv. 1; vi. 9; xxxii. 3. Since we must on other grounds regard xxxii. 2-4 in its present context as an interpolation, this phrase is peculiar to i.-viii., i.e. to B¹. Although Jerusalem has fallen under the Romans, the writer of these chapters believes that its desolation will be but "for a time." The future restoration of

I will scatter this people among the Gentiles that they may do good to the Gentiles. 5. And My people will be chastened, and the time will come when they will seek for the prosperity of their times.

II. "For I have said these things to thee that thou mayst say (them) to Jeremiah, and to all those who are like you, in order that ye may retire from this city. 2. Because your works are to this city as a firm pillar, and your prayers as a strong wall."

Jerusalem is implied also in lxxvii. 6; lxxviii. 7, where the return of the ten tribes is foretold. In B², i.e. ix.-xxvi.; xxxi.-xxxv.; xli.-xliii.; xlv. 9-15; xlvii.-lii.; lxxxiii.; B³, i.e. lxxxv., no such restoration is looked for; Jerusalem is removed, xx. 2 (see note in loc.), in order to usher in the judgment more speedily; in x. 10 the writer abandons all hope of a restored Jerusalem.

Scatter this people, etc. Jer. xxx. 11; Ezek. xxxvi. 19.

Do good to the Gentiles. This seems to mean to make proselytes of the Gentiles. Cf. xli. 4; xlii. 5; see also xiii. 12.

5. My people will be chastened. Cf. xiii. 10; xiv.; lxxix. 2; Pss. Sol. vii. 3; x. 1-3; xiii. 6-8; xviii. 4.

Seek for the prosperity of their times. The writer looks forward to a Messianic kingdom or period of blessedness for Israel on earth.

II. 1. According to Jer. xxxviii. 13, 28, Jeremiah was a prisoner in the court of the guard till the capture of Jerusalem.

Jeremiah is mentioned again in v. 5; ix.; x. 2, 4.

Those who are like you. This phrase is found in three of the sections of this book (cf. xxi. 24; lvii. 1; lix. 1; lxvi. 7). Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 36; viii. 51, 62; xiv. 9, 49.

Withdraw from the city. This reappears in the Rest of the Words of Baruch i. 1: "Jeremiah . . . go forth from this city." Cf. also i. 3, 7. The reason for this command appears in the Talmud. Thus, as in Taanith, 19, we are told that a house cannot fall so long as a good man is in it; so in Pesikta, 115b (Buber's edition, 1868), it is said: "So long as Jeremiah was in Jerusalem, it was not destroyed, but when he went forth from it, it was destroyed."

2. Your works are to this city as a firm pillar, etc. We have here quite an illegitimate application of Jer. vi. 27: "I have made thee a tower and a fortress among my people." It is, however, a natural inference from Gen. xviii. 23-33. This verse is reproduced in the Rest of the Words of Baruch i. 2: αἱ γὰρ προσευχαὶ ὑμῶν ὡς στῦλος ἐδραῖος ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῆς, καὶ ὡς τεῖχος ἀδαμάντινον περικυκλοῦν αὐτήν. It will be remarked that the reference to "works" is omitted by this latter book, as we should naturally expect in a work of Christian authorship.

Your works. On the doctrine of works taught in this book see note on xiv. 7.

III. And I said: "O LORD, my Lord, have I come into the world for this purpose that I might see the evils of my mother? not (so) my Lord. 2. If I have found grace in Thy sight, first take my spirit that I may go to my fathers and not behold the destruction of my mother. 3. For two things vehemently constrain me: for I cannot resist Thee, and my soul,

III. 1. O LORD, my Lord. This title of God is found also in xiv. 8, 16; xvi. 1; xxiii. 1; xxxviii. 1; xlviii. 4, 5, and is thus, except in one instance, confined to B and B¹. It is remarkable that, whereas it is used only of God in the Apocalypse of Baruch, in 4 Ezra it is a designation of God in five instances (iii. 4; v. 23; vi. 38 (in Syriac, Eth., and Arm. versions); xii. 7; xiii. 51), and of an angel in six (iv. 38; v. 38; vi. 11; vii. 17, 58, 75). This fact makes it probable that the introduction of the angel in 4 Ezra is the work of the final editor. The usual titles used in addressing an angel in that book are dominus meus (iv. 3, 5; v. 33; vii. 3; x. 34). This is applied also to Ezra in ix. 41; domine (iv. 22, 41; v. 34, 35, 41, 56; vii. 10, 53, 132; viii. 6, 20, 36, 63). These last two titles are probably equivalents of אֲדֹנָי which is employed in Dan. x. 17, 19, in addressing an angel. The words אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהֵינוּ are to be rendered O LORD, my Lord as above and not Dominator Domine, as we find in Ceriani and Fritzsche. Linguistically indeed either rendering is right, but the frequent occurrence of this phrase in the Syriac Version of 4 Ezra enables us to see that the suffix is not moribund but living; for it appears in the Ethiopic Version and occasionally in the Armenian. The Syriac is a translation either of δέσποτα κύριέ μου or κύριε κύριέ σου; these in turn would point either to אֲדֹנָי יְהוָה, as in Gen. xv. 2, 8, or אֲדֹנָי יְהוֹיָה. Since such titles could only be used of God, we can with certainty conclude that their attribution to an angel in 4 Ezra is due to gross confusions or interpolations in the text.

My mother. Cf. iii. 2, 3; x. 16; Baruch iv. 9-16. This was a very natural term for a Jew to apply to Jerusalem. We find the correlative expression in Isa. xlix. 21; Matt. xxiii. 37; Gal. iv. 25. It is the earthly Jerusalem that is referred to here, for the writer of B¹ looks for a restored earthly Zion (see note on i. 4). Again the same title is applied to the fallen Jerusalem in 4 Ezra x. 7: "Sion mater nostra omnium," though there the writer looks for the restoration of Zion. In Gal. iv. 26 St. Paul uses it of the heavenly Jerusalem; for he has no further interest in the earthly. The earthly was the mother of Jews, but the heavenly of Christians. The earthly Jerusalem, as we should expect, in Matt. v. 35 is still "the city of the great King."

O Lord. See i. 1, note.

2. If I have found grace. xxviii. 6; 4 Ezra v. 56; vii. 102; viii. 42; xii. 7.

Take my spirit. An O. T. expression (cf. Ps. xxxi. 13; Jer. xv. 15).

Go to my fathers. xlv. 2; cf. also xi. 4; lxxxv. 9; Gen. xv. 15.

moreover, cannot behold the evils of my mother. 4. But one thing I will say in Thy presence, O Lord. 5. What, therefore, will there be after these things? for if Thou destroyest Thy city, and deliverest up Thy land to those that hate us, how shall the name of Israel be again remembered? 6. Or how shall one speak of Thy praises? or to whom shall that which is in Thy law be explained? 7. Or shall the world return to its nature (of aforetime), and the age revert to primeval silence? 8. And shall the multitude of souls be taken away, and the nature of man not again be named? 9. And where is all that which Thou didst say to Moses regarding us?"

IV. And the Lord said unto me: "This city will be delivered up for a time, and the people will be 4-IV. 1. Baruch asks God if the end of all things will follow on the delivery of Jerusalem into the hands of its enemies; will Israel be blotted out? will there be no longer any students of the law? will all men die and chaos return? In iv. 1 God answers that Jerusalem will again be restored; the chastisement of its people soon be accomplished and chaos will not return. The writer thus looks forward to the returning felicity of Jerusalem.

III. 6. To whom shall that which is in Thy law be explained? The real answer to this question is given in Baruch's own words in xlv. 4.

7. We should observe that the Syriac word ܐܡܝܢ, here translated "world," really means "ornament." Thus the translator followed a wrong sense of κόσμος here.

Revert to primeval silence. Cf. 4

Ezra vii. 30. In. iv. 1 this is answered in the negative, but in xlv. 9 (i.e. B²) in the affirmative.

IV. 2-7. In these verses we have an undoubted interpolation. The earthly Jerusalem, the restoration of which has just been promised, is here derided. This of itself is suspicious. When, however, we turn to vi. 9 and see there that the very Jerusalem that is now delivered up to its foes will hereafter be restored, and that for ever, the incongruity of these verses with their present context emerges still more clearly. This incongruity is still further emphasised when we observe that the actual vessels of the earthly temple are committed to the earth by an angel, that they may be preserved for future use in the restored Jerusalem (vi. 7-9). The vessels of the heavenly Jerusalem would naturally be of a heavenly kind, and are in fact already there (iv. 5).

chastened during a time, and the world will not be given over to oblivion. 2. [Dost thou think that this is that city of which I said: 'On the palms of My hands have I graven thee'? 3. It is not this building which is now built in your midst; (it is) that which will be revealed with Me, that which was pre-

2. It is noteworthy that the words "On the palms of My hands," etc., which are taken from Isa. xlix. 16, agree letter for letter with the Syriac Version, which here stands alone against the Mass., LXX., and Vulg., in presupposing על כפות יד instead of Mass. על כפים. This fuller phrase which the Syriac presupposes is the usual one (cf. 1 Sam. v. 4; 2 Kings ix. 35; Dan. x. 10).

3. It is not this building . . . (it is) that which will be revealed. These words represent one of the final stages of a movement which had already its beginnings in the O. T. Throughout the O. T. Jerusalem had always been singled out as the one place on earth in which it had pleased God to dwell, and with which He had inseparably connected His name. But from the growing transcendence and enlargement of the idea of God, combined with the deepened consciousness of sin, and the consequent sense of the unfitnes of Jerusalem as God's habitation, the doctrine of a heavenly Jerusalem complete in all its parts came to be evolved.

Of the existence indeed of heavenly antitypes of the Tabernacle and its furniture we are told already in the Priest's Code (Exod. xxv. 9, 40, cf. Heb. viii. 5). It needed only a step further to postulate the existence of the heavenly temple and city. That the earthly copies needed to be purified or even wholly renewed, we are taught in Isa. lx.; Ezek. xl.-xlviii.; but that nothing else could suffice save the actual descent of the heavenly Jerusalem to the earth was not concluded till the revival of religion under the early Maccabees. In Isa. liv. 11 and Tob. xiii. 16, 17, there are highly figurative accounts of the rebuilding of Jerusalem, but it is the earthly. The first actual emergence of the idea of the heavenly seems to be in the Eth. En. xc. 28, 29, where the old Jerusalem is removed and the new is brought and set up by God Himself, though even there a prior existence is not assigned to the latter. This would be about 164 B.C. But the older ideas still held their ground. Thus in the Psalms of Solomon xvii. 25, 33 (circ. 70-40 B.C.), as in the oldest part of the Eth. En. x. 16-19; xxv. 1 (circ. 180 B.C.), the purification of Jerusalem is all that appears needful to the writers as a preparation for the Messianic kingdom. Even when we come down to the first century of the Christian era, such purification is deemed sufficient for the temporary Messianic kingdoms depicted in Apoc. Bar. xxix.; xxxix.-xl.; lxxii.-lxxiv.; Ezra vii. 27-30 (for vii. 26 is an interpolation, as Kabisch points out); xii. 32-34; and possibly in xiii. 32-50, where xiii. 36 seems also an intrusion. In all these passages a Messiah is expected. In B¹ of the Apoc. Bar. i.e. vi. 9, Jerusalem is to be restored pared beforehand here from the time when I took counsel to make Paradise, and showed it to Adam before he sinned, but when he transgressed the commandment, it was removed from him, as also Paradise. 4. And after these things I showed it to My and to be established for ever, but this is not the new Jerusalem coming down from heaven. The latter is mentioned in xxxii. 2-4. It was indeed a very current conception in the latter half of the first century A.D. Thus we find it in Gal. iv. 26; Heb. xii. 22; Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10. In Gal. iv. 26 the heavenly Jerusalem is a symbol of the spiritual commonwealth of which the Christian is even now a member. But in Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10, it is an actual city, the counterpart of the earthly Jerusalem, with its own buildings and vessels. Here we should probably class the passage in Test. Dan. v. This city was to descend from heaven, but this expectation does not apparently lie at the base of Heb. xii. 22. Similar conceptions to that found in Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2, 10, appear in 4 Ezra viii. 52, 53; x. 44-59; and also in vii. 26 and xiii. 36, though we must regard one or both of the last two as interpolated. With these last we might reckon also the heavenly Jerusalem mentioned in the text. The heavenly Jerusalem is variously described as the véa (Test. Dan. v.), ἡ ἄνω (Gal. iv. 26), καινή (Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2), ἐρουπάριος (Heb. xii. 22). It was created in the beginning of creation, and preserved in heaven. It was shown to Adam before he sinned. To Adam indeed the heavens had been open originally (Slav. En. xxxi. 2; Philo, Quaest. xxxii. in Gen.; Book of Adam and Eve, i. 8); but when he transgressed the commandment the vision of the heavenly Jerusalem was taken from him and likewise the possession of Paradise. Among the Rabbins the heavenly Jerusalem was called ירושלים של מעלה (= ἡ ἄνω Ἱερουσαλήμ). For the various Rabbinic conceptions regarding it, see Schöttgen, de Hieros. Coelest. in his Horae Hebr. 1205 sqq.; Meuschen, N.T. ex Talm. ill. p. 199 sqq.; Bertholdt, Christologia, 217-220; Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, ii. 839-845; Weber, Lehren d. Talmud, 356-359, 386.

Took counsel to make Paradise. Which Paradise is this? The context might support either. For we might regard it as the Paradise which is kept in heaven like the heavenly Jerusalem. Adam could see both before his fall, but after it he lost the vision of both. It may, however, be the earthly Paradise in which he was placed at the first. The period to which the creation of the earthly Paradise is assigned varies. In Gen. ii. 8-17 it is apparently one of the last works of the creation. When, however, we come down to the Christian era, its creation was attributed to the third day (Jub. ii. 7; Slav. En. xxx. 1). The heavenly Paradise, on the other hand, is described as already existing before the creation of the world either actually or in the mind of God (see Pesach. 54a; Beresh. 20 in Weber L. d. T. 191).

4. I showed it to My servant Abraham. There is naturally no mention of this in Gen. xv. 9-21; but in the Beresh. rabba on Gen. xxviii. 17 we are told that this servant Abraham by night among the portions of the victims. 5. And again also I showed it to Moses on Mount Sinai when I showed to him the likeness of the tabernacle and all its vessels. 6. And now, behold, it is preserved with Me, as also Paradise. 7. Go, therefore, and do as I command thee.”]

V.-IX. 1=B¹.

V. And I answered and said: “I shall, therefore, be in great straits in Zion, because Thine enemies will come to that place and pollute Thy sanctuary, and lead Thine inheritance into captivity, and will lord it over those whom Thou hast loved, and they will depart again to the place of their idols, and will boast before them. And what wilt Thou do for Thy great name?” 2. And the Lord said unto me: “My name and My glory have an eternal duration; My judgment, moreover, will preserve its rights in its own time. 3. And thou wilt see with thine eyes that the enemy will not overthrow Zion, nor burn Jerusalem, but be subservient to the judge for a time. 4. But do thou go and do whatsoever I have said unto thee.” 5. And I went and took Jeremiah, and Adu, and Seriah, and Jabish, vision was accorded to Jacob when sleeping at Bethel.

5. Cf. Exod. xxv. 9, 40.

6. See note on verse 3.

7. As I command thee. A frequently recurring phrase (cf. v. 4; x. 4; xxi. 1; 4 Ezra v. 20; xii. 51).

V. 1. Thine inheritance. Deut. iv. 20; ix. 26, etc.; Rest of Words of Baruch, ii. 7; iii. 6.

Whom Thou hast loved. Ephes. xxi. 20; 4 Ezra iv. 23.

Boast before them. Cf. vii. 1; lxxvii. 2, 7; lxxx. 3; Rest of Words of Baruch, i. 5; iv. 7.

What wilt Thou do, etc. Joshua vii. 9; cf. 4 Ezra iv. 25; x. 22.

2. My name and My glory, etc. Ps. cxxxv. 13.

My judgment, moreover, will preserve its rights. This phrase in a slightly different form recurs in xlvi. 27, and lxxxv. 9.

3. This is carried out in vi. 5; vii.

4. This refers to the command given in ii. 1.

5. Adu. There is a priest of this name who went up with Zerubbabel (Neh. xii. 4). According to Mass. he is called Iddo, but both the and Gedaliah, and all the honourable men of the people, and I led them to the valley of Cedron, and I narrated to them all that had been said to me. 6. And they lifted up their voice, and they all wept. 7. And we sat there and fasted until the evening.

VI. And it came to pass on the morrow that, lo!

Syriac and Vulgate give Addo. In Ezra viii. 17 another Iddo is mentioned who returned with Ezra from Babylon.

Seriah. This Seriah was brother of Baruch and chief chamberlain of Zedekiah. He went with the latter to Babylon (see Jer. li. 59, 61).

Jabish. This name has been identified with 'Iγαβής = יָבִישׁ (1 Chron. iv. 9), but both the form of the name and the time of Jabez are against this identification.

Gedaliah. This is Gedaliah the son of Ahikam (see Jer. xl. 14). But Gedaliah might also be from Γοθολίας = גּוֹתְלִיָּה (cf. 1 Chron. viii. 26) a companion of Ezra (see Ezra viii. 7). Gedaliah is again mentioned in xlv. 1 in a fragment of B¹.

Cedron, i.e. קְרִדּוֹן (2 Sam. xv. 23). The valley of the Cedron is again the scene of Baruch's fast in xxi. 1, and of an assembly of the people in xxxi. 2.

Narrated to them, etc. After most of the revelations which Baruch receives, he makes known their disclosures to his friends and the elders of the people (see x. 4; xxxi. 3-xxxii. 7; xlv.-xlvi.; lxxvii. 1-17). There is no need of such a disclosure in the second section, i.e. v. 7-viii., and such disclosure is forbidden in the fourth, i.e. xii. 5-xx.

THE SECOND SECTION

V. 7-VIII. This is a short section. First there is the fast of one day (v. 1). Thereupon to Baruch in his grief (vi. 2) is disclosed a vision. In this he sees the sacred vessels committed to the earth for a season and the city destroyed by angels, lest the enemy should triumph (vi. 3-vii.) The realisation of this vision which follows thereupon dispenses with the need of its publication by Baruch (viii.)

7. Fasted until the evening. The other fasts mentioned are of seven days. Of these there are four (see ix. 2; xii. 5; xxi. 1; xlvii. 2). The symmetry of the book would require another such fast after xxxv. For the scheme of the final editor is first a fast, then generally a prayer, then a divine message or revelation, then an announcement of this either to an individual, as in v. 5; x. 4, or to the people (xxx. 2-xxxiv.; xlv.-xlvi.; lxxvii. 1-17), followed occasionally by a lamentation. In xx. 5, at the close of the fourth section, Baruch is bidden to make no announcement.

It will be observed that this scheme is broken through in the fifth section only, i.e. in xxi.-xlvi., where there is a fast, a prayer, an address to the people followed by a lament over Zion, a revelation and an address to the people (see ix. 2, note). In 4 Ezra there are four fasts of seven days (see v. 20; vi. 35; ix. 26, 27; xii. 51).

VI. 1. On the following morning, etc. These words are reproduced in Rest of Words (iv. 1).

the army of the Chaldees surrounded the city, and at the time of the evening I, Baruch, left the people, and I went forth and stood by the oak. 2. And I was grieving over Zion, and lamenting over the captivity which had come upon the people. 3. And, lo! suddenly a strong spirit raised me, and bore me aloft over the wall of Jerusalem. 4. And I beheld, and lo! four angels standing at the four angles of the city, each of them holding a lamp of fire in his hands. 5. And another angel began to descend from heaven, and said unto them: "Hold your lamps, and do not light them till I tell you. 6. For I am first sent to speak a word to the earth, and to place in it what the Lord the Most High has commanded me." 7. And I saw him descend into the Holy of Holies, and take from thence the veil,

By the oak. This oak is outside the city; for in ii. 1 Jeremiah and all that were like him were bidden to leave the city. This they and Baruch did in v. 5, and they fasted in the valley of the Cedron. On the following day the Chaldees surround the city. On that day Baruch left Jeremiah and the rest and went forth (probably from the cavern in the Cedron valley mentioned in xxi. 1) and stood by the oak. The oak thus appears to be near or in the Cedron valley, and thus in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem. This oak is mentioned again in lxxvii. 18. We are not, therefore, to compare this oak with the well-known one at Hebron, as Fritzsche, who compares LXX.; Gen. xiii. 18; xiv. 13; xviii. 1.

It is noteworthy that no mention of this oak appears in B². In B¹ it is found twice (vi. 1 and lxxvii.

18). A tree is referred to in A³ in lv. 1.

3. As the Chaldeans encompassed Jerusalem, Baruch was unable to draw near to the wall. But a strong angel lifts him on high above the wall.

4. Cf. Rev. vii. 1, "I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth"; Rest of Words of Bar. iii. 2.

5. Cf. Rev. vii. 2; Rest of Words, iii. 4.

6. The office of the angel here is executed by Jeremiah in Rest of Words, iii. 8.

The Lord the Most High. Occurs here only in this book. It is not found in 4 Ezra.

7. Take from thence, etc. According to Josephus, Bell. V. 5, 5, the Holy of Holies in Herod's temple was empty.

See Appendix for a similar account and the holy ephod, and the mercy-seat, and the two tables, and the holy raiment of the priests, and the altar of incense, and the forty-eight precious stones, wherewith the priest was adorned, and all the holy vessels of the tabernacle. 8. And he spake to the earth with a loud voice: "Earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the mighty God, and receive what I commit to thee, and guard them until the last times, so that, when thou art ordered, thou mayst restore them, so that strangers may not get possession of them. 9. For the time comes when Jerusalem also will be delivered up for a time, until it is said, that it is again restored for ever. 10. And the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up."

VII. And after these things I heard that angel sayin Macc. The veil, i.e. כִּתְרוֹת (Exod. xxvi. 31). The ephod, i.e. אֵפֹד (Exod. xxix. 5).

Mercy-seat, כַּפֹּרֶת (Exod. xxv. 17). Forty-eight precious stones. How this number is made up I cannot discover. There were twelve stones on the breastplate (Exod. xxviii. 15-21), and two on the ephod (Exod. xxviii. 9).

The altar of incense. The Syriac implies θυμιατήριον, which in Josephus and Philo = מִזְבֵּחַ הַקְטֹרֶת. See Appendix.

According to Bammidbar rabba, 15, five things were taken away and preserved on the destruction of Solomon's temple: the candlestick, the ark, the fire, the Holy Spirit, and the cherubim.

8. In the Rest of Words, iii. 8, these words in a greatly altered shape are attributed to Jeremiah.

Earth . . . of the mighty God; drawn from Jer. xxii. 29. Text agrees with Mass., Syr., Vulg., against LXX., which gives "earth" only twice.

Mighty God. This title recurs in vii. 1, and xiii. 2, 4. It is not found in 4 Ezra.

Guard them until the last times. Cf. Rest of Words, iii. 8, "Preserve the vessels of worship until the coming of the Beloved."

That . . . thou mayst restore them, i.e. for use in the temple of the rebuilt Jerusalem.

That strangers may not get possession of them (cf. x. 19). For a slightly different reason see lxxv. 2.

9. For a time. See i. 4, note.

Restored for ever. It is not necessary to take the phrase "for ever" literally. In any case a Messianic kingdom of indefinite duration is looked forward to with Jerusalem as its centre, and likewise the temple in which the sacred vessels of the former temple will again be used. During this kingdom the dispersion will again return to Palestine (lxxvii. 6; lxxviii. 7, notes).

ing unto those angels who held the lamps: "Destroy, therefore, and overthrow its walls to its foundations, lest the enemy should boast and say: 'We have overthrown the wall of Zion, and we have burnt the place of the mighty God.'" 2. And the Spirit restored me to the place where I had been standing before.

VIII. Now the angels did as he had commanded them, and when they had broken up the angles of the walls, a voice was heard from the interior of the temple, after the wall had fallen, saying: 2. "Enter ye enemies, and come ye adversaries; for He who kept the house has forsaken (it)." 3. And I, Baruch, departed. 4. And it came to pass after these things that the army of the Chaldees entered and seized the house, and all that was around it. 5. And they led the people away captive, and slew some of them, and bound Zedekiah the king, and sent him to the king of Babylon.

VII. 1. Destroy, therefore, and overthrow, etc. Cf. v. 3; lxxx. 1.

Boast. Cf. v. 1; lxvii. 2, 7; lxxx. 3; Rest of Words, i. 5; Ps. xxxv. 19; xxxviii. 16; Eccclus. xxiii. 3; Pss. Sol. xiii. 7, ἐν περιστολῇ παιδεύεται δίκαιος, ἵνα μὴ ἐπιχαρῇ ὁ ἁμαρτωλὸς τῷ δικαίῳ.

Mighty God. See vi. 8, note.

2. And the Spirit restored me. I have here made a necessary emendation of the text. Thus I have emended ⲙⲉⲛⲟⲩⲟⲩⲛ = "and you have seized it," into ⲙⲟⲩⲟⲩⲛ ⲙⲉⲛⲟⲩⲟⲩ, "And the spirit restored me." The unamended text gives no sense, whereas the change just made restores the harmony of the context. Thus in vi. 31, "a strong spirit" carried Baruch aloft in order to see the vision. After the vision this spirit restores him to where he had been before. From this place Baruch departs in viii. 3.

VIII. 1. Cf. vii. 1; lxxx. 1.

2. Cf. Rest of Words, iv. 1. He who kept the house has forsaken (it). Cf. Josephus, De Bello Jud. vi. 5. 3: μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα (ἀντιλαβέσθαι) καὶ φωνῆς ἀθρόας μεταβαλῶμεν ἐν τεύθειν.

Tacitus, Hist. v. 13, "Et apertae repente delubri fores et audita major humana vox, excedere deos."

5. Led . . . away captive. lxxx. 4; Rest of Words, iv. 2.

Bound Zedekiah the king, and sent, etc. Whatever explanation we give of i. 1, it is clear from these words that the writer was acquainted with the history of the kings of Judah and the captivity of Judah under Zedekiah.

IX. And I, Baruch, came, and Jeremiah, whose heart was found pure from sins, who had not been captured in the seizure of the city. 2. And we rent our garments, and wept, and mourned, and fasted seven days.

IX. 2-X. 5 =
E and B².

X. And it came to pass after seven days, that the word of the Lord was upon me, and said unto me: "Tell Jeremiah to go and confirm the captivity of the Bound and sent to the king of Babylon. Cf. lxxx. 4.

IX. 1. Heart . . . pure from sin. Contrast the "wicked heart" in 4 Ezra iii. 20, 21, 26; iv. 4, etc. In Pss. Sol. xvii. 41, the Messiah is said to be καθαρός ἀπὸ ἀμαρτίας.

THE THIRD SECTION

IX. 2-XII. 4. We have first the fast of seven days amid the ruins of Zion (ix., cf. x. 3). Then the word of the Lord comes to Baruch and bids him to tell Jeremiah to go to Babylon (x. 2), and promises a revelation of what should be in the end (x. 3). Then follows Baruch's announcement of the divine message to Jeremiah (x. 4). The section closes with Baruch's lament before the gates of the temple over Zion (x. 5-xii. 4).

We have shown below that x. 6-xii. 4 comes probably from the hand of a Sadducean priest.

IX. 2. Fasted seven days. See v. 7, note. This is the first fast of seven days. It is observed amid the ruins of Zion (cf. x. 3). There are three others to follow, though, as we have shown in the note just referred to, there should be four. The insertion of the fasts in their present positions is the work of the final editor. There seem to have been fasts in his sources (B¹ and B²).

Fasting was the usual preparation for the reception of supernatural communications (cf. Dan. ix. 3, 20-21, and all the instances in this book and 4 Ezra cited in note on v. 7). In Test. Jos. iii. there is likewise a fast of seven days (Armenian Version), and in 2 Macc. xiii. 12, and Ass. Mosis ix. 6, of three days.

The scene of the first and fourth fasts is Cedron; of the second and sixth, Mount Zion; of the third, the gates of the temple; the account of the fourth is lost.

X. 1. God. This word is found only twice again, i.e. liv. 12; lxxxii. 9. Its use is more frequent in 4 Ezra (see vii. 19, 20, 21, 79; viii. 58; ix. 45; x. 16).

2. The divine communication that follows on the fast consists of a command to be given through Baruch to Jeremiah. Jeremiah is bidden to go to Babylon. We have here a violation of historical truth. According to Jer. xliii. 4-7, both Jeremiah and Baruch were carried down into Egypt. In the Apocryphal Baruch i. 1, Baruch is represented as being in Babylon five years after the capture of Jerusalem. In the Rest of Words, iv. 5, Jeremiah was dragged an unwilling captive to Babylon, whereas in our text he goes there at the bidding of God. The words "go and confirm the captivity" recur in xxxiii. 2.

people unto Babylon. 3. But do thou remain here amid the desolation of Zion, and I will show to thee after these days what will befall at the end of days."

4. And I said to Jeremiah as the Lord commanded me.

5. And he, indeed, departed with the people, but I, Baruch, returned and sat before the gates of the temple, and I lamented with that lamentation over Zion and

X. 6.-XII. 4 = said: 6. "Blessed is he who was not born, or being B² or S.

It is probable that the references to Jeremiah in connection with Babylon belong to B²; for it is noteworthy that in lxxvii. 17, 19; lxxx. 4; lxxxv. 6, Baruch always speaks of writing to the brethren in Babylon, but never to Jeremiah. This would be strange if the writer believed Jeremiah to be there. The people also urge Baruch in lxxvii. 12 to write to their brethren in Babylon to confirm them. Now if Jeremiah were in charge of the people there, as x. 2, 5; xxxiii. 2, clearly imply, any letter of Baruch to Babylon would have been addressed to him. As a matter of fact, in the Rest of Words of Baruch, when Baruch writes to Babylon, he directs the letter to Jeremiah.

It is probable, therefore, that the account of B¹ does not conflict with Jer. xliii., where Johanan takes Jeremiah with him down into Egypt.

3. Baruch is commanded to remain among the ruins of Zion, and is promised a revelation of what will befall in the last days. The words "after these days" show that this revelation will be accorded on a future occasion, after a fast, no doubt.

At the end of days. Cf. xxv. 1.

5. Before the gates of the temple. This is the scene of the following lamentation of Baruch, and probably of the fast in xii. 5. It is again the scene of his lamentation in xxxv. 1.

A passage in the beginning of the Apoc. Bar. Tert. seems to be derived from our text: οὕτως ἐκάθητο ἐπὶ τὰς ὥρας πύλας θοῦ ἐκεῖτο τὰ τῶν ἀγίων ἄγια. Mount Zion, on the other hand, is the scene where revelations are accorded to him (cf. xiii. 1; xxi. 2; xlvii. 2).

X. 6-XII. 4. This fragment appears to be the work of a Sadducee—probably a Sadducean priest writing just after the fall of the temple. For (1) in x. 6 and xi. 7 we have a thoroughly Sadducean sentiment, i.e. it were best not to be born at all, or, being born, to die; for the dead enjoy a sorrowless rest and a tranquil sleep (xi. 4); they know not the anguish of the living (xi. 5). No resurrection of the individual or of the nation is looked for, but only that retribution in due course may come upon the enemies of Israel (xii. 4). (2) The conception of Sheol in xi. 6 is Sadducean. (3) In x. 6-xii. 4 we have the saddest dirge in the Jewish literature of the time. This might well be; for for the priesthood there was no future. As false stewards they relinquish their charge and restore the keys of the temple to God (x. 18). Never again should sacrifices be offered in Zion (x. 10).

X. 6. Blessed is he who was not born, etc. Similar expressions of pessimism and despair return time and again in the later literature of Judaism. But in this passage and in xi. 7 the born has died. 7. But as for us who live, woe unto us, because we see the afflictions of Zion, and what has befallen Jerusalem. 8. I will call the Sirens phrase is used with a significance that severs it from all other instances of its occurrence. For whereas repeatedly elsewhere, as we shall see presently, it is said that it were better man had never been born because of sin and future condemnation, here non-existence or death is said to be preferable to witnessing the present woes of Jerusalem. Lest we should suppose this to be an accidental exaggeration, we should observe that it recurs in an intensified form in xi. 7, where the state of the dead in Sheol is said to be better than that of the living. Such a sentiment was impossible for the Pharisaic author of B², or indeed for any of the authors of this Apocalypse. It is a genuinely Sadducean sentiment, and the conception of Sheol in xi. 6, 7 is likewise Sadducean—practically that of the O. T. or of Hades in the Greek world. To a Pharisee no condition of earthly life could in any way approach the horrors of the existence of the wicked in the after-world.

In 4 Ezra and elsewhere, as we have remarked, quite a different turn is given to the expression in our text. There it is said that it were better man had not been at all than be born and have to face future torment and judgment. Thus in vii. 66 the writer declares: "It is much better for them (i.e. the beasts of the field) than for us; for they expect not a judgment and know not of torments." Again in vii. 116, 117, it is urged that "it would have been best not to have given a body to Adam, or, that being done, to have restrained him from sin; for what profit is there that man should in the present life live in heaviness and after death look for punishment?" Finally, in iv. 12 the nexus of life, sin and suffering, just referred to is put still more strongly: "It were better we had not been born at all than that we should be born and live in sin and suffer." A perfect parallel to the last passage is found in the Slav. En. xli. 2: "Blessed is the man who was not born, or, having been born, has never sinned . . . so that he should not come into this place (i.e. hell);" and to 4 Ezra vii. 116, 117, in the Eth. En. xxxviii. 2, where it is said, in reference to the future destiny of the wicked: "It had been good for them if they had not been born." For a N. T. parallel see Matt. xxvi. 24. It is worth observing that there is a perfect parallelism of thought between the passage in our text and in Sophocles, Oed. Col., 1220—μη φῦναι τὸν ἅπαντα νικᾷ λόγον · τὸ δ', ἐπεὶ φανῇ, βῆναι κείθεν ὄθεν περ ἤ-κει, πολὺ δεύτερον ὡς τάχιστα, and in Theognis, 425—

πάντων μὲν μὴ φῦναι ἐπιχθονίοισιν ἄριστον, μὴ εἶσιδεν αὐγάς ὀξέος ἡελίου · φύντα δ' ὅπως ὤκιστα πύλας Αἰδαο περῆσαι, καὶ κείσθαι πολλὴν γῆν ἐπαμησάμενον.

8. Sirens. These are said in the Eth. En. xix. 2 (Greek Version) to have been the wives of the angels who went astray. It is strange that we have here the Greek conception of the Sirens, Σειρῆνες, i.e. that of sea-nymphs. But with the Greek translators of the O. T. it had quite a different meaning. Thus it is a from the sea, and ye Lilin, come ye from the desert, and ye Shedim and dragons from the forests: awake and bind your loins unto mourning, and take up with me lamentation, and mourn with me. 9. Ye husbandmen, sow not again; and thou, earth, wherefore givest thou the fruits of thy produce? keep within thee the sweets of thy sustenance. 10. And thou, vine, why further dost thou give thy wine? for an offering will rendering of בנות יענה = ostriches in Isa. xiii. 21; Jer. l. 39; Mic. i. 8; of הנים or הננין = jackals in Isa. xxxiv. 13; xliii. 20. It is similarly used by Symmachus, Theodotion, and Aquila in rendering the above words.

Lelito. These are the Lilin (לילין) from the singular Lilith (לילית). Male and female demons named Lil and Lilit belong to Assyrian and Babylonian demonology. They were thought, as were also the Lilin (Shabbath, 151b), to attack men and women in their sleep (Lenormant, La Magie, p. 36). The Lilith, or night demon, is mentioned in Isa. xxxiv. 14, along with the satyr שִׁטְרִי. The Lilin, according to the Talmud, were female demons corresponding to the Shedim or male demons. They were partly the offspring (Erub, 18b; Beresh. 42) of Adam and Lilith, Adam's first wife, a demon, and partly were derived from the generation that God dispersed (Gen. xi.), for God (Jalkut Shim., Beresh. 62) transformed that generation into Shedim, Ruchin, and Lilin. These Lilin inhabited desert places. They were said to kill children. They have been compared with the Lamiae and Striges; δνοκένταυροι is the LXX. rendering of the word in Isa. xxxiv. 14. For further details on the subject see Weber, Lehren d. Talm., pp. 245, 246, 248; Bochart, Hierozaicon; iii. 829-831; Eisenmenger, Entd. Judenthum, ii. 413-426, 452.

Shedim. These were male demons to which various origins were assigned. Their souls were created by God, but as the Sabbath intervened before they received bodies they had to remain without them (Beresh. rabba, c. 7); or they were sprung from Adam and a demon wife, or from Eve and a demon husband (Beresh. rabba, c. 24); or were originally the generation that God transformed into Shedim, Ruchin, and Lilin. Their place of resort is the wilderness. For an account of their activities, see Weber, 245, 246.

Dragons. The word דִּרְגָּן is found in the Peshitto of Isa. xiii. 22 as a translation of הנים. Levy (Neuhebräisches Wörterbuch, ii. 265) defines it as "Drache oder sonst ein Thier mit klagendem, heulendem Tone." The word frequently occurs in the Targums and later Hebrew as ירור (ירור).

10. The writer of x. 6-xii. 4 resigns absolutely all hope of the restoration of Jerusalem. This is throughout the attitude of B² (see i. 4, note).

With the thought of this verse, cf. Kethuboth 112a: "O land, land, let thy fruit shrivel: for whom art thou producing thy fruit? is it not not again be made therefrom in Zion, nor will first-fruits again be offered. 11. And do ye, O heavens, withhold your dew, and open not the treasures of rain. 12. And do thou, O sun, withhold the light of thy rays; and do thou, O moon, extinguish the multitude of thy light; for why should light rise again where the light of Zion is darkened? 13. And you, ye bridegrooms, enter not in, and let not the brides adorn themselves with garlands; and, ye women, pray not that ye may bear. 14. For the barren shall rejoice more, and those who have no sons shall be glad, and those who have sons shall have anguish. 15. For why should they bear in pain and bury in grief? 16. Or wherefore, again, should mankind have sons; or wherefore should the seed of their nature again be named, where that mother is desolate, and her sons are led into captivity? 17. From this time forward speak not of beauty and discourse not of gracefulness. 18. Moreover, ye priests, take ye the keys of the sanctuary and cast them into the height of heaven, and give them to the

for the Gentiles who rose up against us because of our sins?

13. Cf. Jer. vii. 34; xvi. 9; xxv. 10; Baruch ii. 23.

Brides. Syriac gives "virgins," but this idea is out of place in verses 13-16, where everything refers to marriage. The first right mention of virgins is in verse 19. The wrong text may be explained by a corruption of כלות into בחולות or עלמות. In the original Hebrew we should then have a paronomasia, כלילים אל חקרינה כלות. In Gît. 7a, and in Shabbath, 59b, bridegrooms are forbidden to use garlands.

14. Cf. Matt. xxiv. 19; Luke xxiii. 29: "Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the breasts that never gave suck" (cf. Isa. liv. 1).

16. That mother. See iii. 1, note

18. The priesthood have proved faithless to their duty, and the charge of the temple is no longer theirs. Cf. Rest of Words, iv. 3, 4, where another turn is given to the text: "And thereupon Jeremiah took the keys of the temple . . . and cast these keys before the sun, saying: 'I say unto thee, O sun, take the keys of the house of God and keep Lord, and say: 'Guard Thy house Thyself, for lo! we are found false stewards.' 19. And you, ye virgins, who spin fine linen and silk with gold of Ophir, hasten and take all things and cast (them) into the fire, that it may bear them to Him who made them, and the flame send them to Him who created them, lest the enemy get possession of them."

XI. Moreover, I, Baruch, say this against thee, Babylon: "If thou hadst prospered, and Zion had dwelt in her glory, it would have been a great grief to us that thou shouldst be equal to Zion. 2. But now, lo! the grief is infinite, and the lamentation measureless, for lo! thou art prospered and Zion desolate. 3. Who will be judge regarding these things? or to whom shall we complain regarding that which has befallen us? O Lord, how hast Thou borne (it)? 4. Our fathers went to rest without grief, and lo! the righteous sleep in the earth in tranquillity. 5. For them till the days when the Lord shall ask thee concerning them. For we are not worthy to keep them; for we have been found false stewards.'"

This verse reappears in the Talkut Shim, on Isa. xxi. as follows: "The flower of the priests . . . gathered together . . . the keys of the court and the sanctuary and said before God: 'Lord of the universe, we are not fit to be stewards before Thee (לא זכינו להיות גוברים לפניך). Behold Thy keys are returned to Thee.' And they cast them aloft" (quoted by Rosenthal).

19. Fine linen and silk. Cf. Ezek. xvi. 10.

Lest the enemy get possession. Cf. vi. 8.

XI. 1. Babylon stands here for Rome, as in Rev. xiv. 8; xvi. 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 2.

Prospered. Cf. xii. 1-3.

3. How hast Thou borne (it)? Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 30: "I have seen how Thou dost bear with them that sin." In Pss. Sol. ii. 1 and 4 Ezra iii. 8 the writers complain that God did not prevent such wrong-doing. With the latter cf. Isa. xiv. 6.

4. Our fathers went to rest. Cf. lxxxv. 9.

Sleep in the earth. Cf. xxi. 24; while the diction corresponds to Dan. xii. 2, "sleep in the dust of the earth," the thought is Sadducean and belongs to the earlier sphere of O.T. thought, presupposed in such a phrase as "slept with his fathers" (1 Kings ii. 10; xi. 21, they knew not this anguish, nor yet had they heard of that which had befallen us. 6. Would that thou hadst ears, O earth, and that thou hadst a heart, O dust, that ye might go and announce in Sheol, and say to the dead: 7. 'Blessed are ye more than we who are living.'"

XII. But I will say this as I think, and I will speak against thee, O land, which art prospering. 2. The noonday does not always burn, nor do the constant rays of the sun (always) give light. 3. Do not conclude or expect that thou wilt always be prosperous and rejoicing, and be not greatly uplifted and boastful. 4. For assuredly in its own season wrath will awake against thee, which now in long-suffering is held in as it etc.) There is no ground for supposing with Kabisch (Das vierte Buch Ezra, 68, 69) that this phrase in the mouth of a Pharisee of this period implied a capacity of life as still existing in the body even when interred. That "to sleep in the earth" and "to be in Sheol" are equivalent expressions for a Pharisee, is clear from Eth. En. li. 1 and 4 Ezra vii. 32. The former phrase, "to sleep in the earth," is merely a figure of speech, and must not be pressed. Yet see l. 2, note. These phrases are equivalents in verses 6, 7. Sadducean thought admitted of no resurrection; hence "life in Sheol" or "sleep in the earth" were interchangeable expressions for the same fact.

5. To a Pharisee this would be a trifling pain compared with the torments of the damned. But the Sadducee looked for no retribution in the world to come, but, like most of the writers in the O.T. and in Ecclesiasticus, only for a shadowy existence in Sheol.

6. That ye might go, etc. The Syriac = "and go ye." Here we have a Hebrew idiom, i.e. an imperative is used instead of a jussive in order to express the intention signified by the preceding verb (see Driver, Hebrew Moods and Tenses, p. 82).

Sheol. We have here the O.T. conception of Sheol—the eternal abode of the shades. This view of Sheol was maintained in N.T. times by the Sadducees. In xxiii. 5; xlvi. 16; lii. 2; lvi. 6, Sheol seems to be the abode of all departed souls prior to the final judgment. This also may be its meaning in xxi. 23 and in 4 Ezra iv. 41. In 4 Ezra viii. 53 it seems to bear the meaning of "hell." For a history of the various meanings borne by this word see Eth. En. lxiii. 10, note.

7. The condition of the shades was for the writer undoubtedly more blessed than that of the living (cf. x. 6, note).

XII. 3. Boastful. I have here emended  = "do (not) oppress" into  = "be (not) boastful."

XII. 5=E.

were by reins. 5. And when I had said these things, I fasted seven days.

XIII.-XXV.=
B².

XIII. And it came to pass after these things, that

THE FOURTH SECTION

XII. 5-XX. This section begins with a fast of seven days (xii. 5). Then follows a long revelation to Baruch (xiii. 2-xx. 2). (Owing to the complete disarrangement and confusion of the text, this revelation cannot be summarised here. For a discussion of these chapters see pp. 20-34.) Contrary to the usual procedure, Baruch is bidden not to publish this revelation (xx. 3).

XII. 5. On the fasts of Baruch see v. 9, note; ix. 2, note.

XIII.-XXV. The text of these chapters is inexplicable as it stands. The difficulties are due not to corruption, though that undoubtedly exists, but to a recasting of the original text by the final editor. In this process many passages were torn from their original contexts and placed in settings which are quite unsuitable. Some of the incongruities thus produced are as follows: (1) The words "those prosperous cities" are represented as speaking in xiii. 4 without a single note of introduction. (2) In the next verse the words, "thou and those like thee who have seen," are similarly unexplained, and are in fact inexplicable in their present context; for though Baruch was to be preserved till the consummation of the times, his contemporaries were not, and hence they could not see the future retribution of the Gentiles. If, however, xxiv. 2 originally preceded xiii. 3b-5, the words, "thou and those like thee who have seen," would be perfectly intelligible. (3) Again the retribution of the Gentiles referred to in xiii. 4, 5 has not been mentioned before, though the text presupposes some such mention. It is intelligible if xxv. or xxiv. 4 precedes where Baruch asks what will befall the enemies of Israel. (4) In xiv. 1 Baruch replies that God has shown him "the method of the times," whereas in xx. 6 this appears not to have been yet done, and it seems that a revelation of "the method of the times" is still to come. (5) In xxiv. 4 Baruch asks what retribution awaits the enemies of Israel, and when will the judgment be? In xxv. we find the answer to the latter question, whereas the answer to the former is already given in xiii. 4-12. (6) I can discover no adequate explanation of the "therefore" with which xx. 1 begins in its present context. If xx. were read immediately after xiii. the text would at once become clear. On these and other grounds we must attempt to restore the original order of the chapters before they were broken up and rearranged, mutilated, and interpolated by the final editor. Owing to the paucity of materials the attempt to restore the original order can only be partially successful. This order was probably xiii. 1-3a; xx.; xxiv. 2-4; xiii. 3b-12; xxv., xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1; xxx. 2. To reassure Baruch, who is plunged in grief over Jerusalem (xiii. 3a), God declares (xx. 1, 2) that the days and years will speed more quickly by in order to usher in the judgment which will right all wrongs, and that even Jerusalem was removed with this end in view. On the "method of the times" Baruch is then promised disclosures (xx. 6), and "he and many with him" will see the mercy of God on those that sinned and were righteous

I, Baruch, was standing upon Mount Zion, and lo! a voice came from the height and said unto me: 2. 'Stand upon thy feet, Baruch, and hear the word of the mighty God. 3. Because thou hast been astonished at what has befallen Zion, thou shalt therefore be assuredly preserved to the consummation of the times, (xxiv. 2). Baruch, thereupon, asks two questions (xxiv. 4): (a) what will befall Israel's enemies? (b) when will God judge the world (of which event He had already spoken, xx. 2)?

The answer to (a) is given in xiii. 3b-12. But the first words of this answer are lost. In these words there was a statement of this nature: "retribution will come upon the prosperous cities of your enemies" (cf. xiii. 4). Baruch, moreover (xiii. 3b-12), will be preserved until those days for the express purpose of testifying the reason of the retribution that has befallen these cities, and the date of its consummation. "He and those like him who have seen" (cf. xxiv. 2) should answer the remonstrances of the tormented Gentiles. And in answer to Baruch's second question, he is informed (xxv. 1, 2) that he shall likewise be preserved till the sign of the last days has come. This sign will be a stupor that shall seize the inhabitants of the earth (xxv. 3, 4). Baruch, thereupon, acknowledges: "Behold Thou hast shown me the method of the times" (xiv. 1). After this the thought advances connectedly through xiv. - xix.; xxi. - xxiv. 1; xxx. 2. For like rearrangements of already existing texts by the final editor, see my edition of the Eth.En. pp. 189, 260, 267, 268, 270, 274.

XIII. 1. Mount Zion. Mount Zion is the scene of the revelation in xiii.-xx.; of the prayer in xxi. 4-25 (cf. xiii. 1; xx. 6; xxi. 2); of the revelation in xxii.-xxx.; of the seven days' fast in xlvii. 2; and of the prayer and revelation that follow xlviii.-lii.

A voice. Cf. xxii. 1, note.

2. Stand upon thy feet. Ezek. ii. 1.

The mighty God. Cf. vi. 8; vii. 1; xiii. 4.

3. Thou shalt therefore be assuredly preserved, etc. This promise recurs twice again in B², i.e. in xxv. 1 and lxxvi. 2. Baruch is thus to be preserved as a testimony or a sign against the inhabitants of the earth in the last days (see also xiv. 2). This assumption and preservation of Baruch till the last judgment is the teaching of B². With the above passages compare also xlviii. 30 and xlvi. 7, where the last is due to the final editor. In B¹, on the other hand, Baruch is to die a natural death (lxxviii. 5; lxxxiv. 1); he is to go the way of all flesh (xliv. 2) and to forget all corruptible things and the affairs of mortals (xliii. 2). Thus we have two conflicting accounts touching the destiny of Baruch. It is noteworthy that we have in the text a transference of a distinct Enochic function to Baruch. For in Jubilees iv. 24 it is stated: "(Enoch) was set as a sign there (in Eden), and that he should testify against all the children of men;" and again in x. 17: "As a testimony to the generations of the world the office was ordained for Enoch of recounting all the deeds of generation unto generation till the day of judgment" (see also Slav. En. xl. 13; liii. 2; lxiv. 5).

that thou mayst be for a testimony. 4. So that, if ever those prosperous cities say: 'Why hath the mighty God brought upon us this retribution?' 5. Thou and those like thee may say to them (even) ye who have seen: 'This evil and (these) retributions which

This robbing of Enoch to benefit Baruch is a clear sign of Jewish hostility to Christianity, and a tribute to the influence that Enoch enjoyed in the Christian Church of the first century. Enoch's acceptance amongst Christians as a Messianic prophet was the ground for his rejection by the Jews. So thoroughgoing, indeed, was this rejection that, although he was the chief figure next to Daniel in Jewish Apocalyptic prior to 40 A.D., in subsequent Jewish literature his functions and achievements are assigned to others, such as Moses, Ezra, or Baruch, and, with the exception of two or three passages, his name in subsequent Jewish literature is henceforth studiously ignored. The observation of this tendency of Jewish thought becomes of practical value to us when we come to lix. 4-11, as we are thus enabled to conclude that a document which on other grounds is prior to 70 A.D., is posterior to the rise of Christianity because it manifests clear signs of this tendency.

Assuredly be preserved. The Syriac lit. = σασθεις σασθησει, a familiar Hebraism שָׁחַד תִּשָּׁחַד. This idiom recurs frequently in this book (see xxii. 7; xli. 6; xlviii. 30; l. 2; lvi. 2; lxxv. 6; lxxvi. 2; lxxxii. 2; lxxxiii. 1, 2, 3, 6; lxxxiv. 2). That we have herein indubitable evidence of a Hebrew original we have shown in the Introduction.

4. Those prosperous cities. The abruptness with which these cities are introduced, though not heretofore mentioned, and their complaints about the retribution that has befallen them, though no such retribution has as yet been recorded, shows either that the text preceding these words has been lost, or else that xiii. 3b-12 should be read after xxiv. 2-4. In fact, since in xiii. 3b-12 we have an answer to xxiv. 4, we must assume that xiii. 3b-12 originally followed after xxiv. 4, and since xiii. 4 presupposes that a statement about the retribution that is to come upon the prosperous enemies of Israel has already been made, and since no such statement is found, we must further assume the loss of such words immediately preceding xiii. 3b (see note on xxiv. 3, 4). It might be possible to explain xiii. 4 by xxv. 3, and accordingly regard xiii. 3b-12 as following originally upon xxiv. 2-xxv. But many difficulties beset this interpretation. The cities here spoken of are of course Gentile cities (cf. ver. 11).

Brought upon us this retribution. The same phrase practically is applied to Israel in lxxvii. 4, but here the "us" refers to the "prosperous cities." The retribution intended by the editor seems to be that threatened in xii. 4.

5. Thou and those like thee who have seen it. These words are hardly capable of interpretation as they stand. They clearly mean Baruch's contemporaries; observe "ye who have seen"; but as the time is that of the end, they cannot be his contemporaries; for only are coming upon you and upon your people (are sent) in its time that the nations may be perfectly chastened.' 6. And then they will expect. 7. And if they say at that time: 'When?' 8. Thou wilt say to them: 'Ye who have drunk the strained wine, drink ye also of its dregs, the judgment of the Lofty One who has no respect of persons.' 9. On this account He had before no mercy on His own sons, but afflicted them as His enemies, because they sinned. 10. They were therefore chastened then that they might receive mercy. 11. But now, ye peoples and nations, ye are debtors. because all this time ye have trodden down the earth, Baruch is to be preserved till that date. If, however, xiii. 3b-12 was originally preceded by xxiv. 2-4, we can trace the phrase back to xxiv. 2—"thou wilt see and many who are with thee."

That the nations may be perfectly chastened. That this chastisement is vindictive and not corrective is clear from verse 7; the nations are to "drink of the dregs, the judgment of the Lofty One"; and also from verses 10, 11, where the implication obviously is that, whereas Israel is punished with a view to its ultimate pardon, it is otherwise with the Gentiles. The vindictive punishment therefore of the Gentiles is dealt with in this chapter. But so far as I know 𐤁𐤓𐤕 = "chasten" is never used in the sense of vindictive punishment. This difficulty might be surmounted by supposing 𐤁𐤓𐤕𐤁 = "may be chastened," corrupt for 𐤁𐤓𐤕𐤁 = "may be dispersed" (cf. Isa. xxxiii. 3). In the next chapter, however, in xiv. 1, the retribution spoken of by God is to be of service to the Gentiles. But see note in loc. On the other hand, it might be possible to understand 𐤁𐤓𐤕𐤁 = "nations," "peoples," of Israel, as in xlii. 5 (if the text is right there). But in this case it would be better to emend 𐤁𐤓𐤕 into 𐤁𐤓𐤕𐤁 𐤁𐤓𐤕𐤁 = "that the people may be chastened."

6. The Gentiles will wait for or look forward to the consummation of their chastisement. This verse might by a slight change be understood of Israel (cf. xiv. 3).

8. Cf. Ps. lxxv. 7, 8: "God is the judge. . . . For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup . . . surely all the wicked of the earth . . . shall drink them."

The Lofty One. Here only in this book (see 4 Ezra iv. 34; Isa. lvii. 15).

Has no respect of persons. Cf. xliv. 4.

10. Chastened. Cf. i. 5.

11. Trodden down. I.e. in the sense of oppressing it, a frequent meaning in the O.T.

and used the creation unrighteously. 12. For I have always benefited you, and ye have always denied the beneficence."

XIV. And I answered and said: "Lo! Thou hast shown me the method of the times, and that which will be after these things, and Thou hast said unto me, that the retribution, which has been spoken of by Thee, will be of advantage to the nations. 2. And now I know that those who have sinned are many, and they have lived in prosperity, and departed from the world, but that few 12. Cf. i. 4.

I have . . . benefited you. The Syriac is ܐܢܝܢ ܐܬܝܒܬܝܢ, but this order of the words, with this meaning, is highly irregular; for Syriac idiom all but universally requires the participle before the substantive and not as here, and in lxiii. 8, the converse order. This exceptional order may be due to the survival of the Hebrew order in the Syriac translation, i.e. הָיִיתָ מְבַרֵךְ. For this seems to be the explanation of two out of the three instances where I have observed this irregularity in the Peshitto O.T., i.e. Gen. iv. 17 and 2 Sam. viii. 15. In the third (1 Sam. xviii. 13) I can offer no explanation, and the abnormality is there all the more striking, as three verses later the same phrase recurs in its right order. This irregularity (which is not noticed in Duval's Grammar, and only passingly mentioned in Nöldeke's) is not found, so far as I am aware, in the Peshitto N.T.

Ye have . . . denied. The Syriac is ܐܢܝܢ ܐܬܝܒܬܝܢ, which, according to Syriac idiom, is an imperative = "deny ye." The converse order = "ye have denied." This irregularity, as in the last instance, I would trace to a survival of the Hebrew idiom through the Greek.

XIV. 1. The final editor is again greatly to blame here. According to the text Baruch says: "Thou hast shown me the method of the times and that which will be after these things." Now this has not been done. In the preceding chapter instruction has been given as to the reason of the retribution which has come upon the cities of the Gentiles, and likewise as to the date when their chastisement will be consummated. "The method or scheme of the times" would imply such information as we find in xxiv. 2-xxv. taken in conjunction with xiii., or to xxvii.-xxx. In xx. 6 certain disclosures are promised regarding "the method of the times." The phrase is found also in xlvi. 1.

The retribution . . . spoken of by Thee. These words probably refer to xiii. 5, and yet the retribution in question is first mentioned, not by God but by the cities (xiii. 4), unless we suppose xxv. 3 to precede xiv.

Will be of advantage to the nations. In xiii. 5-11 the context is against the idea of a remedial chastisement of the Gentiles, which seems to be asserted here. Here, again something seems wrong, nations will be left in those times, to whom those words shall be said which Thou didst say. 3. For what advantage is there in this, or what (evil), worse than what we have seen befall us, are we to expect to see? 4. But again I will speak in Thy presence: 5. What have they profited who confessed before Thee, and have not walked in vanity as the rest of the nations, and have not said to the dead: 'Give us life,' but always feared Thee, and have not left Thy ways? 6. And lo! they have been carried off, nor on their account hast Thou had mercy on Zion. 7. And if others did evil, it was

2. Few nations will be left in those times to whom, etc. Do these words refer back to xiii. 3? In that case Baruch complains that few of the Gentile nations will be alive to whom the words in xiii. 5, 7-11 are to be addressed.

3. These words seem to point to xiii. 6; cf. "they will expect" and "what . . . are we to expect to see?" But here they undoubtedly refer to Israel, whereas there they naturally refer to the Gentiles.

4-19. Of what profit has been the righteousness of the righteous? Of none; for it has helped neither them nor their city, though the last was at least their due (verses 4-7). Seeing this is so, man cannot understand Thy judgment (verses 8, 9), for he is but a breath; his birth is involuntary, and his end a mystery (verses 10, 11); for that end the righteous indeed may hope, for they have treasures in heaven, but for us there is only woe, here and hereafter (verses 12-14). Hence what Thou hast done on Thy servants' behalf Thou knowest, but we cannot discover. The world indeed Thou didst say was made for man. But how can this be? We pass away and the world abides (verses 15-19).

5. Confessed before Thee. I have here emended אָדָּנָיִם = "knew" into אָדָּנָיִם = "confessed."

Walked in vanity. Jer. ii. 5.

Have not said to the dead, etc. Cf. Isa. viii. 19b: "On behalf of the living should they seek unto the dead?"

6, 7. In these verses the destruction of Zion seems to be far in the background.

6. Have been carried off. Cf. lxxxv.

3. I have here followed Ceriani's emendation of אֲדָמָה into אֲדָמָה, who rightly compares xv. 2.

Nor on their account hast Thou had mercy on Zion. This was a great difficulty to the Jew. The presence of ten righteous men would have preserved Sodom; why then did Zion fall? Moreover, the preservation of the world, according to the Talmud (Weber, 201), depended on Israel. See xiv. 18, note.

7. We have here ideas which in some respects resemble those in Gen. xviii. 23-33. But whereas it due to Zion, that on account of the works of those who wrought good works she should be forgiven, and should not be overwhelmed on account of the works of those who wrought unrighteousness. 8. But who, O LORD, my Lord, will comprehend Thy judgment, or who will find out the profoundness of Thy path? or who will think out the gravity of Thy way? 9. Or who will be able to think out Thy incomprehensible counsel? or who of those that are born has ever found is taught there that God would spare a city because of the righteous persons in it, here and in ii. 2 it is the works of the righteous considered in themselves that are put forward as the ground of such mercy. On the question of good works the thought of the writers in this book, i.e. between 50 and 80 A.D., is to be described as follows: (a) The righteous are saved by their works (li. 7); they are justified by the law (li. 3); for righteousness is by the law (lxvii. 6). (b) Their works impart confidence to the righteous with respect to God when they pray for themselves or others. Thus Hezekiah trusted in his works and was hopeful in his righteousness, and so God heard him (lxiii. 3, 5); and the prophets also were heard because they trusted in their works (lxxxv. 2). (c) But the works of the righteous avail not themselves only; they are a defence; also to the unrighteous among whom they dwell (ii. 2), and even after their death their works are regarded as a lasting merit on the ground of which mercy should be shown to Zion (xiv. 7; lxxxiv. 10). (d) Again these works are conceived as going before them to the next world, and being there guarded in the treasure chambers of God (xiv. 12), where they will be kept safely till the final judgment (xxiv. 1); hence the righteous hope for the end and leave the world without fear (xiv. 12). (On the teaching of this book as to faith, see note on liv. 21.) In 4 Ezra the doctrine of works as it is found in Baruch can hardly be said to exist. To (b) and (c) we find no parallels and only seeming parallels to (a), such as men "will be able to escape by their works or their faith in which they have believed" (ix. 7), and that "God will guard those who have works and faith in the Most Mighty" (xiii. 23). It will be observed that the doctrine of salvation by works is carefully guarded against by the addition of the words "and faith." To (d) we have good parallels in vii. 77, where Ezra is said to have "a treasury of works laid up with the Most High," and in viii. 33, where "the righteous are those who have many works laid up with Thee: from their own works will they receive reward."

Though the doctrine of justification as taught in Baruch should naturally be discussed here, we must refer the reader to the note on xxi. 9.

8. O LORD, my Lord. See iii. 1, note.

the beginning or end of Thy wisdom? 10. For we have all been made like a breath. 11. For as the breath ascends from the heart, and returning not is extinguished, such is the nature of men, who depart not according to their own will, and know not what will befall them in the end. 12. For the righteous justly hope for the end, and without fear depart from this habitation, because they have with Thee a store of works preserved in treasuries. 13. On this account also these without fear leave this world, and trusting with joy they hope to receive the world which Thou hast promised them. 14. But unto us there is woe, who also now are shamefully entreated, and at that time look forward

10. See references on next verse.

11. Ascends from the heart, and returning not is extinguished. Cf. Ps. lxxviii. 39: "a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again;" Ps. cxlvi. 4; Job vii. 7; James iv. 14. This rendering rests on a slight change of order in the text, i.e.

על לב סגור הפך instead of גבול על לב סתפך. Ceriani and Fritzsche render the text, "ascendit quin procedat de corde et restinguitur."

Depart not according to their own will. Man does not settle the hour of his departure from this life. Cf. xlviii. 15; 4 Ezra viii. 5, "convenisti enim obaudire" (read volens with Syr. for obaudire) et profecta es nolens."

Know not what, etc. Cf. Slav. En. ii. 1; vii. 5.

12. The righteous justly hope. Eth. En. cii. 4.

A store of works, etc. The text reads סגור, גבול = "a force or supply of works." But it also = "a store of works." Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 77, where we find "a treasure of works." In Shabbath, 31b, a man is spoken of as having זכיות, "a treasure of merits" in heaven. Cf. Matt. vi. 19, 20; Pss. Sol. ix. 9, ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην θησαυρίζει ζωὴν ἐαυτῷ παρὰ κυρίῳ. See note on verse 7.

13. The world which Thou hast promised. This is clearly the spiritual world. Thus in li. 3 the righteous after death are to "receive the world which does not die, which is then promised to them;" in xlv. 13, 15 "theirs is the inheritance of the promised time," "for unto them will be given the world to come;" and in xv. 7, 8 "the world which is to come" is said to be on their account. Cf. 4 Ezra ix. 13. It is referred to again in xxi. 25 and lxxiii. 5 under the general name of something promised. Throughout B² there is no promise of an earthly felicity, but only of spiritual transmundane blessedness.

14. There is woe. Cf. for diction lxxiv. 11; 4 Ezra xiii. 16.

(only) to evils. 15. But Thou knowest accurately what Thou hast made on behalf of Thy servants; for we are not able to understand by means of any good thing that Thou art our Creator. 16. But again I will speak in Thy presence, O LORD, my Lord. 17. When of old there was no world with its inhabitants, Thou didst devise and speak with a word, and forthwith the works of creation stood before Thee. 18. And Thou didst say that Thou wouldst make for Thy world man as the administrator of Thy works, that it might be known that he was by no means made on account of the world, but the world on account of him.

Evils. These words refer back to xiv. 3, and their subject is again touched upon in xv. 1. What these are is given in xliv. 15; lxxxv. 13.

15. What Thou hast made (or done) on behalf of Thy servants. I.e.

ܠܥܠܡ ܕܥܒܕܝܐ. If my rendering is right, the entire verse appears to be in its wrong place, and should be read after verse 16. The sense then would be excellent: "Thou knowest what good things Thou hast created on behalf of Thy servants; but we know of none: yet Thou didst say that Thou didst make the world for man," etc. (verses 15, 17, 18). But the Syriac may be translated, "what Thou hast made out of Thy servants," or if we neglect the diacritic point, "what Thou has wrought out of Thy works." Ceriani translates the verse: "Tu autem recte nosti quid feceris de servis tuis: quia nos non possumus intelligere aliquid boni, quomodo tu sis fctor noster." Before aliquid we should read "per."

17. Speak with a word, etc. Cf. Gen. i. 6, 7; Ps. xxxiii. 6; Heb.

xi. 3; 2 Peter iii. 5; Slav. En. xxiv. 5; xxv. 1; 4 Ezra vi. 38.

18. Thou wouldst make for Thy world man, etc. Cf. Gen. i. 26, 28; Ps. viii. 6; 4 Ezra vi. 54.

The world on account of him. So far as I am aware this exalted view of man's dignity in respect of the world is not found earlier than the first century of the Christian era. It recurs frequently in the literature of this time: cf. xiv. 19; xv. 7; xxi. 24 (this doctrine is thus confined to B² in this book); Assumpt. Mosis i. 12; 4 Ezra vi. 55, 59; vii. 11; viii. 44; ix. 13. In these passages the statement of the reason for the creation of the world assumes three forms: First, the world was created on account of man (Apoc. Bar. xiv. 18; 4 Ezra viii. 1, 44). But the writers of these books if pressed, would at once have withdrawn this statement in favour of two diverging statements: the one, that the world was created on account of Israel (4 Ezra vi. 55, 59; vii. 11; Assumpt. Mosis i. 12); the other that the world was created on account of the righteous in Israel

19. And now I see that as for the world which was made on account of us, lo ! it abides, but we, on account of whom it was made, depart."

XV. And the Lord answered and said unto me :
 "Thou art rightly astonished regarding the departure of man, but thou hast not judged well regarding the evils which befall those who sin. 2. And as regards what thou hast said, that the righteous are carried off and the impious are prospered, 3. And as regards what thou hast said: 'Man knows not Thy judgment'—
 4. On this account hear, and I will speak to thee, and hearken, and I will cause thee to hear My words.
 5. Man would not rightly have understood My judgment, if he had not accepted the law, and if his fear

(Apoc. Bar. xiv. 19 ; xv. 7 ; xxi. 24). Either of the latter forms the real Jewish view from the Christian era onwards. Thus in the Talmud, it is either Israel, or the righteous in Israel, that were the cause of the world's creation and its subsequent preservation. Thus in Bammidbar rabba, ii., "if Israel were not, the world would not exist"; in the Shemoth rabba, xxviii., "The world was created owing to the merits of Israel, and upon Israel stands the world." See Weber, pp. 201, 202, for other passages of the same import. See also note on xv. 7.

19. See note on last verse. That the "us" and the "we" here are the righteous is clear from xv. 7. This verse shows that the writer believed in the view that the safety of the world was bound up with that of the righteous.

In Pesikta 200b God is said to have created the world on account of Abraham's merit (Weber, p. 295).

XV. 1. Astonied regarding the de- parture of man. These words refer to xiv. 19. The Syriac noun translated "departure" is derived from the verb translated "depart" in xiv. 19. In xiii. 3 Baruch was "astonied" about the fate of Jerusalem.

Not judged rightly regarding the evils, etc. See xiv. 3, 14.

2. See xiv. 6.

3. See xiv. 8, 9.

5. The law. The law was the centre round which Jewish thought and life revolved. To a limited extent the Messianic expectation was likewise a centre. Frequently we find that in proportion as the one is emphasised the other falls into the background. This will receive illustration as we proceed to examine the position assigned to the law and the Messiah respectively in the five main constituents of this book. Thus in B¹ (written after 70 A.D.) where the restoration of Jerusalem is looked for, but no Messiah, the law is spoken of as had not been (rooted) in understanding. 6. But now, follows : God gave the law to Israel (lxxvii. 3) ; for transgressing it they were sent into exile (lxxvii. 4 ; lxxxiv. 2) ; but let not Israel withdraw from the law (xliv. 3), but obey it (xlvi. 5) ; let them remember it (lxxxiv. 8) ; for if they do so, they will see the consolation of Zion (xliv. 7), and a son of the law will never be wanting (xlvi. 4), nor a lamp nor a shepherd (lxxvii. 16) ; for lamps and shepherds are from the law, and though these depart the law stands (lxxvii. 15) ; if they remember it, they will see the consolation of Zion (xliv. 7). In B² where there is no Messiah and no expectation of the restoration of Jerusalem, the law is still further glorified. Thus Moses brought the law to Jacob (xvii. 4) ; this conveyed a knowledge of the judgment of God (xv. 5), and entailed retribution on the consciously disobedient (xv. 6 ; xix. 3 ; xlviii. 40) ; it will exact all its rights (xlvi. 27), and repay the transgressor (xlvi. 47) ; apostates from it (xli. 3) will be specially dealt with (xlii. 4). On the other hand it will protect those who receive it in their hearts (xxxii. 1 ; xlviii. 24) ; by it they will be justified (li. 3), and in it will be the hope of the righteous (li. 7) ; the law is with Israel, and so long as they obey it they will not fall (xlvi. 22, 24). They have received one law from One (xlvi. 24). In B³ (which is akin to xiii. 2 in this respect) Israel has nothing save the Mighty One and the law (lxxxv. 3) ; they have one law by one (lxxxv. 14). When, however, we turn to the Messiah Apocalypses A¹ (= xxvii.-xxx. 1), A² (= xxxvi.-xl.), A³ (= llii.-lxxiv.), and to S. (= x. 6-12) which form more than a third of the entire book, we find no mention at all of the law in A¹ and S. In A² there is only one mention of it, i.e. God's law is life (xxxviii. 2). In A² it naturally becomes more prominent, as A³ gives a brief history of God's dealings with Israel. The law and the tradition were observed by Abraham and his sons (lvii. 2). Thus, through the agency of Moses, its light shone on those in darkness (lix. 2). God imparted to Moses certain studies of the law (lix. 3). Josiah alone was faithful to it in his time (lxvi. 5). Such as loved it not perished (liv. 14). Righteousness comes by the law (lxvii. 6). Thus we observe that in purely eschatological descriptions such as A¹, there is not a single allusion to the law : the Messiah is the entire centre of interest. This is practically true in A² also ; for the reference in xxxviii. 2 does not belong to the account of the last things. In A³ finally, most of the references are to historical incidents, though it is true that in A² great store is set by the law. The law was the centre of Jewish life, the source of righteousness, and in fact its spiritual schoolmaster, till the advent of the Messiah had arrived. Thenceforward (lxx.-lxxiv.) there is not even an allusion to it. The same phenomena are observable in the various constituents of 4 Ezra. Thus in the three or four distinct Messiah Apocalypses in that book (according to Kabisch's critical analyses) the law is only mentioned two or three times. The only strong expression regarding it is in xiii. 38, and there the text is doubtful. In the groundwork of the book (circa 100 A.D.) however, where we find no hope of a Messiah nor of a restored Jerusalem, the law, as might be expected, has a more important rôle to play. Thus God gave the law to Jacob (iii. 19). He sowed it in them that they might keep it (ix. 32), but it bore no fruit owing to because he transgressed though he knew, yea, on account of this also, he shall be tormented because he knew. 7. And as regards what thou didst say touching the righteous, that on account of them has this world come, nay more, even that which is to come is on their account. 8. For this world is to them the evil heart (iii. 20); they neglected it (vii. 20), did not keep it (ix. 32), rejected it (vii. 72), despised it (vii. 24; viii. 56), yet the law cannot perish (ix. 37.) Some did try to keep the law perfectly in this life (vii. 89), and God bore testimony to them because they did so (vii. 94); these acquired a store of good works (vii. 77; viii. 33), and from these they received their reward (viii. 33); and yet none can claim heaven purely as the reward of their righteousness, for all men have sinned (viii. 35).

462

It is obvious at a glance that the possession of the law by Israel is less a subject of self-gratulation in 4 Ezra than in Baruch. In the latter, especially in B² (written, like the groundwork in 4 Ezra, after 70 A.D., and having no expectation of the Messiah or a restored Jerusalem) the law is everything: it protects the righteous (xxxii. 1), justifies them (li. 3), is their hope (li. 7), and so long as it is with Israel, Israel cannot fall (xlviii. 22, 24). In Ezra, on the other hand, the law has begotten in the writer such a sense of sin that he trembles before it. Man needs mercy, not the award of the law; for all have sinned (viii. 35), and all but a very few would perish, but for the divine compassion (vii. 139).

5, 6. If his fear had not been (rooted) in understanding. But now, because he transgressed though he knew, etc. Here Ceriani followed by Fritzsche has mistranslated ⲁⲃⲓ (= transgressus est) by "fecit," thus taking it for ⲁⲃⲓ. This thought partially recurs in xix. 3; xlviii. 40, "Each of the inhabitants of the earth knew when he was committing iniquity" (see note in loc.), lv. 2; and almost a perfect parallel is found in 4 Ezra vii. 72: "Qui ergo commorantes sunt in terra hinc cruciabuntur quoniam sensum habentes iniquitatem fecerunt." Cf. Luke xii. 48.

7. As regards . . . has this world come. See note on xiv. 18. Nowhere in the present book are these words given as a divine utterance. The same statement is again made in xxi. 24. From a similar statement in 4 Ezra vi. 55, at the close of the short hexæmeron there, it is probable that some such statement was originally included in that hexæmeron in its independent form. On this hexæmeron see xxix. 4, note. Cf. 4 Ezra vi. 55; vii. 11.

Seeing that this world is "a trouble and a weariness" to the righteous, it is hard to understand such a belief unless we suppose that it was designed to be their discipline for the future life. Cf. lii. 6. On the world which is to come, see xiv. 13, note.

8. This world is to them a trouble . . . with much labour. Cf. xlviii. 50; li. 14; 4 Ezra vii. 3-14; Rom. viii. 18; 2 Cor. iv. 17. This world is evidently regarded by the a trouble and a weariness with much labour; and that accordingly which is to come, a crown with great glory."

XVI. And I answered and said: "O LORD, my Lord, lo! the years of this time are few and evil, and who is able in this little (space) to acquire that which is measureless?"

XVII. And the Lord answered and said unto me: "With the Most High account is not taken of much time nor of a few years. 2. For what did it profit Adam that he lived nine hundred and thirty years, and transgressed that which he was commanded? 3. Therefore the multitude of time that he lived did not profit him, but brought death and cut off the years of those who were born from him. 4. Or wherein did Moses suffer loss in that he lived only one hundred and twenty years, and, inasmuch as he was subject to Him who formed him, brought the law to the writer of B² but not of B¹ as a scene of trial and sorrow: a man must give himself to an ascetic life here if he is to attain blessedness hereafter. There is a more ascetic tone about 4 Ezra. In the Eth. En., however, still stronger statements are found. Thus in xlviii. 7 the Messiah "preserveth the lot of the righteous because they have hated and despised this world of unrighteousness," and in cviii. 7 God recompenses "the spirits of the humble and of those who afflict their bodies," and likewise those (cviii. 10) who, though "trodden under foot of wicked men," "loved heaven more than their life in this world."

Crown with great glory. Cf. 1 Pet. v. 4. We should expect "crown of great glory." Observe that if we retranslate these words into Hebrew, we have a paronymasia already familiar from Isa. lxii. 3; Ezek. xvi. 12; xxiii. 42, i.e. עֲטָרָה בְּתַפְאֵרָה רַבָּה.

XVI. 1. Years . . . few and evil. Gen. xlvii. 9.

XVII. 1. The Most High. This title belongs to B¹, B², B³, and A³. See xxv. 1; liv. 9, 17; lvi. 1; lxiv. 6, 8; lxvii. 4, 7; lxix. 2; lxx. 7; lxxvi. 1; lxxvii. 4, 21; lxxx. 1, 3; lxxxi. 2, 4; lxxxii. 2, 6; lxxxiii. 1; lxxxv. 8, 12.

3. Brought death, etc. See xxiii. 4, note.

4. Brought the law, etc. Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 19. "Give the law to the seed of Jacob, and the commandment to the race of Israel."

seed of Jacob, and lighted a lamp for the nation of Israel."

XVIII. And I answered and said: "He that lighted has taken from the light, and there are but few that have imitated him. 2. But those many whom he has lighted have taken from the darkness of Adam, and have not rejoiced in the light of the lamp."

XIX. And He answered and said unto me: "Wherefore at that time he appointed for them a covenant, and said: 'Behold I have placed before you life and death,' and he called heaven and earth to witness against them. 2. For he knew that his time was but short, but that heaven and earth endure always. 3.

Lighted a lamp. Cf. lix. 2, "lamp of the eternal law." The thought in both phrases is drawn from Ps. cxix. 105, "Thy word is a lamp," etc. Cf. xviii. 2.

XVIII. 1. Has taken from the light, i.e. has chosen the light. In the next verse the many are said to have chosen the darkness of Adam.

2. The law and Adam are in this passage symbolical names for the opposing powers of light and darkness. This thought is foreign to the O.T. though Gen. i.-iii. has prepared the way for it. Adam is here, as in the Slav. En., represented as the primary source of human transgression, whereas in the Eth. En. and Jubilees human depravity is traced mainly to the angels that sinned with the daughters of men. Again, as in the Slav. En., the writer does not teach the doctrine of original sin and inherited spiritual incapacities. He implies rather that man is left to determine his own destiny, to choose light or take darkness for his portion, just as in much later times it was said: "God does not determine beforehand whether a man shall be righteous or wicked, but puts this into the hands of the man himself" (Tanchuma, Pikkude 3). See Slav. En. xxx. 15, 16, notes. The same view is enforced in A³, i.e. liv. 15, 16. See notes in loc.

XIX. 1, 2. Because few chose light and many chose darkness, Moses showed further that their choice of light or darkness was likewise a choice of life or death. xix. 1-3 looks like an addition of the final editor. The answer to xviii. seems to begin with xix. 4.

Behold I have placed, etc., Deut. xxx. 19. Called heaven, etc., Deut. iv. 26; xxx. 19; xxxi. 28. Cf. lxxxiv. 2; Ass. Mos. iii. 12.

Later times seem to have drawn from Deut. xxx. 19 the conclusion that the permanence of the law was bound up with that of heaven and earth. Cf. ver. 2; Matt. v. 18. Contrast Luke xvi. 17; Mark xiii. 31.

For after his death these sinned and transgressed (the covenant), though they knew that they had the law reproving (them), and the light in which nothing could err, also the spheres, which testify, and Me. 4. Now regarding everything that is it is I that judge, but do not thou take counsel in thy soul regarding these things, nor afflict thyself because of those which have been. 5. For now it is the consummation of time that is sought, whether of business, or of prosperity, or of shame, and not the beginning thereof. 6. Because if a man be prospered in his beginnings and shamefully entreated in his old age, he forgets all the prosperity that he had. 7. And again, if a man is shamefully entreated in his beginnings, and at his end is prospered, he remembereth not again his evil entreatment. 8. And again hearken: though each one were prospered all that time—all the time from the day on which death was decreed against those who transgress—and

3. Transgressed. This word recurs in the same connection (lxxxiv. 2) where it has as its object "the law." We must supply this or "the covenant" from ver. 1.

4. These words deal with Baruch's difficulties in xviii. 1, 2. Do not distress thyself with such problems; the end of all things is at hand.

5. Here only the end of all things is looked for—not an earthly felicity in a rebuilt Jerusalem.

6-8. The end of all things is at hand, and the only important question is: How does it find a man? will it bring him shame or honour? We are strongly reminded here of the well-known words of Solon in Herodotus i. 32 σκοπέειν δὲ χρόν παντὸς χρήματος τὴν τελευτήν, κῆ ἀποβήσεται. πολλοῖσι γὰρ δὴ ὑποδέξας ὄλβον ὁ θεὸς προορρίζουσ ἀνέτρεψε. It was a familiar Hellenic theme. Cf. Soph. Trach. 1-3; Oed. Rex, 1494-97; Eurip. Androm. 100-103, etc.

8. Though a man . . . vanity. This seems the natural rendering of the passage. Ceriani renders: "Omne tempus istud a die quo decreta fuit mors contra eos qui praetereunt in isto tempore, si unusquisque prosperatus esset, et in fine suo in vanitatem corrumperetur, esset omne." Fritzsche quite wrongly writes "vanum" for "omne."

On which death was decreed, etc. See xxiii. 4, note.

in his end was destroyed, in vain would have been everything."

XX. Therefore, behold! the days will come, and the times will hasten more than the former, and the seasons will speed on more than those that are past, and the years will pass more quickly than the present (years). 2. Therefore have I now taken away Zion, in order that I may the more speedily visit the world in its season. 3. Now therefore hold fast in thy heart everything that I command thee, and seal it in the recesses of thy mind. 4. And then I will

XX. 1. Therefore. It is not clear that this word follows upon anything in xix. It could be taken closely with xviii. So far as I can see it is best to regard it as following directly on xiii. 3a. Jerusalem has fallen, therefore the years intervening before the judgment will be shortened. Cf. liv. 1, "Against the works of the inhabitants of the earth Thou dost hasten the beginnings of the times"; Matt. xxiv. 22. For the probable order of the text originally see pp. 20, 119.

The days will come. Cf. xxiv. 1; xxxi. 5; xxxix. 3; 4 Ezra vi. 18. A familiar O.T. phrase. Cf. Jer. xxiii. 7; xxx. 3, etc.

The times will hasten. Cf. lxxxiii. 1, 6, where almost the same thoughts and diction recur. Cf. liv. 1; 4 Ezra iv. 26.

2. The fall of Jerusalem is one of the steps preparatory for the final judgment. See xxi. 21. There is no hope here of a restored Jerusalem. See i. 4, note.

Speedily visit. The Syriac literally = σπεύσω καὶ ἐπισκέψωμαι, a Hebraism, אסתר ואפקר, Visit. Cf. xxiv. 4; lxxxiii. 2.

This word seems to be used in Baruch in a bad sense of the penal visitation of God, as in Exod. xx. 5; Ps. lxxxix. 32; Jer. vi. 15; ix. 25; xi. 22, etc.; also in 4 Ezra v. 56; vi. 18; ix. 2; Pss. Sol. xv. 14. The word (ῥῆς = ἐπισκέπτεσθαι) has generally a good sense in the O.T., as in Gen. xxi. 1; Exod. iv. 31; Job x. 12; Pss. viii. 4; lxxx. 14; also in Ecclus. xvi. 14; Wisdom vii. 7, 13; Pss. Sol. iii. 14; x. 5(?); xi. 2, 7; always in the N.T., as in Luke i. 68, 78; vii. 16; xix. 44; Acts xv. 14; 1 Peter ii. 12. It is noteworthy that whereas in the N.T. the thought of God's visitation is one of joy, its associations in 4 Ezra and Baruch are fear and wrath to come.

3. Everything that I command thee. The relative is omitted in the Syriac, but both the sense and the Syriac idiom require it. If the text is right, we must take it as a Hebraism; for the Hebrew admits the omission of the relative. We must then suppose this Hebraism misunderstood by the Greek translator; for neither does the Greek allow of the omission of the relative.

show thee the judgment of My might, and My ways which are past finding out. 5. Go therefore and sanctify thyself seven days, and eat no bread, nor drink water, nor speak to any one. 6. And afterwards come to that place, and I will reveal Myself to thee, and speak true things with thee, and I will give thee commandment regarding the method of the times; for they will come and will not tarry.

THE PRAYER OF BARUCH THE SON OF NERIAH

XXI. And I went thence and sat in the valley of Cedron in a cave of the earth, and I sanctified my

4. Show thee the judgment of My might. In lxxxiii. 7 we have a nearly related phrase, "The consummation . . . will show the great might of its ruler."

6. That place. See xiii. 1, note.

Method of the times. See xiv. 1, note.

Will come and will not tarry. Hab. ii. 3. Cf. xlviii. 39 of text.

people assembled in Cedron (xxxi.-xxxiv.). At the close of xxxiv. there should follow a fast of seven days. The sixth section should open with this fast, but all mention of it has disappeared from the present text. After the fast comes a vision (xxxvi.-xl.) and a revelation regarding apostates and proselytes (xli. xlii.) with some further disclosures (xliii.); then the sixth section duly closes with an address to the people (xliv.-xlv.)

THE FIFTH AND SIXTH SECTIONS

XXI.-XLVI. This constitutes the fifth section of the book according to the present text, but in reality the fifth and sixth sections (see v. 7, note). For according to the scheme of the final editor, events proceed in each section in a certain order: thus first we find a fast, then generally a prayer or lamentation, then a divine message or disclosure followed by an announcement to the people. Thus we have here the fast of seven days in Cedron (xxi. 1); the prayer on Mount Zion (xxi. 4-26); the revelation (xxii. - xxx.); address to the

It will be observed that xxi.-xlv. embrace material from a variety of sources. Thus xxvi.-xxx. 1 = A¹, and xxxvi.-xl. = A² are independent Messiah apocalypses, and xliii. xlv. 7; xlv. xlv. are derived from B¹. What remains of B² has been completely rearranged according to the views of the final editor. For what was probably the original order of B² see p. 119, and the Introduction, pp. lxi.-lxiii.

XXI. 1. Cedron. See v. 5. On the fasts of Baruch see notes on v. 7 and ix.

Cave. Cf. Assumpt. Mos. ix. 6.

soul there, and I eat no bread, yet I was not hungry, and I drank no water, yet I thirsted not, and I was there till the seventh day, as He had commanded me. 2. And afterwards I came to that place where He had spoken with me. 3. And it came to pass at sunset that my soul took much thought, and I began to speak in the presence of the Mighty One, and said: 4. "O Thou that hast made the earth hear me, that hast fixed the firmament in its fulness, and hast made firm the height of the heaven by the spirit, that hast called from the beginning of the world that which did not yet exist, and they obey Thee. 5. Thou that hast commanded the air by Thy nod, and hast seen those things which are to be as those things

2. That place. Probably Mount Zion. Cf. xx. 6 and xiii. 1; otherwise the temple, x. 5. But this and some other such place determinations may be due to the final editor. The scene of the fast, the prayer, and the revelation was probably the same. See xlvii. 1, note.

3. The Mighty One. This is the first time this title occurs. It is found in B¹, B², A³, but not in A¹, A². See xxv. 4; xxxii. 1, 6; xxxiv. 3, 6; xlv. 1, 4; xlvii. 1; xlviii. 1, 38; xlix. 1; liv. 1; lv. 6; lvi. 2, 3; lix. 3; lxi. 6; lxiii. 3, 5, 6, 8, 10; lxiv. 3, 4; lxv. 1; lxvi. 1, 5, 6; lxvii. 2; lxx. 2, 5; lxxvii. 11, 26; lxxx. 4; lxxxii. 5; lxxxiv. 1, 6, 7, 10; lxxxv. 2, 3.

4. By the spirit. Have we here a reference to Gen. ii. 1, "The spirit of God," or does the whole phrase, "made firm . . . by the spirit," show a connection partly with the LXX. of Ps. xxxiii. 6, τῷ λόγῳ κυρίῳ οἱ οὐρανοὶ ἐστερεώθησαν καὶ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ στόματος κτλ.

Hast called . . . that which did not yet exist. Cf. xlviii. 8, "with a word Thou quickenest that which was not." We seem to have here creation ex nihilo. On the other hand the words above are found in Philo, de Justitia, τὰ γὰρ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι. This may be accidental. At any rate the fundamental principles of the two writers are different; for, except in the De Somno, i. 13, Philo taught the formation of the world from pre-existent elements. See Slav. En. xxiv. 2; xxv. 1, notes. Such expressions as that in the text spring from the repeated "and God said," Gen. i. Cf. Ps. cxlviii. 5; Philo, de sacrif. Abel et Cain, ὁ γὰρ θεὸς λέγων ἅμα ἐποίησεν, μηδὲν μεταξὺ ἀμφοῖν τιθεῖς. In 2 Pet. iii. 5, "There were heavens from of old, and an earth compacted out of water . . . by the word of God," we have the same teaching, with the additional idea that the solid earth was made from the water, as in the Slav. En. xxviii. 2.

which Thou art doing. 6. Thou that rulest with great thought the powers that stand before Thee: (yea) rulest with indignation the holy living creatures, who are without number, which Thou didst make from the beginning, of flame and fire, which stand around Thy throne. 7. To Thee only does this belong that Thou shouldst do forthwith whatsoever Thou dost wish. 8. Who causest the drops of rain to rain by number upon the earth, and alone knowest the consummation of the times before they come: have respect unto my prayer. 9. For Thou alone art able to sustain all who are, and those who pass away, and those who are to be, those who sin, and those who are righteous [as

6. Powers that stand before Thee. Cf. xlviii. 10; 4 Ezra viii. 21a, "cui adstat exercitus angelorum."

Creatures, who are without number. lix. 11.

Which Thou didst make from the beginning. In Jub. ii. 2, the creation of the angels is assigned to the first day—evidently on the ground of Job xxxviii. 7. According to Targ. Jer. I. on Gen. i. 26, and Shemoth rabba, 15, God created the angels on the second day. So also Slav. En. xxix. 1.

7. Pss. cxv. 3; cxxxv. 6; Jonah i. 14.

8. The drops of rain to rain by number. Cf. lix. 5; Ecclus. i. 2; Slav. En. xlvii. 5, note.

Alone knowest the end of the times. Cf. liv. 1.

9. Those who sin, and those who are righteous. For "who are righteous" the Syriac reads here and in xxiv. 2 ܐܠܝܢ ܕܝܫܝܡ = "who are justified" = οἱ δικαιοῦνται, and in xxi. 11, 12; lxii. 7, ܕܝܫܝܡ = "have been justified" = δεδικαιωμένοι εἰσιν.

In all these passages the Syriac is at fault, but its error is to be traced to the Greek Version; for the Greek translator mistranslated the Hebrew before him, which was in the former case הצדקים, and in the latter צדקו. The grounds for this conclusion are as follows: (i.) The antithesis to "those who sin" is not "those who are justified," but "those who do righteousness" or "are righteous." (ii.) If "those who are justified" was the true text, then its antithesis would not be "those who sin," as we find it in xxi. 9, 11, 12; xxiv. 2, but "those who are condemned," as in li. 1 and 4 Ezra iv. 18. (iii.) But since "those who sin" is undoubtedly original, the error must lie in the phrase "those who are justified." (iv.) Now this error is easy to explain. From the LXX. we know that צדק was generally rendered by δικαιοῦσθαι, and only in a few cases by δικαίος εἶναι (Job ix. 2, 15; x. 15; xv. 14; xxv. 4; xxxiii. 12; xxxiv. 5; living (and) being past finding out]. 10. For Thou alone dost live immortal and past finding out, and knowest the number of mankind. 11. And if in time many have sinned, yet others not a few have been righteous. 12. Thou knowest where Thou preservest xxxv. 36). The Greek translator, not appreciating the right meaning of קָרָא in our Apocalypse, gave it the sense he was most familiar with, and so mistranslated it by δικαιόσθαι. (v.) The above conclusions receive confirmation from the fact that the antithesis in our emended text is actually found in Job x. 15 and xxxv. 36, 37. I have emended the text accordingly in xxi. 9, 11, 12; xxiv. 1, 2; lxvii. 2.

The doctrine of justification in this Apocalypse differs from that taught in 4 Ezra.

(1) In Baruch men are justified by the law: thus the text in li. 3 = ἐδικαιώθησαν ἐν τῷ νόμῳ μου (where μου = τοῦ θεοῦ), and in lxvii. 6 it = ἡ δικαιοσύνη ἡ ἐκ τοῦ νόμου, and in lxxxi. 7 it = ἐσώθησαν ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτῶν. In Ezra, on the other hand, the expression "salvation by works" is qualified by the addition of "and by faith." Cf. ix. 7; xiii. 23. In fact we do not find there either expressed or implied the doctrine of justification by works. (2) Quite in keeping with what precedes is the absolute assurance of salvation on the part of Baruch. He never personally dreads condemnation: he looks forward calmly to a life of future blessedness. Cf. xiii. 3; xxv. 1; xlv. 7; lxxvi. 2. Ezra, on the other hand, continually assumes his future woe till assured otherwise in viii. 47-49, 51-54. 4 Ezra xiv. does not belong to the rest of the book. There is a pessimistic outlook in Ezra as there is an optimistic one in Baruch save S (i.e. x. 6-xii.). The note on xiv. 7 of this book will confirm the view above taken.

In 4 Ezra "to justify" preserves its ordinary meaning of "to declare just" in iv. 18 and xii. 7. It is used in this sense also in Ecclus. i. 22; vii. 5; x. 29; xiii. 22; xviii. 22; xxxi. 5; xlii. 2. In 4 Ezra, however, we find another use: thus in x. 16 it = "to vindicate as just." So also in Ps. li. 4; Isa. xlii. 21 (?); Pss. Sol. ii. 16; iii. 5; iv. 9; viii. 7, 27, 31; ix. 3; Luke vii. 29; Apoc. Baruch lxxviii. 5. On the word δικαιούν the reader can consult with advantage Sanday and Headlam's Romans, pp. 28-31. On the teaching on faith in A³, i.e. chaps. liii.-lxxiv., see liv. 25, note.

As living . . . out. This I bracket as a dittography. See next line.

10. Knowest the number of mankind. Gen. xxiii. 4, 5 ; xlviii. 4, 6.

11. Men many have sinned, but many also have been justified.

Others not a few have been righteous. This statement differs strongly from that given in 4 Ezra viii. 3 where it is said plainly that whereas "multi quidem creati sunt, pauci autem salvabuntur," and that the ratio of the saved to the lost is as the amount of gold in the earth to that of the clay in it (viii. 2). This optimism which we have observed already (see xxi. 9, note) differentiates Baruch from Ezra. The latter is in the main pessimistic both with regard to his own destiny (till otherwise reassured by God) and that of the vast bulk of mankind.

12, 13. But this life is not all ; sin and righteousness have further the end of those who have sinned, or the consummation of those who have been righteous. 13. For if there were this life only, which here belongs to all men, nothing could be more bitter than this. 14. For of what profit is strength that turns to weakness, or the food of plenty that turns to famine, or beauty that turns to a hateful (thing)? 15. For the nature of man is always changeable. 16. For we have by no means been from the beginning what we now are, and what we now are we shall not afterwards remain. 17. For if a consummation had not been prepared for all, in vain would have been their beginning. 18. But regarding everything that comes from Thee, do Thou inform me, and regarding everything about which I ask Thee, do Thou enlighten me. 19. How long will that which is corruptible remain, and how long will the time of issues; else the life of the righteous here were a crowning bitterness.

13. This verse may be drawn from 1 Cor. xv. 19, or else both from a common source. Of what worth is life? for (1) it is subject to constant change (xxi. 14, 15); and (2) is likewise mortal (xxi. 16, 17, 22).

14. Strength that turns, etc. lxxxiii. 11.

Beauty that turns to a hateful (thing). lxxxiii. 12.

15. There is no fixity in the being of man: he is the creature of change. In ver. 22, which should follow verses 17, 18, man is by appointment mortal.

16. The text is corrupt. The above rendering rests on an emendation of the text. Thus for וְהָיָה כְּעֵצ׃ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים

עַל הָאָדָם׃ וְהָיָה כְּעֵצ׃ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים

I have read וְהָיָה כְּעֵצ׃ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁׁלַח הָאֱלֹהִים
עַל הָאָדָם׃ This restores, I believe, the original sense (cf. ver. 15). As the text stands it="aut nihil, sicuti quod sumus, est enim ab initio, nunc non sumus" (Ceriani).

17. Ver. 22 may have originally followed this verse.

19. How long will that which is corruptible remain? If this question comes from the final editor, its answer will be found in xl. 3; lxxiv. 3. But if it belongs to B², its answer would naturally be found in xxiii. 7-xxiv. 1; xxxi. 5. The writers of this book (particularly the writer of B²) are greatly impressed with the corruptibility of the present world. The whole present world, the olam hazzeh, belongs mortals be prospered, and until what time will those who transgress in the world be polluted with much wickedness? 20. Command therefore in mercy, and accomplish all that Thou saidst Thou wouldst bring, that Thy might may be made known to those who think that Thy long-suffering is weakness. 21. And show to those who know not, and let them see that it has befallen us and our city until now according to the long-suffering of Thy power, because on account of Thy name Thou hast called us a beloved people. 22. Every nature therefore from this onward is mortal.

to the sphere of corruption. Even so does the Messianic kingdom if it falls within the olam hazzeḥ, as it does in A¹, A², and A³ in this book. Thus in A² the Messianic reign forms the end of the world of corruption (xl. 3), and in A³, the end of corruption and the beginning of incorruption (lxxiv. 3). In B² all that has been is doomed to corruption (xxxi. 5); all that is corruptible will perish (xliv. 9); the new world that awaits them will not turn them to corruption (xliv. 12). In B³ what the righteous have lost was corruptible, but what they will receive is incorruptible (lxxxv. 5). The only reference to this subject in B¹ is where Baruch is told that he will pass away from the earth and forget all that is corruptible (xliii. 2). As to the remaining passages where this word recurs, the text is doubtful in xlviii. 29, and probably interpolated in xxviii. 5. In 4 Ezra vii. 113, the day of judgment is the end of this period and the beginning of the next immortal period. See also iv. 11; vii. 111.

Who transgress. These words could be rendered "who pass away," as in verse 9.

20. This is a prayer for the hastening of the final judgment (cf. 2 Pet. iii. 4-9).

21. The text is unintelligible as it stands: "Show to those who know not, and they have seen what has befallen us and our city until now according to the longsuffering," etc. Merely by the emendation of וַיִּסְמְכוּ = "and they have seen," into וַיִּסְמְכוּ = "and that it has been," we arrive at a perfectly consistent text. The fall of Jerusalem was brought about in the mercy of God to hasten the final judgment. See verse 23; xx. 2.

But, if the text is correct, it = καὶ ἐπαράσσω = וְרָאוּ. Have we here an instance of the Hebrew perfect with strong waw used as a continuation of the imperative? In that case the original may have been וְרָאוּ אֶת אֲשֶׁר נִקְרָה לָנוּ . . . = "Show . . . and let them see that it has happened to us." I have emended accordingly.

A beloved people. Cf. v. 1.

22. It is obvious that this verse breaks the connection of thought. It should be read after verse 17 as

23. Reprove therefore the angel of death, and let Thy glory appear, and let the might of Thy beauty be known, and let Sheol be sealed so that from this time forward it may not receive the dead, and let the treasures of souls restore those which are enclosed in them. 24. For there have been many years like those that are desolate from the days of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and of all those who are like them, who sleep in the earth, on whose account Thou didst say that Thou hadst created the world. 25. And now quickly show Thy glory, and do not defer suggested above. It is possible that לש is corrupt for לש. We should then translate, "Every one, therefore, according to this law is mortal" (cf. ver. 15).

23. The writer in 20, 21, urged God to bring on the final judgment, that His power might be made known, and that men might learn that Israel's calamities had befallen them in the mercy of God. With a view to this final judgment the writer prays to God to put an end to death, to let His glory appear, and the dead arise.

23. The angel of death. Cf. Rev. vi. 8. On the prominent rôle played by this angel in later Jewish writings, see Testament of Abraham (ed. James); Weber, 239-242, 244, 247, 262, 321, 322, 373; Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Jud. i. 854, 855, 862-879.

Sheol. See xi. 6, note.

Be sealed. Cf. Isa. v. 14.

Treasures of souls. Only the righteous souls were admitted to these treasures or chambers. I have preserved the literal meaning of the original word. These are the places in which God treasures His righteous ones, or their righteous acts. After the death of a righteous man his soul was permitted during seven days to behold the seven ways of the righteous and the seven ways of the wicked. After so doing, the soul entered these chambers (4 Ezra vii. 101; iv. 35). These chambers were in Sheol (4 Ezra iv. 41); only righteous souls could enter them (4 Ezra vii. 80); they were guarded by angels, and were full of rest (Eth. En. c. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 95); at the final judgment they were to restore the souls committed to them (Apoc. Bar. xxi. 3; xxx. 2; 4 Ezra vii. 32, 80). It is to be observed that as there were treasures of righteous souls, so there were treasures of righteous works (see xxiv. 1).

It is strange that only the righteous souls are here mentioned. The reference to the wicked may be lost.

24. This verse should in all probability be read after ver. 19. It would there form a good link between vers. 19 and 20. If this is not so the text seems corrupt.

Sleep in the earth. See xi. 4, note.

On whose account, etc. See xv. 7, note; xiv. 18, note.

what has been promised by Thee." 26. And it came to pass that when I had completed the words of this prayer that I was greatly weakened.

XXII. And it came to pass after these things that lo! the heavens were opened, and I saw, and power was given to me, and a voice was heard from on high, and it said unto me: 2. "Baruch, Baruch, why art thou troubled? 3. He who travels by a road but does not complete it, or he who departs by sea but does not arrive at the port, can he be comforted? 4. Or he who promises to give a present to another, but does not fulfil it, is it not robbery? 5. Or he who sows the earth, but does not reap its fruit in its season, does he not lose everything? 6. Or he who plants a plant, unless it grows till the time suitable to it, does he who planted it expect to receive fruit from it? 7. Or a woman who has conceived, if she bring forth untimely, does she not assuredly slay her infant? 8. Or he who builds a house, if he does not roof it and com-

25. What has been promised by Thee. I.e. "the world which Thou hast promised them" (xiv. 13; cf. lxxxiii. 5). The new world would become the dwelling of the righteous after the judgment.

26. I was greatly weakened. This weakness follows again on the prayer in xlvi. 25; cf. 4 Ezra v. 14.

XXII. 1. The heavens were opened and I saw. Ezek. i. 1; cf. Matt. iii. 16; John i. 52; Rev. iv. 1; Acts vii. 56.

A voice was heard, etc., i.e. the bath-qôl. Cf. xiii. 1; Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; Rev. iv. 1.

3-8. In xxii. 3, 5, God rejoins that no man undertakes a work without hoping to enjoy its results, and that no work can be duly judged till it is completed (xxii. 8). Thus Baruch's depreciation of this life (xxi. 13-17, 22) is in some fashion answered. Things must be judged in the light of their consummation. Again, in reply to Baruch's request to hasten the period of judgment (xxi. 19, 24, 20, 21, 23, 25), God rejoins that, for the due accomplishment of any work, time is needed (xxii. 6, 7). Finally, to Baruch's plea for the fulfilment of the divine promise (xxi. 25), God acknowledges the obligation of that promise (xxii. 4).

7. Does . . . assuredly slay. A Hebraism. Text = הרוג יורג. Cf. xiii. 3; xli. 6; xlvi. 30, etc.

plete it, can it be called a house? Tell me that first."

XXIII. And I answered and said: "Not so, O LORD, my Lord." 2. And He answered and said unto me: "Why therefore art thou troubled about that which thou knowest not, and why art thou ill at ease about things in which thou art ignorant? 3. For as thou hast not forgotten the people who now are and those who have passed away, so I remember those who are remembered, and those who are to come. 4. Because when Adam sinned and death was decreed against those who should be born, then XXIII. 1, 2. Baruch having admitted the justice of the divine reasons, God rejoins in the words of xxii. 3, "Why therefore art thou troubled?" for Baruch thereby acknowledges his ignorance of the things in question.

3. It is hard to see the relevance of this verse to any of Baruch's representations. Baruch has never doubted the ultimate fulfilment of the divine promises.

Who are remembered and those who are to come. The Syriac here

ܐܠܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ seems corrupted from ܐܠܝܢܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܡܝܬܐ = "who are appointed to come."

4. When Adam sinned and death was decreed against, etc. There are two different conceptions of man's original destiny and of the physical effect of Adam's sin upon it in two of the different constituents of this book. (1) Thus in B², i.e. in xvii. 3; xix. 8; xxiii. 4, Adam's sin brought in physical death, otherwise man would have been immortal. We find the same view in Ecclus. xxv. 24 ἀπὸ γυναικὸς ἀρχὴ ἁμαρτίας, καὶ δι' αὐτὴν ἀποθνήσκομεν πάντες, though this view cannot be reconciled with the main teaching and tendencies of that book, which are to the effect that man was mortal from the outset (cf. xiv. 17; xvii. 1, 2; xl. 11). The conditional immortality of man appears next in Eth. En. lxix. 11; Book of Wisdom i. 13, 14; ii. 23, 24; Slav. En. xxx. 16, 17 (see notes in loc.); in 4 Ezra iii. 7, "Et huic (sc. Adamo) mandasti diligentiam unam tuam: et prae-terivit eam, et statim instituisti in eum mortem et in nationibus ejus." It is likewise the Pauline view (cf. Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 21). In the Talmud this was the prevailing view; thus, according to the Beresh. rabba, c. 9, Adam was not originally destined for death (Pesikta, 76a); if Adam had not sinned he would have lived for ever (see Weber, 214, 215, 239). (2) In A³, i.e. in liv. 15; lvi. 6, Adam is said to have brought in only pre-mature death. This seems to be the view underlying Gen. ii., iii., though many, it is true, take it to be conditional immortality. But such an interpretation is difficult in the face the multitude of those who should be born was numbered, and for that number a place was prepared where the living might dwell and the dead might be guarded. 5. Unless therefore the number aforesaid is fulfilled, the creature will not live again [for My spirit is the creator of life], and Sheol will receive the dead. 6. And again it is given to thee to hear what things are to come after these times. 7. For truly My redemption has drawn nigh, and is not far distant as aforetime.

of Gen. iii. 19. (3) It may be well to add here that a third view is occasionally taught in the Talmud. Death came into the world in consequence of divine predestination (see Edersheim, Life and Times, etc., i. 166; Weber, 238, 239). On the spiritual effects of Adam's sin on his posterity, see xlviii. 42, note. On the whole question, see Sanday and Headlam, Romans, 136-138.

The multitude of those who should be born was numbered. This was a secret known only to God (xxi. 10; xlviii. 46). How this number was fixed upon is not recorded. It could not be added to or diminished; for the judgment could not come till it was completed (xxiii. 5; 4 Ezra iv. 33-43).

For that number a place was prepared. Cf. Slav. En. xlix. 2: "There has not been even a man in his mother's womb, for whom a place has not been prepared for every soul"; and lviii. 5: "There is a special place for mankind for all the souls of men according to their number." So in the Tractate Chagiga, fol. 15, col. 1; Torath Adam, fol. 101, col. 3; Avodath hakkodesh, fol. 19, col. 1, it is said that a place is prepared for every man either in Paradise or hell (Eisenmenger, ii. 315).

The dead might be guarded. The righteous were in "the treasuries of souls" guarded by angels (Eth. En. c. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 85, 95); the wicked in places of punishment guarded likewise by "those who keep the keys and are the guardians of the gates of hades standing like great serpents, and their faces are like quenched lamps, and their eyes fiery" (Slav. En. xlii. 1).

5. Not till the secret number of mankind is fulfilled can the resurrection take place. In Rev. vi. 11 and 4 Ezra iv. 36 the consummation of the world will follow, not when the number of mankind, but of the saints, is fulfilled. According to the Shemoth rabba, c. 39 (cf. Aboda Sara, 5a), all the generations of mankind were contained in a register called the ספר חיליות of Adam. And (Beresh. rabba, c. 24; Wajjikra rabba, c. 15) not until all the souls still dwelling in the תוך הנשמות, and included in the above register, had been born in the flesh should the Messiah come (i.e. the end of the world). See Weber, 335.

Sheol will receive. Cf. xxi. 23; xi. 6, note.

7. Cf. lxxxii. 2; Luke xxi. 28; 1 Pet. iv. 7.

XXIV. "For behold! the days come and the books will be opened in which are written the sins of all those who have sinned, and again also the treasures in which the righteousness of all those who have been

XXIV. 1. Behold! the days come. See xx. 1, note.

The books will be opened. Dan. vii. 10; Eth. En. xc. 20; Rev. xx. 12; 4 Ezra vi. 20. The books mentioned here contain only a record of the sins of sinners, as in Eth. En. xc. 20. This is probably the case also in Rev. xx. 12: "And books were opened." In the last passage the succeeding words have to do with the lot of the righteous: "And another book was opened which (is the book) of life." This book of life is mentioned also in Eth. En. xlvii. 3; cviii. 3. The books that are spoken of in Dan. vii. 10; 4 Ezra vi. 20, may be records both of the righteous and the wicked.

The treasures in which, etc. See xxi. 23, note. Divine "treasuries" or "storehouses" are a familiar idea in the O.T. Thus we have treasures of rain (Deut. xxviii. 12), of snow and hail (Job xxxviii. 22), of wind (Jer. x. 13; li. 16; Ps. cxxxv. 7), of the sea (Ps. xxxiii. 7); see also Eth. En. lx. 11, 19, 20, 21; 4 Ezra vi. 40. Again the idea of laying up spiritual things in store is found in the LXX. Thus in Prov. i. 18 θησαυρίζουσιν ἑαυτοῖς κακά, and still more clearly in Pss. Sol. ix. 9 θησαυρίζει ζωὴν ἑαυτῷ παρὰ κυρίῳ. The last passage belongs to a time when heaven had come to be regarded as the true home and destination of the righteous. Naturally, when this was the belief of the faithful, their highest thoughts, aspirations, and efforts would be directed thither, and thus Ezra is assured: "Tibi thesaurus operum repositus apud Altissimum" (4 Ezra vii. 77), and the righteous are those qui fidem thesaurizaverunt (vi. 5); they would lay up treasures in heaven (Matt. vi. 19, 20). By a faithless life, on the other hand, men "treasured up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath" (Rom. ii. 5). Finally, the deeds of the righteous were regarded as gathered in "treasuries," as in our text. The expression is found in another sense in xlv. 14. We should observe that אוצר and θησαυρός alike mean a treasure and the place where it is stored.

The righteousness of all, etc. As Dr. Sanday writes (Romans, p. 29): "For a Jew the whole sphere of righteousness was taken up by the Mosaic Law. His one idea of righteousness was that of conformity to this law. Righteousness was for him essentially obedience to the law." That these words are true of the conception of righteousness entertained by the writers of this book will be seen by a perusal of the note on xiv. 7. But naturally the conception of righteousness varied accordingly as it was used by the legalistic or the prophetic wing, if I may so speak, of Pharisaism. With the strict Legalists righteousness meant the fulfilment first and mainly of ceremonial observances, and secondly, but only in a very subordinate degree, of works of mercy. See, for instance, the Book of Jubilees. With the prophetic wing, from which emanated most of the Messianic Apocalypses, righteousness was taken in its large sense as the fulfilment of righteous in creation is gathered. 2. For it will come to pass at that time that thou shalt see—and many that are with thee—the long-suffering of the Most High, which has been throughout all generations, who has been long-suffering towards all those born that sin and are righteous.” 3. And I answered and said: “But, behold! O Lord, no one knows the number of those things which have passed nor yet of those things which are to come. 4. For I know indeed that which has befallen us, but what will happen to our enemies I know not, and when Thou wilt visit Thy works.”

moral duties and only in a very secondary degree of ceremonial. The Ethiopic and Slavonic Books of Enoch are illustrations of the latter statement. In some books it is hard to determine the pre-eminence of either tendency.

Who have been righteous. See note on xxi. 9.

2. I have already shown on p. 20 that xxiv. 2-4 probably followed originally on xx.

Thou shalt see—and many, etc. See note on xiii. 5.

Sin and are righteous. Both verbs depend on the same subject.

3, 4. In the preceding verse God had just assured Baruch that he and many with him should ultimately see the long-suffering of God. Baruch rejoins when that time of recompense will be no man knows (ver. 3), but there is one thing he knows well, i.e. the present calamities of Israel. Hence he wishes to know (a) what fate is in store for the Gentiles who inflicted these, and (b) when will it take effect. The answer to (a) is given in xiii. 3b-12. Just before xiii. 3b some statement such as “retribution will come upon your enemies who are now prospering,” has been lost. Then follows xiii. 3b-12, in which Baruch is told that a special rôle is assigned him in reference to the enemies of Israel. He is to be preserved till the end of the times to testify to these cities, when the threatened retribution has befallen them, the reason of such retribution, the thoroughness with which it will be carried out, and the time of its consummation. Then in xxv. comes the answer to Baruch’s second question: “When wilt Thou visit Thy works?” Baruch is to be preserved to play a part in this respect also (xxv. 1).

Befallen us. For  = “what has befallen me,” I have read  = “what has befallen us?” The same corruption of the suffix appears in this MS. in lxxviii. 3 over against the right text in nine MSS.

Visit Thy works. xx. 2, note. The reference here is to the final judgment.

XXV. And He answered and said unto me :
 "Thou too shalt be kept safely till that time till that sign which the Most High will work for the inhabitants of the earth in the end of days. 2. This therefore will be the sign. 3. When a stupor shall seize the inhabitants of the earth, and they shall fall into many tribulations, and again when they shall fall into great torments. 4. And it will come to pass when they will say in their thoughts by reason of their much tribulation : 'The Mighty One doth no longer remember the earth'—yea, it will come to pass when they abandon hope, that the time will then awake."

XXVI.=E.

XXVI. And I answered and said : "Will that tribulation which is to be continue a long time, and will that necessity embrace many years ?"

XXVII.-
 XXX. 1=A¹.

XXVII. And He answered and said unto me :

XXV. In this chapter we have an answer to Baruch's question :
 "When wilt Thou visit Thy works?"

XXV. 1. In xiii. 3b Baruch was to be preserved to testify against the Gentiles. He has also a further function : observe the "too."

Till that time till that sign which.
 The sign is the stupor that will come on the inhabitants of the earth.

The inhabitants of the earth.
 This phrase is always used in a bad ethical sense in Baruch. Cf. xxv.
 2 ; xlviii. 32, 40 ; liv. 1 ; lv. 2 ;
 lxx. 2, 10 ; generally in 4 Ezra ; cf.
 iii. 34, 35 ; iv. 39 ; v. 6 ; vi. 24 ;
 vii. 72 ; x. 59 ; xiii. 30 ; but in vi.
 18, 26 ; xi. 5, 32, 34 ; xii. 24, the sense of the phrase is merely geographical. For the various meanings of this phrase in the Eth. En. and Rev., see Eth. En. pp. 43, 111.

3, 4. When stupor and despair have seized the inhabitants of the earth, the time of the judgment has come.

3. Stupor. Cf. lxx. 2. This is rendered excessus mentis in 4 Ezra xiii. 30. For the diction, cf. Jer.
 viii. 21.

4. At the end of the tribulation and torments of the inhabitants of the earth the time of the judgment has come (cf. xiii. 8). This leaves no room for the Messianic kingdom in xxix., which precedes the judgment.

XXVI. This chapter is an addition of the final editor in order to introduce xxvii.-xxx. 1. xxv. was originally followed by xiv.-xix.

XXVII.-XXX. 1. We have here a fragment of a Messiah Apocalypse which for convenience of reference we designate A¹. Its (1) chief “Into twelve parts is that time divided, and each one of them is reserved for that which is appointed for it. 2. In the first part there will be the beginning of commotions. 3. And in the second part (there will be) slayings of the great ones. 4. And in the third part (there will be) the fall of many by death. 5. And in the fourth part the sending of desolation. 6.

characteristics, (2) its date, and (3) its points of divergence from B¹ and B² are as follows:—(1) After a terrible period of tribulation (i.e. the travel pains of the Messiah) (xxvii.-xxviii. 1) which should imperil the salvation even of the elect (xxviii. 3), and should prevail over all the earth (xxviii. 7-xxix. 1), a glorious kingdom, accompanied with every possible blessing, was to be established under the Messiah (xxix. 3-8), who after a reign of indefinite duration should return in glory into heaven (xxx. 1a). Thereupon the resurrection was to follow (xxx. 1b). The outlook is hopeful and thoroughly optimistic. (2) The later limit of composition is easy to determine. (a) Since the kingdom is to be established in Palestine, and only those Jews who are found there are to share in it, it is clear that there has been no dispersion of the Jews; for had there been, as it was in the case of B¹, we should here be told of a return from exile. Hence this fragment was written before 70 A.D. (b) Again, since Palestine is the scene of the kingdom, Jerusalem must still be standing; for in case it had fallen, we should here be told of its restoration, as in B¹, or of the setting up of the new Jerusalem, as in 4 Ezra xiii. 36. The Messianic kingdom could not be set up over the ruins of the holy city. Hence, again, we conclude that A¹ was written before 70 A.D. (3) Its points of divergence from B¹ and B² are obvious. In the latter, Jerusalem is destroyed and its people in exile; whereas in A¹ Jerusalem is standing and the Jews are in their own land. Again, whereas the law is the centre of interest and expectation in B², and in a somewhat less degree in B¹ (see xv. 5, note), it is the Messiah that is such in A¹. Further, whereas there is not a single allusion to the Messiah in B¹ and B², there is not a single allusion to the law in A¹. This, indeed, may be partly due to the shortness of this fragment.

XXVII. 1. In A³, i.e. liii.-lxxiv. and 4 Ezra xiv. 11, 12, there are similar twelvefold divisions; but in these it is the entire history of the world that is so divided, whereas in our text it is only the time of troubles preceding the advent of the Messiah. These troubles were popularly conceived as the travail pains of the Messiah הבלי המשיח. We find a list of such woes (ᾠδῶνες, Matt. xxiv. 8) in xlviii. 31-37; lxx. 2-10; Matt. xxiv. 6-29, with synoptic parallels; 2 Tim. iii. 1; Jubilees xxiii. 13, 16-25; 4 Ezra v. 1-12; vi. 14-18, 20-24; Orac. Sibyl. iii. 796-807; see Weber, 336; Schürer, Div. II., vol. ii. 154-156. In the Gospels, however, these woes are to precede the second coming of Christ or the end of the world.

5. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 8; vi. 22. For desolation we might also render “the sword”; cf. 5 Ezra xv. 5.

And in the fifth part famine and the withholding of rain. 7. And in the sixth part earthquakes and terrors. 8. [Wanting.] 9. And in the eighth part a multitude of portents and incursions of the Shedim. 10. And in the ninth part the fall of fire. 11. And in the tenth part rapine and much oppression. 12. And in the eleventh part wickedness and unchastity. 13. And in the twelfth part confusion from the mingling together of all those things aforesaid. 14. For these parts of that time are reserved, and will be mixed one with another and will minister one to another. 15. For some will of themselves be of service, and they will receive from others, and from themselves and others they will be perfected, so that those may not understand who are upon the earth in those days of this consummation of the times.

XXVIII. "Nevertheless, whosoever shall understand will then be wise. 2. For the measure and reckoning of that time are two parts weeks of seven weeks." 3. And I answered and said: "It is good for a man

6. Famine. As a sign of the end, cf. lxx. 8; Matt. xxiv. 7; Mark xiii. 8; Luke xxi. 11.

7. Earthquakes. Cf. lxx. 8; Matt. xxiv. 7; Mark xiii. 8; Luke xxi. 11.

9. Portents. Cf. 4 Ezra vi. 21: "Et anniculi infantes loquentur vocibus suis, et praegnantes immaturos parient infantes, etc." But owing to the next words it would perhaps be better to render  = ḥav-tarlau as "spectres."

The Shedim. See x. 8, note.

10. The fall of fire. Cf. lxx. 8; 4 Ezra v. 8. If with the reviser of the MS. we delete the  before  we should render "the fire will fall."

15. These verses are obscure. They are possibly corrupt. For "of this . . . times" we can equally well render "that this is the consummation of the times."

XXVIII. 1. This verse recalls Dan. xii. 10: "the wise shall understand."

2. I cannot interpret this verse.

3. This verse expresses the difficulty of faithfulness in the times just described. Cf. 4 Ezra xiii. 16-20: "Vae qui derelicti fuerint in diebus illis, et multo plus vae his to come and behold, but it is better that he should not come lest he fall. 4. [But I will say this also. XXVIII. 4-5 = E. 5. 'Will he who is incorruptible despise those things which are corruptible, and whatever befalls in the case of those things which are corruptible, so that he might look only to those things which are not corruptible?'] 6. But if, O Lord, those things shall assuredly come to pass which Thou hast foretold to me; if, moreover, I have found grace in Thy sight, show this also unto me. 7. Is it in one place or in one of the parts of the earth that those things are to come to pass, or will the whole earth experience (them)?"

XXIX. And He answered and said unto me: "Whatever will then befall will belong to the whole earth; therefore all who live will experience (them). 2. For at that time I will protect only those who are found in those self-same days in this land. 3. And it qui non sunt derelicti! Qui enim non sunt derelicti, tristes erunt, intelligentes quae sunt reposita in novissimis diebus et non occurrentes eis . . . adtamen facilius est periclitantem venire in haec quam pertransire . . . et non videre quae contingent in novissimo." Only the righteous, the fittest survive. Cf. xli. 1; lxxv. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 46, 47; Matt. xxiv. 22; Mark xiii. 21. This verse looks forward to the blessings described in xxix. 4-8.

4, 5. I have bracketed these verses as an interpolation of the final editor. They break the connection of thought. Further, no account is taken of them either by Baruch to whom they are assigned, or by God to whom they are addressed. They are unreasonable and out of place in the presence of the sensuous picture of Messianic bliss which meets us in the next chapter. The real answer to Baruch's question here can be gathered from xliii. 2.

6. If I have found grace, etc. A familiar O.T. phrase (Gen. vi. 8; xix. 19, etc.; 4 Ezra v. 56; vii. 102; viii. 42; xii. 7).

XXIX. 2. I will protect, etc. Here God protects His people who are found in the Holy Land, whereas in A² it is the Messiah (xl. 2) in A³ the Holy Land itself (lxxi. 1). In B² it is the law that protects the faithful, irrespective of their place of habitation (xxxii. 1; cf. 6 Ezra vii. 122).

Found . . . in this land. Cf. xl. 2; lxxi. 1; 4 Ezra xiii. 48, 49. A special blessing attached to residence in Palestine. It alone was to escape the woes that should befall will come to pass when all is accomplished that was to come to pass in those parts, that the Messiah will then all the earth besides. But this thought is found only in the sections of this book written prior to 70 A.D. Such ideas as to the sacrosanct and inviolable character of Palestine seem to have disappeared for a time from Jewish speculation with the desecration and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, unless where the Messiah was expected. Hence in B² it is the law that protects the faithful (xxxii. 1), and in 4 Ezra vii. 122 it is the glory of God; and this protection avails them irrespective of their place of dwelling. The special privileges attaching to the Holy Land reappear in the Talmud, but in another form. Thus three will inherit the world to come: he who dwells in the land of Israel, he who brings up his sons to the study of the law, and he who repeats the ritual blessing over the appointed cup of wine at the close of the Sabbath (Pesachim, fol. 113a). Again the merits of the fathers will not avail a man who leaves the land of Israel for an outside land (Baba bathra, fol. 91a). Further, those who died in the Holy Land should rise first in the resurrection (Weber, pp. 64, 352); hence it is called "the land of the living" (Beresh. rab. 74); if the righteous died in any other land their bodies would have to roll (תהולות) through underground passages (תהולות) till they came to Palestine before they could be raised (Weber, 352; Eisenmenger, ii. 920, 921). It was for this reason that Jacob and Joseph (Eisenmenger, ii. 925) and the Rabbis, who were specially honoured (Weber, 64), were buried in Canaan. Nay more, residents in the land of Israel could procure the resurrection of their relatives who died among the Gentiles (Eisenmenger, ii. 900). That the righteous who were buried outside the limits of Palestine should rise is also stated (Weber, 352).

3. The rôle here assigned to the Messiah is a passive one like that in Eth. En. xc. 37, 38; 4 Ezra vii. 28, 29. In this respect it differs from that represented in A² and A³, i.e. xxxvi.-xl.; lii.-lxxiv.; and in Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx.; Pss. Sol. xvii., xviii.; 4 Ezra xii. 32-34; xiii. 32-50, where the Messiah fights either with spiritual or material weapons on behalf of Israel, destroys its enemies, and sets up the Messianic kingdom.

The Messiah will then begin to be revealed. The phrase "begin to be revealed" seems corrupt. We should perhaps have "the principate of the Messiah will be revealed," as in xxxix. 7. We can get this by reading instead of

Cf. xli. 3. Or by simply reading

"Messiah the prince will be revealed." In this case the phraseology might be due to Dan. ix. 25. From a comparison of this verse and xxx. 1 the Messiah appears to be in heaven and is to be revealed from thence; but in other passages the implication of such language as "will be revealed" is merely that the Messiah may be already on earth and yet be unknown.

This emergence of the Messiah from concealment was a current view. Thus we find it in 4 Ezra vii. 28; xiii. 32; also in John vii. 27: "When the Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is." This concealment of the Messiah is mentioned also in Targum Jon. on Zech-begin to be revealed. 4. And Behemoth will be revealed from his place, and Leviathan will ascend from ariah iii. 8; vi. 12. In the Targum on Micah iv. 8 it is said to be due to the sins of the people. From Justin's Dial. c. Tryph. 8, it appears that though the Messiah may be already born, yet He may be unknown, and not even know His own calling till Elijah anoints and reveals Him. Χριστὸς δέ, εἰ καὶ γεγένηται καὶ ἔστι πῶ, ἀγνωστὸς ἔστι καὶ οὐδὲ αὐτὸς πῶ ἐάντων ἐπίσταται οὐδὲ ἔχει δύναμιν τινα, μέχρις ἂν ἔλθῶν Ἡλίας χρίσῃ αὐτὸν καὶ φάνερον πᾶσι ποιήσῃ. Cf. also c. 110.

According to the Talmud, the Messiah was born at Bethlehem on the day of the destruction of the temple, was named Menahem, and afterwards suddenly carried away by a storm (Hieros. Berachoth, p. 5). His temporary abode, according to later writers, was to be Rome (Sanhedrin, 98a). On this subject see Lightfoot's Horae on Matt. ii. 1; Oehler's Messias in Herzog's R.E. ix. 668; Drummond, The Jewish Messiah, 293, 294; Schürer's N.T. Times, Div. II., vol. ii. 163, 164; Weber, 342, 343; Wünsche, Die Leiden des Messias, 57-59.

4. And Behemoth will be revealed, etc. The full form of this myth is given in 4 Ezra vi. 49-52: "Et tunc conservasti duo animalia, nomen uni vocasti Behemoth et nomen secundi vocasti Leviathan, Et separasti ea ab alterutro, non enim poterat septima pars ubi erat aqua congregata capere ea. Et dedisti Behemoth unam partem quae siccata est tertio die, ut inhabitet in ea, ubi sunt montes mille; Leviathan autem dedisti septimam partem humidam: et servasti ea ut fiant in devorationem quibus vis et quando vis." From a comparison of verse 4 with the verses just cited, it is clear that the words "from his place" and "from the sea" imply the account in these verses of Ezra. This is confirmed by the fact that not only is the thought the same, but also almost word for word the diction in the Syriac Versions of the two clauses: "Servasti ea ut fiant in devorationem" (4 Ezra vi. 52) and "kept them until that time and then they will be for food." Thus so far 4 Ezra would seem to be the source of our text. But if in these respects Baruch presupposes 4 Ezra, 4 Ezra in turn presupposes Baruch in the clauses: "Quibus vis et quando vis" (4 Ezra vi. 52) over against "for all that are left" in verse 4—the words "those who are left" being a technical phrase to express those who should survive to participate in the Messianic kingdom. We are thus led to assume that a short hexaameron, closely resembling that found in 4 Ezra vi. 38-54, existed at one time independently, and that the writers of Ezra vi. 30-vii. 25 and Bar. xxvii.-xxx. laid it under contribution for their own purposes. (For a probable additional fragment of this hexaameron, see xv. 7, note.) This assumption gains confirmation from the facts (1) that this hexaameron cannot originally have proceeded from the writer of the Salathiel Apocalypse (i.e. the groundwork of 4 Ezra); for the latter looked for no Messianic kingdom, whereas the writer of this hexaameron did as is obvious from vi. 52 compared with xxix. 4 of our text; and (2) that whereas A¹ of Baruch was written prior to the fall of Jerusalem, the Salathiel Apocalypse was written subsequently to it.

4. Behemoth . . . and Leviathan. In addition to the references in the preceding note, see Eth. En. lx. 7-9, 24, notes; Targ. Jon. on Gen.

the sea, those two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of creation, and I kept them until that time; and then they will be for food for all that are left. 5. The earth also will yield its fruit ten thousand-fold, and on one vine there will be a thousand branches,

i. 21: "And God created great beasts Leviathan and his wife which were prepared for the day of consolation;" see also the Targum on Ps. l. 10; Weber, 156, 195, 370, 384; Buxtorf, Lexicon Chald. rabb. Talmud, and Levy, Chaldäisches Wörterbuch und Neuhebräisches Wörterb. in loc.

All that are left. This is in fact "the remnant" that survives to share in the Messiah's kingdom. This remnant is frequently referred to in this sense (cf. xl. 2; 4 Ezra vi. 25; vii. 28; ix. 7; xii. 34; xiii. 48).

5. We have here another fragment of an old Apocalypse, of which we find a Latin version in Irenaeus, v. 33. This Apocalypse Papias, according to Irenaeus, assigned to our Lord. It is recounted in the fourth book of his Δογμῶν κυριακῶν ἐξηγήσεις. The passage in question is: "Venient dies, in quibus vineae nascentur, singulae decem millia palmitum habentes, et in uno palmite dena millia brachiorum, et in uno vero palmite dena millia flagellorum, et in unoquoque flagello dena millia botrum, et in unoquoque botro dena millia acinorum et unumquodque acinum expressum dabit vigintiquinque metretas vini. Et quum eorum apprehenderit aliquis sanctorum botrum, alius clamabit: Botrus ego melior sum, me sume, per me Dominum benedic." Scholars have taken our text to be the original of this passage. That this is unlikely, and that both may be derived from the same original source, I will now proceed to show. In the first place, the passage in Irenaeus contains two additional sentences: "Dena millia brachiorum . . . palmitum," and "Et quum eorum . . . benedic." Hence a fuller text is presupposed than we have in Bar. xxix. 5. In the next place, immediately after the words just cited, the text in Irenaeus proceeds: "Similiter et granum tritici decem millia spicarum generaturum, et unamquamque spicam habituram decem millia granorum, et unumquodque granum quinque bilibres simulae clarae mundae." With these words compare the Eth. En. x. 19, where, in an account of Messianic bliss, we find "The vine that is planted thereon will yield wine in abundance, and of all the seed which is sown thereon will each measure bear ten thousand." From this we conclude that for a long time prior to Christianity there existed either in tradition or in writing a sensuous description of Messianic felicity. In this description not only the fruitfulness of the vine was dwelt upon, but also of all seeds and fruit-bearing trees. Of this description the largest survival is in Irenaeus, v. 33, preserved through the agency of Papias; the fragmentary survivals in the Eth. En. x. 19 (see above) and in our text form complimentary portions of this tradition.

Finally, the text presents a syncretistic appearance. In xxix. 4 one description of food—a flesh diet—is provided for the members of the Messianic kingdom; and in the next verse quite another—a vegetable diet; and in xxix. 8 a heavenly food, i.e. manna. The second is a more ancient view than the first and and each branch will produce a thousand clusters, and each cluster will produce a thousand grapes, and each grape will produce a cor of wine. 6. And those who have hungered will rejoice: moreover, also, they will behold marvels every day. 7. For winds will go forth from before Me to bring every morning the fragrance of aromatic fruits, and at the close of the day clouds distilling the dew of health. 8. And it will come to pass at that self-same time that the treasury of manna will again descend from on high, and they will eat of it in those years, because these are they who have come to the consummation of time.

the most reasonable, being a return to the food of Adam in Paradise.

As to the origin of the 10,000-fold yield of the corn and wine, etc., Mr. Rendel Harris (Expositor, 1895, pp. 448, 449) offers a most ingenious and probable suggestion. He derives it from the blessing of Isaac (Gen. xxvii. 28), where he conjectures that in the statement רב הין ותירש = "plenty of corn and wine," the word רב was taken as רבו = 10,000. He points out that the context in Irenaeus (see above), in which the story of Papias and the elders is given, supports his contention; for that it follows a discussion of the blessing in question.

Each branch . . . each cluster . . . each grape. Instead of "each" the Syriac in all three cases gives "one." But the sense requires "each," and in the Latin Version of this passage preserved in Irenaeus (see above) "each" is found in the three phrases, i.e. "unoquoque flagello, unoquoque botro, unoquoque acinum." The explanation is not far to seek. The Hebrew אחר which = εἷς, one, occasionally also = ἕκαστος, each. The former meaning was wrongly followed by the Greek translator. Hence the wrong turn in the Syriac.

A cor. This represents κόρος which in turn is a translation of כּר or חֶקֶר. The cor was equal to about 120 gallons. Cf. Joseph. Ant. xv. 9, 2 ὁ δὲ κόρος δύνатаι μεδύμους ἄπτικους δέκα.

6. Rejoice. This is a characteristic of the members of the kingdom. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 28; xii. 34.

Behold marvels. The belief that the Messiah would signalise His advent by marvels was general. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 27; xiii. 50; Matt. xi. 4-6; Luke vii. 22, 23; John vii. 31.

8. The treasury of manna will again descend, etc. In Ps. lxxviii. 25 manna is called angels' food. In Or. Sibyl. vii. 149 it is to be the food of the members of the Messianic kingdom Μάννην τὴν δροσερὴν λευκοῖσιν ὀδοῦσι φάγονται, and in Rev. ii. 17 the idea is spiritualised: the faithful are to receive "hidden manna."

These are they, etc. These are "the remnant" of verse 4.

Consummation of time. This

XXX. "And it will come to pass after these things, when the time of the advent of the Messiah is fulfilled, and He will return in glory, then all who have fallen asleep in hope of Him shall rise again. 2. And it will come to pass at that time that the treasures will be opened in which is preserved the number of the souls of the righteous, and they will come forth, and a multitude of souls will be seen together in one assemblage of one thought, and the first will rejoice and the last will not be grieved. 3.

XXX. 2-
XXXV. = B².

phrase is found in xxvii. 15. The Messianic age forms the "consummation of the time or times" = ἡ συντελεία τοῦ αἰῶνος or τῶν αἰώνων. We should observe that this phrase has a different meaning in xxx. 3; but there we have the work of B².

XXX. 1. When the time of the advent of the Messiah is fulfilled, etc. This can have only one meaning, and this is that, at the close of His reign, the Messiah will return in glory to heaven. The word translated "advent" is אָדָמְתָא which in turn was an ordinary rendering of παρουσία. Now παρουσία can mean not only "coming" or "advent," but also "presence" (cf. 2 Cor. x. 10; 2 Macc. xv. 21, and probably 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7; 2 Thess. ii. 9). Hence we should render: "When the time of the presence of the Messiah is fulfilled."

Return in glory. These words imply that the Messiah pre-existed in heaven before His advent. He returns whither He had come. This is also the teaching of Eth. En. xlvi. 1, 2; xlviii. 3 (see note); lxii. 7; 4 Ezra xii. 32; xiii. 26 (?); xiv. 9. This seems also to be the legitimate interpretation of Pss. Sol. xviii. 6 εἰς ἡμέραν ἐκλογῆς ἐν ἀνάξει χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ. In 4 Ezra vii. 29, 30, the Messiah and the righteous die at the close of the Messianic kingdom.

Then all who have fallen asleep in hope of Him shall rise again. The resurrection follows immediately on the return of the Messiah into heaven; on his death in 4 Ezra vii. 29, 30. The words "of him" cannot be original. The text was probably "those who have fallen asleep in hope." Cf. LXX. of Ps. xvi. 9 ἡ σὰρξ μου κατασκηνώσει ἐπ' ἐλπίδι. The corruption could have arisen easily in the Syriac by a change of אָדָמְתָא into אָדָמְתָא.

Fallen asleep. Cf. xi. 4, note. As A¹ is fragmentary, we are not told what befalls the living righteous. In the following verses of B² only the destinies of souls are dealt with. The complementary half of this doctrine is given in l, li.

2. With this verse we return to B², resuming the text that ended with xxiv. 1. We have here an account of the general resurrection (cf. xlii. 8; l. 2).

Treasures. See xxi. 23, note; xxiv. 1, note.

For he knows that the time has come of which it is said, that it is the consummation of the times. 4. But the souls of the wicked, when they behold all those things, shall then waste away the more. 5. For they will know that their torment has come and their perdition has arrived."

XXXI. And it came to pass after these things that I went to the people and said unto them: "Assemble unto me all your elders and I will speak

3. The consummation of the times. This phrase means here the final judgment; in A¹ it means the Messianic age (cf. xxvii. 15; xxix. 8).

4. Waste away. Cf. li. 5; 4 Ezra vii. 87.

5. This verse does not mean that the wicked souls have not hitherto suffered, but that their suffering hitherto is as nothing compared to the torments they shall now endure. Similarly, the righteous have in the treasures of souls had rest and peace, but they too (cf. ver. 3) know that their real blessedness has now come. See xxxvi. 10.

XXXI.-XXXV. Baruch assembles and addresses the elders of the people (xxx. 1-3); he exhorts them not to forget the anguish of Zion (xxx. 4), and announces the coming end of all that is corruptible (xxx. 5); and, in case they observe the law, their safety amid the convulsions which will accompany the renewal of the entire creation (xxx. 1); they are not to grieve so much for the past as for the coming time; for then the strife and stress will exceed all that has been before when God renews creation (xxx. 1, 5, 6). Thereupon, when Baruch seeks to dismiss the people (xxx. 7), they remonstrate against his forsaking them (xxx. 8-xxxiii.) Baruch rejoins that he is not forsaking them, but only going to the Holy Place to get light from God (xxxiv.) He then proceeds thither and laments over Zion (xxxv.) A fast of seven days should follow here.

The subject on which Baruch addresses the people is to be found in each instance in the previous divine revelation (see v. 5; x. 4); but it will be observed that this address (xxx. 3-xxxii. 6) is wholly out of relation to all that has gone before. There is therefore something wrong. The gist of this address is: (a) The end of all things corruptible is at hand; (b) if ye prepare your hearts to obey the law ye will then be safe in this time of crisis; (c) for the entire creation must be shaken, and give place to a new and incorruptible creation. Now these questions are discussed later in the dialogues between God and Baruch. Thus, for (a), see xli. 6-8; for (b), see xlviii. 22-24, 38-41; for (c), see xlviii. 49; lii. 3, 8-9, 16. We therefore hold that xxxi.-xxxv. was read after lii. originally. Finally, xlv. 8-15 really forms the conclusion of Baruch's address in xxxi., xxxii.; it should be read immediately after xxxii. 6 (see p. 69).

XXXI. 1. All your elders. See xlv. 1, note.

words unto them." 2. And they all assembled in the valley of the Cedron. 3. And I answered and said unto them: "Hear, O Israel, and I will speak to thee, and give ear, O seed of Jacob, and I will instruct thee. 4. Forget not Zion, but hold in remembrance the anguish of Jerusalem. 5. For lo! the days come, when everything that exists will become the prey of corruption and be as though it had not been.

XXXII. "But ye, if ye prepare your hearts, so as to sow in them the fruits of the law, it will protect you in that time in which the Mighty One is to shake the whole creation. [2. Because after a little time the building of Zion will be shaken in order that it

XXXII. 2-4 =
E.

2. Cedron. See v. 5, note.

3. Hear, O Israel . . . and give ear, O seed of Jacob. Cf. xvii. 4; Jobi. 4; 4 Ezra ix. 30. For the combination "hear . . . and give ear," see Isa. i. 2.

5. Will become the prey of. Literally = "will be taken to corruption." See xxi. 19, note.

XXXII. 1. Prepare your hearts. An O.T. phrase (cf. 1 Sam. vii. 3; Jobi. xi. 13; Ps. lxxviii. 8). It is a favourite expression in B¹ and B² of this book; cf. xlvi. 5; lii. 7; lxxxiii. 8; lxxxv. 9, 11.

The fruits of the law. Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 20; ix. 32; see note on xv. 5.

It will protect. See xxix. 2, note. These words point back to xlviii. 22-24; cf. xlv. 13, 14; xlviii. 38-41.

Shake the whole creation. I.e. with a view to a new heavens and a new earth (see ver. 6). The thought comes originally from Haggai ii. 6; cf. Heb. xii. 26.

2-4. I have bracketed these verses as an interpolation; for in verse 2 it is announced that the temple will be destroyed after a little time; but, according to all B² as well as B¹, the temple has already been destroyed, and this is the presupposition of xxxi. 4. Again, verses 2-4 break the connection of thought in the text. Observe the awkwardness of "Because after a little time," etc., following on verse 1; and, on the other hand, how appropriately verse 5 follows on xxxi. 4-xxxii. 1. We should observe that there is nothing inconsistent in the idea of a heavenly Jerusalem being established on a new and incorruptible earth. Indeed, it is not impossible that iv. 2-7 originally followed xxxii. 6. We have a close parallel to xxxii. 2-4 in Beresh rab. 2, and Pesikta, 145a, where it is said that the temple was built in glory, destroyed, again rebuilt, but in mean fashion; finally, it should again be rebuilt in glory.

2. Zion will be shaken. I.e. in 588 by Nebuchadnezzar; but according to xxxi. 4; xxxii. 5; xxxiii. 2, 3; xxxv. 1, this is already in the past.

may again be built. 3. But that building will not remain, but will again after a time be rooted out, and will remain desolate until the time. 4. And afterwards it must be renewed in glory, and it will be perfected for evermore.] 5. Therefore we should not be distressed so much over the evil which has now come as over that which is still to be. 6. For there will be a greater trial than these two tribulations when the Mighty One will renew His creation. 7. And now do not draw near to me for a few days, nor seek me till I come to you." 8. And it came to pass when I had spoken to them all these words, that I, Baruch, went my way, and when the people saw me setting out, they lifted up their voice and lamented and said:

In order that it may again be built.
I.e. by Ezra and Nehemiah.

3. Again . . . be rooted out. I.e. by the Romans in 70 A.D.

4. On the heavenly Jerusalem.
See iv. 3, note.

5. We should . . . be distressed.
I have here followed Bensly's emendation of 𐤁𐤏𐤃𐤁 into 𐤁𐤏𐤃𐤁𐤏. Otherwise, we should render with Ceriani, "Non ergo debet nos contristare hoc omne super malo quod supervenit," etc.

The evil which has now come. The fall of Jerusalem.

6. Two tribulations. I.e. those accompanying the destruction of Jerusalem and the renewal of creation. But the more natural rendering is: "For there will be a greater trial than the two tribulations when," etc. If we must accept this, the words "than the two tribulations" are an addition of E, and without them the text would run: "For the trial will be great when," etc.

Renew His creation. This signifies an incorruptible world which was to take the place of the corruptible (cf. xxxi. 5; xlv. 12; lvii. 2). It was a current expectation from the times of the captivity (cf. Isa. lxxv. 17; lxxvi. 22; Eth. En. xlv. 4, note; lxxii. 1; xci. 15, 16; 4 Ezra vii. 75; Matt. xix. 28; 2 Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1). This announcement of Baruch is the presupposition of li, lii., and the truth correlative to the renewal and transformation of the righteous in li.

7. Do not draw near, etc. 4 Ezra v. 19. This verse was preceded originally by xlv. 8-15 (see p. 69).

For a few days. These words refer to the interval in which the next fast of seven days should take place. The mention of this fast at the beginning or close of xxxv. has through some accident been omitted (see v. 7, note; ix. 2, note).

9. "Whither departest thou from us, Baruch, and forsakest us as a father who forsakes his orphan children, and departs from them?"

XXXIII. "Are these the commands which thy companion, Jeremiah the prophet, commanded thee, and said unto thee: 2. 'Look to this people till I go and confirm the rest of the brethren in Babylon, against whom has gone forth the sentence that they should be led into captivity?' 3. And now if thou also forsakest us, it were good for us all to die before thee, and then that thou shouldst withdraw from us."

XXXIV. And I answered and said unto the people: "Far be it from me to forsake you or to withdraw from you, but I will only go unto the Holy of Holies to enquire of the Mighty One concerning you and concerning Zion, if in some respect I should receive more illumination: and after these things I will return to you."

XXXV. And I, Baruch, went to the holy place, and sat down upon the ruins and wept, and said: 2. "Become ye springs, O mine eyes, and ye, mine eyelids, a fount of tears. 3. For how shall I lament

9. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 18.

XXXIII. 1, 2. See x. 2, note, where I have shown that, according to B¹, Jeremiah does not seem to have gone to Babylon.

3. For another form of the same thought, cf. 4 Ezra xii. 44.

XXXIV. Far be it from me to forsake you. Cf. 4 Ezra xii. 48: "Si ergo tu nos dereliqueris, quanto erit nobis melius, si essemus succensi et nos in incendio Sion."

Holy of Holies. This is practically the same place as is mentioned in x. 5; in xxxv. 1 it is simply called the holy place. It is where the altar stood. See xxxv. 4.

XXXV. 1. The holy place, and sat down upon the ruins. See preceding note, and x. 5, note.

2. From Jer. ix. 1; cf. Eth. En. xcv. 1.

for Zion, and how shall I mourn for Jerusalem? 4. Because in that place where I am now prostrate, the high priest of old used to offer holy sacrifices, and to place thereon the smoke of the incense of fragrant odours. 5. But now our glorying has been made into dust, and the desire of our soul into sand."

XXXVI. And when I had said these things I fell XXXVI.-XL.
=A².

THE SIXTH SECTION

XXXVI.-XLVI. This in reality forms the sixth part of this book. For the symmetry of the book as constructed by the final editor requires, as we have already shown (see v. 7, note, introduction to the fifth section, p. 36, and xxxii. 7, note), the insertion of a seven days' fast after xxxv., or possibly even before it. The omission of this fast may have been an original oversight of the editor, or may have been due to a careless copyist. The structure of this part is as follows:—First, the omitted fast, then a Messiah vision and its interpretation (xxxvi.-xl.), with further disclosures regarding apostates and proselytes (xli. 2-xlii. 8), and the announcement of Baruch's coming death (xliii.) Finally, Baruch's address to the people (xliv.-xlvi.)

This section is of very composite origin. Thus xxxvi.-xl. is a Messiah Apocalypse written prior to 70 A.D.; xliii.-xliv. 8; xlv.-xlvi. 6 belongs to B¹; the rest of the section mainly to B².

XXXVI.-XL. We have here the second Messiah Apocalypse A². (a) Date of A² and its Relation to B¹ and B². A² is quite distinct in its world-view and date from B¹ and B². We shall first establish the difference of date. Now whereas we have seen that B¹ and B² were written subsequent to the fall of Jerusalem, it is clear that A² was written prior to that event. For whereas, in a short historical outline from the rise of Babylon to the reign of the Messiah (xxxix. 2-xl. 2), the first destruction of Jerusalem is mentioned (xxxix. 3), there is not even a hint given as to its destruction by Rome, although the Roman oppression of Palestine is clearly indicated (xxxix. 5, 6). Again the Messiah makes Zion His capital (xl. 1). If it were in ruins, its restoration would of necessity be mentioned. Finally, as there is no allusion in A² to the second destruction of Jerusalem, so there is none to the subsequent dispersion after that event, and none to a return of the exiles. Consequently, as we find, the remnant of Israel is still in Palestine (xl. 2). It is wholly otherwise in B¹ and B².

As regards their difference of world-view, it will be sufficient here to remark that whereas there is no Messiah in B¹ and B², the Messiah is the centre of expectation and the stay of Israel in A². And whereas B² is pessimistic as regards this world, A² is optimistic. And whereas in B², and in a less degree in B¹, the law is the centre and the end of life, in A² this place is occupied by the Messiah.

(b) Relation of A² to A¹. The two writings come from different authors. In A¹ the Messiah has only a passive rôle assigned to Him; He does not appear till the enemies asleep there, and I saw a vision in the night. 2. And lo! a forest of trees planted on the plain, and lofty mountains surrounded it and precipitous rocks, and that forest occupied much space. 3. And lo! over against it arose a vine, and from under it there went forth a fountain peacefully. 4. Now that fountain came to the forest and was (stirred) into great waves, and those waves submerged that forest, and suddenly they rooted out the multitude of (the trees) of that forest, and overthrew all the mountains which were round about it. 5. And the height of the forest began to be made low, and the top of the mountains was made low, and that fountain prevailed greatly, so that it left nothing of that great forest save one cedar only. 6. Also when it had cast it down and had destroyed and rooted out the multitude of (the trees of) that forest, so that nothing was left of it, nor could its place be recognised, then that vine began to come with the fountain in peace and great tranquillity, and it came to a place which was not far from the cedar, and they brought the cedar which had been cast down to it. 7. And I beheld and lo! that vine opened its mouth and spake and said to that cedar: "Art thou not that cedar which was left of the forest of wickedness, and by whose means wickedness persisted, and was wrought all those years, and goodness never. 8.

of Israel are destroyed. In A², on the other hand, the destruction of the wicked and the vindication of Israel is the sole work of the Messiah.

XXXVI. 1. It will be remarked that these visions are only found in A² and A³. Elsewhere we have direct revelations.

I fell asleep. Cf. lii. 8.

And thou didst keep conquering that which was not thine, and to that which was thine thou didst never show compassion, and thou didst keep extending thy power over those who were far from thee, and those who drew nigh thee thou didst hold fast in the toils of thy wickedness, and thou didst uplift thyself always as one that could not be rooted out! 9. But now thy time has sped and thy hour is come. 10. Do thou also therefore depart, O cedar, after the forest, which departed before thee, and become dust with it, and let your ashes be mingled together. 11. And now recline in anguish and rest in torment till thy last time come, in which thou wilt come again, and be tormented still more."

XXXVII. And after these things I saw that cedar burning, and the vine growing, itself and all around it, the plain full of unfading flowers. And I indeed awoke and arose.

XXXVIII. And I prayed and said: "O LORD, my Lord, Thou dost always enlighten those who are led by understanding. 2. Thy law is life, and Thy

8. Rooted out. This phrase is constantly used in the Talmud with reference to the future fate of Rome. The word is רקע.

11. In anguish, etc. See xxx. 5, where as here the intermediate state is one involving certain degrees of happiness or pain.

XXXVII. Unfading flowers. Cf. Apoc. Pet. τὴν γῆν αὐτὴν ἀνθοῦσαν ἀμαράντοις ἀνθεσι.

XXXVIII. 1. O LORD, my Lord. See note on iii. 1. It is God Himself who interprets this vision for Baruch, but Ramiel who does so in A³ (see lv. 3).

2. Thy law is life. Cf. xlv. 2; Ecclus. xlv. 5 νόμον ζωῆς καὶ ἐπιστήμης (also xvii. 11). With this sentiment cf. Hillel's words (Aboth. ii. 7): "The more law the more life . . . he who gains a knowledge of the law gains life in the world to come." As correlative expressions might be cited (John vii. 49), "This people, which knoweth not the law, is accursed," and Hillel's saying: "An unlearned man cannot be wisdom is right guidance. 3. Make known to me therefore the interpretation of this vision. 4. For Thou knowest that my soul hath always walked in Thy law, and from my (earliest) days I departed not from Thy wisdom."

XXXIX. And He answered and said unto me: "This is the interpretation of the vision which thou hast seen. 2. As thou hast seen a great forest which lofty and precipitous mountains surrounded, this is the world. 3. Behold! the days come, and this kingdom will be destroyed which once destroyed Zion, and it will be subjected to that which comes after it. 4. Moreover, that also again after a time will be destroyed, and another, a third, will arise, and that also will have dominion for its time, and will be destroyed. 5. And after these things a fourth kingdom will arise, whose power will be harsh and evil far beyond those which were before it, and it will rule many times as the forests on the plain, and it will hold fast the times, and will pious" (לא עם הארץ חסיד). He was even excluded from the resurrection (see Weber, 42-44). The words in the text, however, are far from being as strong as these statements. So we infer from the parallel, "Thy wisdom, etc."

Thy wisdom is right guidance. This is based upon the Massoretic text of Ecclesiastes x. 10, where the Versions take directions of their own. Thus the Heb. is יתרון הבשר, הבנה. The LXX. καὶ περισσολα τοῦ ἀνδρείου σοφία, and the Syr. = "et sapientia sollertibus emolumentum."

4. From my (earliest) days. This is the Hebrew idiom כִּי־יָמַי.

Cf. 1 Kings i. 6; 1 Sam. xxv. 28.

XXXIX. 3-5. Of the four world empires here mentioned there can be no doubt as to the first and fourth. The first is of course the Babylonian, for it is that which effected the first destruction of Jerusalem in 588 (see ver. 3). The fourth (in verses 5-7; cf. xxxvi. 5-10) is just as clearly Rome. The second and third empires are probably the Persian and the Græco-Egyptian and Syrian. The fourfold division of world empires in the text is due no doubt to Dan. vii. On these four empires, see Tanchuma, Terumah, 7.

exalt itself more than the cedars of Lebanon. 6. And by it the truth will be hidden, and all those who are polluted with iniquity will flee to it, as evil beasts flee and creep into the forest. 7. And it will come to pass when the time of his consummation that he should fall has approached, then the principate of My Messiah will be revealed, which is like the fountain and the vine, and when it is revealed it will root out the multitude of his host. 8. And that which thou hast seen, the lofty cedar, which was left of that forest, and with regard to this fact, that the vine spoke those words with it which thou didst hear, this is the word.

XL. "The last leader of that time will be left alive, when the multitude of his hosts will be put to the sword and be bound, and they will take him up to Mount Zion, and My Messiah will convict him of all his impieties, and will gather and set before him all the works of his hosts. 2. And afterwards he will put

6. The truth will be hidden. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 1, where, in connection with Rome, the same statement is made: "abscondetur veritatis via."

7. The principate of My Messiah, etc. See xxix. 3, note.

XL. 1. Who this last leader is we cannot determine; it may be any emperor or general from 70 A.D. back till Pompey's time. Since the personal wrong-doings of this leader are dwelt upon, it is possible that it is actually Pompey that is here referred to. The words "his impieties" = מַעֲשֵׂי אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה, might favour this view (cf. Pss. Sol. ii. 24-35).

According to the Talmud, a single leader was to "unite in himself all hatred and hostility against God's people. He was to be called Armilus, and to be the אַרְמִילֵס קַט' ἐξοχήν." See Weber, 348, 349.

My Messiah. As we have already remarked (pp. 52, 61), the Messiah here plays an active part as compared to the Messiah in A¹, i.e. xxvii.-xxx. 1. The protection of the remnant of Israel and the destruction of their enemies, which are here the work of the Messiah, are there assigned to God Himself, and the Messiah does not appear till these tasks are completed (see xxix. 3).

Will convict . . . of . . . impieties. So 4 Ezra xii. 32; xiii. 37.

him to death, and protect the rest of My people which shall be found in the place which I have chosen. 3. And his principate will stand for ever, until the world of corruption is at an end, and until the times aforesaid are fulfilled. 4. This is thy vision, and this is its interpretation."

XXI.-XLII. =
B².

XXI. And I answered and said: "To whom will these things be, and how many (will they be)? or who will be worthy to live at that time? 2. For I will speak before Thee everything that I think, and I will ask of Thee regarding those things which I meditate. 3. For lo! I see many of Thy people who have withdrawn from Thy covenant, and cast from them the yoke of Thy law. 4. But others again I

2. Protect the rest, etc. See xxix. 2, note.

3. Until the world of corruption is at an end. The Messianic kingdom is only of temporary duration; it belongs to the olam hazze (see xxi. 19, note).

XXI., XLII. These two chapters appear to belong to B², and to have followed originally after xxx. The same world-view is presented as in B². Thus the times (xlii. 6) are hastened, as in xx., in order to usher in the end, when corruption will disappear and the life of incorruption set in through the resurrection (xlii. 7, 8).

The chief topics discussed in these chapters are two: First, the ultimate destiny of the apostates; and secondly, that of the proselytes.

Thus hitherto the portions of this book derived from B², and their original order, appear to have been ix. 2-xii. (?); xiii. 1-3a; xx. 2-4; xiii. 3b-12; xxv. 4; xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1; xxx. 2-5; xli.-xlii.

XXI. 1. Baruch's question goes back to xxx. 2-5, with which they originally stood in connection in B². For a similar question, cf. lxxv. 5.

To live. The life referred to here is the spiritual life subsequent to the resurrection (cf. xlix. 2; lxxvi. 5; 4 Ezra xiv. 22).

3. The apostates here dealt with may be Christians.

Yoke of Thy law. On the "law" see xv. 5, note. The term "yoke" as expressing "obligation" is common in Jewish writings (cf. Ecclus. li. 26), τὸν τράχηλον ὑμῶν ὑπόθετε ὑπὸ ζυγόν (Pss. Sol. vii. 8; xvii. 32; Acts xv. 10; Gal. v. 1). In later Judaism such expressions as "yoke of the law," "yoke of the precept," "yoke of the kingdom of heaven," are frequent. See Schöttgen, Hor. Hebr. i. 115-120. Contrast Matt. xi. 29, 30.

4. The proselytes, i.e. the גרים. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 133: "Et miserator have seen who have forsaken their vanity, and fled for refuge beneath Thy wings. 5. What therefore will be to them? or how will the last time receive them? 6. Or perhaps the time of these will assuredly be weighed, and as the beam inclines will they be judged accordingly?"

XLII. And He answered and said unto me: "These things also I will show unto thee. 2. As for what thou didst say—'To whom will these things be, and how many (will they be)?'—to those who have believed there will be the good which was spoken of aforetime, and to those who despise there will be the contrary of these things. 3. And as for what thou didst say regarding those who have drawn near and those who have withdrawn, this is the word. 4. As for those who were before subject, and afterwards withdrew and mingled themselves with the seed of mingled peoples, in eo quod miseretur illis qui conversionem faciunt in lege ejus."

Their vanity. I.e. their idols (cf. Deut. xxxii. 21).

Fled for refuge beneath Thy wings. Exactly the sense of Ps. xxxvi. 8, בָּזַל כְּנֶפֶךְ יְחִסִּין; and of lvii. 1, where in both cases the LXX. renders חָסָה by ἐλπίζειν and the Syr. by two different words meaning "to hide." This tends to show that the writer used the Hebrew text independently. For other instances of the same metaphor, cf. Ps. xvii. 8; lxiii. 8; Deut. xxxii. 11.

But in our text the above phrase is technically used of proselytes גֵּרִים. This technical sense is derived from Ruth ii. 12, where, in reference to Ruth, it is said: "The God of Israel under whose wings thou art come to take refuge" (לְחֹסֶה תַּחַת-כְּנָפָיו).

In the Aboda (Sara, 13b, Shabbat, 31a, the proselyte is said to have come under the wings of the Shekinah; and in the Jer. Sanh. ii. 20c, it is stated that "Solomon loved many strange women in order to bring them under the wings of the Shekinah."

5. The last time. I.e. that described in xxx. 2-5.

XLII. 2. Those who believed. See liv. 5, note, also xxi. 9, on the doctrine of justification in Baruch.

4. The sense seems to be that the apostates have only this world.

Mingled peoples. This is a rendering of עֲרָבָה (cf. Jer. xxv. 20, 24). The Greek translation of it is found in Pss. Sol. xvii. 17 ἐθνῶν συμμικταν.

the time of these is the former, and I am meditating deep things. 5. And as for those who before knew not but afterwards knew life, and mingled (only) with the seed of the people which had separated itself, the time of these (is) the former, I am meditating deep things. 6. And time will succeed to time and season to season, and one will receive from another, and then with a view to the consummation will everything be compared according to the measure of the times and the hours of the seasons. 7. For corruption will take those that belong to it, and life those that belong to it. 8. And the dust will be called, and there will be said to it: 'Give back that which is not thine, and raise up all that thou hast kept until its time.'

XLIII.-XLIV.  XLIII. "Moreover, do thou, Baruch, strengthen thy 7=B.¹

5. Of the people. The text  = "of the peoples" I have emended into , for it would be strange to speak of Israel as "the peoples" or "the nations."

Which had separated itself. I.e. the legalistic Israel by means of the "fence" of the law (cf. xlviii. 23). The "separatists" are the Pharisees, the פרושין.

The former. This seems corrupt, and probably, as Kabisch proposes, we should have "the latter." This would admit the proselytes to all the blessings of the world to come. On the treatment of "proselytes" in the Talmud, see Weber, 55, 73 f., 98, 107, 183, 254, 257 f., 282 f., 368 f.

6. This verse is obscure. Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 37.

7. Cf. xxxi. 5. See note on xxi. 19.

8. Give back, etc. Cf. l. 2. The earth gives back the body; Sheol gives back the soul.

XLIII.-XLVI. Of these chapters xliii.-xlv. 7; xlv.-xlv. 6 belong to B¹. Not to B², for (1) in xliii. 2; xlv. 2, as in lxxviii. 5; lxxxiv. 1, Baruch is to die an ordinary death and go the way of all the earth and forget all the concerns of mortals, whereas in B² he is not to die an ordinary death, but to be taken up and preserved till the last day; he is not to forget human affairs, for he is in the last days to testify against the Gentile oppressors of Israel (xiii. 3, note; xxv. 1; xlviii. 30). (2) The people are assured of good tidings in store for them (xlv. 6) just as in lxxvii. 12; they are bidden to look for the consolation of Zion (i.e. its restoration), as we infer from lxxxi. 1, 4, taken together with i. 4; vi. 9, whereas in B² there is no consolation of any kind to be looked for in this world. (3) In heart for that which has been said to thee, and understand those things which have been shown to thee; for there are many eternal consolations for thee.

2. For thou wilt depart from this place, and thou wilt pass from the regions which are now seen by thee, and thou wilt forget whatever is corruptible, and wilt not again recall those things which happen among mortals.

3. Go therefore and command thy people, and come to this place, and afterwards fast seven days, and then I will come to thee and speak with thee."

XLIV. And I, Baruch, went from thence, and xliv. 7 and xlviii. 38 the same phrase, i.e. as to a "change of the times," is found; in the former with an optimistic, in the latter with a pessimistic reference. (4) xlv. 5 vividly recalls the scene depicted in vi.-viii. As all the intervening chapters deal with questions of the school, xliii.-xlvi. probably stood originally in close juxtaposition with vi.-viii.

The fragment xlv. 8-15 belongs to B², for just as in B² expectation is fixed not on an earthly felicity but only on the world to come (xliv. 15), the inheritance of the promised time (xliv. 13), the time that passeth not away (xliv. 11), the new world which turneth not to corruption those who enter it (xliv. 12), (2) the whole present world, the entire olam hazzeḥ is hopeless; it is defiled with evil (xliv. 9), and with its corruption it will pass away (xliv. 8). (3) In xlv. 9 the present world is to be committed to oblivion. This is in flat contradiction to iv. 1.

The original position of xlv. 8-15. This seems easy to determine. The main statements in this address of Baruch to the people really presuppose xlviii.-lii. as their background.

They express shortly some of the main conclusions of these chapters. It is not reasonable to suppose that Baruch makes known to the people the very truths which, according to the present order of the book, are revealed to him later by God. We have already seen that xxxi.-xxxv. were originally subsequent to xlviii.-lii. (see p. 57). Since therefore both these passages form the address or part of the address of Baruch that was based upon previous disclosures of God, it is obvious that xlv. 8-15 followed originally on xxxii. 6 and formed the natural sequel to the closing words of that verse.

XLIII. 1. These words have no reference to the preceding chapters. They refer probably to some lost passage of B¹.

2. Thou wilt depart. Both the context and the word "depart" point to an ordinary death here. See xiii. 3, note. The word rendered "depart" is . It is found also in xiv. 19; xv. 1; xlv. 2.

Whatever is corruptible. Cf. xxi. 19, note.

3. Parts of this verse relating to the fast, etc., are probably due to the final editor. See xlvii. 1, note.

came to my people, and I called my first-born son and the Gedaliahs my friends, and seven of the elders of the people, and I said unto them: 2. "Behold, I go unto my fathers according to the way of all the earth. 3. But withdraw ye not from the way of the law, but guard and admonish the people which remain, lest they withdraw from the commandments of the Mighty One. 4. For ye see that he whom we serve is just, and our Creator is no respecter of persons. 5. And see ye what hath befallen Zion, and what hath happened to Jerusalem. 6. For the judgment of the Mighty One will (thereby) be made known, and His ways, which, though past finding out, are right. 7. For if ye endure and persevere in His fear, and do not forget His law, the times will change over you for good, and ye will see the consolation of Zion. 8. Because whatever is now

XLIV. 8-15=
B².

XLIV. 1. My first-born son.
Elsewhere mentioned only in xlvi. 1.

The Gedaliahs—possibly a corruption for Gedaliah. Cf. v. 1. Gedaliah is mentioned only in B¹.

Seven of the elders of the people.
In v. 5 Baruch assembled all the elders or honourable amongst the people. This is natural, as it is prior to the destruction of the city. That seven should be summoned now that the bulk of the population is carried into exile is equally fitting. We must bear in mind that in xxxii. 1 we have the work of a different author, else the writer might seem to have been guilty of an inconsistency.

2. Cf. iii. 2. See xiii. 3, note. The text is drawn from Gen. xv. 15 and Joshua xxiii. 14; 1 Kings ii. 2.

3. Way of the law. See xv. 5, note.

Commandments of the Mighty One. Cf. xlviii. 38; lxxiv. 7.

4. No respecter of persons. Cf. xiii. 8.

5. These words as we have observed above (p. 69) vividly recall vi.-viii., and seem to show that these chapters followed much more closely on vi.-viii. than they do now.

6. Which, though . . . right. The text=which are past finding out and right.

7. The times will change over you for good. Contrast the use of this phrase in xlviii. 38.

The consolation of Zion. I.e. its restoration; cf. lxxxi. 1, 4; for the temple was to be rebuilt (i. 4; vi. 9) according to B¹. The announcement of this future in store for Zion is called good tidings in xlvi. 6; lxxvii. 12; lxxxi. 1.

is nothing, but that which will be is very great. 9. For everything that is corruptible will pass away, and everything that dies will depart, and all the present time will be forgotten, nor will there be any remembrance of the present time, which is defiled with evils. 10. For that which runs now runs unto vanity, and that which prospers will quickly fall and be humiliated. 11. For that which is to be will be the object of desire, and on that which will come afterwards do we place our hope; for it is a time that will not pass away. 12. And the hour comes which will abide for ever, and the new world which does not turn to corruption those who depart to its blessedness, and has no mercy on those who depart to torment, and will not

8-15. These verses should be read after xxxii. 6 (see p. 69).

8. In xxxii. 6 God has declared His purpose to renew creation; the reason is given here; for all things that now are are nothing.

9. Corruptible. Cf. xxi. 19, note; xxxi. 5.

All the present time will be forgotten. In iv. 1 this is denied, but iv. 1 is from B¹ (cf. Isa. lxv. 17).

11. A time that will not pass away. This is set over against xlvi. 50: "this world which passeth away."

12. The new world, etc., implied in the new creation (xxxii. 6). In li. 3 it is the world which dies not, nor ages those who come to it (lii. 9, 16).

Who depart to its blessedness.

The text here בְּחַיַּת אֲנִי = "who depart on its beginning" is corrupt. This clause should describe the destination of the righteous, as the antithetical clause in the next line, "those who depart to torment," describes that of the wicked. The error thus lies in the words "in its beginning." In the next place, we can reason back to what should stand here instead of these words. For the corresponding phrase in the other clause, i.e. "to torment," requires as its antithesis, not the meaningless "on its beginning," but "to blessedness." That is, over against "those who depart to torment," the sense needs "those who depart to blessedness." This conclusion as to the original text is confirmed by the fact that the erroneous text can be explained by the transposition of a single letter in the Hebrew original. Thus "in its beginning" = בְּרֵאשִׁית, but this arose from a false transcription of בְּאַשְׁרֵי, i.e. by wrongly transposing the ר. Now בְּאַשְׁרֵי = "to its blessedness," I have emended accordingly.

lead to perdition those who live in it. 13. For these are they who shall inherit that time which has been spoken of, and theirs is the inheritance of the promised time. 14. These are they who have acquired for themselves treasures of wisdom, and with them are found stores of understanding, and from mercy have they not withdrawn, and the truth of the law have they preserved. 15. For to them will be given the world to come, but the dwelling of the rest who are many will be in the fire.

XLV.-XLVI.
6=B¹.

XLV. "Do ye therefore so far as ye are able instruct the people, for that labour is ours. 2. For if ye teach them, ye will quicken them."

XLVI. And my son and the elders of the people answered and said unto me: "Has the Mighty One humiliated us to such a degree as to take thee from us quickly? 2. And truly we shall be in darkness, and there will be no light to the people who are left. 3. For where again shall we seek the law, or who will distinguish for us between death and life?" 4. And I said unto them: "The throne of the Mighty One I cannot resist: nevertheless, there shall not be wanting to Israel

13. The inheritance . . . time = "the world to come" in verse 15.

14. This verse presupposes li. 3, 7. The "treasures" here mentioned differ from those in xxiv. 1.

15. Those described in the preceding verse are to receive the world to come, just as those who are similarly described in li. 3 are to receive the world that dies not. On the contrast of this world and the world to come, see xv. 8, note.

In the fire. Cf. xlviii. 39, 43; lix. 2; lxiv. 7; lxxxv. 13.

XLV. B¹ reappears here. The connection with xlv. 7 is all that could be desired. There it is said, "If ye keep faithful to the law ye will see the consolation of Zion"; "do ye therefore . . . instruct the people . . . for if ye teach them ye will quicken them."

2. If ye teach, etc. Cf. xxxviii. 2; Ps. cxix. 50, 93. This is the work of the true scribe. Pharisaism teaches obedience to the law, God will do the rest (cf. xlv. 7).

XLVI. 2. For similar diction, cf. lxxvii. 14; 4 Ezra xiv. 20.

a wise man nor a son of the law to the race of Jacob. 5. But only prepare ye your hearts, that ye may hear the law, and be subject to those who in fear are wise and understanding; and prepare your soul that ye may not depart from them. 6. For if ye do these things, good tidings will come unto you, which I before told you of; nor will ye fall into the torment, of which I testified to you before."

[7. But with regard to the word that I was to be taken, I did not make (it) known to them or to my son.]

XLVI. 7 = E.

XLVII. And when I had gone forth and dismissed them, I went thence and said unto them: "Behold! I go to Hebron: for thither the Mighty One hath sent me."

XLVII.-LII. = B².

4. There shall not be wanting . . . a son of the law. This is really an answer to the question put in iii. 6. The expression "son of the law" seems to occur here first in existing literature. Its earliest occurrence elsewhere in the Talmud appears to be in Baba Mezia, 96a. See Levy, Neuhebräisches Wörterbuch, i. 258. The term בן מצוה was used in the Middle Ages as a designation of a full-grown Israelite. See Schürer, Div. II., vol. ii. 51 (note). For the parallelism Israel . . . Jacob, cf. xvii. 4; xxxi. 3.

5. Prepare ye your hearts. See xxxii. 1, note.

Obedience to the law and the Rabbis is here enforced.

6. Here the promise in xlv. 7 is enforced anew.

Good tidings. Cf. lxxvii. 12.

7. This verse is an addition of the final editor in order the better to adapt the fragment of B¹ just given to its new context. It belongs in spirit to B².

I was to be taken. Cf. xiii. 3, note; xlviii. 30. In lxxxv. 9 the phrase has a different meaning. נצח is a rendering of ἀναλαμβάνειν (also of μεταθέναι in Gen. v. 24). The former is the usual word in the sense of the text. The idea of the ascension into heaven of great heroes in Jewish history was a familiar one. Thus it is told of Elijah in the LXX. of 2 Kings ii. 11, καὶ ἀνελήμφθη . . . εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν: Ecclus. xlviii. 9, ὁ ἀναλημφθεὶς ἐν λαίλαπι πυρός: also in Eth. En. lxxxix. 52; xciii. 8; 1 Macc. ii. 58; of Enoch in Ecclus. xlv. 16; Eth. En. lxx. 1; lxxxvii. 3, 4; Slav. En. lxvii. 2; Jubilees, iv. 24; of Moses, Assumpt. Mos. x. 12; of Baruch, Apoc. Bar. xiii. 3; xxv. 1; xlv. 7; xlviii. 30; lxxvi. 2; of Ezra, 4 Ezra viii. 20; xiv. 49; of many unnamed heroes, 4 Ezra vi. 26. ἀναλαμβάνειν is well-known in the N.T. in this sense (cf. Mark xvi. 19; Acts i. 2, 11, 22; 1 Tim. iii. 16). The substantive ἀνάληψις is rare. Ryle and James (Pss. Sol.) take iv. 20 of those Pss. to be the first known instance of its use; see also Luke ix. 51, and Test. Levi xviii. In the last passage it is a late Christian interpolation.

2. And I came to that place where the word had been spoken to me, and I sat there, and fasted seven days.

PRAYER OF BARUCH

XLVIII. And it came to pass after the seventh day, that I prayed before the Mighty One and said :
 2. "O my Lord, Thou summonest the advent of the times, and they stand before Thee ; Thou causest the power of the ages to pass away, and they do not resist Thee ; Thou arrangeest the method of the seasons, and they obey Thee. 3. Thou alone knowest the goal of the generations, and Thou revealest not Thy mysteries to many. 4. Thou makest known the multitude of the fire, and Thou weighest the lightness of the wind.

THE SEVENTH SECTION

XLVII.-LXXXVII. First, we have Baruch's fast of seven days (xlvi. 2), followed by his prayer (xlviii. 2-24). Then in the dialogue that ensues various revelations are made to Baruch touching the coming woes and the judgment (xlvi. 26-41), and the resurrection (l.-lii.) On these revelations follows a Messiah Apocalypse (liii.-lxxiv. = A³). In lxxvi. Baruch is told of his approaching translation, and in lxxvii. he calls the people together and addresses them.

This section is composite : xlviii.-lii. being derived from B² ; liii.-lxxiv. from A³ ; lxxv., lxxvi. from B² ; and lxxvii. from B¹.

XLVII. 1. The purposeless journey to Hebron spoken of here must be derived from an original source. According to the scheme of the final editor it has no business here. Further, no such command has been given to Baruch in the existing text.

Hence this entire verse must be regarded as drawn from B¹ or B², and the next verse, which conflicts with it, as due to the final editor, as also xliii. 3. It is noteworthy, too, that the words "and dismissed them" must be corrupt ; for "and when I had gone forth and dismissed them, I went thence and said unto them" is absurd. Baruch goes forth from some place (here undefined) and dismisses the people ; then he departs thence and speaks to them. It is possible then that "when I had gone forth" refers to "the cavern in the earth" in xxi. 1. It will be remembered that of chapters xxi.-xlv., xxi.-xxiv. 1, xxx. 2-5, xli., xlii. belong to B². These form in some sense a whole, and the scene with which they are connected may be the "cavern" in xxi. 1. If this is so, xlvii. 1 belongs to B².

2. Cf. xliii. 3 ; v. 7, note ; ix., note ; xxi. 2, note.

XLVIII. 2. Method of the seasons. Cf. xiv. 1, note ; xx. 6.

5. Thou explorest the limit of the heights, and Thou scrutinisest the depths of the darkness. 6. Thou carest for the number which pass away that they may be preserved, and Thou preparest an abode for those that are to be. 7. Thou rememberest the beginning which Thou hast made, and the destruction that is to be Thou forgettest not. 8. With nods of fear and indignation Thou givest commandment to the flames, and they change into spirits, and with a word Thou quickenest that which was not, and with mighty power Thou holdest that which has not yet come. 9. Thou instructest created things in the understanding of Thee, and Thou makest wise the spheres so as to minister in their orders. 10. Armies innumerable stand before Thee and minister in their orders quietly at Thy nod. 11. Hear Thy servant and give ear to my petition. 12. For in a little time are we born, and in a little time do we return. 13. But with Thee hours are as a time, and days as generations. 14. Be not therefore wroth with man; for he is nothing, and take not account of our works. 15. For what are we? for lo! by Thy gift do we come

6. See xxiii. 4, note.

Thou carest . . . preserved. The text which here = "Thou commandest the number which passes away and it is preserved" is nonsense as it stands, but, if retranslated into Hebrew, it supplies us at once with the true text. Retranslated it = אתה פקד את המספר העובר וישקר. Here clearly the Greek translator followed the wrong meaning of פקד, and mistranslated the weak vav with the voluntative imperfect. The translation required by the context is given above.

8. With a word . . . which was not. Cf. xxi. 4, note; 4 Ezra iv. 37. Flames . . . spirits. Cf. Ps. civ. 4; Heb. i. 7.

9. The spheres . . . in their orders. Cf. Eth. En. ii. 1; Slav. En. xxx. 2, 3; Pss. Sol. xix. 2, 3.

10. Cf. Slav. En. xvii.; Test. Levi iii. In their orders. There were ten orders of angels according to the Jews; nine according to the Christians (see Slav. En. xx. 1, 3, note).

13. We should expect rather: "time is as a (few) hours, and generations as days."

into the world, and we depart not of our own will. 16. For we said not to our parents, 'Beget us,' nor did we send to Sheol and say, 'Receive us.' 17. What therefore is our strength that we should bear Thy wrath, or what are we that we should endure Thy judgment? 18. Protect us in Thy compassions, and in Thy mercy help us. 19. Behold the little ones that are subject unto Thee, and save all that draw nigh unto Thee, and destroy not the hope of our people, and cut not short the times of our aid. 20. For this is the nation which Thou hast chosen, and these are the people, to whom Thou findest no equal. 21. But I will speak now before Thee, and I will say as my heart thinketh. 22. In Thee do we trust, for lo! Thy law is with us, and we know that we shall not fall so far as we keep Thy statutes. 23. In this at least we are always blest that we have not mingled with the Gentiles. 24. For we are all named one people, who have received one law from One, and the law which is amongst us will aid us, and the surpassing wisdom which is in us will help us." 25.

15. Depart not, etc. In xiv. 11 men are said to "come not of their own will"; in 4 Ezra viii. 5 the two statements are combined.

16. Sheol. See xi. 6, note.

18. See lxxv. 6.

19. That are subject to Thee. Cf. xlii. 4.

All that draw nigh. Are these proselytes? (see xli. 4; xlii. 3).

20. Cf. xxi. 21; 4 Ezra v. 27.

The nation. So I have emended by reading |ΔΩΔ| for the unmeaning |ΔΩΔ|. This gives a good parallel to "people" (|ΔΩΔ|). Ceriani proposes |ΔΩΔ| = "servant."

21. Say as my heart thinketh. Cf. xli. 2.

22. See xv. 5, note.

23. Cf. xlii. 5.

24. One law from One. lxxxv. 14. This is directed polemically against the Christians.

The law . . . will aid us. Cf. xxix. 2, note; xxxii. 1; xv. 5, note; cf. De singularitate cler. 15 (Cyprian, Ed. Hartel. ii. 190), "sicut Esaias ait, legem inquit in adiutorium dedit."

And when I had prayed and said these things, I was greatly weakened. 26. And He answered and said unto me: "Thou hast prayed simply, O Baruch, and all thy words have been heard. 27. But My judgment exacts its own and My law exacts its rights. 28. For from thy words I will answer thee, and from thy prayer I will speak to thee. 29. For this is as follows: he that is corrupted is not at all; he has both wrought iniquity so far as he could do anything, and has not remembered My goodness, nor been grateful for My long-suffering. 30. Therefore thou shalt surely be taken up, as I before told thee: and the time is coming of which I told thee. 31. For that time will arise which brings affliction; for it will come and pass by with quick vehemence, and it will be turbulent coming in the heat of indignation. 32. And it will come to pass in those days that all the inhabitants of the earth will be moved one against another, because they know not that My judgment has drawn nigh. 33. For there will not be found many wise at that time, and the intelligent will be but a few: moreover, 25. I was greatly weakened. Cf. xxi. 26. The same phenomenon accompanies the visions in Dan. vii. 28; viii. 27; x. 8, 16.

27. Cf. v. 2; lxxxv. 9.

29. For this . . . is not at all. The text which is unintelligible runs:

וְהָיָה כִּי יִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי
וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי

30. See xlvi. 7, note.

31-41. The last woes and the final judgment. Cf. xxvii.-xxix. 1; lxx. 2-10.

32. The inhabitants of the earth. See xxv. 1, note.

Will be moved one against another.

The text וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי = "will rest" is meaningless. It seems corrupted from וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי or וְיִשְׁמַע ה' אֶת-בְּרָכִי, either of which can be rendered as above.

33. Cf. lxx. 5. This verse seems to be the source of the following words which Cyprian (Testim. iii. 29) quotes as from Baruch: "erit enim sapientia in paucis vigilantibus et taciturnis."

even those who know will most of all be silent. 34. And there will be many rumours and tidings not a few, and the works of portents will be shown, and promises not a few will be recounted, (and) some of them (will prove) idle, and some of them will be confirmed. 35. And honour will be turned into shame, and strength humiliated into contempt, and probity destroyed, and beauty will become a scorn. 36. And many will say to many at that time: 'Where hath the multitude of intelligence hidden itself, and whither hath the multitude of wisdom removed itself?' 37. And whilst they are meditating these things, then zeal will arise in those of whom they thought not, and passion will seize him who is peaceful, and many will be roused in anger to injure many, and they will rouse up armies in order to shed blood, and in the end they will perish together with them. 38. And it will come to pass at the self-same time, that a change of times will manifestly appear to every man, by reason of which in all those times they were polluted and practised oppression, and walked every man in his own works, and remembered

34. Joseph, Ant. xx. 5. 1; 8. 6, tells of many impostors who so deceived the people (cf. Matt. xxiv. 11, 24). This verse seems to be the source of Cyprian's (Testim. iii. 29) quotation from Baruch: "alii autem sapientes ad spiritum erroris et pronuntiantes sicut Altissimi et Fortis edicta."

35. Cf. lxx. 3. It is remarkable that if we retranslate this verse into Hebrew we have a series of paronomasiae. Thus "honour will be turned into shame" = כבוד יהפך

ללקן, "strength humiliated into contempt" = עו יורד אל בו, and "beauty will become a scorn" = יופי יהיה לרפי.

36. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 9-11. This seems the source of Cyprian's quotation from Baruch (Testim. iii. 29): "Quaeritis me et vos et qui post vos venerint audire verbum sapientiae et intellectus et non inveniatis."

37. Cf. lxx. 6.

38. A change of times. Cf. xliv. 7. Walked every man, etc. Cf. 4 Ezra iii. 8.

not the law of the Mighty One. 39. Therefore a fire will consume their thoughts, and in flame will the meditations of their reins be tried; for the Judge will come and will not tarry. 40. Because each of the inhabitants of the earth knew when he was committing iniquity, and they have not known My law by reason of their pride. 41. For many will then assuredly weep, yea, over the living more than over the dead." 42. And I answered and said: "O Adam, what hast thou done to all those who are born from thee?"

Remembered not the law of the Mighty One. Cf. xlv. 3, 7; lxxxiv. 7.

39. A fire will consume, etc. Cf. verse 43; xlv. 15; lix. 2, note.

The Judge will come and will not tarry. Cf. xx. 6, note.

40. Knew when he was committing, etc. See xv. 6, note; lv. 2. Cf. Ep. Barn. v. 4 δικαίως ἀπολείται ἄνθρωπος ὃς ἔχων ὁδοῦ δικαιοσύνης γινώσκων ἑαυτὸν εἰς ὁδὸν σκότους ἀποσυνέχει. In xv. 6 men are to be tormented because, though knowing the law, they transgressed it. In that passage the words, therefore, may be limited to Israel, but here they are obviously descriptive of the Gentiles: "the inhabitants of the earth" (see xxv. 2, note). The writer thus holds that all men alike possessed a conscience or faculty for moral judgment. We have, therefore, in this verse a statement in some degree parallel to Rom. ii. 14, 15: "For when Gentiles, which have no law, do by nature the things of the law, these, having no law, are a law unto themselves: in that they shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness therewith, etc."

Have not known My law by reason of their pride. These words seem to point to the rejection of the law by the Gentiles; for according to an oft-repeated statement in the Talmud (see Weber, 19, 56, 57, 65), the law was originally designed for all nations, but the Gentiles rejected it (see 4 Ezra vii. 72, 73).

41. Since the sin of the world is intensified towards its close, so naturally the sinners then surviving will meet with severer judgment than the less guilty of earlier times.

42-50. What havoc Adam and Eve have wrought by the spiritual death and torments which they have brought upon their posterity. Yet God knows all that is in man, for He created him; He knows likewise the number of men that are to be, and their sins (verses 42-46). But since the law will give all these their due in the judgment, let inquiry be made rather after the blessedness of the righteous; for though they have endured much weariness in this passing world, in the world to come they shall have abundant light.

42. Spiritual death is here traced to Adam and Eve, but in xvii. 3; xxiii. 4; liv. 15 it is only physical death. See notes on xxiii. 4; liv. 15-19. In 4 Ezra both spiritual and what will be said to the first Eve who hearkened to the serpent? 43. For all this multitude are going to corruption, nor is there any numbering of those whom the fire devours. 44. But again I will speak in Thy presence. 45. Thou, O LORD, my Lord, knowest what is in Thy creature. 46. For Thou didst of old command the dust to produce Adam, and Thou knowest the number of those who are born from him, and how far they have sinned before Thee, who have existed and not confessed Thee as their Creator. 47. And as regards all these their end will convict them, and Thy law which they have transgressed will requite them on Thy day. [48. But now let us dismiss the wicked and enquire about the righteous. 49. And I will recount their blessedness and not be silent in celebrating their death and physical are always traced to Adam (iii. 21, 22; iv. 30; vii. 118-121).

43. Fire devours. Cf. verse 39; xliv. 15; lxiv. 7.

46. Command the dust to produce Adam. 4 Ezra iii. 4, 5; vii. 116.

The number of those who are born. See xxiii. 5, note.

47. Thy law . . . will requite. See v. 2, note.

48-50. These verses were used originally in B² by Baruch in addressing the people, or by God in addressing Baruch, but not by Baruch in addressing God as the present text implies. That they could not have been addressed by Baruch to God is clear; for Baruch could not say to God, "In this world . . . in which ye live" (ver. 50). Two facts are in favour of their being God's words to Baruch: (1) The very same contrast between the two worlds is found in God's reply to Baruch in xv. 7; and (2) the very same change of subject is enjoined and the same word "inquire" used in reference to the righteous in 4 Ezra ix. 13: "tu ergo adhuc noli curiosus esse quomodo impii cruciabuntur sed inquire quomodo iusti salvabuntur." But the plural in verse 48 is against this view; and secondly, the words "I will not be silent in celebrating, etc.," while hardly conceivable on the divine lips, are appropriate on Baruch's. Hence we must regard xlviii. 48-50 as a fragment of an address delivered by Baruch to the people. Another fragment of this same address which originally preceded xlviii. 48-50 is to be found in liv. 16-18, and yet another which followed it in liv. 16-18.

49. Will not be silent in celebrating. A Hebrew idiom = לא אחרל לשבח.

glory, which is reserved for them. 50. For assuredly as in a little time in this world which passeth away, in which ye live, ye have endured much labour, so in that world to which there is no end, ye shall receive great light.”]

XLIX. “Nevertheless, I will again ask from Thee, O Mighty One, yea, I will ask mercy from Him who made all things. 2. ‘In what shape will those live who live in Thy day? or how will the splendour of those who (are) after that time continue? 3. Will they then resume this form of the present, and put on these entrammeling members, which are now involved in evils, and in which evils are consummated, or wilt Thou perchance change these things which have been in the world as also the world?’”

L. And He answered and said unto me: “Hear,

50. Cf. xv. 8 for the same contrast and largely the same diction.

Light. This does not seem the right word.

XLIX. 2. In what shape, etc. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 35: “How are the dead raised? and with what manner of body do they come?”

Live. See xli. 1, note.

The splendour of those who (are) after that time. For “splendour” we might perhaps render “appearance.” The text is בְּהַרְבֵּי עֲלָמוֹת בְּהַרְבֵּי עֲלָמוֹת.

3. Entrammeling members, lit. members of bonds.

L.-LI. The nature of the resurrection body. The teaching here as to the nature of the resurrection proceeds on the line suggested in xlix. 3: “Wilt thou perchance change these things (i.e. man’s material body) which have been in the world as also the world?” The world was to be renewed (xxxii. 6), and in this renewal from being transitory and verging to its close (xlviii. 50; lxxxv. 10), it becomes undying (li. 3) and everlasting (xlviii. 50); from being a world of corruption (xl. 3; lxxiv. 2; xxi. 19; xxxi. 5, etc.) it becomes incorruptible (lxxiv. 2) and invisible (li. 8). As these conceptions are in germ and principle as old as Isa. lxxv. 17-lxvi., the same doctrine of renewal and transformation that was taught touching the world was naturally applied in due course to those destined to live in it. This is done partially in Isa. lxxv. 17-25, but the developed form appears in Dan. xii. 2, where the risen righteous are to shine as the stars for ever and ever; in Eth. En. they are to joy as the angels (civ. 4)

Baruch, this word, and write in the remembrance of thy heart all that thou shalt learn. 2. For the earth will then assuredly restore the dead, which it now receives, in order to preserve them, making no change in their form, but as it has received, so will it restore them, and as I delivered them unto it, so also shall it raise them. 3. For then it will be necessary to show to the living that the dead have come to life again, and that those who had departed have returned (again). 4. And it will come to pass, when they have severally and to become angels in heaven (li. 4) and companions of the heavenly hosts (civ. 6), and to be clad in garments of life (lxii. 15, 16) and in raiment of light (cviii. 12); see also xc. 38. We thus see that long before the time of the writers of Baruch the Pharisees were familiar with the idea of the spiritual transformation of the body after the resurrection; and that to some extent the Pauline teaching on the resurrection in 1 Cor. xv. 35-50 was not an innovation, but an able and developed exposition of ideas that were current in the Judaism of the time. 1 Cor. xv. 35-50 is in one of its aspects the logical sequel of Isa. lxxv. 17.

Over against this spiritual view of the future life we must remember that a materialistic one prevailed not only popularly, but also in Rabbinic circles. According to the latter the blessed should beget children and eat the flesh of the Leviathan. See Weber, 383, 384.

L. 2. Cf. xi. 4, note; xlii. 8, note; Eth. En. li. 1, note. In the resurrection soul and body were to be united. On the scene of the resurrection see xxix. 2, note. The soul's abode was Sheol (see xxi. 23 note); the body rested in the earth (xlii. 8). According to the text the body was to be restored in exactly the same form in which it had been committed to the earth. The following speculations of later Judaism on this subject are instructive. According to the Othioth, 17c, of R. Akiba (Weber, 352, 353), God was to sound a trumpet seven times at the end of the world. At the first blast the whole world was to be moved, at the second the dust was to be separated, at the third the bones of the dead were to be gathered together, at the fourth their limbs were to be warmed, at the fifth they were to be covered with skin, at the sixth the souls and spirits were to enter their bodies, in the seventh they were to become living and stand upon their feet, clad in their clothes. According to another account (Beresh. rab. 28) the resurrection body was built up from a small fragment of the backbone which was in all cases indestructible. This was called נֶלֶם. See Levy, Neuhebräisches Wörterb. ii. 481; see verse 4, note.

L. 3. Those who are to be judged are the living righteous, and sinners, and the risen dead.

4. The object with which the dead are raised is for common recognition.

recognised those whom they now know, then judgment will grow strong, and those things which before were spoken of will come.

LI. "And it will come to pass, when that appointed day has gone by, that then shall the aspect of those who are condemned be afterwards changed, and the glory of those who are justified. 2. For the aspect of those who now act wickedly will become worse than is that of such as suffer torment. 3. Also (as for) the glory of those who have now been justified in My law, who have had understanding in their life, and who have planted in their heart the root of wisdom, then their splendour will be glorified in changes, and the form of their face will be turned into the light of their beauty, that they may be able to acquire and receive the world which does not die, which is then promised to them. 4. For

There is nothing corresponding to this in the N.T. In later Judaism the resemblance of the risen was to be so carefully preserved that they were to be raised in the same clothes in which they were buried. This was proved Sanhedrin, 90b (Weber, 353) by the analogy of a grain of corn which comes up from the earth, not naked but clothed. The Rabbis, therefore, on the approach of death, gave careful directions as to their grave-clothes. According to the Beresch. rab. 95 (Weber, 353), men were to be raised with all their bodily defects, such as blindness, lameness, etc., in order that their identity might be established. Thereupon, in the case of the righteous these infirmities were healed.

LI. 1. This transformation of the living is mentioned in 1 Cor. xv. 51.

Aspect. I have here followed

Ceriani's emendation of $\rho\sigma\tau\lambda\omicron\delta\epsilon$ into $\rho\sigma\tau\lambda\omicron\delta\epsilon$.

Condemned . . . justified. See xxi. 9, note. The word "justify" has here its ordinary meaning of "to declare righteous."

3. Justified in My law. See xv. 5, note; xxi. 9, note.

Root of wisdom. lix. 7; Eccus. i. 6, 20, $\rho\lambda\iota\alpha\ \sigma\phi\lambda\alpha$ s; Wisdom iii. 15.

Their splendour, etc. The righteous will undergo successive transformations till their bodies are assimilated to their new environment, or to use the words of the text, "that they may be able . . . to receive the world that does not die."

The world that does not die. Cf. xlviii. 50; li. 8; lxxiv. 2, for various characteristics of the olam habba or future world.

Then promised. See xiv. 13, note.

over this above all will those who come then lament, that they rejected My law, and stopped their ears that they might not hear wisdom or receive understanding.

5. When therefore they see those, over whom they are now exalted, (but) who will then be exalted and glorified more than they, they will respectively be transformed, the latter into the splendour of angels, and the former will mainly waste away in wonder at the visions and in the beholding of the forms. 6. For they will first behold and afterwards depart to be tormented. 7. But those who have been saved by their works, and to whom the law has been now a hope, and understanding an expectation, and wisdom a confidence, to them wonders will appear in their time. 8. For they will behold the world which is now invisible to them, and they will behold the time which is now hidden from them. 9. And again time will not age them. 10. For in the heights of that world shall they dwell, and they shall be made like unto the angels, and be made

4. The wicked here include not only the faithless Israelites, but also the Gentiles.

Stopped their ears that they might not hear. Zech. vii. 11. The LXX. renders differently: τὰ ὦτα αὐτῶν ἐβάρυναν κτλ.

5. The splendour. This word |ο| here, and in xlix. 2; li. 3, might also be rendered by "appearance."

Will waste away, or will be dissolved. Cf. xxx. 4; 4 Ezra vii. 87. The latter reference as well as our text show that the writer here was not thinking of annihilation, though this view is found later. Cf. Weber, 374, 375.

7. Saved by their works. See xiv. 7, note.

9. Cf. verse 3, note, and the phrase in verse 16: "The world which ages not those." After this verse we should probably read verses 13 and 14. Verse 12 would then form a fitting close and climax to li. 1-9, 13, 14, 10, 11.

10. The condition of the risen righteous is very spiritually conceived. Thus they have passed from a world of tribulation (li. 14) and enter a world that is everlasting (li. 3), invisible (li. 8); they live in the high places thereof (li. 10); they are made equal to the stars (li. 10), equal to the stars, and they shall be changed into every form they desire, from beauty into loveliness, and from light into the splendour of glory. 11. For there will be spread before them the extents of Paradise, and there will be shown to them the beauty of the majesty of the living creatures which are beneath the throne, and all the armies of the angels, who [are now held fast by My word, lest they should appear, and] are held fast by a command, that they may stand in their places till their advent comes. 12. Moreover, there will then be excellency in the righteous surpassing that in the angels. 13. For the first will receive the last, those whom they were expecting, and the last those of whom they used to hear that they had passed away. 14. For they have been delivered from this world of tribulation, and laid down the burthen of anguish. 15. For what then have men lost their life, and for what have those who were on the earth exchanged their soul? 16. For then they chose (not) for themselves that time, which, beyond the reach of and their glory is greater than that of the angels (x. 12).

Made equal to the stars. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 97, 125.

11. Living creatures which are beneath the throne. Cf. Rev. iv. 6.

Armies of the angels who . . . are held fast, etc. These angels are probably the armed host mentioned in lxx. 7; Slav. En. xvii.; and in Test. Lev. 3: ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ εἰσὶν αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν παρεμβολῶν, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης καὶ τοῦ Βελιάρ. I have bracketed one of the clauses in this verse as a gloss.

13, 14. These two verses seem to be wrongly transposed from their place after verse 9.

13. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 42: "Coronae adsimilabo iudicium meum; sicut non novissimorum tarditas, sic nec priorum velocitas"; also Matt. xix. 30.

14. See xv. 8, note.

15. Cf. Matt. xvi. 26.

16. I have added a negative in the first clause as the sense requires it. In lvi. 14 there is a similar loss of the negative, as Ceriani has already observed. Which ages not, etc. (cf. ver. 9).

anguish, could not pass away, and they chose for themselves that time, whose issues are full of lamentations and evils, and they denied the world which ages not those who come to it, and they have rejected the time and the glory, so that they shall not come to the honour of which I told thee before."

LII. And I answered and said: "How do those forget for whom woe is then reserved? 2. And why therefore again do we mourn for those who die? or why do we weep for those who depart to Sheol? 3. Let lamentations be reserved for the beginning of that coming torment, and let tears be laid up for the advent of the destruction of that time. 4. But even in the face of these things I will speak. [5. And as for the righteous, what will they do now? 6. Rejoice ye in the suffering which ye now suffer: for why do ye look for the decline of your enemies? 7. Make ready your soul for that which is reserved for you, and prepare your souls for the reward which is laid up for you.]"

LIII. And when I had said these things I fell asleep there, and I saw a vision, and lo! a cloud was

LII. 1, 2. Considering the terrible destiny in store for the wicked after the resurrection, our grief should be reserved for those who shall suffer its torments, and not for those who depart to Sheol. And yet there is a certain degree of pain and torment in Sheol as we have seen (cf. xxx. 5; xxxvi. 10).

5-7. These verses cannot have been addressed by Baruch to God. Like xlvi. 48-50, they are part of his address to the people. They would form an appropriate sequel to xlvi. 48-50 (see note on liv. 16-18).

6. Cf. lxxviii. 6. These words recall James i. 2: "Count it all joy, my brethren, when ye fall into manifold temptations." The sentiment looks Christian.

7. Make ready . . . prepare your souls. See xxxii. 1, note. One half of this verse seems to be a gloss on the other.

8. Cf. xxxvi. 1.

LIII. - LXXIV. This constitutes ascending from a very great sea, and I kept gazing upon it, and lo! it was full of waters white and black, and there were many colours in those self-same waters, and as it were the likeness of great lightning was seen at its summit. 2. And I saw that cloud passing swiftly in quick courses, and it covered all the earth. 3. And it came to pass after these things the third Messiah Apocalypse=A³ embodied by the final editor in this book. It will be sufficient here to indicate (a) its date; (b) its relation to the other constituents of the book; and to touch on (c) the question of its integrity; (d) and of its author.

(a) Its date. It was written prior to 70 A.D. (see lxviii. 5, note), and subsequent to 50 A.D. (see lix. 5-11, note).

(b) Relations of A³ to B¹, B², A¹, A². It is distinct from B¹, and B² in date, as these were composed subsequently to the fall of the temple. It is distinct in character from B¹ and B²; for whereas in the latter there is no expectation of the Messiah, in A³ the Messiah is the centre of interest. Other points of difference will be dealt with in the notes. A³ is distinct from A¹. In the latter the Messiah does not appear till the enemies of Israel are destroyed; in A³, on the other hand, the Messiah is the agent of their destruction. A³ may be distinct from A²; contrast lxxi. 1 with xl. 2. If xl. 1, 2 refers to Pompey, it was written prior to his death, and A² would in that case be much earlier than A³, which was composed between 50 and 70 A.D.

(c) Integrity. A³ is handed down in tolerable preservation. liv. 17, 18 is an interpolation, and possibly lxx. 9. The text has been badly tampered with in lxxii. 1 and lxxxiv. 4 by the final editor.

(d) The author. A³ is of extreme interest, as it is the oldest writing in which full justice is done alike to the claims of the Messiah and those of the law in moulding the world's history. The author belongs to the Rabbinical school, and assigns to certain elements of the law and tradition (cf. lvii., notes) the pre-Mosaic origin attributed to them in Jubilees. On the other hand, he recognises the popular aspiration for God's kingdom on earth as a legitimate outcome of prophecy, and gives it complete development in his forecast of history. Thus A³ is the oldest literary evidence of the fusion of early Rabbinism and popular Messianic expectation.

LIII. In this vision a cloud is seen coming up from the sea and covering the whole earth with its summit crowned with lightning. And soon it began to discharge black waters, and then clear, and again black waters, and then clear, and so on till this succession of black and bright waters had occurred six times. And at the end of these twelve showers there was yet another shower of black waters, blacker than had been all before. Thereupon the lightning on the summit of the cloud flashed forth and healed the earth, and twelve streams came up from the sea and were subject to that lightning.

1. A very great sea. Cf. Dan. vii. 2.

that that cloud began to pour upon the earth the waters that were in it. 4. And I saw that there was not one and the same likeness in the waters which descended from it. 5. For in the first beginning they were black exceedingly for a time, and afterwards I saw that the waters became bright, but they were not many, and after these things again I saw black (waters), and after these things again bright, and again black and again bright. 6. Now this was done twelve times, but the black were always more numerous than the bright. 7. And it came to pass at the end of the cloud, that lo! it rained black waters, and they were darker than had been all those waters that were before, and fire was mingled with them, and where those waters descended, they wrought devastation and destruction. 8. And I saw after these things that lightning which I had seen on the summit of the cloud, that it held it fast and made it descend to the earth. 9. Now that lightning shone exceedingly, so as to illuminate the whole earth, and it healed those regions where the last waters had descended and wrought devastation. 10. And it took hold of the

6. For the twelvefold division of history see 4 Ezra xiv. 11, 12: "XII enim partibus divisum est saeculum, et transierunt ejus X jam et dimidium Xmae partis, Superant autem ejus duae post medium decimae partis." Cf. Hilgenfeld, Mess. Jud. 104.

7. These black waters are interpreted in lxix., lxx. They symbolise the travail pains of the Messiah.

8. The lightning on the cloud symbolises the Messiah. The imagery is derived from Dan. vii. 13. It was from the last passage that the Messiah was named עֲנַנִי = "the cloud-man," or בֶּרֶךְ נִפְלִי = "the son of the cloud." See Levi, Neuhebräisch. Lex. iii. 271, 422.

9. Lightning shone . . . so as to illuminate the whole earth. Cf. Matt. xxiv. 27: "For as the lightning cometh forth from the east, and is seen even unto the west, so shall be the coming of the Son of man."

whole earth and had dominion over it. 11. And I saw after these things, and lo! twelve rivers were ascending from the sea, and they began to surround that lightning and to become subject to it. 12. And by reason of my fear I awoke.

[PRAYER OF BARUCH]

LIV. And I besought the Mighty One, and said :
 "Thou alone, O Lord, knowest of aforetime the deep things of the world, and the things which befall in their times Thou bringest about by Thy word, and against the works of the inhabitants of the earth Thou dost hasten the beginnings of the times, and the end of the seasons Thou alone knowest. 2. For whom nothing is too hard, but Thou doest everything easily by a nod. 3. To whom the depths as the heights are accessible, and the beginnings of the ages minister to Thy word. 4. Who revealeth to those who fear Him what is prepared for them, that He may thereby console them. 5. Thou showest great acts to those

10. We have here symbolised the Messiah's reign.

11. Do these twelve rivers symbolise the Gentile nations submitting themselves to the Messiah, or the twelve tribes of Israel?

LIV. 1. Against the works, etc. . . . hasten the beginnings of the times. See xx. 1, note.

The end of the seasons Thou alone knowest. Cf. xxi. 8.

2. For whom nothing is too hard. This is a rendering of the phrase found in Gen. xviii. 14 ; Jer. xxxii. 17, 27. By comparing the text with the Peshitto of Luke i. 37, we see that the Greek was here $\pi\alpha\rho' \hat{\omega} \rho\eta\mu\alpha \text{ } \omicron\upsilon\kappa \text{ } \acute{\alpha}\delta\upsilon\nu\alpha\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota}$. This is the LXX. of Gen. xviii. 14 $\mu\eta \acute{\alpha}\delta\upsilon\nu\alpha\tau\epsilon\acute{\iota} \pi\alpha\rho\grave{\alpha} \tau\hat{\omega} \theta\epsilon\hat{\omega} \rho\eta\mu\alpha$, but not of Jer. xxxii. 17, 27, where we find (xxxix. 17, 27 in LXX.) $\omicron\upsilon \mu\eta \acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron\kappa\rho\upsilon\beta\eta\grave{\iota} \acute{\alpha}\pi\omicron \varsigma \omicron\upsilon \omicron\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$. This is the rendering of the Peshitto also in Gen. xviii. 14 and Jer. xxxii. 17, 27. From this verse in itself, therefore, we cannot conclude for or against the influence of the LXX. on the writer.

5. Great acts or "wonders."

who know not; Thou breakest up the enclosure of those who are ignorant, and lightest up what is dark, and revealest what is hidden to the pure, who in faith have submitted themselves to Thee and Thy law. 6. Thou hast shown to Thy servant this vision; reveal to me also its interpretation. 7. For I know that as regards those things wherein I besought Thee, I have received a response, and as regards what I besought, Thou didst reveal to me, and didst show me with what voice I should praise Thee, or from what members I should cause praises and hallelujahs to ascend to Thee. 8. For if my members were mouths, and the hairs of my head voices, even so I could not give Thee the meed of praise, or laud Thee as is befitting, nor could I recount Thy praise, nor tell the glory of Thy beauty, 9. For what am I amongst men, or why am I reckoned amongst those who are more excellent than I, that I should have heard all those marvellous things from the Most High, and good tidings numberless from Him who created me? 10. Blessed be my mother amongst those that bear, and praised among women be she that bare me. 11. For I will not be silent in praising the Mighty One, and with the voice of praise I will recount His marvellous deeds. 12. For who doeth like unto Thy marvellous deeds, O God, or who comprehendeth Thy deep thought of

In faith. See note on liv. 21.

8. In the Shir ha-Shirim rabba, i. 3 we find the hyperbolic statements of this verse far outdone: "R. Eliezer said: 'if all the seas were ink, and all the reeds were pens, and heaven and earth were rolls, and all men were scribes, yet the law could not be written down which I have taught.'"

10. An interpolation? it breaks life? 13. For with Thy counsel Thou dost govern all the creatures which Thy right hand has created, and Thou hast established every fountain of light beside Thee, and the treasures of wisdom beneath Thy throne hast Thou prepared. 14. And justly do they perish who have not loved Thy law, and the torment of judgment will await those who have not submitted themselves to Thy power. 15. For though Adam the connection. Cf. Luke i. 42 ; xi. 27 ; Judges v. 24.

13. Thou dost govern. Cf. verse 22.

14. A deliberate rejection of the law of God is here implied as in xlviii. 40, see note.

15, 19. In xxiii. 4 the physical effects of sin are referred to ; in xlviii. 42 the spiritual effects. The former consisted according to B² (see xxiii. 4, note) in man's subjection to physical death. According to A³ (see liv. 15 ; lvi. 6), however, man was already subject to physical death, and the penalty of sin consisted in premature death.

The main question, however, which concerns us here is that of predestination and free will. In order to understand the position of the writers of this book, it will be helpful to draw attention to the chief statements which appear on these subjects in Jewish non-canonical literature. In Ecclesiasticus these antinomies are stated unconditionally, not indeed in immediate contrast, but in distinct passages. Thus in xv. 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 20, we have the freewill of man strongly affirmed : μη εἴπῃς ὅτι διὰ κύριον ἀπέστην . . . μη εἴπῃς ὅτι αὐτός με ἐπλάνησεν· οὐ γὰρ χρεῖαν ἔχει ἀνδρὸς ἁμαρτωλοῦ . . . αὐτὸς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐποίησεν ἄνθρωπον, καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτὸν ἐν χειρὶ διαβουλίου αὐτοῦ. ἐὰν θέλῃς, συντηρήσεις ἐντολάς. . . ἐναντι ἀνθρώπων ἡ ζωὴ καὶ ὁ θάνατος καὶ ὃ ἐὰν εὐδοκήσῃ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. . . καὶ οὐκ ἐνετείλατο οὐδενὶ ἀσεβεῖν. Cf. also xviii. 6. The doctrine of predestination is absolutely maintained in xxxvi. 10, 12, 13, καὶ ἄνθρωποι πάντες ἀπὸ ἐδάφους καὶ ἐκ γῆς ἐκτίσθη Ἀδάμ· ἐξ αὐτῶν εὐλόγησεν καὶ ἀνύψωσεν . . . ἀπ' αὐτῶν κατηράσατο καὶ ἐταπείνωσεν καὶ ἀνέστρεψεν αὐτοὺς ἀπὸ στάσεως αὐτῶν. ὡς πηλὸς κεραμέως ἐν χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, πᾶσαι αἱ ὁδοὶ αὐτοῦ κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ· οὕτως ἄνθρωποι ἐν χειρὶ τοῦ ποιήσαντος αὐτοὺς ἀποδοῦναι αὐτοῖς κατὰ τὴν κρίσιν αὐτοῦ. Cf. also xxiii. 20 ; xxxix. 20, 21. These two doctrines which are thus separately affirmed in Ecclus., are given by Josephus as co-ordinate articles of the Pharisaic creed. Thus in Bell. Jud. ii. 8, 14, he says : Φαρισαῖοι . . . εἰμαρμένην τε καὶ θεῷ προοπίουσι πάντα καὶ τὸ μὲν πράττειν τὰ δίκαια καὶ μὴ κατὰ τὸ πλείστον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις κεῖσθαι, βοηθεῖν δὲ εἰς ἕκαστον καὶ τὴν εἰμαρμένην. Ant. xiii. 5, 9 : οἱ μὲν οὖν Φαρισαῖοι τινὰ καὶ οὐ πάντα τῆς εἰμαρμένης εἶναι λέγουσιν ἔργον, τινὰ δ' ἐφ' ἑαυτοῖς ὑπάρχειν, συμβαλεῖν τε καὶ μὴ γίνεσθαι (Ant. xviii. 1. 3) πράσσεισθαι τε εἰμαρμένῃ τε πάντα ἀξιοῦντες, οὐδὲ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τοῦ βουλούμενον τῆς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ὁρμῆς ἀφαιροῦνται, δοκῆσαν τῷ θεῷ κρᾶσιν γενέσθαι καὶ τῷ βουλευτῇ βουλευτηρίῳ καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῷ θελήσαντι προσ-

first sinned and brought untimely death upon all, yet of those who were born from him each one of them has χωρεῖν μετ' ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας. The same paradoxical creed appears in the Pirke Aboth. iii. 24 (ed. Taylor p. 73): "Everything is foreseen; and freewill is given. And the world is judged by grace: and everything is according to work"; and possibly also in the Pss. Sol. ix. 7 τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν ἐν ἐκλογῇ καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡμῶν τοῦ ποιῆσαι δίκαιοσύνην καὶ ἀδικίαν (see Ryle and James's edition, pp. 95, 96).

This co-ordination of fate and freewill as articles of faith was nothing more or less than an attempt on the part of the Pharisees to embody in their creed the two O.T. doctrines of God's omnipotence and man's responsibility. That theoretically such a creed was current may reasonably be concluded from the passages just cited, as well as from the attestation it receives in Pauline teaching in Rom. ix.-xi. (see Sanday and Headlam's Romans, pp. 347-350). Its acceptance, too, would, no doubt, be furthered by the pressure of the rival creeds of the Sadducees and the Essenes, who were the champions, respectively, of freewill and of fate (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 8. 14; Ant. xiii. 5. 9). With the disappearance of Sadduceeism, however, the paradoxical character of Pharisaic belief seems to have disappeared also. Henceforth the Rabbinic schools teach mainly man's freedom of the will and limit God's predestinating action to his external lot.

The two doctrines of fate and freewill, though seen to be mutually exclusive, were, as we have already remarked, accepted theoretically as equally imperative by the Pharisees. The only instance where these two doctrines are developed into irreconcilable fulness and results and applied to religious questions in the first century is to be found in St. Paul's teaching (see above). In every other attempt to grapple with these problems a compromise is effected which results either in a vigorous or else in a very attenuated doctrine of freewill. Of this wavering attitude among the Pharisees in the first century we have sufficient evidence. Thus man's freewill is maintained in the Slav. En. xxx. 15: "And I gave him his will, and I showed him the two ways, the light and the darkness . . . that I should know whether he has love for Me or hate"; though in the next verse it is recognised that his freewill is hampered by his incorporation in the body, and his ignorance of its good and evil impulses. But the best evidence in this direction is furnished by the Apocalypse of Baruch and 4 Ezra. From our comparative study hitherto of these two works (see notes on xiv. 7; xxi. 9; xlviii. 42), we should expect that man's freewill and capacity for doing God's will, despite Adam's sin, would be emphasised in the former, and that man's helplessness and practical incapacity for righteousness in consequence of his original defects or Adam's sin would be conspicuous in the latter, and this we do find as a matter of fact. First as to 4 Ezra. In 4 Ezra the bulk of mankind was predestined to destruction (viii. 1-3); for from the beginning there was in man a wicked element (i.e. צר הרע) called here granum seminis mali (4 Ezra iv. 30): "Quoniam granum seminis mali seminatum est in corde Adam ab initio, et quantum impietatis generavit usque nunc et prepared for his own soul torment to come, and again each one of them has chosen for himself glories to come.

generabit usque cum veniat area"; through Adam's yielding to this evil element a hereditary tendency to sin was created and the cor malignum developed (iii. 21, 22). Cor enim malignum baiolans primus Adam transgressus et victus est, sed et omnes qui ex eo nati sunt. Et facta est permanens infirmitas, et lex in corde populi cum malignitate radice, et discessit quod bonum est, et mansit malignum. We should observe that baiolans in iii. 21 just cited represents φωρέσας: for both the Syriac and Ethiopic Versions = cum vestivit. Hence Adam "clothed himself" with a wicked heart by yielding to the evil impulse which was in him when created. Adam was created with two impulses: "the good impulse" (יצר הטוב) implied in the words discessit quod bonum est (iii. 22), and "the evil impulse" already referred to. This subject is further pursued in iii. 25, 26: "Et deliquerunt qui habitabant civitatem, In omnibus facientes sicut fecit Adam et omnes generationes ejus, utebantur enim et ipsi cor malignum." As a result of Adam's transgression, the evil impulse having been developed into the cor malignum, and having thus obtained the mastery over man, the writer of vii. 118 naturally charges Adam with being the cause of the final perdition of mankind: "O tu quid fecisti Adam? si enim tu peccasti, non est factum solius tuus casus sed et nostrum qui ex te advenimus." Naturally in the face of such a hopeless view of man's condition no real doctrine of freewill could be maintained. In fact, in 4 Ezra only sufficient freewill is accorded to man to justify his final condemnation. Cf. 4 Ezra viii. 56, 58-60, "Nam et ipsi accipientes libertatem spreverunt Altissimum et legem ejus contempserunt. . . . Et dixerunt in corde suo non esse deum, et quidem scientes sciunt quoniam moriuntur. . . . Non enim Altissimus voluit hominem disperdi; Sed ipsi qui creati sunt coinquinaverunt nomen ejus qui fecit eos." vii. 72, "Qui ergo commorantes sunt in terra hinc cruciabuntur, quoniam sensum habentes iniquitatem fecerunt et mandata accipientes non servaverunt ea et legem consecuti fraudaverunt eam quam acceperunt." ix. 11, Fastidierunt legem meam cum adhuc erant habentes libertatem.

Turning now to the present Apocalypse, we find in all its sections, even in the gloomiest, B², a view of man's present capacities and future destiny that is optimistic when set side by side with 4 Ezra. Whereas in A³, according to liv. 15, 19, the effects of Adam's sin are limited to physical results; his descendants must die prematurely. On the nature of these physical results in other sections see xxiii. 4, note. As to spiritual results, each man is the Adam of his own soul, and can choose for himself either bliss or torment; he can work out his own salvation and even make God his debtor (see xiv. 7, note). Only in xlviii. 42 is spiritual death traced to Adam.

The view set forth in the text as to man's condition is exactly that which prevails in the Talmud. In fact, Weber's summing up on this question would serve admirably for an exposition of the text: "Der freie Wille auch in Bezug auf das Verhalten gegen Gott ist dem Menschen auch nach dem Fall geblieben. Es

LIV. 16-
18=B².

[16. For assuredly he who believeth will receive reward. 17. But now, as for you, ye wicked that now are, turn ye to destruction, because ye will speedily be visited, in that from time to time ye have rejected the understanding of the Most High. 18. For His works have not taught you, nor has the skill of His creation which is at all times persuaded you.] 19. Adam is gibt eine Erbschuld, aber keine Erbsünde: der Fall Adam's hat dem ganzen Geschlecht den Tod, nicht aber die Sündigkeit im Sinne einer Nothwendigkeit zu sündigen verursacht; die Sünde ist das Ergebnis der Entscheidung jedes Einzelnen, erfahrungsgemäss allgemein, aber an sich auch nach dem Fall nicht schlechthin nothwendig" (Lehren d. Talmud, p. 217).

Only one statement in this citation seems untrustworthy, i.e. Es gibt eine Erbschuld. I can see nothing in Weber's learned work to justify this statement, but everything to show that there was neither hereditary sin nor hereditary guilt. Moreover, on p. 240 this statement is actually made: "Wenn die Sünde und Schuld nicht erblich ist, kann dann die Strafe erblich sein? . . . Diese Antinomie hat die jüdische Theologie durch drei Sätze auszugleichen versucht."

15. Untimely. See note on xxiii. 4. The phrase rendered "untimely" is בְּעֵתוֹ כְּכֹנֶה. It recurs in lvi. 6 and lxxiii. 3.

16-18. These verses are clearly an interpolation for the same reasons as xlviii. 48-50 and lii. 5-7. These three passages seem to have been addressed by Baruch to the people, and to have formed part of one and the same discourse. The original order appears to have been: first, liv. 17, 18, where the wicked are menaced with the final judgment; then xlviii. 48-50, in which the destiny of the wicked is dismissed and that of the righteous described; next, lii. 5-7, where a line of conduct is prescribed to the righteous on the ground of that destiny, and a preparation of their souls for the reward laid up for them; and finally, liv. 16, where the faithful are assured of that reward.

It will be observed (1) that these verses break the sense of the context; (2) that a direct address to the wicked could not occur in a prayer to God.

18. In liv. 14 it is implied that the wicked there described knew the law. This is intelligible from the standpoint of the Jewish belief that the Gentiles were offered the law but refused it. But in this verse no such view is implied. Their knowledge of God could only arise from reflection on His works in nature. The same argument is found in Rom. i. 20. This argument "is as old as the Psalter, Job, and Isaiah (Pss. xix. 1; xciv. 9; cxliii. 5; Isa. xlii. 5; xlv. 18; Job xii. 9; xxvi. 14; xxxvi. 24; Wisdom ii. 23; xiii. 1, 5). It is common to Greek thought as well as Jewish (Arist. De Mundo, 6; Philo, De Praem. et Poen. 7" (Sanday and Headlam, Rom. p. 43).

19. See note on verse 15. The real force of this verse is that a man's guilt and sin are not derived erefore not the cause, save only of his own soul, but ch one of us has been the Adam of his own soul.

 . But do Thou, O Lord, expound to me regarding use things which Thou hast revealed to me, and form me regarding that which I besought Thee. 21.
 r at the consummation of the world there will be ngeance taken upon those who have done wickedness according to their wickedness, and Thou wilt glorify the ithful according to their faithfulness. 22. For those ho are amongst Thine own Thou rulest, and those ho sin Thou blottest out from amongst Thine own."

LV. And it came to pass when I had finished peaking the words of this prayer, that I sat there under a tree, that I might rest in the shade of the branches. 2. And I wondered and was astonished, and pondered in my thoughts regarding the multitude of goodness which sinners who are upon the earth from Adam, but are due to his own action. The evil impulse (יצר הרע) does not constitute guilt or sin unless man obeys it. As the Talmudists say, it was placed in man to be overcome (Weber, 210).

21. The faithful according to their faith. Faith in this passage is contrasted with unrighteousness ("שם = avopula). Hence we should take it here as equivalent either to "righteousness" or "fidelity to the law." In liv. 16 the verb "believe" may mean "to be faithful." But the context is doubtful. Elsewhere in Baruch faith = "belief." Thus in lix. 2 those who "believe" are opposed to those who "deny"; in xlii. 2 to those who "despise."
 This is the meaning also in liv. 5; lvii. 2; lxxxiii. 8. In 4 Ezra vi. 5 faith seems to mean "righteousness," the result of fidelity to the law (as in Apoc. Bar. liv. 21); for the righteous are those qui fidem thesaurizaverunt; possibly also in

 v. 1; vi. 28; it means fidelity to the law in vii. 34, as incredulitas in vii.
 114 = "disloyalty." In ix. 7, 8;
 xiii. 23, faith and works are combined and appear nearly synonymous. For a most instructive note on the various meanings of "faith," see Sanday and Headlam's Romans, pp. 31-34.

Faith in the Talmud is in one of its aspects regarded as a work which as the fulfilment of the law produces merit. In the Beresh. rabba, lxxiv. the merit arising from faith and the merit arising from the law are co-ordinated. See Weber, pp.
 292, 295, 298.

have rejected, and regarding the great torment which they have despised, though they knew that they should be tormented because of the sin they had committed. 3. And when I was pondering on these things and the like, lo! the angel Ramiel who presides over true visions was sent to me, and he said unto me: 4. "Why does thy heart trouble thee, Baruch, and why does thy thought disturb thee? 5. For if by the hear say which thou hast only heard of judgment thou art so moved, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt see it manifestly with thine eyes? 6. And if with the expectation wherewith thou dost expect the day of the Mighty One thou art so overcome, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt come to its advent? 7. And, if the word of the announcement of the torment of those who have done foolishly thou art so wholly distraught, how much more when the event will reveal marvellous things? 8. And if thou hast heard tidings of the good and evil things which are then coming and art grieved, what (wilt thou be) when thou shalt behold what the majesty will reveal, which will convict these and cause those to rejoice?

LV. 2. Despised, though they knew. See xv. 6, note; xlviii. 40, note.

3. Ramiel. Cf. lxiii. 6; this angel is mentioned in the Eth. En. xx. 7 (Greek) 'Ρεμειήλ ὁ εἰς τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων ὃν ἔταξεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ τῶν ἀνισταμένων: also in 4 Ezra iv. 36, where the Syriac Version = "And the angel Ramiel answered and said unto them" (i.e. the righteous souls in the soul-treasuries); for "Ramiel" the Latin gives Hieremihel. Finally, in Or. Sibyl. ii. 215-217, Ramiel is one of the five angels appointed by God to bring the souls of men to judgment: 'Αρακιήλ 'Ραμυήλ Οὐριήλ Σαμυήλ 'Αζαήλ τε . . . ἀνθρώπων ψυχὰς . . . ἐς κρῖσιν ἀξουσιν πάσας. The function of Ramiel in the text agrees to some extent with that assigned to him in 4 Ezra.

5. And art so moved. I have followed Ceriani's suggestion here in supplying ο before יִנָּחֵם.

LVI. "Nevertheless, because thou hast besought the Most High to reveal to thee the interpretation of the vision which thou hast seen, I have been sent to say to thee. 2. And the Mighty One hath assuredly made known to thee the methods of the times that have passed, and of those that are destined to pass in His world from the beginning of its creations even unto its consummation, of those things which (are) deceit and of those which (are) in truth. 3. For as thou didst see a great cloud which ascended from the sea, and went and covered the earth, this is the duration of the world (= ai'ōn) which the Mighty One made when He took counsel to make the world. 4. And it came to pass when the word had gone forth from His presence, that the duration of the world had come into being in a small degree, and was established according to the multitude of the intelligence of Him who sent it. 5. And as thou didst previously see on the summit of the cloud black waters which descended previously on the earth, this is the transgression wherewith Adam the first man transgressed. 6. For owing to his transgression untimely death came into being, and grief was named

LVI. 2. And the Mighty. We should expect That the Mighty.

3. A great cloud . . . this is the duration of the world. This cloud is divided into thirteen parts: the first twelve parts of alternate black and bright waters (see liii. 5, 6), and the thirteenth of the blackest waters of all (see liii. 7). These symbolise the thirteen periods into which the history of the world is divided prior to the Messiah's kingdom. This kingdom is foreshadowed by the lightning that shone on the extremity or summit of the cloud.

4. Was established. I have followed Ceriani here in reading  instead of .

6. Owing to his transgression. The text literally is "when he transgressed."

Untimely. See liv. 15, note.

and anguish was prepared, and pain was created, and trouble perfected, and boasting began to be established, and Sheol to demand that it should be renewed in blood, and the begetting of children was brought about, and the passion of parents produced, and the greatness of humanity was humiliated, and goodness languished. 7. What therefore can be blacker or darker than these things? 8. This is the beginning of the black waters which thou hast seen. 9. And from these black (waters) again were black derived, and the darkness of darkness produced. 10. For he was a danger to his own soul: even to the angels was he a danger. 11. For, moreover, at that time when he was created, they enjoyed liberty. 12. And some of them descended, and mingled with women. 13. And then those who did so were tormented in chains. 14. But the rest of the multitude of the angels, of which there is no number, restrained themselves. 15. And those who dwelt on the earth perished together (with them) through the waters of the deluge. 16. These are the black first waters.

Sheol to demand, etc. For this hunger of Sheol, cf. Prov. xxvii. 20; Isa. v. 14. On Sheol, see note on xi. 6.

10. He was a danger, etc. This must mean that man's physical nature was a danger to his spiritual; for it was the physical side of man that proved a danger to the angels who fell through lust. Man's physical nature was dangerous; for in it resided the "evil impulse" (see note on liv. 15, 19).

11-13. They enjoyed liberty, i.e. the angels. This liberty, according to the ancient myth, they abused by taking to themselves wives of the daughters of men (see Eth. En. vi. 2, note; Slav. En. xviii. 4-6; Jubilees v. 1-11; x. 1-13).

14. No number. The MS. omits the negative, but wrongly, as Ceriani has already observed (cf. xxi. 6; lix. 11). For a still more obvious loss of the negative see li. 16, though strangely enough it has not hitherto been remarked.

LVII. "And after these (waters) thou didst see bright waters: this is the fount of Abraham, also his generations and advent of his son, and of his son's son, and of those like them. 2. Because at that time the unwritten law was named amongst them, and the works of the commandments were then fulfilled, and belief in the coming judgment was then generated, and hope of the world that was to be renewed was then built up, and the promise of the life that should come hereafter was implanted. 3. These are the bright waters, which thou hast seen.

LVIII. "And the black third waters which thou

LVII. 1. The first bright period embraces human history from the time of Abraham to that of the twelve sons of Jacob and their righteous contemporaries or immediate successors.

2. The unwritten law. This statement proceeds from the same spirit which animates the entire Book of Jubilees, and which seeks to trace traditionalism and its observances to the times of the patriarchs. In later Judaism there were manifold attempts of this nature. Thus in the Avoda-sara, 36b, according to Gen. xxxviii. 24, impurity was forbidden by the Rabbinic tribunal of Shem; in the Beresh. rabba, xciv., Shem and Eber are said to have handed on certain traditions to Jacob; in the Joma, 28b, Abraham is said to have observed the whole Torah and the traditional or unwritten law. To Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the three daily times of prayer are traced back in the Berachoth, 26b. The above statements are drawn from Herzfeld, Geschichte Israels, p. 226. For a detailed description of the traditional law from the earliest times down to Hillel, see op. cit. iii. 226-263; Weber, 255.

Works of the commandments were then fulfilled. See preceding note.

Belief. See note on liv. 21.

Hope of the world to be renewed. See note on xxxii. 6. In the earlier Messiah-Apocalypses in this book, i.e. in A¹ and A², the renewal of the world is to take place at the close of the Messianic kingdom, for in these writings this kingdom belongs to this world $\delta\ \alpha\iota\omega\omicron\nu\ \omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ (Matt. xii. 32) = $\eta\eta\ \epsilon\beta\iota\upsilon\eta$; whereas in A³ with which we are at present dealing it is said (lxxiv. 2) to form the close of the present world and the beginning of the next (i.e. $\delta\ \alpha\iota\omega\omicron\nu\ \delta\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\lambda\omega\nu$ or $\delta\ \epsilon\rho\chi\acute{o}\mu\epsilon\nu\omicron\varsigma$ = $\eta\eta\ \epsilon\beta\iota\upsilon\eta$). If we are to take (lxxiv. 2) literally, then the renewal of the world is to take place during the Messiah's reign. But this is unlikely. In 4 Ezra vii. 28-30; xii. 32-34, the Messiah's kingdom belongs to this world. In xiii. 32-50 to the next, if xiii. 36 is genuine. In the older literature the Messianic kingdom belongs to the next world (cf. Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx.)

hast seen, these are the mingling of all sins, which the nations afterwards wrought after the death of those righteous men, and the wickedness of the land of Egypt, wherein they did wickedly in the service wherewith they made their sons to serve. 2. Nevertheless, these also perished at last.

LIX. "And the bright fourth waters which thou hast seen are the advent of Moses and Aaron and Miriam and Joshua the son of Nun and Caleb and of all those like them. 2. For at that time the lamp of the eternal law shone on all those who sat in darkness, which announced to them that believe the promise of their reward, and to them that deny, the torment of fire which is reserved for them. 3. But also the heavens at that time were shaken from their place, and those who were under the throne of the Mighty One were perturbed, when He was taking Moses unto Himself. 4. For He showed him many admonitions together with the principles of the laws and the consummation of time, as also to thee, and likewise the pattern of Zion and its measures, which was to be LVIII. 1. The service wherewith they made their sons to serve. Exod. i. 14 is here closely followed: בל-עברתם אשר-עבדו בהם. As the LXX. has here πάντα τὰ ἔργα ὧν καταδουλοῦντο αὐτούς, it is clear that the original writer had the Hebrew text and not the LXX. before him.

LIX. 2. The eternal law. Cf. xvii. 6. See xv. 5, note.

The lamp . . . darkness—a Rabbinic application of Isa. ix. 2. Isa. ix. 2 was a favourite passage in N.T. times (cf. Matt. iv. 16; Luke i. 79).

That believe. See liv. 21, note.

Torment of fire. Cf. xlv. 15; xlviii. 39; lxxxv. 13. It will be observed that these passages suggest a material fire in which the wicked are to be tormented after the resurrection, i.e. after they have resumed their bodies.

4. The pattern of Zion and its measures. Cf. Exod. xxv. 40; xxvi. 30; Heb. viii. 5.

Which was to be made, etc. A very slight change in the Syriac would give a good text: "In the made in the pattern of the sanctuary of the present time. 5. But then also He showed to him the measures of the fire, also the depths of the abyss, and the weight of the winds, and the number of the drops of rain. 6. And the suppression of anger, and the multitude of long-suffering, and the truth of judgment. 7. And the root of wisdom, and the riches of understanding, and the fount of knowledge. 8. And the height of the air, and the greatness of Paradise, and pattern of which the sanctuary of the present time was to be made."

5-11. It is of importance to observe, with a view to determining the date of A³, that in these verses we have a transference of Enoch's functions to Moses, and that the revelations hitherto attributed to Enoch are here for the first time assigned to Moses. It is noteworthy that another of Enoch's chief functions is ascribed to Ezra in 4 Ezra xiv. 50. This opposition to Enoch is unswervingly pursued in the Talmud. Thus, whereas in pre-Christian Judaism, Enoch, and Enoch only, is described as the scribe of the deeds of men (Jub. iv. 23; x. 17; Slav. En. xl. 13; liii. 2; lxiv. 5), this office is assigned to various Jewish heroes in later Judaism. Thus according to Ruth rabba, 33a, it is Elijah; according to Esther rabba, 86d, it is the angels; according to Jalkut Shim., Beresh. 141, it was formerly the prophets, but now it is only Elijah and the Messiah (Weber, 272). We have already drawn attention to this phenomenon in the note on xiii. 3, and have there pointed out that this hostility to Enoch is the outcome of Jewish hostility to Christianity as a whole; for as we know from manifold evidence the writings of Enoch enjoyed a singular influence on early Christianity. This aggressive attitude of Judaism could hardly have originated before the open rupture of Christianity with the Synagogue and the Pauline controversy. Hence this writing was not earlier than A.D. 50. From lxviii. 5 it is clear that it is prior to A.D. 70. Therefore the limits of its composition are A.D. 50-70.

5. The depths of the abyss. A frequent subject in both books of Enoch: Eth. En. xviii. 11; xxi. 7-10, etc.; Slav. En. xxviii. 3.

The weight of the winds. The weighing of the winds is described in the Slav. En. xl. 11; cf. also Eth. xli. 4.

The number of the drops of rain. Slav. En. xlvii. 5; Ecclus. i. 2.

7. Root of wisdom. See li. 3, note.

Riches of understanding. lxi. 4.

The fount of knowledge. Bar. iii. 12; 4 Ezra xiv. 47.

8. The height of the air. Slav. En. xl. 12: "I have written down the height from the earth to the seventh heaven."

The greatness of Paradise. The measures of Paradise are taken by the angels for Enoch. Cf. Eth. En. lxi. 1-4; lxx. 3, 4.

the consummation of the ages, and the beginning of the day of judgment. 9. And the number of the offerings, and the earths which have not yet come. 10. And the mouth of Gehenna, and the station of vengeance, and the place of faith, and the region of hope. 11. And the likeness of future torment, and the multitude of innumerable angels, and the powers of the flames, and the splendour of the lightnings, and the voice of the thunders, and the orders of the chiefs of the angels, and the treasuries of light, and the changes of the times, and the investigations of the law. 12. These are the bright fourth waters which thou hast seen.

LX. "And the black fifth waters which thou hast

The consummation of the ages. This subject is discussed in every section of the Enochic literature.

The beginning of the day of judgment. This date is fixed according to a definite reckoning in the Slav. En. xxxii. 2-xxxiii. 2; lxxv. 7-10; according to certain indefinite measures in Eth. En. lxxxiii.-xc.; xci.-civ.

10. The mouth of Gehenna. Eth. En. xxvii. 2, 3; liv.; lxii. 12; xc. 26, 27.

The station of vengeance. Many places of vengeance are described in the two books of Enoch: Eth. En. xviii. 12-16; xix.; xxi.; xxii. 10-13; liv. 1-6; xc. 24-27; Slav. En. x.; xl. 12.

The place of faith, and the region of hope. These seem to be the places of intermediate bliss. Cf. Eth. En. xxii. 5-9.

11. The likeness of future torment. Slav. xl. 12.

The multitude of innumerable angels. See lvi. 14, note. Of early Jewish literature, it is only in Enoch that the angels are described at length.

The splendour of the lightnings, and the voice of the thunders. Eth. En. xli. 3; xliii. 1, 2; xliv.; lix.; lx. 13-15; Slav. En. xl. 9.

The orders of the chiefs of the angels. I have here read the plural  instead of the singular . Ceriani renders the text: "ordines principatus angelorum." The Jews believed in ten orders of angels, the Christians in nine. These orders are mentioned and in part enumerated in the Slav. En. xx. 1, 3 (see note); cf. also Eth. lxi. 10; lxxi. 7-9.

The treasuries of light. This expression is unexampled.

The changes of the times, i.e. the seasons. Slav. En. xiii. 5; xl. 6; Eth. En. lxxxii. 11-20.

seen raining are the works which the Amorites wrought, and the spells of their incantations which they wrought, and the wickedness of their mysteries, and the mingling of their pollution. 2. But even Israel was then polluted by sins in the days of the judges, though they saw many signs which were from Him who made them.

LXI. "And the bright sixth waters which thou didst see, this is the time in which David and Solomon were born. 2. And there was at that time the building of Zion, and the dedication of the sanctuary, and the shedding of much blood of the nations that sinned then, and many offerings which were offered then in the dedication of the sanctuary. 3. And peace and tranquillity existed at that time. 4. And wisdom was heard in the assembly, and the riches of understanding were magnified in the congregations. 5. And the holy festivals were fulfilled in goodness and in much joy. 6. And the judgment of the rulers was then seen to be without guile, and the righteousness of the precepts of the Mighty One was accomplished with truth. 7. And because the land was then beloved at that time, and because its inhabitants sinned not, it was glorified beyond all lands, and the city Zion ruled then over all lands and regions. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LX. 1. Mingling of their pollution. Cf. Pss. Sol. ii. 14, ἐν φνυμῶ ἀναμύξεως.

Ceriani in correcting 𐤁𐤁𐤁 (="of judgment") into 𐤁𐤁𐤁.

LXI. 4. Riches of understanding.

2. Of the judges. I here follow lix. 7.

LXII. "And the black seventh waters which thou hast seen, this is the perversion (brought about) by the counsel of Jeroboam, who took counsel to make two calves of gold. 2. And all the iniquities which the kings who were after him iniquitously wrought. 3. And the curse of Jezebel and the worship of idols which Israel practised at that time. 4. And the withholding of rain, and the famines which occurred until women eat the fruit of their wombs. 5. And the time of their captivity which came upon the nine tribes and a half, because they were in many sins. 6. And Salmanasar king of Assyria came and led them away captive. 7. But regarding the Gentiles it were tedious to tell how they always wrought impiety and wickedness, and never wrought righteousness. 8. These are the black seventh waters which thou hast seen.

LXIII. "And the bright eighth waters which thou hast seen, this is the rectitude and uprightness of Hezekiah king of Judah and his benignity which came upon him. 2. For when Sennacherib was stirred up in order that he might perish, and his wrath troubled him in order that he might thereby LXII. 4. Cf. 2 Kings vi. 28, 29.

5. The captivity of the nine and a half tribes 721 B.C. See lxxviii., note.

6. I.e. Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii.

3, 6. Cf. 4 Ezra xiii. 40.

7. Wrought righteousness. The text is ܥܕܝܬܝܢ = "have been justified." For the grounds for the above restoration, see xxi. 9, note.

LXIII. 1. His benignity. So

ܥܕܝܬܝܢ. But the MS. originally read ܥܕܝܬܝܢ = "bounty, kindness." Both readings seem wrong.

2. This verse is translated as it stands in the Syriac. By omitting "for" the word "multitude" could be made the subject of the word "perish."

perish, for the multitude also of the nations which were with him. 3. When, moreover, Hezekiah the king heard those things which the king of Assyria was devising, (i.e.) to come and seize him and destroy his people, the two and a half tribes which remained : nay, more he wished to overthrow Zion also : then Hezekiah trusted in his works, and had hope in his righteousness, and spake with the Mighty One and said : 4. 'Behold, for lo ! Sennacherib is prepared to destroy us, and he will be boastful and uplifted when he has destroyed Zion.' 5. And the Mighty One heard him, for Hezekiah was wise, and He had respect unto his prayer, because he was righteous. 6. And thereupon the Mighty One commanded Ramiel His angel who speaks with thee. 7. And I went forth and destroyed their multitude, the number of whose chiefs only was a hundred and eighty-five

3. Hezekiah trusted in his works. See xiv. 7, note. Observe the play on Hezekiah's name in these words when retranslated into Hebrew, חזקיה החזק על. There appears to have been one also in Ecclus. xlviii. 22, ἐποίησεν γὰρ Ἐζεκίας . . . καὶ ἐνίσχυσεν. This conjecture as to the probable text in Ecclus. was made in March. It is now (June 20) confirmed by Dr. Neubauer's discovery last week in the Bodley of the Hebrew text of Ecclus. xl. 1. To his kindness and that of Mr. Cowley I owe the following passages where this play on the name occurs twice :—Ecclus. xlviii. 17, עֲשֵׂה יְחֻקֵּיהוּ חֻק עִיר, Ἐζεκίας ὠχύρωσεν τὴν πόλιν αὐτοῦ, and xlviii. 22, (כִּי עֲשֵׂה יְחֻקֵּיהוּ אֶת הַטּוֹב (וְיִתְחַזַּק)

בררכי רור = ἐποίησεν γὰρ Ἐζεκίας τὸ ἄρεστον κυρίως, καὶ ἐνίσχυσεν ἐν ὁδοῖς Δαυὶδ.

4. Lo, Sennacherib is prepared to destroy us. There was a play here on the name Sennacherib in the Hebrew, והנה סנחריב עתיד להחריב אותנו.

5. In Sifre, 12*b*, and Jalkut Shim., Beresh. 27, it is taught that men are heard by God on the ground either of their own merit or on that of others (Weber, 284, 285).

7. In 2 Kings xix. 35 ; Isa. xxxvii. 36, 185,000 is the complete number of the slain. In 2 Chron. xxxii. 21, only the slaughter of the chiefs is mentioned. From these two accounts the writer has worked up the present.

thousand, and each one of them had an equal number (at his command). 8. And at that time I burned their bodies within, but their raiment and arms I preserved outwardly, in order that the still more wonderful deeds of the Mighty One might appear, and that thereby His name might be spoken of throughout the whole earth. 9. Moreover, Zion was saved and Jerusalem delivered: Israel also was freed from tribulation. 10. And all those who were in the holy land rejoiced, and the name of the Mighty One was glorified so that it was spoken of. 11. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXIV. "And the black ninth waters which thou hast seen, this is all the wickedness which was in the days of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah. 2. For he wrought much impiety, and he slew the righteous, and he wrested judgment, and he shed the blood of the innocent, and wedded women he violently polluted, and he overturned the altars, and destroyed their offerings, and drove forth the priests lest they should minister in the sanctuary. 3. And he made an image with five faces: four of them looked to the LXIV. 3. He made an image with five faces: four of, etc. This is a very peculiar version of 2 Chron. xxxiii. 7. וַיַּעַשׂ אֱתֹנֶסֶת הָאֵלִים—"he set the graven image of the idol." The LXX. implies the Hebrew just given. The Syriac, however, exhibits an early gloss which prepares the way for our text. Thus it gives מַעֲבֹדִים אֲרְבָּעָה וְאֶחָד

אַחַד = "and he set the four-fronted image." The Arabic goes still further; it="and he set a statue having four heads with four faces." But the form of the tradition nearest to the text is found in the Talmud, Sanh. 103b: "At first he made for it (the idol) one face and in the end he made for it four faces, that the Shechinah might see and be provoked."

four winds, and the fifth on the summit of the image as an adversary of the zeal of the Mighty One. 4. And then wrath went forth from the presence of the Mighty One to the intent that Zion should be rooted out, as also it befell in your days. 5. But also against the two tribes and a half went forth a decree that they should also be led away captive, as thou hast now seen. 6. And to such a degree did the impiety of Manasseh increase, that it removed the praise of the Most High from the sanctuary. 7. On this account Manasseh was at that time named 'the impious,' and finally his abode was in the fire. 8. For though his prayer was heard with the Most High, finally, when he was cast into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted, it served as a sign unto him

6. Removed the praise of the Most High from the sanctuary. This may be explained by the statement in Sanh. 103b, that Manasseh erased the divine name and overturned the altar.

7. This verse runs counter to 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11-19, where it is clearly implied that Manasseh was really forgiven on his repentance. This writer declares, on the other hand, that Manasseh's experience in the brazen horse was only a foretaste of his future sufferings in hell.

In the fire. See xlv. 15, note.

8. His prayer. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 19; The Prayer of Manasseh in the Apocrypha.

Cast into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted. This tradition appears in the Targum of Chronicles after 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11: "And the Chaldeans made a copper mule and pierced it all over with little holes, and shut him up therein and kindled fire all around him. . . .

And he turned and prayed before the Lord his God. . . . And He shook the world with His word, and the mule burst asunder and he went forth therefrom." Traces of this tradition are also found in the Apostolic Constitutions ii. 22: καὶ ἐπήκουσε τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ κύριος . . . καὶ ἐγένετο περὶ αὐτὸν πλῆξ πυρός καὶ ἐτάκῃσαν πάντα τὰ περὶ αὐτὸν σίδηρα. Also in Anastasius on Ps. vi. (Canisius, Thesaur. Monum. iii. 112) φασὶ οἱ ἀρχαῖοι τῶν ἱστοριογράφων, ὅτι ἀπενεχθεὶς Μανασσῆς κατεκλείσθη εἰς ζώδιον χαλκοῦν ἀπὸ βασιλέως Περσῶν καὶ ἔσω ὢν ἐν τοιοῦτῳ ζώδιῳ προσήύξατο μετὰ δακρύων. In Suidas (see Μανασσῆς): αἰχμάλωτος ἀπήχθη καὶ ἐς τὸ χαλκοῦν ἀγαλμα καθείρχθη . . . ἐδέηθη τοῦ κυρίου . . . καὶ τὸ μὲν ἀγαλμα θεία δυνάμει διεργάγη.

Served as a sign. See note on ver. 7.

at the time. 9. For he did not live perfectly, for he was not worthy—but that thenceforward he might know by whom finally he should be tormented. 10. For he who is able to benefit is also able to torment.

LXV. "Thus, moreover, did Manasseh act impiously, and thought that in his time the Mighty One would not inquire into these things. 2. These are the black ninth waters which thou hast seen.

LXVI. "And the bright tenth waters which thou hast seen: this is the purity of the generations of Josiah king of Judah, who was the only one at that time who submitted himself to the Mighty One with all his heart and with all his soul. 2. And he cleansed the land from idols, and hallowed all the vessels which had been polluted, and restored the offerings to the altar, and raised the horn of the holy, and exalted the righteous, and glorified all that were wise in understanding, and brought back the priests to their ministry, and destroyed and removed the magicians and enchanters and fortune-tellers from the land. 3. And not only did he slay the impious that were living, but they also took from the sepulchres 9. Text is corrupt.

LXVI. 1. The writer thus appears to have believed that though Manasseh prayed, yet he did not really repent. This view is found in Sanh. 101: "Our Rabbis have taught: there are three who came with cunning (before God): they are Cain, Esau, and Manasseh. . . . Manasseh at first called upon many gods, and at last upon the God of his fathers" [Rashi: "He said:

"If Thou save me not, what doth it profit me that I have called on Thee, more than the other gods?""] (quoted by Ball in his Comm. on The Prayer of Manasses). In Sanh. x. three kings are said to have no part in the future life, i.e. Jeroboam, Ahab, and Manasseh. Yet in the Debarim rabba, ii., salvation is ultimately said to be in store for Manasseh (Weber, 328).

the bones of the dead and burned them with fire. 4. [And the festivals and the sabbaths he established in their sanctity], and their polluted ones he burnt in the fire, and the lying prophets which deceived the people, these also he burnt in the fire, and the people who listened to them when they were living, he cast them into the brook Cedron, and heaped stones upon them. 5. And he was zealous with the zeal of the Mighty One with all his soul, and he alone was firm in the law at that time, so that he left none that was uncircumcised, or that wrought impiety in all the land, all the days of his life. 6. This, moreover, is he that shall receive an eternal reward, and he shall be glorified with the Mighty One beyond many at a later time. 7. For on his account and on account of those who are like him were the inestimable glories, of which thou wast told before, created and prepared. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXVII. "And the black eleventh waters which thou hast seen: this is the calamity which is now befalling Zion. 2. Dost thou think that there is no anguish to the angels in the presence of the Mighty One, that Zion was so delivered up, and that lo! the Gentiles boast in their hearts, and assemble before their idols and say: 'She is trodden

4. The words which I have bracketed are either interpolated or misplaced. It would perhaps be best to read them after "to their ministry" in verse 2. In that case for "festival" we should read "festivals."

7. See note on xiv. 18.

LXVII. 2. Boast. Cf. v. 1; vii. 1; lxxx. 3. Assemble. The text  = "crowds" is corrupt. I have emended it into  = "assemble."

down who oftentimes trod down, and she has been reduced to servitude who reduced (others)?' 3. Dost thou think that in these things the Most High rejoices, or that His name is glorified? 4. But how will it serve towards His righteous judgment? 5. Yet after these things shall those that are dispersed among the Gentiles be taken hold of by tribulation, and in shame shall they dwell in every place. 6. Because so far as Zion is delivered up and Jerusalem laid waste, and idols prosper in the cities of the Gentiles, and the vapour of the smoke of the incense of righteousness which is by the law is extinguished in Zion and in the region of Zion, lo! in every place there is the smoke of impiety. 7. But the king of Babylon will arise who has now destroyed Zion, and he will boast over the people, and he will speak great things in his heart in the presence of the Most High. 8. But

5. "The dispersed" here seem to be the nine and a half tribes.

6-7. With the destruction of Jerusalem, godlessness is triumphant everywhere. In all the references in A³ to this destruction of Jerusalem, i.e. in lxiv. 4; lxvii. 2, 6, 7, there is no trace of consciousness in the mind of the writer that there was any divine interposition to save the sacred vessels of the temple and to destroy Zion by the agency of angels after the manner described in B¹, i.e. in vi. 4-10; lxxx. 1-3. If, further, we remark that the declared object of this interposition was to prevent the enemies of Zion boasting before their idols that they had laid it waste and burnt the temple (vii. 1; cf. v. 1; lxxx. 3), and if at the same time we observe that the writer of A³ represents the angel Ramiel as admitting that the Gentiles are boasting before their idols of their destruction of Zion (lxvii. 2), and that the king of Babylon makes the same vaunt (lxvii. 7), we can with tolerable certainty conclude that the ideas in B¹, i.e. in v. 1; vi. 4-vii. 1; lxxx. 1-3, were either unknown to him or else unacknowledged. These ideas seem foreign to B² also. This writer would have sympathised with the remonstrance in 4 Ezra v. 30: "Et si odians odisti populum tuum, tuis manibus debet castigari." In the Assumpt. Mosis (iii. 2) the capture of the sacred vessels by Nebuchadnezzar is acknowledged.

Righteousness which is by the law. See xv. 5, note.

he also shall fall at last. 9. These are the black waters.

LXVIII. "And the bright twelfth waters which thou hast seen: this is the word. 2. For after these things a time will come when thy people shall fall into distress, so that they shall all run the risk of perishing together. 3. Nevertheless, they will be saved, and their enemies will fall in their presence. 4. And they will have in (due) time much joy. 5. And at that time after a little interval Zion will again be builded, and its offerings will again be restored, and the priests will return to their ministry, and again the Gentiles will come to glorify it. 6. Nevertheless, not fully as in the beginning. 7. But it will come to pass after these things that there will be the fall of many nations. 8. These are the bright waters which thou hast seen.

LXIX. "For the last waters which thou hast seen which were darker than all that were before them, those which were after the twelfth number, which were collected together, belong to the whole world. 2. For the Most High made division from the beginning, because He alone knows what will befall. 3.

LXVIII. 2, 3. The danger the Jews encountered according to the book of Esther, and their subsequent triumph over their enemies. We have here the second earliest allusion to this O. T. book. The earliest is in 2 Macc. xv. 36.

5. The rebuilding of the temple (535-515).

6. On the lower estimation in which the second temple was held see Mal. i.-ii.; Eth. En. lxxxix. 73, 74; Assumpt. Mos. iv. 8. This temple, therefore, was standing when chapters liii.-lxxiv. were written.

LXIX. 1. Last. I have here adopted Ceriani's suggestion and read [𐤋𐤕𐤍] instead of [𐤋𐤕] = "other."

The last waters, etc. See liii. 7.

For as to the enormities of the impieties which should be wrought before Him, He foresaw six kinds of them.

4. And of the good works of the righteous which should be accomplished before Him, He foresaw six kinds of them, beyond those which He should work at the consummation of the age. 5. On this account there were not black waters with black, nor bright with bright; for it is the consummation.

LXX. "Hear therefore the interpretation of the last black waters which are to come [after the black]: this is the word. 2. Behold! the days come, and it will be when the time of the age has ripened, and the harvest of its evil and good seeds has come, that the Mighty One will bring upon the earth and its inhabitants and upon its rulers perturbation of spirit and stupor of heart. 3. And they will hate one another, and provoke one another to fight, and the mean will rule over the honourable, and those of low degree will be extolled above the famous. 4. And the many will be delivered into the hands of the few, and those who are nothing will rule over the strong, and the poor will have abundance beyond the rich, and the impious

3, 4. This division of the periods of the world into six good and six evil recalls Ecclus. xlii. 24 πάντα δισσὰ ἐν καρτέαντι τοῦ ἐνός (cf. also xxxiii. 15).

4. Foresaw. So Ceriani rightly emends from "foresees"—merely a change of pointing.

Beyond those which, etc. These woes—the travail pains of the Messiah—are developed at length in lxx.-lxxii. (see liii. 7; lxix. 1).

LXX. 1. I have bracketed the words "after the black" as interpolated. They misrepresent the scheme of the writer; for the "last black waters" come after the bright twelfth waters in lxviii.

2. Its inhabitants. See xxv. 2, note.

Stupor of heart. Cf. xxv. 2.

3-10. With this notable description of the last woes, cf. xxv. 2-4; xxvii.; xlviii. 31-39; 4 Ezra v. 1-12; vi. 20-24; ix. 1-9; xiii. 29-31 (see xxvii. 1, note).

3. Cf. xlviii. 37; Jubilees xxiii. 19; 4 Ezra vi. 24.

will exalt themselves above the heroic. 5. And the wise will be silent, and the foolish will speak, neither will the thought of men be then confirmed, nor the counsel of the mighty, nor will the hope of those who hope be confirmed. 6. Moreover, it will be when those things which were predicted have come to pass, that confusion will fall upon all men, and some of them will fall in battle, and some of them will perish in anguish, and some of them will be destroyed by their own. 7. Then the Most High will reveal to those peoples whom He has prepared before, and they will come and make war with the leaders that shall then be left. 8. And it will come to pass that whosoever gets safe out of the war will die in the earthquake, and whosoever gets safe out of the earthquake will be burned by the fire, and whosoever gets safe out of the fire will be destroyed by famine. [9. And it will come to pass that whosoever of the victors and

5. Cf. xlvi. 33, 36; 4 Ezra v. 9-11.

The mighty. The text which here reads ܠܠܡܝܬܝܢ = "the Mighty One," is wrong. We must read the plural ܠܠܡܝܬܝܢ = "the mighty." In lxxiv. 1 we must change the plural into the singular.

The hope of those who hope, etc. Cf. 4 Ezra v. 12.

6. Destroyed, etc. Cf. Mic. vii. 6; Matt. x. 35, 36; Luke xii. 53. The Syriac text = "will be hindered" is corrupt; for the context requires a strong expression. The corruption is traceable to the Hebrew. Thus "will be hindered" = καλυπθῆσονται, which would be the usual LXX. rendering of יִכָּלֵם. That יִכָּלֵם is a corruption of יִכָּלֵם = "will be destroyed" is clear from the fact that these two verbs are often confused in Hebrew, combined with the further fact that יִכָּלֵם = "will be destroyed" gives the exact sense we require.

7. Whom He has prepared before. Are these the hosts of Gog and Magog? if text in verse 9 is genuine.

8. In the earthquake. Cf. xxvii. 7; 4 Ezra ix. 3.

The fire. Cf. xxvii. 10; 4 Ezra, v. 8.

Will be destroyed. I have here followed Ceriani's emendation of ܐܡܝܢ = "he will add," into ܐܡܝܢ.

Famine. Cf. xxvii. 6.

9. I have with some doubt bracketed this verse as an inter-the vanquished gets safe out of and escapes all these things aforesaid will be delivered into the hands of My servant Messiah.] 10. For all the earth will devour its inhabitants.

LXXI. "And the holy land will have mercy on its own, and it will protect its inhabitants at that time. 2. This is the vision which thou hast seen, and this is the interpretation. 3. For I have come to tell thee these things, because thy prayer has been heard with the Most High.

LXXII. "Hear now also regarding the bright lightning which is to come at the consummation after these black (waters): this is the word. 2. After the signs have come, of which thou wast told before, when the potation. The appearance of the Messiah is premature. His advent does not really take place till lxxii. 2. Again verse 10 is the natural sequel to verse 8. Further, the extermination of the Gentiles is here implied, but only their partial destruction in lxxii. 4-6. Finally, since the Messiah is the defender of the righteous, lxxi. 1 is rather inappropriate. But lxxi. 1 is fitting if the Messiah has not yet come.

LXXI. See notes on xxix. 2. Observe that whereas God protects the inhabitants of Palestine in xxix. 2, and the Messiah protects them in xl. 2, it is the land that protects them here.

2. These words which should not occur till the end of the interpretation show that the text is dislocated. This will be obvious on other grounds as we proceed.

3. Cf. liv. 1.

LXXII. 1. The bright lightning = כִּנְוָה נֹרָא. So I have emended by means of liii. 8 the impossible text קְלָא נֹרָא = "the bright waters." It will be remembered that in the vision in liii. the last blackest waters (liii. 7) were not succeeded by bright waters, but by the lightning which illuminated and healed the earth and ruled over it (liii. 8-11). The lightning thus symbolised the Messiah. But in the interpretation of the close of the vision, the lightning is not even mentioned according to the present text, but in its place bright waters are spoken of, though in the vision in liii. none such are seen and none such contemplated throughout the entire interpretation up to the present chapter. The scheme of the writer of A³ was as we have seen above: twelve periods evil and good alternately, symbolised by black and bright waters respectively, followed by a period of woes—the blackest waters; and finally, the Messiah's kingdom which was prefigured by the lightning. The same emendation must be made in lxxiv. 4.

nations become turbulent, and the time of My Messiah is come, He will both summon all the nations, and some of them He will spare, and some of them He will slay. 3. These things therefore will come upon the nations which are to be spared by Him. 4. Every nation which knows not Israel, and has not trodden down the seed of Jacob, shall indeed be spared. 5. And this because some out of every nation will be subjected to thy people. 6. But all those who have ruled over you, or have known you, shall be given up to the sword.

LXXIII. "And it will come to pass, when He has brought low everything that is in the world, and has sat down in peace for the age on the throne of His kingdom, that joy will then be revealed, and rest appear. 2. And then healing will descend in dew, and disease will withdraw, and anxiety and anguish

Throughout lxxii. 1 the plurals are changed into the singular to agree with the singular subject.

4-6. The Messiah was to extend His dominion over the Gentiles (Ps. lxxii. 11, 17; Isa. xiv. 2; lxvi. 12, 19-21; Zech. xiv.; Eth. En. xc. 30; Pss. Sol. xvii. 32 καὶ ἔξει λαοὺς ἐθνῶν δουλεύειν αὐτῷ). But in the first century B.C. to which the Pss. Sol. belong, a harsher view of the destiny of the Gentiles began to prevail. In Eth. En. xxxvii.-lxx. and Assumpt. Mos. x. it seems to be that of annihilation; it is undoubtedly so in 4 Ezra xiii. 37, 38, 49, and all but universally in later Judaism; cf. Weber, 364-369, 376. A middle line is pursued in the text.

The Messiah here, as in xxxix. 7-xl.; 4 Ezra xii. 32, is a warrior who slays the enemies of Israel with His own hand. This view appears in the Targum of Jon. on Isa. x. 27, and of the pseudo-Jon. on Gen. xlix. 11. In Eth. En. lxii. 2; Pss. Sol. xvii. 27; 4 Ezra xiii. 38; as in Isa. xi. 4, He destroys them by the word of His mouth. But in the Eth. En. xc. 37; Ap. Bar. xxix. 2; 4 Ezra vii. 28, the conception of the Messiah is weak; he does not appear till evil has run its course; he has no active rôle; he reigns but does not rule.

LXXIII. 1. Cf. 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25.

Joy will be revealed. The text reads "will be revealed in joy," but this destroys the parallelism with "rest will appear." I have omitted the preposition before "joy."

2. Healing will descend in dew. Cf. xxix. 7.

and lamentation will pass from amongst men, and gladness will proceed through the whole earth. 3. And no one shall again die untimely, nor shall any adversity suddenly befall. 4. And judgments, and revilings, and contentions, and revenges, and blood, and passions, and envy, and hatred, and whatsoever things are like these shall go into condemnation when they are removed. 5. For it is these very things which have filled this world with evils, and on account of these the life of man has been greatly troubled. 6. And wild beasts will come from the forest and minister unto men, and asps and dragons will come forth from their holes to submit themselves to a little child. 7. And women will no longer then have pain when they bear, nor will they suffer torment when they yield the fruit of the womb.

LXXIV. "And it will come to pass in those days that the reapers will not grow weary, nor those that build be toilworn; for the works will of themselves speedily advance with those who do them in much tranquillity. 2. For that time is the consummation of that which is corruptible, and the beginning of that which is not corruptible. 3. Therefore those things which were predicted will belong to it: therefore it is far away from evils, and near to those things which die not. 4. This is the bright lightning which came after the last dark waters."

3. Untimely. See liv. 15.

4. Cf. Or. Sibyl. iii. 376-380, 751-755.

6. Cf. Isa. xi. 6-9; lxv. 25; Or. Sibyl. iii. 620-623, 743-750.

LXXIV. 2. Cf. xl. 2.

4. This is the bright lightning. Emended from "these are the last bright waters." See lxxii. 1, note.

LXXV. And I answered and said: "Who can understand, O Lord, Thy goodness? for it is incomprehensible. 2. Or who can search into Thy compassions, which are infinite? 3. Or who can comprehend Thy intelligence? 4. Or who is able to recount the thoughts of Thy mind? 5. Or who of those that are born can hope to come to those things, unless he is one to whom Thou art merciful and gracious? 6. Because, if assuredly Thou didst not have compassion on man, those who are under Thy right hand, they could not come to those things, but those who are in the numbers named can be called. 7. But if, indeed, we who exist know wherefore we have come, and submit ourselves to Him who brought us out of Egypt, we shall come again and remember those things which have passed, and shall rejoice regarding that which has

LXXV.- LXXVI. = B².

LXXV. - LXXVI. With these chapters we return again to B². We should observe that according to lxxv. 1 Baruch replies to the last speaker who has interpreted the vision in liii. for him. This speaker Baruch addresses as God. But the last speaker was not God but the angel Ramiel from whom is derived lv. 4-lxxiv. Thus we see that lxxv. does not belong to liii.-lxxiv.

LXXV. 1. Can understand. I have emended 𐤀𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁 = "can be likened to" into 𐤀𐤁𐤁𐤁 = "can understand," and omitted the 𐤁 in 𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁𐤁.

2. The mercies of God are not dwelt upon much in this book. The righteous are fully conscious of their worth (cf. xiv. 7, note). We have, however, a prayer for God's mercy in xlvi. 18, and an acknowledgment of God's long-suffering in xxiv. 2, but this is shown alike to the righteous and the wicked. God is merciful (lxxvii. 7) and His compassions are infinite (lxxv. 2); He has dealt with Baruch according to the multitude of the tender mercies (lxxxi. 4); if God had not compassion on man, he could not attain to the world to come (lxxv. 5, 6). For references to mercy in 4 Ezra, see vii. 132-134; viii. 31, 32, 36, 45; xii. 48.

5, 6. Those things. Probably the blessed immortality described in li.

6. Who are under Thy right hand. Cf. Ps. lxxx. 17.

7. We shall come again, i.e. in the resurrection described in l. This verse deals with the destiny of the obedient and the righteous; the next with that of the disobedient.

been. 8. But if now we know not wherefore we have come, and recognise not the principate of Him who brought us up out of Egypt, we shall come again and seek after those things which were now, and be grieved with pain because of those things which have befallen."

LXXVI. And He answered and said unto me: ["Inasmuch as the revelation of this vision has been interpreted to thee as thou besoughtest], hear the word of the Most High that thou mayest know what is to befall thee after these things. 2. For thou shalt surely depart from this earth, nevertheless not unto death but thou shalt be preserved unto the consummation of the times. 3. Go up therefore to the top of that mountain, and there will pass before thee all the regions of that land, and the figure of the inhabited world, and the top of the mountains, and the depth of the valleys, and the depths of the seas, and the number of the rivers, that thou mayest see what thou art leaving, and whither thou art going. 4. Now this will befall after forty days. 5. Go now therefore during LXXVI. 1. The earlier half of this verse is probably due to the final editor.

Hear the word of the Most High. This same mode of speech in which God speaks of Himself in the third person is found in xiii. 2: "Hear the word of the Mighty God," and also in xxv. 1, where the same statements are made in each case.

2. See note on xiii. 3.

Thou shalt be preserved until the consummation of the times. The Syr. here ܕܢܝܢܐ ܕܝܡܝܢܐ = "unto the observance of the times." If we compare the parallel passage, xxv. 1, we see that the above must be emended into ܕܢܝܢܐ ܕܝܡܝܢܐ, "thou shalt be preserved unto the times," or else into the fuller form we find in xvii. 3. I have done the latter in the text.

3. Cf. Deut. xxxiv. 1-3; Matt. iv. 8. Is the mountain here Nebo as in Deuteronomy?

4. Forty days. Cf. Exod. xxiv. 18; xxxiv. 28; Deut. ix. 9, 18. Analogous to this forty days to be these days and instruct the people so far as thou art able, that they may learn so as not to die at the last time, but may learn in order that they may live at the last times."

LXXVII. And I, Baruch, went thence and came to the people, and assembled them together from the greatest to the least, and said unto them: 2. "Hear, ye children of Israel, behold how many ye are who remain of the twelve tribes of Israel. 3. For to you and to your fathers the Lord gave a law beyond all peoples. 4. And because your brethren transgressed the commandments of the Most High, He brought vengeance upon you and upon them, and He spared not spent by Baruch in teaching the people are the forty days assigned to Ezra, in which he was to restore the O.T. Scriptures (cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 23, 42, 44, 45).

LXXVII.-
LXXXII.=B¹.

5. Live. See xli. 1, note.

In LXXVIII. - LXXXVII. we have the conclusion of B¹. But of these chapters two are from other sources; LXXXIII. is from B², and LXXXV. from B³. For the grounds for these conclusions, see the notes in loc. For a comprehensive treatment of the two sources, B¹ and B², the reader must consult the Introduction. The chief differences between B¹ and B² are: In the former an earthly felicity is looked for, in the latter not; in the former the dispersion is to return, in the latter not; in the former the earthly Jerusalem is to be rebuilt, in the latter not; in the former Baruch is to die, in the latter to be translated; in the former Jeremiah is not sent to Babylon, in the latter he is. Thus the portions derived respectively from B¹ and B² are as follows:—

From B¹ i.-iv. 1; v.-ix. 1; xliii.-xliv. 7; xlv.-xlvi. 6; lxxvii.-lxxxii.; lxxxiv., lxxxvi., lxxxvii. From B² ix. 2-xii. (?); xiii. 1-3a; xx.; xxiv. 2-4; xiii. 3b-12; xxv., xiv.-xix.; xxi.-xxiv. 1; xxx. 2-5; xli., xlii.; xlviii. 1-47; xlix.-lii. 3; lxxv.; xxxi.-xxxii. 6; liv. 17, 18; xlviii. 48-50; lii. 5-7; liv. 16; xlv. 8-15; lxxxiii.; xxxii. 7-xxxv.; lxxvi. The portions derived from B² are restored to what seems to have been their original order in that source.

LXXVII. 1. From the greatest to the least. A favourite expression in Jeremiah (cf. vi. 13; viii. 10; xxxi. 34; xlii. 1, 8; xlv. 12; 4 Ezra xii. 40). Only in these it runs: "From the least to the greatest."

2. The twelve tribes which are here mentioned are treated of in their two main divisions in verse 4. Cf. lxxviii. 4; lxxxiv. 3.

3. A law. See xv. 5, note.

4. Upon you. I.e. the 2½ tribes = "the former" in the next line.

Upon them. The 9½ tribes = "the latter" in the next line.

the former, and the latter also He gave into captivity, and left not a residue of them. 5. And behold! ye are here with me. 6. If therefore ye direct your ways aright, ye also will not depart as your brethren departed, but they will come to you. 7. For He is merciful whom ye worship, and He is gracious in whom ye hope, and He is true, so that He shall do (you) good and not evil. 8. Lo! have ye not seen what has befallen Zion? 9. Or do ye perchance think that the place had sinned, and that on this account it was overthrown, or that the land had wrought foolishness, and that therefore it was delivered up? 10. And know ye not that on account of you who did sin, that which sinned not was overthrown, and, on account of those who wrought wickedly, that which wrought not foolishness was delivered up to (its) enemies." 11. And the whole people answered and said unto me: "So

Hath not left a residue of them. I.e. of the $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes. This denies the Samaritan claim.

5. Cf. lxxx. 5; 4 Ezra xiv. 33. 4 Ezra xiv. 30-33 seems to be dependent on lxxvii. 3-6. Those who are left with Baruch are a remnant of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ tribes.

6. As your brethren departed. "The brethren" here embrace the $2\frac{1}{2}$ tribes, and so we interpret the subsequent words, "and they will come to you." On the return of the $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes see note on lxxviii. 7.

7. Do (you) good and not evil. Cf. Jer. xxi. 10; Amos ix. 4.

8. =xliv. 5. Cf. x. 7; xiii. 3; lxxix. 1.

9. It was not the place that sinned. Hence it was destroyed by the hands of angels before it was delivered over to the king of Babylon, lest he should glory over it. Cf. v.-viii., lxxx.; see note on lxvii. 6.

10. Observe that the fall of Jerusalem is here attributed not only to the sins of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ tribes but also of the $9\frac{1}{2}$. This view appears first in Jer. xi. 17: "For the Lord of hosts that planted thee hath pronounced evil against thee, because of the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah." Cf. Bar. ii. 26 καὶ ἔθηκας τὸν οἶκον οὗ ἐπεκλήθη τὸ ὄνομά σου ἐπ' αὐτῷ, ὡς ἡ ἡμέρα αὐτῇ, διὰ πονηρίαν οἰκοῦ Ἰσραὴλ καὶ οἰκοῦ Ἰούδα. Assumpt. Moyseos, iii. 5, where the two tribes say to the ten: "justus et sanctus Dominus, quia enim vos peccastis, et nos pariter abducti sumus vobiscum. Cf. also Targ. Jon. on Isa. liii. 5.

far as we can recall the good things which the Mighty One has done unto us, we do recall them; and those things which we do not remember He in His mercy knows. 12. Nevertheless, do this for us thy people: write also to our brethren in Babylon an epistle of doctrine and a scroll of good tidings, that thou mayest confirm them also before thou dost depart from us. 13. For the shepherds of Israel have perished, and the lamps which gave light are extinguished, and the fountains have withheld their stream whence we used to drink. 14. And we are left in the darkness, and amid the briers of the forest, and the thirst of the wilderness." 15. And I answered and said unto them: "Shepherds and lamps and fountains came (to us) from the law: and though we depart, yet the law abideth. 16. If therefore ye have respect to the law, and are intent upon wisdom, a lamp will not be wanting, and a shepherd will not fail, and a fountain will not dry up. 17. Nevertheless, as ye said unto me, I will write also unto your brethren in Babylon, 12. To our brethren in Babylon, i.e. the 2½ tribes. Cf. verse 19; lxxxv.

6. Observe that the writer does not conceive here of Jeremiah being at Babylon. If he had, he would have directed the letter to him. In the Rest of the Words of Baruch, on the other hand, the writer, conceiving Jeremiah to be in Babylon, directs to him the letter intended for the exiles there. This letter (cf. lxxvii. 17, 19; lxxxv. 6) to the 2½ tribes is lost.

Good tidings. Cf. xlvi. 6.

Depart. This refers to an ordinary death (cf. xliii. 2, note; see also xliii. 3, note; lxxviii. 5; lxxxiv. 1).

14. We are left in darkness. xlvi. 2; cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 20.

Briers. The text is מִשְׁרֵי = ὄλη, which is the LXX. rendering of שִׁמְרִי in Isa. x. 17. I have supposed a similar rendering here. Or ὄλη may be a rendering of עֵץ = "trees," and this a corruption of צִי = "thorns." Something is wrong.

15. The law. See xv. 5, note.

16. Shepherd. The text reads לִבְמִינִי = "mind," which Ceriani has rightly emended into לִשְׂמִי = "shepherd."

and I will send by means of men, and I will write in like manner to the nine tribes and a half, and send by means of a bird." 18. And it came to pass on the one and twentieth day in the eighth month that I, Baruch, came and sat down under the oak under the shadow of the branches, and no man was with me, but I was alone. 19. And I wrote these two epistles: one I sent by an eagle to the nine and a half tribes; and the other I sent to those that were at Babylon by means of three men. 20. And I called the eagle, and spake these words unto it: 21. "The Most High hath made thee that thou shouldst be higher than all birds. 22. And now go and tarry not in (any) place, nor enter a nest, nor settle upon any tree, till thou hast passed over the breadth of the many waters of the river Euphrates, and hast gone to the people that dwell there, and cast down to them this epistle. 23. Remember, moreover, that, at the time of the deluge, Noah received from a dove the fruit of the olive, when he sent it forth from the ark. 24. Yea, also the ravens ministered to Elijah, bearing him food, as they had been commanded. 25. Solomon also, in the time

17. A bird. This is an eagle (cf. ver. 20). It is worth observing that whereas an eagle carries this letter to the $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes here, in the Rest of the Words of Baruch vii. it is an eagle that carries Baruch's letter to Jeremiah in Babylon.

18. The oak. See vi. 1, note; cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 1.

21. Cf. Rest of Words of Baruch vii. 3: "Elect above all the birds of heaven."

22. The $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes were carried away to Assyria and placed in Halah, and in Habor, on the river of Gozan (2 Kings xvii. 6). Their abode, according to 4 Ezra xiii. 40, 45, was Arzareth, i.e. ארץ אחרת Deut. xxix. 28; Joseph. Ant. xi. 5, 2.

23. Cf. Gen. viii. 11; Rest of Words of Baruch vii. 10: "Be like the dove which three times brought back word to Noah."

24. Cf. 1 Kings xvii. 6.

of his kingdom, whithersoever he wished to send or seek for anything, commanded a bird (to go thither), and it obeyed him as he commanded it. 26. And now let it not weary thee, and turn not to the right hand nor to the left, but fly and go by a direct way, that thou mayest preserve the command of the Mighty One, according as I said unto thee."

26. Cf. Rest of Words vii. 12.

THE EPISTLE OF BARUCH WHICH HE WROTE TO THE NINE AND A HALF TRIBES

LXXVIII. These are the words of that epistle which Baruch the son of Neriah sent to the nine and a half tribes, which were across the river Euphrates, in which these things were written. 2. Thus saith Baruch the son of Neriah to the brethren carried into captivity: "Mercy and peace." 3. I bear in mind, my brethren, the love of Him who created us, who loved LXXVIII. 1. The nine and a half tribes. In this book the tribes of Israel carried away by the king of Assyria are, except in i. 2, always so designated (cf. lxii. 5; lxxvii. 19). In 4 Ezra xiii. 40 they are called "the ten tribes" only in the Latin Version, but "the nine and a half tribes" in the Syriac and Arabic Versions; in Asc. Isa. iii. 2 and in the Ethiopic Version of 4 Ezra xiii. 40 they are called the "nine tribes."

2. Mercy and peace. 1 Tim. i. 2.

3. It is noteworthy that in the genuine parts of B¹ in chaps. lxxvii.-lxxxvii. Baruch speaks frequently in the first person sing. (see lxxvii. 1, 5, 11, 15, 17-20, 26; lxxviii. 3, of Baruch the scribe'; kP, 'the Epistle of Baruch'; mn, 'the first Epistle of Baruch.'

LXXVIII. 1. אלה האלה 'these are,' c; ואלה 'and these,' abdegghiWP; f, אלה. ואלה 'of that Epistle,' c; wrongly om. by abdegghiWP. חכבב abcgh; defWP, חכבב. אלה 'Euphrates,' abdegghiWP. c om.

2. ואלה abdegghiWP, ואלה g, ואלה. ואלה 'and peace,' abdegghiWP; c. reads ואלה ואלה 'and peace be unto you.'

3. ואלה 'who created us,' abdegghilWP; c wrongly ואלה

בִּי הָיָה כְּחֵץ לִי LXXVIII.
 רָחֵם . הַחַיִּים לְעַבְדֶּךָ
 1 אֱלֹהִים . שְׁלֵמֵךָ אֲנִי
 אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ
 שֶׁנִּתְּנָה בְּיָדְךָ בְּיָדְךָ
 לְעַבְדֶּךָ אֱלֹהִים .
 שְׁלֵמֵךָ אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים
 כְּדָבָרְךָ שֶׁנִּתְּנָה . בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים
 2 אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ . שְׁלֵמֵךָ
 אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ .
 לְעַבְדֶּךָ אֱלֹהִים .
 שְׁלֵמֵךָ .
 3 חֲסִידְךָ אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים
 בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים

For some account of the MSS. abcdefghiklmn see the General Introduction.

TITLE.—I have here given c, though what the title was is uncertain. a reads אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים; so g, but that it om. אֱלֹהִים and b, but that it om. אֱלֹהִים, אֱלֹהִים and אֱלֹהִים. di give אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים; so w, but that it om. אֱלֹהִים and בְּיָדְךָ before אֱלֹהִים, and ef, but that they om. אֱלֹהִים and אֱלֹהִים. l, אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים בְּיָדְךָ אֱלֹהִים 'the first Epistle of Baruch, the son of Neriah'; h, 'the Epistle us from of old, and never hated us, but above all educated us. 4. And truly I know that behold all we the twelve tribes are bound by one chain, inasmuch as we are born from one father. 5. Wherefore I have been the more careful to leave you the words of this epistle before I die, that ye may be comforted regarding the evils which have come upon you, and that ye may be grieved also regarding the evil that has befallen your brethren: and again, also, that ye may justify His judgment which He has decreed against you that ye should be carried away captive—for what ye have suffered is disproportioned to what ye have done—in order that, at the last times, ye may be found

4, 5; lxxx. 7; lxxxi. 2, 4; lxxxii. 1; lxxxiv. 1, 6, 7; lxxxvi. 3; lxxxvii.) In the interpolated portions this is not so.

4. Twelve tribes. lxxvii. 2; lxxxiv. 3.

5. Before I die. See xiii. 3, note.

Justify. See xxi. 9, note. Cf. Ps. li. 4; Dan. ix. 14; Baruch ii. 9.

For what ye . . . done is parenthetical. Cf. lxxix. 2.

That in the last times, etc. These words refer to the return of the 9½ tribes (see note on ver. 7).

4. |ת| 'that behold,' abdefghiWP; c wrongly בך 'that not.'
בג; adefhiWP, אבג.

5. |ז| abdefghiWP; c trs. defiWP om. אבג
abdefghilWP; c, אבג. אבג 'evil that has befallen,' abdefghiWP; c, אבג 'evils that have befallen.'
אבג abdefghilWP; c, אבג. אבג, a by a clerical error gives אבג. אבג, *acd*h; befgi, אבג. אבג c; abdefghiWP, אבג. אבג ch; b, אבג.

worthy of your fathers. 6. Therefore if ye consider those things which ye have now suffered for your good, that ye may not finally be condemned and tormented, then ye will receive eternal hope; if above all ye destroy from your heart vain error, on account of which ye departed hence. 7. For if ye so do these things, He will continually remember you, He who always promised on our behalf to those who were more excellent than we, that He will never forget or forsake us, but with much mercy will gather together again those who were dispersed.

6. Departed hence. I.e. from Palestine.

7. Those who were more excellent. The patriarchs.

With much mercy. In 4 Ezra xiv. 34, 35 the righteous are to obtain mercy after death. Here God's mercy will be shown to Israel by causing them to return from their captivity.

Gather together . . . those who were dispersed. Cf. lxxvii. 6; lxxxiv. 2, 8, 10. The promise that God would turn again the captivity of Israel is frequently made in the O. T. (cf. Deut. xxx. 3; Amos ix. 11-15; Isa. xi. 12; Jer. xxiii. 3; xxix. 14; xxxi. 10; xxxii. 37; Ezek. xxxvii. 21-28; Zeph. iii. 19, 20; also in Bar. iv. 36, 37; v. 5-7; Pss. Sol. xi.; 2 Macc. ii. 18). The prediction of the return of the exiles is found also in Tob. xiii. 13; Eth. En. lvii. 1, 2; xc. 33; Or. Sibyl. ii. 170-173; 4 Ezra xiii. 12, 39-47. Either as in the preceding passages God was to procure their return directly; or else indirectly (a) through the agency of the nations who should carry back to Jerusalem the dispersed as offerings (cf. Isa. xlix. 22; lx. 4, 9; lxvi. 20; Pss. Sol. xvii. 34); (b) by means of the Messiah (cf. Pss. Sol. xvii. 28, 30, 50; Targ. Jon. on Jer. xxxiii. 13); (c) by means of Elijah (cf. Ecclus. xlviii. 10). These different methods are not mutually exclusive. In the presence of this strongly attested hope of the restoration of the dispersed it is strange to find it positively denied by R. Akiba (Sanh. x. 3): "The ten tribes will nevermore return; for it is said of them (Deut. xxix. 28): 'He will cast them into another land, as this day.' Hence as this day passes away and does not return, so shall they pass away and not return. So R. Akiba."

The return of the exiles in B¹ accords well with the rebuilding of Jerusalem which is elsewhere expected in B¹. See i. 4; vi. 9, notes.

6 בַּחֲסֵדָה . עֲלֵה־נָּא

אֶל־מִצְבֵּי־שֹׁמֵר

וְלִהְיוֹתָהּ מִשְׁמֶרֶת .

בְּנֵי־מִצְבֵּי־לֵל

וְעַתָּה . שִׁנְיָה

לְמִצְבֵּי־הַבָּיִת וְלִדְכָּחֶרֶץ .

אֲנִי־בְּמִצְבֵּי־לֵל מִשְׁמֶרֶת

עַל־כִּבְדֵּי־לֵל

וְעַתָּה . שִׁנְיָה

7 אֶל־הַבָּיִת עַל־הַבָּיִת .

וְעַתָּה לְכָבֵד־נָּא

אֶת־מִצְבֵּי־נָּא

כֹּה־נָּא . שִׁנְיָה

אֶת־מִצְבֵּי־נָּא

וְעַתָּה עַל־נָּא .

וְעַתָּה

בְּנֵי־מִצְבֵּי־נָּא

וְעַתָּה

6. עֲלֵה־נָּא; abdefgilWP, ah give conflate reading, ah give

7. עַתָּה, c adds ah. 'will not forget or forsake us,' abdefghimWP; c, 'will not forget or forsake our seed.' 'those,' abdefghWP; c, 'all those.'

LXXIX. Now, my brethren, learn first what befell Zion: how that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against us. 2. For we have sinned against Him who made us, and we have not kept the commandments which He commanded us, yet He hath not chastened us as we deserved. 3. For what befell you we also suffered in a pre-eminent degree, for it befell us also.

LXXX. And now, my brethren, I make known unto you that when the enemy had surrounded the city, the angels of the Most High were sent, and they overthrew the fortifications of the strong wall, and they LXXIX. 1. What befell Zion.

See lxxvii. 8, note.

2. We have sinned, etc. Cf. Baruch i. 17, 18.

Chastened. Cf. i. 5; xiii. 10.

As we deserved. Cf. lxxviii. 5.

LXXX. This chapter closely resembles and implies vi.-viii., but lxvii. proceeds upon different presuppositions. See lxvii. 6, note.

1. Fortifications of the strong wall.
Cf. vii. 1.

*bdefghi*_{WP}. *bdefghi*_{WP} read  'but likewise that which has befallen you has overtaken us: in a pre-eminent degree have we suffered also'; so also a, but that it inserts וְ before , a conflate reading as in lxxviii. 6: all readings seem corrupt.  ce; bh, ; fi, .  abg; cdh, ; fi, ; WP,  'our calamity.'

LXXX. 1.  'I make known unto you that,' *abdefghi*_{WP}; c wrongly om.  abcdfghilm; ewp om. o 'and.'  'fortifications,' *abdefghilm*_{WP}; c,

LXXIX. 1 לַמֶּלֶךְ בְּלִדְוֹזֹ . — . מַחֲמֵל

אֲנִיב תִּשְׁמַחֲמֵל מִכֶּמֶל

כֶּמֶסֶר עַלְמֵל מִכֶּמֶסֶר

כִּי־מֵמֶל . בְּמִלְכֵל דִּלְמֵל

בַּחֲבִיבִיז מִלְכֵל בְּחֵלְלֵל .

2 בְּמִלְמֵל מִכֶּמֶסֶר לִכְסֵל בְּחֵלְלֵל .

וְלִכְסֵל מִחֵלְלֵל בְּחֵלְלֵל

בְּחֵלְלֵל אֵל אֵל לֵל

זֵל אִמֵּל בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל .

3 עִכְסֵל מִכֶּמֶסֶר מִכֶּמֶסֶר

בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל .

.. אֵל לֵל מִכֶּמֶסֶר מִכֶּמֶסֶר

LXXX. 1 מִכֶּמֶסֶר אֲנִיב מִכֶּמֶסֶר אֵל לֵל מִכֶּמֶסֶר

בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל .

אֵל לֵל מִחֵלְלֵל

בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל

LXXIX. 1. מִכֶּמֶסֶר abdefghiWP; c, מִכֶּמֶסֶר. abogh; defiWP, מִכֶּמֶסֶר. efhi; bg, בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל.

2. מִכֶּמֶסֶר bdfghiWP; ac, מִכֶּמֶסֶר. b(ad?)efghiWP; c, בְּחֵלְלֵל מִחֵלְלֵל. 'commandments,' chWP; abdefgil, מִכֶּמֶסֶר 'commandment.'

2—3. מִכֶּמֶסֶר לֵל 'yet He hath not chastened . . . degree'; so c, save that I have om. ? before מִכֶּמֶסֶר, with also have they bound and led away to Babylon, and have caused them to dwell there. 5. But we have been left here, being very few. 6. This is the tribulation about which I wrote to you. 7. For assuredly I know that the habitation of Zion gave you consolation: so far as ye knew that it was prospered (your consolation) was greater than the tribulation which ye endured in having departed from it.

LXXXI. But regarding consolation, hear ye the word. 2. For I was mourning regarding Zion, and I prayed for mercy from the Most High, and I said:

though, according to x. 5, he went with the captivity to Babylon. See x. 2, note.

5. From Jer. xlii. 2, where the words are spoken of the remnant in Jerusalem (cf. Deut. iv. 27; Baruch ii. 13). The two latter passages deal with the remnant among the Gentiles.

LXXXI. As in lxxx. 7 the 9½ tribes had consolation in the fact that Jerusalem prospered and were proportionately grieved on its overthrow, Baruch has now a word of consolation for them touching Zion (lxxxi. 1); for, when in his grief over it (lxxxi. 2), he asked God how long should this desolation last (lxxxi. 3), God, to give him consolation, vouchsafed a revelation as to the mysteries of the times and removed his anguish (lxxxi. 4).

1. Regarding consolation. This word refers to the restoration of Zion. Cf. xliv. 7; lxxxi. 4; lxxxii. 1.

bdefghilwfp; ac, חֲבָתוֹת 'habitations.' מְנַחֵם (your consolation) was greater than,' abcdegghi; fwp, מְנַחֵם, which requires the following rendering: 'the more assured ye were that it prospered, the greater was the tribulation.'

LXXXI. 1. מְנַחֵם abcefgghi; dwp, מְנַחֵם.

2. מְנַחֵם c; abdefghilwfp, מְנַחֵם.

3. "How long will these things endure for us? and will these evils come upon us always?" 4. And the Mighty One did according to the multitude of His mercies, and the Most High according to the greatness of His compassion, and He revealed unto me the word, that I might receive consolation, and He showed me visions that I should not again endure anguish, and He made known to me the mystery of the times, and the advent of the hours He showed me.

LXXXII. Therefore, my brethren, I have written to you, that ye may comfort yourselves regarding the multitude of your tribulations. 2. For know ye that our Maker will assuredly avenge us on all our enemies, according to all that they have done to us, also that

4. The multitude . . . compassion. Cf. Dan. ix. 18; Bar. ii. 27; cf. lxxvi. 6.

Consolation. See verse 1.

Mystery of the times. Cf. lxxxv. 8.

LXXXII. I am doubtful as to whether lxxxii. 2-9 belongs to B¹ or B². I am inclined to believe the latter. But the evidence is not decisive either way.

4. סבב 'and . . . did,' c; abdefghiwp, דבב 'who did.' דבב 'of His mercies,' abegh; defiwp, דבב 'of mercies.' דבב abgh; cdefilwp, דבב. דבב 'mystery,' abdefgiwp; ch, דבב 'mysteries.'

LXXXII. 1. דבב 'of your tribulations,' abgh; defiwp, דבב 'of your tribulation'; c, דבב 'of tribulations.'

2. דבב abdfghwp; c, דבב. דבב c; abefghlmwp, דבב; di om. point. דבב 'us,' abdefghilmwp; c om. דבב; c; abdefghiwp, דבב. דבב 'to us'; c adds דבב 'and in us,' against abdefghiwp. דבב abdefghiwp; c, o. דבב

3 סכממחא ןאגחז . ודחמחא

לאמחא סכמ סתמח

ה . סכמחחא אהמ דחמ

4 סתמחא סכמ . סכמח

סמחחא אמר סחחא

ותמחחא סמ . סכמחחא

אמר דחחא בסמח

סחחא סמ סמחחא

דחחא . סמחחא

סחחא אמר דחחא

דחחא . סחחא

זחחא דחחא . סחחא

LXXXII. 1 . . דחחא סמחחא . סחחא

סחחא סחחא סחחא

דחחא סחחא סחחא

2 סחחא דחחא . סחחא

דחחא דחחא דחחא

דחחא דחחא

דחחא דחחא . אמר דחחא

דחחא דחחא . אה בסמחחא

3. 'how long ... these things?' דחחא לאמחא סכמ

abdefghilmwpr; c, דחחא לאמחא (will) these things

... to the end?' דחחא 'upon us,' acdefghiwr; bg, סכמ 'upon me.'

the consummation which the Most High will make is very nigh, and His mercy that is coming, and the consummation of His judgment, is by no means far off. 3. For lo! we see now the multitude of the prosperity of the Gentiles, though they act impiously, but they will be like a vapour. 4. And we behold the multitude of their power, though they do wickedly, but they will be made like unto a drop. 5. And we see the firmness of their might, though they resist the Mighty One every hour, but they will be accounted as spittle. 6. And we consider the glory of their greatness, though they do not keep the statutes of the Most High, but as smoke will they pass away. 7. And we meditate

3. Like a vapour. 4 Ezra vii. certainly, and in 4 Ezra vi. 56, the text agrees with the LXX.; for in 61.

4. Like unto a drop. Isa. xl. 15; Isa. xl. 15 it has ὡς σίελος λογισθήσονται against the Hebrew לִי־ 4 Ezra vi. 56.

5. Accounted as spittle. Here פִּתְיוֹ.

bg, עַל מַלְאָכָיו. לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ 'now,' abdfghiwp; c om. here as it has already inserted לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ in place of לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ; e om. לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ עַל מַלְאָכָיו. לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ עַל מַלְאָכָיו; c; abdfghwp, עַל מַלְאָכָיו; efi, עַל מַלְאָכָיו.

4. עַל מַלְאָכָיו cdefghimwp; abh, עַל מַלְאָכָיו. לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ 'unto a drop,' abdefghilwp; c wrongly לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ 'unto pollution.'

5. עַל מַלְאָכָיו cdefghwp; ab, עַל מַלְאָכָיו. עַל מַלְאָכָיו 'firmness,' abdefghiwp; c wrongly עַל מַלְאָכָיו 'truth.' לְהַשְׁכִּיחַ 'hour,' abdefghiwp; c wrongly עַל מַלְאָכָיו 'year.'

6. עַל מַלְאָכָיו cdefghiwp; ab, עַל מַלְאָכָיו. עַל מַלְאָכָיו 'commands,' abdefghwp; c, עַל מַלְאָכָיו 'statutes.'

- מִתְּכֵּן הֵן מִלְּפָנֶיךָ
 מִתְּכֵּן מִלְּפָנֶיךָ
 וְהָיָה לְךָ . וְהָיָה
 זֶה הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה .
 3 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה .
 4 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה .
 5 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה .
 6 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה
 וְהָיָה לְךָ הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה הַזֶּה .

*aegh*_{WP}; bdefi, וְהָיָה. *abcdefghi*_{WP}; bg, וְהָיָה.
c; *abdefhil*_{WP}, מִלְּפָנֶיךָ.

3. וְהָיָה 'lo!' *abcdefghi*_{WP}; c, הַמִּשְׁפָּחָה 'now.' *acdfh*_{WP}; on the beauty of their gracefulness, though they have to do with pollutions, but as grass that withers will they fade away. 8. And we consider the strength of their cruelty, though they remember not the end (thereof), but as a wave that passes will they be broken. 9. And we remark the boastfulness of their might, though they deny the beneficence of God, who gave (it) to them, but they will pass away as a passing cloud.

LXXXIII. =
B².

[LXXXIII. For the Most High will assuredly hasten His times, and He will assuredly bring on His hours. 2. And He will assuredly judge those who are in His

7. As grass, etc. Isa. xl. 6, 7.

LXXXIII. This chapter seems to belong to B². Thus the times will be cut short (lxxxiii. 1, 6), and everything brought into judgment (lxxxiii. 2, 3, 7); let not, therefore, earthly interests engage them (lxxxiii. 4), but let them fix their thoughts on the promised consummation (lxxxiii. 4, 5), and devote themselves to their faith of aforetime, lest to their captivity in this world there should be added torment in the next (lxxxiii. 8); for the world 'passeth away with its strength and its weakness, its virtues, and its lusts (lxxxiii. 9-23).

The connection between lxxxiii. and xx. is close. Cf. lxxxiii. 1, 6; xx. 1; lxxxiii. 2; xx. 2; lxxxiii. 7; xx. 4. This chapter seems to have formed originally part of Baruch's address to the people (xxxi. 3-xxxii. 6; xliv. 8-15), and to have followed immediately on xliv. 8-15.

1. This and verse 6 are related to xx. 1. Cf. liv. 1; Ep. Barn. iv. 3.

8.  c; abdefghiwp, .
 cdefhi; abg, ; wp give plural.

9.  cdfghi; ab, ; ewp,
.  'the boastfulness,' c; abdefghiwp,
 'the beauty.'  'of God—Him,' c; abdefghiwp,
 'of Him.'

LXXXIII. 2.  'will assuredly judge,' acdefghiwp;

7 וְזִנְיָהּ דִּלְהִי

בְּמִלְחָמָהּ . בְּתִיבָהּ

כְּלִיבָהּ עַל בְּחִיבָהּ . אֵל

אִמְרָהּ בְּחִיבָהּ

8 בְּחִיבָהּ . עַל מִלְחָמָהּ

דִּלְהִי בְּחִיבָהּ .

בְּתִיבָהּ בְּחִיבָהּ

עַל בְּחִיבָהּ . אֵל אִמְרָהּ

בְּחִיבָהּ בְּחִיבָהּ .

9 עַל מִלְחָמָהּ דִּלְהִי

בְּחִיבָהּ . בְּתִיבָהּ בְּחִיבָהּ

כְּלִיבָהּ עַל בְּחִיבָהּ

בְּחִיבָהּ . אֵל אִמְרָהּ

.. בְּחִיבָהּ בְּחִיבָהּ .

LXXXIII. 1 עַל מִלְחָמָהּ

בְּחִיבָהּ . עַל מִלְחָמָהּ

2 עַל מִלְחָמָהּ . עַל מִלְחָמָהּ

בְּחִיבָהּ . עַל מִלְחָמָהּ

7. בְּמִלְחָמָהּ abdefgiwp; bhl, בְּחִיבָהּ. בְּחִיבָהּ 'of their gracefulness,' c; abdefghilwp, בְּחִיבָהּ 'of their life.' כְּלִיבָהּ 'with pollutions,' c; abdefghilwp, כְּלִיבָהּ 'with pollution.'

3. וְהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 3
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 4
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 5
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 6
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .
 בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים .

bg, וְהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 'our Lord will judge.' 'hidden,' abdefghiwp; c, וְהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 'which were sins.'

3. וְהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 'which in the secret chambers of all,' c; abfghl, וְהַחֲסִים בְּהַחֲסִים 'which in the secret chamber

- 7 האכלתם ב האכלתם
תתן ל האכלתם ב
האכלתם ב האכלתם
8 האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
9 האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
10 האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם
11 האכלתם ב האכלתם
האכלתם ב האכלתם

7. האכלתם 'the consummation,' c; e, האכלתם;
abdfghikwp, האכלתם 'in the consummation.'

8. האכלתם 'worlds,' abdfghikwp; c, האכלתם 'world.'

and all force of this time is turning into misery. 12. And every energy of youth is turning into old age and consummation, and every beauty of gracefulness of this time is turning faded and hateful. 13. And every proud dominion of the present is turning into humiliation and shame. 14. And every praise of the glory of this time is turning into the shame of silence, and every splendour and insolence of this time is turning into voiceless ruin. 15. And every delight and joy of this time is turning to worms and corruption. 16. And every clamour of the pride of this time is turning into dust and stillness. 17. And every possession of riches of this time is being turned into Sheol alone.

12. Every beauty, etc. Cf. xxi. 13. Cf. xlviii. 35.
14; xlviii. 35.

so also i, but defectively; c reads corruptly לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'swelling of pride': we must emend לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ into לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ.

14. ewp om. לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ ... לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ through hmt.

15. לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'delight and joy,' bdefghiwp; ack, לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'delights and joys.' לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'to worms,' abdefghikwp; c, לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'to rejection.' For לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ f reads לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ.

16. לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'of the pride of this time,' abdefghikwp; c, לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'of the proud.' לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'to dust and stillness,' abdefghikmwp; c, לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'to the still dust.'

17. לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'of riches,' cdefiwp; abghk, לְהִנָּחֵם וְלִשְׁמֹחַ 'and riches.'

ḥmt ḥmt . ḥmt ḥmt

. ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt . ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 12

. ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 13

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 14

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

. ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 15

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 16

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 17

ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt

ḥmt; c, ḥmt ḥmt 'to miseries.' k om. . . . ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt through hmt.

12. ḥmt ḥmt c; abfghikw, ḥmt ḥmt.

13. ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt ḥmt 'proud dominion,' abdefghkw;

18. And all the rapine of passion of this time is turning into involuntary death, and every passion of the lusts of this time is turning into a judgment of torment. 19. And every artifice and craftiness of this time is turning into a proof of the truth. 20. And every sweetness of unguents of this time is turning into judgment and condemnation. 21. And every love of lying is turning to shame through truth. 22. Since therefore all these things are done now, does any one think that they will not be avenged? 23. But the consummation of all things will come to the truth.]

LXXXIV = B¹. LXXXIV. Behold! I have therefore made known unto you (these things) whilst I live: for I said that

19. |אבגז c; abdefghiklwp, |זאבגז. |זאבסו 'and craftiness,' abdefghiklnwp; c, |זאבס; 'of craftiness.' f om. |אבס |אס; |אבס . . . |זאבס through hmt.

20. |זאבס c; h, |אבס.

21. |אבס; 'of lying,' abdefghikwp; c wrongly om. |אבס c; abdefghikwp, |אבס. |אבס 'through truth,' abdefghikwp; c, |אבס 'in silence.'

22. |אבס |אבס c; abhk trs.; di, |אבס |אבס; efglwp, |אבס. For |אבס efilw read |אבס. |אבס 'does anyone think?' abdefghiklwp; c, |אבס; |אבס 'dost thou think?'

23. |אבס; 'of all,' abdefghik; wp, |אבס 'all.'

LXXXIV. 1. |אבס abdefghikwp; c om. |אבס |אבס;

ye should above all things learn the commandments of the Mighty One, wherein I shall instruct you: and I will set before you some of the commandments of His judgment before I die. 2. Remember that formerly Moses assuredly called heaven and earth to witness against you, and said: "if ye transgress the law ye shall be dispersed, but if ye keep it ye shall be kept." 3. And other things also he used to say unto you when ye the twelve tribes were together in the desert. 4. And after his death ye cast them away from you: on this account there came LXXXIV. 1. Before I die. See lxxviii. 5.

The commandments of the Mighty One (cf. ver. 7; xliv. 3).

2. See xix. 2, 3, note. In this verse there are several traces of the Hebrew original. First the Syr. for "assuredly called . . . to witness" = διαμαρτυρούμενος διεμαρτύρατο = הער הער. Next we have the play on the two senses of שמר: "if ye keep it, ye shall be kept" = אם השמרו השמרו. Finally, there seems to be a paronomasia intended in "if ye transgress the law, ye shall be dispersed" = אם תסורו מתורה תסורו.

3. Twelve tribes. Cf. lxxviii. 4; James i. 1.

בִּשְׁמִי, e save in reading בִּשְׁמִי, f save in reading בִּשְׁמִי, and k save in reading בִּשְׁמִי (for בִּשְׁמִי). ce; dfgiwp, בִּשְׁמִי; k, בִּשְׁמִי.

2. אֲבַעֲפִיחִי b; אֲבַעֲפִיחִי. abdefghiwp; c om. אֲבַעֲפִיחִי 'ye shall be kept,' abdefghiwp; c, אֲבַעֲפִיחִי 'ye shall be planted.'

3. אֲבַעֲפִיחִי abdefghiwp; c, אֲבַעֲפִיחִי. ach; bdefgiwp, אֲבַעֲפִיחִי. c; abdefghiwp, אֲבַעֲפִיחִי.

4. אֲבַעֲפִיחִי 'therefore,' abdefghiwp; ch, אֲבַעֲפִיחִי 'and

וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 הַחֲקִיב מִלְּפָנֵי
 וְיִלְמְדוּ . וְיִלְמְדוּ
 מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 2 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 הַחֲקִיב מִלְּפָנֵי
 הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 3 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 הַחֲקִיב מִלְּפָנֵי
 הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .
 4 וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 הַחֲקִיב מִלְּפָנֵי
 הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל .

'that ye should above all things learn the commandments of the Mighty One wherein I shall instruct you'; so c, save that I have with Ceriani emended מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד into מִלְּפָנֵי ; bdghilwr read וְיִלְמְדוּ מִלְּפָנֵי הַיָּחִיד הַגָּדוֹל
 'that ye should learn the things that are excellent; for the Mighty One hath commanded me to instruct you'; a agrees with bdghiwr save in reading upon you what had been predicted. 5. And now Moses used to tell you before they befell you, and lo! they have befallen you: for you have forsaken the law. 6. Lo! I also say unto you after ye have suffered, that if ye obey those things which have been said unto you, ye will receive from the Mighty One whatever has been laid up and reserved for you. 7. Moreover, let this epistle be for a testimony between me and you, that ye may remember the commandments of the Mighty One, and that also there may be to me a defence in the presence of Him who sent me. 8. And remember ye the law and Zion, and the holy

4. Cf. xix. 3.

6. The $9\frac{1}{2}$ tribes must endure chastisement before they could attain unto the promised happiness. This chastisement was for their well-being (lxxviii. 6); it was less than they deserved (lxxix. 2); and its aim was to make them worthy of their fathers in the last days (lxxviii. 5, see note).

8. They were to remember Zion and the Holy Land; for they were one day to return thither (cf. ver. 10 and lxxviii. 7, note).

5. אָזְכִּיר c; *abdefghi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר.

6. אֶזְכֶּר ac; *bdefghi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר. אֶזְכֶּר; d, אֶזְכֶּר; *efi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר. אֶזְכֶּר, def add אֶזְכֶּר.

7. אֶזְכֶּר c; *abdefghi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר. אֶזְכֶּר *abdefghi*_{WP}; c, אֶזְכֶּר. אֶזְכֶּר c; *abdefghi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר. אֶזְכֶּר, *abdefghi*_{WP}, אֶזְכֶּר.

8. אֶזְכֶּר אֶזְכֶּר 'the law and Zion,' *abefghil*_{WP}; land and your brethren, and the covenant of your fathers, and forget not the festivals and the sabbaths. 9. And deliver ye this epistle and the traditions of the law to your sons after you, as also your fathers delivered (them) to you. 10. And at all times make request perseveringly and pray diligently with your whole heart that the Mighty One may be reconciled to you, and that He may not reckon the multitude of your sins, but remember the rectitude of your fathers. 11. For if He judge us not according to the multitude of His mercies, woe unto all us who are born.

LXXXV.=B³.

[LXXXV. Know ye, moreover, that in former

9. The traditions of the law, i.e. the unwritten law.

dispersion, should they become faithful.

10. That the Mighty One may be reconciled to you. Cf. 4 Ezra x. 24: "ut tibi repropitiatur Fortis." Here this reconciliation is to lead up to their return to Palestine; for in lxxviii. 7 it is declared that He that promised their fathers that He would not fail their posterity, would gather them together from their

The rectitude of your fathers. On the merit of the fathers see xiv. 7, note.

11. His mercies. See lxxv. 2, note.

Woe unto all, etc. See x. 6, note.

LXXXV. This chapter is certainly an interpolation. I shall designate it B³ It belongs neither to B¹ nor traditions,' c; abcdefghiWP, סמלעסעסעס 'the tradition.' bcdefghiWP; a, לכנתעס. c; abdefghiWP, לכנתעס.

10. לכנתעס 'perseveringly,' abdegghiWP; c om. לכנתעס 'of your sins,' abdefghiWP; c, לכנתעס 'of your sinners.' abcgh; defiWP, לכנתעס.

11. לכנתעס abdefghilmWP; c, לכנתעס. cdefghilmWP; ab, לכנתעס.

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

10 וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

11 וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

LXXXV. 1 . . . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ

d, וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ ; c trs. wrongly. וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ abdefghiwp ;

c, וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ 'of your fathers,' abdefghiwp ;

e, וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ 'and your fathers.' וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ beg ; adefghiwp, וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ.

9. וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ bedefghiwp ; a, וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ . וְלִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ 'the times and in the generations of old those our fathers had helpers, righteous men and holy prophets. 2. Nay more, we were in our own land, and they helped us when we sinned, and they prayed for us to Him who made us, because they trusted in their works, and the Mighty One heard their prayer and was gracious unto us. 3. But now the righteous have been gathered and the prophets have fallen asleep, and we also have gone forth from the land, and Zion has been taken

B². In B¹ there is a strong national hope which embraces a restored Jerusalem and the return of the dispersion. This hope is here implicitly denied. Although B³ and B² differ in important respects, they agree in despairing of any national restoration. They regard this world as lost, and look only for spiritual blessedness in the world of incorruption (lxxxv. 4, 5). On the other hand, there is a deeper strain of individualism in B³ than in B²; the writer's interest centres mainly in the destiny of the individual; let each see that he is ready when the end comes (lxxxv. 11), and that end is at hand for all (lxxxv. 10). Again, whereas B² seems to have been written in Jerusalem, B³ was written in Babylon or some other land of the Dispersion. Thus in lxxxv. 3 the writer says: "We also have gone forth from our own land, and Zion has been taken from us"; and in lxxxv. 2: "Nay more, we were in our own land, and they (the righteous) helped us when we sinned." Again, whereas according to B² Jeremiah was with the exiles in Babylon (see x. 2, note), it is here definitely stated that the righteous and the prophets are dead and the exiles have none to intercede for them (lxxxv. 2).

B³ and S (x. 6-xii. 4) are the most pessimistic parts of this book.

1. The generation of Jeremiah seems to be in the far past.

2. This verse conflicts with lxxvii. 5 and lxxx. 5. The writer implies that he is one of the exiles in Babylon or elsewhere. This is still more evident from the next verse.

They helped us when we sinned, and they prayed for us, etc. This thought reappears in the Rest of the Words of Baruch ii. 3: "For when the people transgressed, Jeremiah . . . prayed on behalf of the people until the transgressions of the people were forgiven them."

Trusted in their works. See xiv. 7, note; lxiii. 3. Observe that whereas in lxxxiv. 10 the merits of the patriarchs are regarded as a stay of Israel, no such belief appears here. According to this verse and the next it is implied that only the intercessions of the living righteous avail, and now there are none such. Yet it is shown that there were many such in ii. Hence this seems a later production.

3. We also have gone forth, etc. See verse 2.

מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ בְּעֵל
 מִבְּמִלְּאָה מִבְּמִלְּאָה
 לְבָרְכָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ אֲבִימֶלֶךְ .
 2 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . אֲבִי אֵל
 בִּשְׁמֵי שָׁמַיִם בְּאֵזֶל . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 3 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ מִבְּקֵלָהּ . מִבְּקֵלָהּ

LXXXV. 1. מִבְּקֵלָהּ c; abdefghiwp, מִבְּקֵלָהּ .
 . מִבְּקֵלָהּ cg; abdefghiwp insert the punctuation between these words; b has no punctuation. מִבְּקֵלָהּ 'holy prophets,' abdefghiwp; c, מִבְּקֵלָהּ 'prophets and holy (men).'

2. אֲבִי אֵל 'nay, more,' abdefghiwp; c, אֲבִי 'moreover.'
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ 'their prayer,' abdefghiwp; c, מִבְּקֵלָהּ 'them.'
 מִבְּקֵלָהּ c; abdefghiwp om. For מִבְּקֵלָהּ h reads מִבְּקֵלָהּ.

3. אֲבִי 'and also,' abdefghiwp; c om. 'and.' אֲבִי 'our land,' c; abdefghiwp, אֲבִי 'the land.' אֲבִי, a trs.

נחמ . וְנִשְׁמַח אֱלֹהֵינוּ עָלֵינוּ . וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד שֶׁמֶלֶךְ אֱלֹהֵינוּ
 4 וְנִשְׁמַח . אֱלֹהֵינוּ
 נִשְׁמַח וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 נִשְׁמַח וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 5 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 6 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 7 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד
 וְנִשְׁמַח לֵב עַד

4. acdefghiwp; b, נחמ . נחמ . c ; abdefghiwp om. 'and much better things than we lost,' abdefghiwp; c omitting by hmt.

5. abfdghwp; c, וְנִשְׁמַח ; e om. acdef;
bgh, וְנִשְׁמַח ; wp, וְנִשְׁמַח . c ; abdefghiwp, וְנִשְׁמַח .
c ; abdefghiwp, וְנִשְׁמַח .

our liberty. 8. Again, moreover, the Most High also is long-suffering towards us here, and He hath shown to us that which is to be, and hath not concealed from us what will befall in the end. 9. Before therefore judgment exact its own, and truth that which is its due, let us prepare our soul that we may enter into possession of, and not be taken possession of, and that we may hope and not be put to shame, and that we may rest with our fathers and not be tormented with our enemies. 10. For the youth of the world is past, and the strength of the creation is already exhausted, and the advent of the times is very short, yea, they have

8. Hath shown to us . . . and hath not concealed from us. In B¹ Baruch does not use the plural in this connection (cf. lxxxi. 4; see lxxviii. 3, note).

9. Judgment . . . its due. Cf. v. 2; xlvi. 27.

Let us prepare our soul. xxxii. 1, note.

That we may enter into possession of, and not be taken possession of = נַחֲמָהּ סוֹ נַחֲמָהּ. These words are obscure, probably corrupt.

That we may rest with our fathers. Cf. xi. 4; also lxxxv. 11.

Tormented. Cf. lxxxiii. 8.

10. The youth of the world is past. Cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 10: "saeculum perdidit juventutem suam et tempora appropinquant senescere;" also xiv. 16; v. 50-56.

parallel expressions in v. 2 and xlvi. 27; bdefghilwp are wrong here, as they give נִזְכָּר 'the Judge.' Next, for נַחֲמָהּ 'of anything,' of ac, I follow bdefghiwp in reading נַחֲמָהּ, for נִזְכָּר is clearly the subject and not the object of the verb. The text of bdefgiwp = 'before therefore the Judge exact His own and truth that which is its due.' נַחֲמָהּ סוֹ נַחֲמָהּ; abdefghiwp, נַחֲמָהּ סוֹ נַחֲמָהּ; b¹fh, נַחֲמָהּ סוֹ נַחֲמָהּ. אבדה abcdefgh; wp, אבדה; h, אבדה.

10. נִזְכָּר 'and the advent,' abcdefghil; wp, passed by; and the pitcher is near to the cistern, and the ship to the port, and the course of the journey to the city, and life to consummation. 11. And again prepare your souls, so that when ye sail and ascend from the ship ye may have rest and not be condemned when ye depart. 12. For lo! when the Most High will bring to pass all these things, there will not there be again an opportunity for returning, nor a limit to the times, nor adjournment to the hours, nor change of ways, nor place for prayer, nor sending of petitions, nor receiving of knowledge, nor giving of love, nor place

12. An opportunity for returning. The Syr. here = "place" or "opportunity for repentance." But as this idea is found again in this verse, and obviously in its right context, it cannot be right here. The difficulty can be resolved as follows:—In early post-classical Hebrew השבה meant both "return" and "repentance." The Greek translator followed the latter meaning when he ought to have followed the former.

Place of repentance. Cf. 4 Ezra ix. 12: "cum adhuc esset eis apertus poenitentiae locus, non intellexerunt." This is the universal teaching in the Books of Enoch and 4 Ezra.

11. אַבְעֵגְחִי־וֹפְּ; d, אַבְעֵגְחִי. עֵגְ; abdegghiwp, וֹפְּ. אַבְעֵגְחִי 'be condemned,' abcgh; efwp, אַבְעֵגְחִי may have rest'; di, אַבְעֵגְחִי.

12. כֵּן 'when,' abdefghiwp; c om. כֵּן אֲנִי c; abdefghiwp, אֲנִי אֲנִי. אֲנִי אֲנִי abcefgghiwp; d, אֲנִי אֲנִי. אֲנִי אֲנִי 'of ways,' bgwp; dei, אֲנִי אֲנִי 'of way'; acfl, אֲנִי אֲנִי; h, אֲנִי אֲנִי. אֲנִי אֲנִי bcdefghiwp; a, אֲנִי אֲנִי. אֲנִי אֲנִי 'giving of love,' cd; abcefgghiwp, אֲנִי אֲנִי 'giving of love,' or 'pardoner of guilt,' accord-ῥοτῆς 'the space.' ἄτ c; abdefhiwP om. σῆς c; abdefghiwp, ἰς.

11
 12

of repentance, nor supplication for offences, nor intercession of the fathers, nor prayer of the prophets, nor help of the righteous. 13. There there is the sentence of corruption, the way of fire, and the path which bringeth to Gehenna. 14. On this account there is one law by one, one age and an end for all who are in it. 15. Then He will preserve those to whom He finds He may be gracious, and at the same time destroy those who are polluted with sins.]

LXXXVI. When therefore ye receive this my epistle, read it in your congregations with care. 2.

Intercession of the fathers. Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 102-115; Slav. En. liii. 1.

13. Way of fire. Cf. xlv. 15, note.

In the Ass. Moyseos, iii. 12, Moses is called the mediator of the law.

14. One law by one. Moses seems to be here referred to. The remark seems directed against the Christians (cf. xlviii. 24). This verse seems either to be interpolated or in its wrong place.

ܐܒܕܐܢܐ, 'of corruption,' abdefghiWP; c, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'to corruption.'
 ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'the way,' abdefghiWP; c, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'of the way.' ܐܒܕܐܢܐ
 'to gehenna,' abefghi; so dWP, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ; c, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'to coals.'

14. ܐܒܕܐܢܐ ܐܒܕܐܢܐ cg; defhWP, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ ܐܒܕܐܢܐ . ܐܒܕܐܢܐ

15. ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'then,' begh; adefilWP, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'and then.'
 ܐܒܕܐܢܐ acdefiWP; bgh, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'those,' c; adefghiWP, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ 'and those.' ܐܒܕܐܢܐ abdefghWP; c, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ.
 ܐܒܕܐܢܐ c; abdefghiWP trs.

LXXXVI. 1. ܐܒܕܐܢܐ ܐܒܕܐܢܐ c; abdefghiWP trs. ܐܒܕܐܢܐ
 'this,' abdefghiWP; c om. ܐܒܕܐܢܐ abdefghiWP; c, ܐܒܕܐܢܐ.

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

13 וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

14 וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

15 וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

LXXXVI. 1 וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשֵּׁנִי .

ing as we vocalise the phrase. וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם 'supplication,' abdeghilwF; c, וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם 'supplications'; f om. וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם ... וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם. וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם, d repeats; e reads singular. וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם 'intercession,' bdefghiW; ac, וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם 'intercessions.'

13. וּמִן הַשָּׁמַיִם, c adds above the line in first hand וּמִן against abdefghiW; h adds וּמִן abdefghiW; c, וּמִן וּמִן.

And meditate thereon, above all on the days of your fasts. 3. And bear me in mind by means of this epistle, as I also bear you in mind in it, and always fare ye well.

LXXXVII. And it came to pass when I had ended all the words of this epistle, and had written it sedulously to its close, that I folded it, and sealed it carefully, and bound it to the neck of the eagle, and dismissed and sent it.

HERE ENDS THE BOOK OF BARUCH THE SON OF NERIAH.

LXXXVII. Bound it to the neck of the eagle. These words reappear in the Rest of the Words of Baruch
 vii. 8, τὴν ἐπιστολὴν . . . ἔδησεν eis τὸν τράχηλον τοῦ αἰετοῦ (cf.
 vii. 30).

the first epistle'; in WP,  ' (here) ends the epistle of Baruch'; f om. subscription.

LXXXVII. Found only in c, but undoubtedly a part of the original work, as is clear from a comparison of lxxvii. 17, 20—26. As all the other MSS. began with lxxviii., and gave only a fragment of the book for ecclesiastical reading, they naturally omitted this chapter, since it would have been unintelligible without lxxvii., and simply closed the section with the words .

APPENDIX ON VI. 7-10

In 2 Macc. ii. 4-8 there is a tradition closely related to the account in vi. 7-10. Here Jeremiah is warned of God to hide, in a cave-like dwelling in the mountain where Moses climbed up, "the tabernacle and the ark and the altar of incense" (τὴν σκηνὴν καὶ τὴν κιβωτὸν καὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον τοῦ θυμιάματος). This place was to remain unknown till God should gather His people again together (ἄγνωστος ὁ τόπος ἔσται ἕως αἶν συναγάγῃ ὁ Θεὸς ἐπισυναγωγὴν τοῦ λαοῦ).

The mention here of the "altar of incense" supports the rendering I have given of ܐܠܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ in vi. 7. This word implies θυμιατήριον in the Greek. In the LXX. this word means "censer," but in Philo, Josephus, Clem. Alex., and Origen it is the ordinary appellation of the "altar of incense." Now as regards the first meaning, there is no mention of any particular censer in the Old Testament, not even in Lev. xvi. 12. The only mention of the golden censer is found in the Mishna, Joma, v. 1, vii. 4 (quoted by Lünemann on Heb. ix. 4), which the High Priest took with him into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement. Since, however, in the frequent earlier and contemporary enumerations of the holy vessels in 2 Macc. ii. 5; Philo, Quis rerum divin. haer. i. 504; de Vita Mos. ii. 149; Heb. ix. 1-5 (?); Joseph. Ant. iii. 6, 8; Bell. Jud. v. 5. 5, this censer is nowhere given, but the altar of incense always, it seems right to conclude that θυμιατήριον should be taken here in its meaning of "altar of incense," and not in that of "censer," as it was by the Syriac translator.

INDEX I

PASSAGES FROM THE SCRIPTURES AND OTHER ANCIENT BOOKS DIRECTLY CONNECTED OR CLOSELY PARALLEL WITH THE TEXT.

Only the more important are given except in the case of 4 Ezra, and the two books of Enoch.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Exodus i. 14
Psalms xxxvi. 8
„ civ. 4.
Ecclesiastes x. 10
Isaiah xl. 15
„ xlix. 16
Jeremiah ix. 1
„ xxii. 29
Zechariah vii. 11

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

lviii. 1
xli. 4
xlviii. 8 xxxviii. 2
lxxxii. 5
iv. 2 xxxv. 2
vi. 8
li. 4

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

See pp. lxxvi.-lxxix.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

x. 6 „ 8
xi. 4
xxi. 23
xxiii. 4
xxv. 1
xxix. 4
xxxii. 6
xlviii. 9
l. 2
lv. 3
lvi. 11-13
lix. 5
„ 5
„ 5
„ 8
„ 10

ETHIOPIC ENOCH.

xxxviii. 2
xix. 2 (Greek Version)
li. 1
c. 5
lix. 11
xxxvii. 5
lx. 7
xlv. 4.
ii. 1
li. 1
xx. 7 (Greek Version)
vi. 2
xviii. 11 ; xxi. 7-10
xl. 11
xlvii. 5
xl. 12
xxvii. 2, 3 ; xc. 26, 27

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

lix. 10 „ 10 lxviii. 6

ETHIOPIC ENOCH.

xxii. 5-9
 xli. 3 ; xliii. 1, 2, etc.
 lxxxix. 73, 74

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

x. 6
 xviii. 2
 xxi. 4
 „ 6 „ 7 xxiii. 4
 xlviii. 10
 li. 11
 liv. 15, 19
 lvi. 11-13
 lix. 5
 „ 5
 „ 8
 „ 10
 „ 10
 „ 11

SLAVONIC ENOCH.

xli. 2
 xxx. 15, 16
 xxiv. 2
 xxix. 1
 xlvii. 5
 xlix. 2 (lviii. 5)
 xvii.
 „
 xxx. 15
 xviii. 4-6
 xxviii. 3
 xli. 4
 lxi. 1-4 ; lxx. 3, 4
 x. ; xc. 12
 xx. 1, 3
 xi. 9

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

APOCRYPHAL BOOK OF BARUCH.

See pp. xiv.-xv. ; lxv.-lxvii.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

4 EZRA.

ii. 1
 iii. 1
 „ 1
 „ 2 (xxviii. 6)
 „ 7
 iv. 3
 v. 1
 „ 1
 ix. 2
 x. 6 (xi. 6, 7)
 xi. 3
 xiii. 8
 xiv. 7
 „ 11 (xlviii. 15)
 „ 17
 „ 18 „ 18
 xv. 6
 xvii. 4
 xix. 1, 2
 xx. 1 (liv. 1)
 xxi. 6 „ 19
 „ 21

iv. 36 ; viii. 51, 62 ; xiv. 9, 49
 „ 38 ; v. 23, 38 ; vi. 11, 38 ; vii.
 17, 58, 75 ; xii. 7 ; xiii. 51
 x. 7
 v. 56 ; vii. 102 ; viii. 42 ; xii. 7
 vii. 30
 „ 26 ; xiii. 36
 iv. 23
 „ 25
 v. 20 ; vi. 35 ; ix. 26, 27 ; xii. 51
 iv. 12 ; vii. 66, 116, 117
 iii. 30
 iv. 34
 vii. 77 ; viii. 33
 viii. 5
 vi. 38
 „ 54
 „ 55, 59 ; vii. 11 ; viii. 44 ; ix. 13
 vii. 72
 iii. 19
 vii. 121-130
 iv. 26 ; vi. 18
 viii. 21
 vii. 113 (iv. 11 ; vii. 111)
 v. 27

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

xxi. 26
xxiii. 4
 " 4, 5
xxiv. 1
xxv. 1
 " 3
xxvii. 10
xxviii. 3
xxix. 4
 " 4

 " 6
 " 6
xxx. 1
xxxi. 3
xxxii. 1
 " 6
 " 7
 " 9
xxxiii. 3
xxxix. 6 xlvi. 2
xlvii. 15
xlviii. 36
 " 38
 " 42
 " 46
li. 5
 " 10
lv. 3
lix. 7
lxx. 3
 " 5
 " 5 lxxvi. 4 lxxvii. 1
lxxxii. 3
 " 4
 " 6 lxxxiv. 10
lxxxv. 7
 " 10
 " 12

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

4 EZRA.

v. 14
vii. 85, 95
iv. 33-43
vi. 20
iii. 34, 35
xiii. 30
v. 8
xiii. 16-20
vi. 49-52
 " 2, 25 ; vii. 28 ; ix. 7 ; xii. 34 ;
 xiii. 48
vii. 28 ; xii. 34
xiii. 50.
xii. 32 ; xiii. 26
ix. 30
 " 32 (iii. 20)
vii. 75
v. 19
 " 18
xii. 44
v. 1
xiv. 20
viii. 5
v. 9-11
iii. 8
vii. 118-121
iii. 4, 5 ; vii. 116
vii. 87
 " 97, 125
iv. 36
xiv. 47
vi. 24
v. 9-11
 " 12
xiv. 23, 42, 44, 45
xii. 40
vii. 61
vi. 56
vii. 61
x. 24
ix. 11 (viii. 56)
xiv. 10
ix. 12

REST OF THE WORDS OF BARUCH.

See pp. xviii.-xix.

5 EZRA.

See p. xx.

APOCALYPHIS BARUCH TERTIA.

See pp. xx.-xxii.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH.

ix. 1
xx. 3 xlii. 4
xlviii. 9
lx. 1 lxxviii. 7
lxxxv. 7

PSALMS OF SOLOMON.

xvii. 41
xiv. 5
xvii. 17
xix. 2, 3
ii. 15
viii. 34
ix. 7

INDEX II

NAMES AND SUBJECTS

- AARON, lix. 1
 Abraham, iv. 4 ; lvii. 1
 Abyss, the, lix. 5
 Adam, iv. 3 ; xvii. 2 ; xviii. 2 ; xxiii. 4 ; xlviii. 42 ; liv. 15, 19 ; lvi. 5 brought in physical death, xxiii. 4, note brought in premature death, xxiii. 4, note ; liv. 15, note brought in spiritual death, xlviii. 42, note Adu, v. 5
 Altar of incense, vi. 7 ; p. 168
 Angel of death, xxi. 23, note
 Angels created on the first day, xxi. 6, note armies of, xlviii. 10 ; li. 11, note ; lix. 10 fall of the, lvi. 11-13, note
 Apostates, i.e. Christians, xli. 3, note ; xlii. 4
 Assumption of Baruch, the, xiii. 3, note ; xlv. 7, note

 BABYLON, viii. 5 ; x. 2 ; lxxvii. 12, 17, 19 ; lxxix. 1
 = Rome, xi. 1
 Baldensperger, p. xxxix.
 Baruch, the Assumption of, in B², xiii. 3, note ; xxv. 1 ; xlv. 7, note ; xlviii. 30 ; lxxvi. 2 the death of, an ordinary one in B¹, xiii. 3, note ; xliii. 2, note ; lxxviii. 5 ; lxxxiv. 1 the Apocalypse of ; its different elements, with their characteristics and dates, pp. xlix.-lxi.
 the Apocalypse of, B¹=i.-ix. 1 ; xliii. - xlv. 7 ; xlv. - xlv. 6 ; lxxvii.-lxxxii. ; lxxxiv. ; lxxxvi.-lxxxvii. ; pp. lv.-lvii. ; lx. ; 68-69, 119, 140
 Baruch, the Apocalypse of, B²=xiii. 1-3a ; xx. ; xxiv. 2-4 ; xxii. 3b-12 ; xxv. ; xiv.-xix. ; xxi.-xxiv. 1 ; xxx. 2-5 ; xli.-xlii. ; xlviii. 1-47 ; xlix.-lii. 3 ; lxxv. ; xxxi.-xxxii. 6 ; liv. 17, 18 ; xlviii. 48-50 ; lii. 5-7 ; liv. 16 ; xlv. 8-15 ; lxxxiii. ; xxxii. 7-xxxv. ; lxxvi. ; pp. lv.-lx. ; 20-21, 57-58, 66, 68, 69, 74, 80, 94, 117, 140
 the Apocalypse of, B³=lxxxv. ; pp. liv.-lv. ; 154, 156 the Apocalypse of, S=x. 6-xii. 4 ; pp. lix.-lx. ; 14-20 the Apocalypse of, A¹=xxvii.-xxx. 1 ; pp. li.-liii. ; 48-49, 61-62, 87
 the Apocalypse of, A²=xxxvi.-xl. ; pp. li.-liii. ; 61-62, 87
 the Apocalypse of, A³=liii.-lxxiv. ; pp. li.-liv. ; 87
 the Apocalypse of, the Syriac Version of, pp. xxii.-xxx.
 the Apocalypse of, the Syriac Version—a translation from the Greek, pp. xliii.-xliv.
 the Apocalypse of, the Greek—a translation from a Hebrew original, pp. xlv.-liii.
 the Apocalypse of, modern Latin Version by Ceriani, pp. xxx.-xxxiii.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations with 4 Ezra, pp. lxvii.-lxxvi.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations with the New Testament, pp. lxxvi.-lxxxix.
 the Apocalypse of, its relations with other books of Baruch, pp. xvi.-xxii.

 Baruch, the Lost Epistle of, pp. lxxv.-lxxvii.
 the Lost Epistle of, modern Latin Version by Ceriani, pp. xxx.-xxxiii.
 the Apocryphal Book of, pp. xvii.-xviii.
 the Gnostic Book of, p. xix.
 a Latin Book of, pp. xix.-xx.
 the Rest of the Words of, pp. xviii.-xix.
 Bath-qôl, the, xxii. 1, note
 Behemoth, xxix. 4, note
 Boasting of the Gentiles, v. 1 ; vii. 1 ; lxxvii. 2, 6-7, note ; lxxx. 3
 Body, the, to be restored by the earth, xlii. 8, note

CALEB, lix. 1
 Cedron, the valley of, v. 5, note ; xxi. 1 ; xxxi. 2
 Chaldees, the army of, viii. 4
 Christians referred to, xli. 3, note ; xlii. 4 ; xlvi. 24 ; lxxxv. 14
 Consciousness of right and wrong in all men, xlvi. 40, note Corruption, the present world, its sphere, xxi. 19, note ; xl. 3
 Created, a definite number, xxiii. 4-5, notes Creation ex nihilo, xxi. 4, note the new, xxxii. 6, note

DAVID, lxi. 1
 Death, physical, traced to Adam, xxiii. 4, note premature, traced to Adam, xxiii. 4, note ; liv. 15, note spiritual, traced to Adam, p. lxxx., footnote ; xlvi. 42, note Deluge, the, lvi. 15
 Dillmann, pp. xviii., xxxv.
 Dispersion, the return from the, lxxvii. 6 ; lxxviii. 7, note
 Dragons, x. 6, note
 Drummond, p. xxxv.

EDERSHEIM, p. xxxv.
 Elijah, lxxvii. 24

Emendations of the Syriac by Bensly, xxxii. 5 of the Syriac by Ceriani, x. 18 ; xiv. 6 ; li. 1 ; lvi. 4, 14 ; lx. 2 ; lxx. 1, 4 ; lxx. 8 ; lxxvii. 16 of the Syriac by the Editor, vii. 2 ; xiv. 5 ; xxiv. 4 ; xlii. 5 ; xlvi. 32 ; li. 16 ; lix. 11 ; lxxvii. 2 ; lxx. 5 ; lxxii. 1 ; lxxiv. 4 ; lxxv. 1 ; lxxvi. 2 of the text through retranslation into Hebrew, pp. li.-liii. ; x. 13 ; xxi. 9, 11, 12 ; xxiv. 2 ; xxix. 5 ; xlv. 12 ; xlii. 7 ; lxx. 6 ; lxxx. 2 ; lxxxv. 12 of the text through retranslation into Greek, iii. 7 ; xxi. 9, 11, 12 ; xxiv. 1, 2 ; xlii. 7
 Enoch's functions transferred to Moses, xiii. 3, note ; lix. 5-11, note Euphrates, lxxvii. 22 ; lxxviii. 1
 Ewald, p. xxxiii.
 Ezra, Fourth—its relations to our Apocalypse, pp. lxxvii.-lxxvi. composite, pp. lxxvii.-lxxix. conflicts in doctrine with Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. lxix.-lxxi. from Hebrew sources, p. lxxi. relations of its constituents to those of the Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. lxxii.-lxxvi.
 Ezra, Fifth, p. xx.

FAITH, liv. 21, note
 Fasts, v. 7, note ; ix. 2, note
 Fire—the final abode of the wicked, xlv. 15, note ; xlvi. 39, 43 ; lix. 2, note Forgiveness, pp. lxxxi.-lxxxiv.
 Forty days of instruction, lxxvi. 4-5
 Freewill in the Apocalypse of Baruch and 4 Ezra, pp. lxx.-lxxi. ; lxxx.-lxxxi. ; xviii. 2, note ; liv. 15, note Fritzsche, pp. xvii., xxiii., xxxii., xxxiv.

GEDALIAH, v. 5 ; xlv. 1
 Gehenna, lix. 10
 Gentiles, the boasting of the, v. 1 ;

- vii. 1; lxvii. 2, 6-7, note; lxxx. 3
the destiny of the, lxxii. 4-6, note
- HARRIS, RENDEL, pp. xviii., 55
Hausrath, p. xxxiv.
Hebraisms surviving in the Syriac text, pp. xlv. -li.
Hebrew original of the Apocalypse of Baruch, pp. xlv. -liii.
Hebron, xlvii. 1
Herodotus quoted on, xix. 6-8
Hexaemeron, fragment of an, xxix.
4, note
Hezekiah, lxiii. 1, 3, 5
Hilgenfeld, p. xxxiv.
- INHABITANTS of the earth, xxv. 1,
note
Intermediate place of happiness,
xxi. 23, note; lix. 10, note of torment, xxx. 5; xxxvi. 11; lii.
1, 2, note
Israel chastened, i. 5, note
- JABISH, v. 5
Jacob, seed of, xvii. 4; xxxi. 3
James, pp. xx. -xxi.; xxvii. -xxviii.
Jecooniah, i. 1
Jeremiah, ii. 1; v. 5; ix.; x. 2, 4; xxxiii. 1
accompanies the captivity to Babylon in B², x. 2, note;
xxxiii. 2
does not accompany the captivity in B¹, x. 2, note; lxxvii. 12, note Jeroboam, lxii. 1
Jerusalem removed for a time, i. 4, note; vi. 9; xxxii.
to be restored in B¹, i. 4, note;
cf. also lxxviii. 7, note not to be restored in B², i. 4, note the heavenly, iv. 3, note called "mother," iii. 1, note its fall due to the sins of both Judah and Israel, lxxvii. 10, note
Jezebel, lxii. 3
Josephus quoted on, i. 3; xlviii. 34;
liv. 15, 19; lxxxv. 3
Joshua, lix. 1
Josiah, lxvi. 1
Judgment, the final, xlviii. 39; lix. 8
- Justification, doctrine of, in Baruch and 4 Ezra, pp. lxx., lxxxi.;
xxi. 9, note
Justify—its various meanings, xxi.
9, note
Justin Martyr quoted on, xxix. 3
- KABISCH, pp. xxxix. -xli.; lxvii. -
lxviii.
Kneucker, pp. xvii., xxxv.
- LAGARDE, pp. xxiv., xxx.
Land, the Holy; its peculiar sanctity, xxix. 2, note
Law, the, in Baruch and 4 Ezra,
p. lxix.; xv. 5, note; xxxviii.
2, note
glorified in proportion as the Messianic and national hopes fail, xv. 5, note
the unwritten, lvii. 2, note
Lelioto, x. 8, note
Leviathan, xxix. 4, note
Living creatures, the, li. 11
- MANASSEH, lxiv. 1, 6, 7; lxv. 1
Many to be saved according to Baruch, but not according to 4 Ezra, xxi. 11, note
Marshall, p. xvii.
Marvels—a sign of the Messiah's
Advent, xxix. 6, note
Mercy-seat, vi. 7
Merit of the Fathers, xiv. 7, note Messiah, xxix. 3; xxx. 1; xli. 1 the, and the Law, xv. 5, note in A¹ has a passive rôle, xxix. 3,
note
in A² and A³ has an active rôle, xxix. 3, note; xl. 1, note;
lxvii. 4-6, note
Messianic woes, xxvii. 1, note
Millenarian fancies, xxix. 5
Miriam, lix. 1
Moses, iii. 9; iv. 5; xvii. 4; lix.
1; lxxxiv. 2, 5
- NEBUCHADNEZZAR, lxxix. 1
- OAK, the, vi. 1, note; lxxvii. 18 Obedience to the law and the Rabbis enforced, xlv. 5

Ophir, x. 19

Original sin in Baruch, 4 Ezra, the New Testament, pp. lxx.-lxxi.,
lxxx.-lxxxi.; xviii. 2, note;
xxiii. 4, note; liv. 15, note

PARADISE, iv. 3, 6; lix. 8

Paronomasiae in the Hebrew original,
p. liii.

Pharisees, the, referred to, xlii. 5,
note

Philo quoted on, xxi. 4

Polyglot Syriac text of the Epistle of Baruch, pp. xxvii.-xxviii.

Predestination and freewill in Judaism, liv. 15, 19, note

Proselytes, xli. 4, note; xlii. 5;
xlviii. 19

QUOTATIONS from the Old Testament, pp. xlv.-xlv.

RABBINISM, fusion of the popular
Messianic views and early, p.
87

Ramiel, lv. 3, note; lxiii. 6

Recognition after death, l. 3, 4,
note

Renan, pp. xxxiv.-xxxv.

Resurrection, the, p. lxxx.; xxx.
1; l.-li., notes

Righteous, the risen, li. 10, note

Righteousness variously conceived, xxiv. 1, note

Rosenthal, pp. xxxvi.-xxxvii.

Ryle, p. xliii.

SALMANASAR, lxii. 6

Sanday and Headlam's Romans quoted on, xxi. 9; liv. 15, 18, 19, 21

Saved, many to be, xxi. 11

Schürer, pp. xvii., xxxvii.-xxxix.

Sennacherib, lxiii. 2, 4

Seriah, v. 5

Shedim, x. 8, note

Sheol, xi. 6, note; lii. 1, 2, note;
lvi. 6, note; lxxxiii. 17

Sirens, x. 8, note

Solomon, lxi. 1; lxxvii. 25

Son of the law, xlv. 4, note

Sophocles quoted on, x. 6

Spheres, the, xlviii. 9

Stähelin, p. xxxiv.

Stanton, p. xxxvii.

TACITUS quoted on, viii. 2

Temple, the second, its low repute, lxviii. 6, note

Theognis quoted, x. 6, note

Thomson, p. xxxv.

Titles of God—the Lord, i. 1, note;

O LORD, my Lord, iii. 1, note;

Mighty God, vi. 8, note; God,

x. 1, note; the Lofty One, xiii.

8, note; Most High, xvii. 1, note; the Mighty One, xxi. 3;

note

Treasury of manna, xxix. 8

Treasures of good deeds, xxiv. 1,
note

of souls, xxi. 23, note; xxiii. 4

Tribes, the nine and a half, lxii. 5;

lxxvii. 19; lxxviii. 1

the two and a half, lxiv. 5

the ten, i. 2

VISION of the cedar and the vine, i.e. A², xxxvi.-xl.

of the cloud and the lightning,

i.e. A³, liii.-lxxiv.

Visiting the earth, God's, xx. 2,
note

WEBER, passim

Wieseler, p. xxxiv.

Works, the doctrine of, pp. lxx.-

lxx., lxxxi.; ii. 1, 2, notes;

xiv. 7, note

World, the, made for man, xiv. 18,

19, note; xv. 7; xxi. 24

the, of corruption, xxi. 19, note the, of incorruption, xxi. 19, note; lvii. 2, note

YOKE of the law, xli. 3, note

ZEDEKIAH, viii. 5

Zion, v. 1, 3; vii. 1; x. 7, 10, 12;
xi. 1, etc.

In Crown 8vo, Cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net

STUDIES IN HEBREW PROPER NAMES

BY

G. BUCHANAN GRAY, M.A.

Lecturer in Hebrew and Old Testament Theology in Mansfield College late Senior Kennicott Scholar in the University of Oxford

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

In Demy 8vo, Cloth. Price 24s.

INTRODUCTION
TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH
WITH AN APPENDIX CONTAINING THE UNDOUBTED PORTIONS OF THE TWO CHIEF PROPHETIC WRITERS IN A TRANSLATION

BY

The Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D.

ORIEL PROFESSOR OF THE INTERPRETATION OF HOLY SCRIPTURE AT OXFORD AND FORMERLY FELLOW OF BALLIOL COLLEGE; CANON OF ROCHESTER

"This elaborate and scholarly work. . . . We must leave to professed scholars the detailed appreciation of Professor Cheyne's work. His own learning and reputation suffice to attest its importance."—The Times.

"Full of learning, and forms a perfect mine of critical research."—National Observer.

"This truly great and monumental work."—Critical Review.

"We heartily congratulate the author on the completion of a long projected work, which will at once take its place among the most important on its subject."—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.

"A further and notable contribution to the study of the interesting and difficult problems presented by the Book of Isaiah."—Baptist Magazine.

"This monument of patient scholarship, wide reading, and indefatigable research."—The Speaker.

"Ein ausgezeichnetes Werk! Des Verfassers kritische Kraft, seine Umsicht in der Untersuchung und die besonnene Ruhe seines Urtheils, insbesondere aber auch die ungewöhnliche Klarheit seiner Darstellung, die auch die verwickeltsten Fragen in angenehmster Form darzubieten vermag, haben längst schon seinen Namen bei den Fachgenossen hochangesehen gemacht."—Deutsche Litteratur Zeitung.

A & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

WORKS BY THE LATE W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D.

Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge

Demy 8vo. Price 15s. net.

LECTURES ON THE RELIGION OF THE SEMITES

THE FUNDAMENTAL INSTITUTIONS

New Edition. Revised throughout by the Author

Demy 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN THE JEWISH CHURCH

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM

Second Edition. Revised and much Enlarged

Post 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

THE PROPHETS OF ISRAEL AND THEIR PLACE IN HISTORY

To the Close of the Eighth Century B.C.

New Edition

WITH INTRODUCTION AND ADDITIONAL NOTES

BY

The Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D.

ORIEL PROFESSOR OF THE INTERPRETATION OF HOLY SCRIPTURE AT OXFORD
CANON OF ROCHESTER

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

A SHORT HISTORY OF SYRIAC LITERATURE

BY

The Late WILLIAM WRIGHT, LL.D.

PROFESSOR OF ARABIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

Crown 8vo. Price 6s. net.

SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH

BY

J. WELLHAUSEN

PROFESSOR AT MARBURG

Third Edition

Crown 8vo. Price 5s.

SKETCHES FROM EASTERN HISTORY

BY

THEODOR NÖLDEKE,

PROFESSOR OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES IN THE UNIVERSITY OF STRASSBURG

TRANSLATED BY

JOHN SUTHERLAND BLACK, M.A., LL.D.

And Revised by the Author

Demy 8vo. Price 10s. 6d.

A. & C. BLACK, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON

5.1.87

